Mme. Camilla Urso's first concert will take place at Golden Gate Hall on Monday evening. The violiniste will play "Caprice de Concert," by Ernest Guidam, for the first time in San Francisco; Vieuxtemp's "Reverie" and Paganini's "Witches' Dance." Mr. Douglas, the tenor, and Miss Methot, the soprano, will give songs by Weber, Schubert and Tschaikowsky. At the second concert Mme. Urso will play a caprice by Gade, adagio from Spolir's Ninth Concerto and Wieniawski's "Airs Russe."

On next Monday evening the Tivoli will revive the sucessful operatic burlesque, "Don Juan" (ad lib.) For the new production elaborate scenery and costumes have been prepared. There will be two ballets, one of sailor boys, the other "The Dance of the Mermaids."

Laura Millard will be the beautiful Haidee, Elmira Crox Seabrooke Zoe, J. J. Raffael Lord Bateman, W. H. West Lamboro, Rhys Thomas Desperado, and Ferris Hartman Mulcy, his original creation.

Augustus Thomas' "New Blood" will be presented at the Alcazar on Monday night for the first time in this city. The play, which has been very successful in the East, has for its theme the social conditions of labor as compared to capital. The cast will be strong and will introduce Mr. William Hawley, a clever young English actor, who came to this country with Wilson Barrett. "New Blood" will be followed by the famous play "Called Back."

Mme. Feodor will sing Marguerite in "Faust" at the California this evening for the first time this season. "Aida" will be given a complete rendering on Tuesday night, and on Thursday "Rigoletto" will be sung with a cast of unusual strength. "La Juive" will be repeated Saturday evening, and "The Voyage of Suzette" will be produced Sunday at popular prices. "Carmen" will be given at the last matinee of the season, April 10th.

Otis Skinner opens at the Baldwin Monday night in Clyde Fitch's romantic comedy, "His Grace de Grammont." The scene of the play is in England during the reign of Charles II., and its central figure, the Duc de Grammont, the celebrated French courtier. Mr. Skinner's leading support are Maud Durlin and Frederick Mosley.

At Morosco's next week the attraction will be the sensational melodrama, "The Dago." There are a number of interesting characters in the play, including a wicked aunt, who causes the kidnapping of her rich little niece, to whom she is next of kin. There will be some startling scenic effects in the piece, and a number of songs and specialties.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

THE THEATRES

Old Time Choristers and Their Memories of Other Days.

I have a friend, female of course, who loves to weave around the tenor in grand opera romances of a most sentimental and fanciful character. Probably there is not a great European tenor who has not, at one time or another during one of her visits across the Atlantic, served as the central and heroic figure of one of these romantic reveries. She has never unburdened her mind to me as to the details of any of these romances that have been conceived in the labaratory of her mind, nor do I know but that she may herself have been the heroine in them all, which might account for her reticence in this particular connection. She does extract decided pleasure out of this very harmless occupation, however. The disappointment that was in her voice when she told me that Guille was "impossible," that "he had a charming voice and all that," but that she could not "weave any romance about him," expressed regret that was genuine. She thought him dumpy and unhandsome. It was a peculiar conceit, this of hers, but you may readily fall into similar lines if you wish. My romances, however, do not run with beauty and brave manners. I rather feel for the poor devil who seems to have lived out his life and made a dismal failure of it. There is more of romance in him to me. From childhood up, ancient ruins and human wrecks have a fascination for me. The chorus at the California awakened much the same feeling that I would experience in a country churchyard. I never enter an old graveyard but the lines of Gray's "Elegy" come into my mind. They rush to the front without any bidding. And so it was with this French opera chorus. An operatic chorus made up of young men with lusty voices, bright eyes, quick and alert figures, suggest hope and ambition, and permits you to picture futures full of promise. But a chorus made up of grizzled veterans whose rugged, wrinkled, bloodless faces have been all too apparently softened for the occasion and made to take on the rosy flush of youth by a liberal application of grease paint; a chorus of men whose gray hairs, if not standing out boldly in evidence, are betrayed by a vagrant and rebellious lock that creeps from under some youthful but ill-fitting wig, is to me a graveyard of buried hopes, and, to me, shadows forth a story of starved ambitions and blighted desires. Occasionally in the grand choruses of "The Huguenots," last Tuesday night, there came from the throat of one of these ancient minstrels a note of rare beauty which, if it could have been sustained throughout a singing part, would have made its owner famous and brought out the bravos and huzzas of the audience. It was a note from the past, the remnant of a voice broken down and incapable of continuous effort. Some indiscretion of youth, some lack of training, possibly poverty or sickness, possibly a voice discovered too late, had relegated its owner to small parts and an inferior position in the operatic graveyard. There were half a dozen of these poor but picturesque old chaps in the grand opera chorus, but they were musicians, and though their voices may not have been young and fresh they never faltered in their parts and knew all the tricks and turns of melody better than their more youthful companions. As they stood like immovable sentinels listening to the graceful Romanza of Urbain, "Nobil donna e tanto onesta,"

I could not help speculating as to how many popular young singers besides Andhree Savine they had heard bring down the salvos of applause. Doubtless they had seen Valentines and Marguerites and Urbains come and go, and come and go, for two score years or more. Women age quicker than men, and somehow we do not tolerate an old woman in a youthful part as readily as we do an old man under similar circumstances. Valentines, Marguerites and Urbains must be youthful. They pass through a long preparatory season at a conservatory of music, blossom out upon the stage like a butterfly, and quickly disappear into private life or fall back into the chorus. But meanwhile these grim old veterans stand like sentinels, moving neither backward nor forward, neither growing nor diminishing in popular favor, but ever the same, never changing.

Society is determined that the French opera is a thing to be patronized, and society has given evidence of a discriminating judgment in so concluding. We are not often vouchsafed so many really good voices upon the stage at once, or so well trained and efficient a company of singers, and it is an opportunity to be embraced, for it may not occur again for years to come. Prevost, tenor, Athes, basso, and Albers, baritone, among the men, were distinctly acceptable, while Mesdames Foedor, prima donna soprano, Berthet, soprano, and Savine, among the ladies, added to the laurels they had already gained by the previous productions. The house was crowded at each performance, but in my judgment the best bills of the week will be those of the matinee today, "Mignon," and the performance this evening of "Faust."

B.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

A QUESTION OF ALTERNATIVES

"It is so difficult to decide," said Miss Powers appealingly.

"They are becoming very general," I replied.

"So many people consider them fast," she continued.

"Only prejudiced people," I answered encouragingly.

"But there are so many such," said Miss Powers plaintively.

"You are not obliged to notice them," I said.

"That will not prevent them noticing you," rejoined Miss Powers.

I could not deny this latter contention, and a short silence ensued.

"A neat, plain skirt, and a blouse look very nice, don't you think?" she inquired tentatively.

"Charming, on the right person," I said.

I spoke with perhaps more fervency than I should have done, for Miss Powers blushed slightly as she said—

"But on a windy day it must be——"

"Very delightful," I murmured unthinkingly.

Then I hastened to repair my mistake by adding—

"To dispense with them."

I felt that this was somewhat vague; but Miss Powers' next remark showed me that she comprehended my meaning.

"Skirts must be a great hindrance," she said.

"They must indeed," said I.

"On the other hand, the——." Miss Powers paused.

"The alternatives would, of course, give more play to the—I should say—greater freedom of action," I said, coming to her assistance.

"The question is," mused Miss Powers, "whether a woman does not lose in attractiveness when she is dressed——"

"It is a moot point, certainly," I assented.

"Dressed in masculine attire, I was about to say," continued Miss Powers, directing towards me a scathing look.

"That is clearly the most important thing to be considered," I rejoined humbly.

"It must be so easy to mount in them," said she.

"In dismounting, with skirts on," I ventured, "one might display——"

"I quite understand," she interrupted quickly.

"And in the event of a fall."

"Oh!" said Miss Powers.

"So that——," I began.

"I think I shall decide against skirts," she replied.

"Of course, some girls cannot afford to discard skirts," I remarked.

"No?" interrogated Miss Powers.

"Girls who may not have been fairly treated by Providence with regard to——"

"Precisely," assented Miss Powers, with a furtive glance downwards.

"Others more liberally bestowed in that respect——"

"I shall have skirts, I believe, after all," interrupted Miss Powers.

"Have nothing to fear from windy weather," I went on, trying to catch the eye of my companion.

"I think you are perfectly horrid!" was her reply.

I played silence, and, after a short pause, Miss Powers vouchsafed——

"Mr. Rawson prefers the—er—alternatives."

"Of course," I said, "he must be considered."

"You are very rude," said Miss Powers sharply.

I was in trouble again, and, as I could see but one way out of it, I simulated an injured air, and complained—

"You did not allow me to finish my sentence. I meant to have said that Mr. Rawson must be considered a judge in these matters.

"And so you would advise me——?"

"Certainly not," I returned.

"But I wish you to. How provoking you are!" said Miss Powers, kicking against the ground in a vicious manner which promised the utter destruction of a very neat French shoe.

"That alters the case," said I.

"So your opinion is——?"

"That a girl who, we will assume, has been well treated by——"

"There is no need to repeat that," remarked Miss Powers.

"Well," I continued, "that such a girl would do best to wear skirts, and chance the windy days."

"And in the event of a fall?" she inquired, with a faint smile.

"She should be careful to always have some one at hand to pick her up again," I responded promptly.

"Girls are so slow," said Miss Powers irrelevantly.

"Some of them," I admitted.

There was another lull in the conversation, and the unfortunate foot-gear of my companion suffered again.

"Then you do not agree with Mr. Rawson?" said Miss Powers.

"Certainly, on one point," I replied.

"Really?" returned Miss Powers, in the tone which a woman uses when she wishes to ask a question without asking it.

"We are at one," I replied slowly, "in considering the tandem to be the most perfect form of bicycle."

Miss Powers was studying the scenery.

"I have purchased a tandem," I continued.

The view was impressively interesting.

"And the front seat is vacant."

Miss Powers smiled, and transferred her attention to the ground.

"So that," I proceeded boldly, "you have only to choose between skirts and the -er- alternatives."

"I am sure I shall prefer skirts," murmured Miss Powers. T. O. STRANGE.

From "The [illegible]"

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Russ Whytal will appear at the Columbia next Monday evening in Mr. Whytal's successful play, "For Fair Virginia." The scene of the drama is Virginia during the war. Mr. and Mrs. Whytal will be supported by a capable company, headed by Miss Mabel Bert.

Following "For Fair Virginia" Miss Georgia Cayvan will appear at the Columbia in her old success, "Squire Kate," her new play, "Mary Pennington, Spinster," and the double bill, "Goblin Castle" and "The Little Individual."

Mrs. Gertrude Auld-Thomas will give two song recitals at Golden Gate Hall, Wednesday evening, April 7th, and Saturday afternoon, April 10th.

William Bellamy has produced a second volume of charades under the title of "A Second Century of Charades." The little book, which is appropriately bound with an owl and the sphinx upon the cover, contains a number of riddles well written, and as puzzling as such things should be. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

Harper and Brothers have brought out another of W. D. Howells' farces, "A Previous Engagement." It is in Mr. Howells' best vein, and tells cleverly of the difficulties of courting a woman with an exalted conscience.

THE SECRET of good cooking, even baking, economy and durability lies in the purchase of a

WINTHROP

RANGE

CHAS. BROWN & SON, 807 Market Street

COAST AGENTS Flood Building

MAX MULLER'S MEMORIES

Tennyson's Bout With the Tobacco Habit.—Arnold's Jovian Way.

Max Muller, the famous Oxford professor, has been most fortunate in his associations with the eminent poets and writers of the century. He was an intimate of Froude's, knew Kingsley well, and in the latest "Cosmopolis" tells of his meetings with Thackeray, Tennyson, Matthew Arnold and Browning. The greatest of all to him is Tennyson, of whom he has some new and good stories. He came to visit the Mullers at their little home opposite Magdalen College, and was invited to dinner. It was soon after their marriage, and the professor's young wife was overawed by the importance of her guest. He was a great gourmet, was the Poet Laureate, and objected to the sauce which garnished the salmon, though he approved the chicken wing which followed. Indeed, he confided to his host that the only advantage he obtained from being Poet Laureate was that he generally received the liver wing of a fowl. For breakfast next morning, Mrs. Muller had been able to procure a nice dish of cutlets. Tennyson sat down to table, whipped the cover off the dish and exclaimed: "Mutton chops, the staple of every bad inn in England." It was at that time that Muller told him in response to a question about Indian verse, that there was no rhyme in Sanskrit poetry, and that he did not see why there should be in English. Tennyson replied that rhyme assisted the memory.

It was only after dinner, when smoking his pipe and sipping whisky and water, that Tennyson began to unbend. All day he was silent and absorbed in his thoughts, but in the evening he took an active part in current conversation, and if invited to would read his poems aloud in a deep, rumbling, rolling tone, which, for Muller, spoiled their harmony. A pipe was indispensable to him. Once round his table a party of friends were discussing the tobacco habit, and one of them taunted Tennyson with his slavery, saying he could not give it up if he would. "Anybody can if he chooses," he answered. There was a general laugh. The poet replied: "Well, I shall give up smoking from to-night." An hour later he threw pipes and tobacco out of his bedroom window. "The next morning," says Muller, "he was charming, though self-righteous. The second day he became very moody and captious, and on the third day no one knew what to do with him. But after a disturbed night, he got out of bed in the morning, went quietly into the garden, picked up one of the broken pipes, stuffed it with the remains of the tobacco, and then, having had a few puffs, came to breakfast entirely recovered." Next in importance to his pipe, Tennyson regarded quietude. He hated being stared at. Tourists used to go to the Isle of Wight to look at the great poet, but whenever he saw a soul coming towards him he would run for cover. Once he complained to the Queen, and told her he would have to leave the Isle on this account. Her Majesty, with kindly irony, remarked that she did not suffer much from that grievance, but Tennyson, not catching the sarcasm, replied: "No, madam, and if I could clap a sentinel wherever I liked I should not be troubled either." Muller tells of seeing a row of tourists sitting like sparrows on the paling of his garden waiting for the great man to appear, and says the guides used to dress up a sailor to look like him, with the consequence that when the imposture was discovered the visitors would walk up to the Laureate and ask: "Now, are you the real Tennyson?" So it would seem the nuisance was not to be sneered at.

Matthew Arnold was a familiar friend of Muller. He knew the author of "Literature and Dogma" when an undergraduate at Oxford, and says he had even then the Olympian manners which distinguished him among his contemporaries. He was beautiful as a young man, strong and manly and full of dreams and schemes. His life was a disappointment in its lack of worldly success, but he never repined and refused to do potboiling to add to his income. He was delightful to argue with, not that he could be convinced that he was wrong, but because he never lost his temper. He would generally end up a controversy by saying in the most patronizing way, "Yes, yes! my good fellow, you are quite right, but, you see, my view of the matter is different, and I have little doubt it is the true one." Arnold had fallen in love with Emile Burnouf's attractive but not very scholar-like or trustworthy 'Science de la Religion'," and persisted in mistaking Emile for the great Oriental scholar Eugene Burnouf. Dislodged from this he insisted that Emile was the son of the Orientalist, which Muller denied, saying that Eugene had had no son. Arnold replied in his most good-humored and superior way: "Yes, yes, but you know how they manage these things in France. Emele was really a natural son of the great scholar, and they call that nephew." Muller again remonstrated, but Arnold warned him off. "You see, my good fellow, I know the French, and that is my view of the matter." He closes his reminiscences of the poet, with whom he had so many controversies, especially over the supremacy of poetry—which Arnold always insisted on—with a touching but typical story. He says:

"Arnold knew for years that, though he was strong and looked very young for his age, the thread of his life might snap at any moment. Not long before his death he met Browning on the steps of the Athenaeum Club. He felt ill, and on saying good-bye, hinted that they might never meet again. Browning was profuse in his protestations, and Arnold, on turning away, said in his airy manner: "Now, one promise, Browning: Please not more than ten lines." Browning understood, and went away with a solemn smile."

Ruskin, Muller tells us, was, in the old Oxford days, a most delightful talker, and in society was most tolerant and agreeable. "His voice was most winning, and his language simply perfect. He was one of the few Englishmen I knew," continues Muller, "who, instead of tumbling out their phrases like so many portmanteaus, bags, rugs and hat boxes from a railway van, seemed to take a real delight in building up his sentences, even in familiar conversation, so as to make each deliverance a work of art." In later days he changed sadly, but Muller does not know to what cause his brain troubles should be attributed. The failure was gradual, but grew more and more marked. As an instance of his curious and unhappy sensitiveness, Muller tells of taking Emerson to lunch with Ruskin in his rooms at Corpus Christi College. "Emerson was an old friend, and, in many respects, a cognate soul. But some quite indifferent subject turned up, a heated discussion ensued, and Ruskin was so upset that he had to quit the room and leave us alone. Emerson was most unhappy, and did all he could to make peace, but he had to leave without a reconciliation."

One of the best stories in these Recollections is of Thackeray, whom Muller met at dinner in his early days at Oxford. The company was much awed at the great man, especially Muller, who said a word, until the arrival of the fish could speak but little English. No one—a fine "John Dorey." Thackeray then turned his large be-spectacled eyes on Muller and said: "Are you going to eat your own ancestor?" Every one stared. He continued looking very grave and learned. "Surely you are the son of the Dorian Muller—the Muller who wrote that awfully learned book on the Dorians, and was not John Dorey the ancestor of all the Dorians?" There was a general laugh, and after this horrible pun no one was afraid of saying anything. Muller replied that he was the son of Wilhelm Muller, the poet who wrote "Die Homerische Vorschule," and as to John Dorey being his ancestor, how could that be? "The original John Dorey, so I have been told, was 'il Janitore'—that is, St. Peter, and had no wife—at least he never acknowledged her in public." "After that," continues the narrator, "the dinner waxed noisy and brilliant. Thackeray, from his treasure of wit and sarcasm, poured out anecdote after anecdote; he used plenty of vinegar and cayenne pepper, but there was always a flavor of kindliness and good nature even in his most cutting remarks."

The character of Browning is also briefly touched upon, but yields criticism and admiration rather than anecdote. Altogether it is a most entertaining blending of comment and reminiscence Muller gives, and it is quite the best contribution to the current number of "Cosmopolis," though the contents do include a "Child of the Ghetto," by Zangwill.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

THE ZODIAC'S POWER

Poor Humanity Threatened by the Triplicities and the Planets.

It is indeed a bold or an ignorant man who imagines himself nowadays master of his own being. He cometh into the world the heir of his father's faults or his mother's virtues; it may be tainted with some infirmity inherited from a distant grandparent who was a kleptomaniac. He is influenced by the conditions of his bringing up, moulded by the character of his companions, diminished or amplified in physique by climate or the contingencies of fortune—in fact, he is his own man in nothing save the possession of five senses, and their impressions, too, are modified in keenness by circumstances which he did not control. The theories of free will are absolutely discounted by heredity, but not content with robbing us of initiative and responsibility there are other philosophers who claim that the whole tenor of our lives is determined by the zodiac.

I have just read a most serious book on "The Influence of the Zodiac upon Human Life" (The Idea Publishing Co., N. Y.) by Eleanor Kirk, in which all the ills that handicap our careers are attributed to a disregard of zodiacal domains. That the stars and planets operate to make or mar our destinies is a teory older than Egyptian civilization, but Mrs. Kirk is not content with admitting the pull of the constellations. She describes characters and prescribes marriage for those born under the several Triplicities. She insists that a veritable similarity of character exists among individuals whose birthday occurs within the same month. For instance, John Jones, who was ushered into the world in a palace on California street, while the Sun was in Aries, is really, though he does not know it, very much the same kind of chap as is Jim Sanguinetti, who was born on the east crest of Telegraph Hill about the same date. Why this is so the author fails to explain, but declares it is ignorance to disbelieve. She says "the hidden forces of the universe are more potent than those we can see and handle," which is possible, but by no means novel. She tells us, too, that much of the world's suffering is to be attributed to the thought of disease abroad in the world—which is merely a theory of faith-cure. On the supremacy of spirit, she is emphatic, and announces that "the spiritual man has no master but God, and his mediator is the essential Christ, embodied in his own bosom." There is much about polarity, too, and hidden forces. As for the moon's influence, Mrs. Kirk laughs contemptuously at it. The moon is not "in it" at all.

Regarded in a humorous way one may derive considerable fun out of the gravity of the author's reasoning. On the subject of marriage she is very suggestive. We are told that the infelicities of the marital state are due to the union of men and women of hostile domains. For instance, a citizen born under Aries—the head of the Fire Triplicity—should not marry a wife who came into the world in Cancer, the head of the Water Triplicity. Fire and water will not mingle—the heads of triplicities have a natural tendency to rule. Any one can see the trouble liable to arise in such a combination. It is much better for earth and water to come together in matrimony, inasmuch as they develop and blend. Another important announcement concerns Aries. She says it is impossible to conceal anything from an Aries individual, because his intuitions are so quick, but while he is generally clever and capable he is prone to selfishness and impetuosity. A woman born in Aries is impatient of long seams or the finishing-off process of dressmaking. She is also jealous, and is predisposed to headache and paralysis.

However, the most dangerous period of the year to be born in is "Cancer"—June 21 to July 22. The individual who arrives then is liable to have contradictory traits, a mechanical type of mind and to be most uncomfortable at night. If a female you cannot help being jealous and selfish and loving fine clothes and jewelry. If a Cancer man marries early in life he is apt to have trouble—in fact, the single life is best for him. However, if he will, in spite of all these disadvantages, take a partner it is better that he marry some one from Pisces or Scorpio, though, even then, the results are apt to prove unfortunate.

There is much strange and unfamiliar lore of this character in the volume, which, however ridiculous it may seem to the uninitiated, is evidently taken with immense seriousness by its adepts.

(For sale by Wm. Doxey.)

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

LIBRARY NOTES

"The Froggy Fairy Book," by A. J. Drexel-Biddle, is an admirable fairy story for children. It is ful of wonderful events in the land of the frogs, and is quite cleverly written. Mr. Drexel-Biddle, who has made a good record as a journalist, has also written "An Allegory and Three Essays." It appears in the form of a brochure, and gives evidence of his versatility in literary work. (Drexel-Biddle & Bradley Co.)

The essays in Thomas Wentworth Higginson's "Book and Heart" make delightful reading. They are discussions in the literary rather than the strictly critical vein, treating books and life of the day in general, in a suggestive rather than in the pessimistic vein so much in vogue among certain of the illuminati. (Harper and Brothers.)

An entertainging story of Dakota life twenty years ago is "The Voyage of the Rattletrap" by Hayden Carruth. "The Rattletrap" was the name of a prairie schooner manned by a crew of two young men and a boy, and the story is full of all sorts of experiences met by the venturesome trio. (Harper and Brothers.)

"Leaves from Juliana Horatio Ewing's Canada Home," by Elizabeth S. Tucker, is a description of the home and the home life of the authoress of "Reka Dom." The book is charmingly illustrated and contains facsimiles of certain of the water color drawings made by Mrs. Ewing. (Roberts Brothers.)

Opie Read's new book, "An Arkansas Planter," is a story of the South—a picture of Southern life vivid and interesting. The race question receives considerable attention, and is dealt with in a conclusive way. (Rand, McNally & Co.)

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

REASONS FOR USING
Walter Baker & Co.'s
Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., Cor. Sutter.

SPRINGTIME IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THAT TIRED FEELING AND JADED APPETITE

To correct this eat
DAINTY
SALADS
But you must use

Durkee's
Salad
Dressing

Then you have a
Salad fit for an EPICURE !

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
Sherwood & Sherwood
SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

THE
P. ROSSI CO.
Art
Importers
No. 117 Sutter Street
Bet. Kearny and Montgomery
Beg to notify their friends of the arrival of a large stock of
HAND-CARVED
FURNITURE
Antique and Modern
Also, French Tapestries and Painted Window Shades—something worth seeing.

Polished
Hardwood Floors
$1.50 per Square Yard
Fine Work—First-class References
INLAID FLOOR CO.
602 Market St., Crocker Building
Telephone Main 5998

A Home
MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A
GAZOGENE
BUT NOT
If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See
Justinian Caire
521-523 Market St., San Fran.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Murphy, Grant & Co.
Pacific Coast Sole Agents

A BOSTON GIRL

Miss Josephine Cohan On and Off the Stage.

Miss Cohan told me afterward that she knew I was "in front," and she had tried her best to impress me. There was no doubt in my mind at the time that it was an especially good "turn." It was good enough for me and good enough for the audience that rent the Orpheum smoke with their applause. She does a doll-dance that is as clever an imitation of wood and wax as is possible for flesh and bones to achieve. But her eyes! It didn't seem to me that a brain would have any room at all in a head that held such eyes as hers, and I wasn't particularly keen on going around behind the scenes to meet her. I have had enough of interviews where I have to furnish all the ideas myself—and I dreaded it not a little as I stumbled along down the little alley lined with white-washed dressing-rooms, and knocked at her door. I had in my mind a picture of her as she left the stage five minutes before, when she looked like this:

I waited until she had dressed, and then we sat on a table among the properties and exchanged confidences—for, will you believe it, she was from Boston, and had been to school on St. James avenue! Perhaps I don't know anything about that school! As nearly as we could figure it, I had been past the place 200 times while she was there, and while I was going to Chauncy Hall. We got on furiously after that, for she was now a nice girl. The Cohans do the "happy family" act very charmingly indeed; the brother writes the acts and songs, and the mother makes the costumes. The parents are very quiet and the children love each other, etc., etc. No! this wasn't what I was after, but what could you expect, sitting behind the scenes with the racket of getting ready for the next act all around, and the applause swallowing our voices? We went out into the cafe and sat down at a dry table, and then we really talked about—but I'll not say what, for I had begun to forget she had ever looked like this:

I'm sure it's a little lonely though to be a professional automaton, and you do get a little tired of your own people when you're so very carefully taken care of. For you travel in an exclusively select partie-carree when you are one of a specialty quartette. You don't have many men calling on you, and you go bicycling only with your brother, who is a nice boy, too, when he isn't wheeling with some one else, for he also needs a little change, and you get so that you're glad to have a little quiet conversation with even a reporter, especially when he prefers a real talk to an interview, and tells you something of a city so new to you that you know only one street. If he assures you that in spite of your brother's protest there are places in Chinatown where a lady may visit, you might even risk liking him, a little, perhaps. You have seen such men at West Stockbridge where you have a little summer cottage, where everybody doesn't know you ever looked like this:

She was a Boston girl—and she had aspirations, of course, to leave the variety stage and become a trained nurse. I hope she wasn't fibbing about that part, for I wouldn't at all mind being in her hospital for awhile. We discussed Kipling and Bliss Carwan—not too deeply, to be sure, for there are Boston girls and Boston girls—and ever and again we got back to Chinatown, where her brother wouldn't let her go. By this time, you will understand, she was strictly Miss Cohan and not the Josephine of the programme. We were making great progress, for I had quite forgotten what I had come for. I was reminded of it by the ring on her thumb—it was her only affectation. She didn't need the rings, and she didn't need the stones in her ears—I wonder if she knew she was pretty enough without them? Evidently not.

But I left Miss Cohan and began with Josephine.

"Tell me," said I, "how long have you been doing this?"

"Eight years," she said. And she was only 20. "Arn't you dead sick of it?" said I. "No," she replied, "not when I can hold the audience—it's funny how one can feel the general average expression of the whole house, and how one gets to rely on it, and, too, now we will pick out a single smile and play like mad to keep that smile lighted up. One night I was feeling particularly exuberant, till I noticed the disgusted face of a woman in a box, and I lost my nerve and nearly cried. I told my mother when she came on, how that face had spoiled everything, and she laughed at me for it. But she began noting the hoodoo also, and it worried her. Then when my father came on, we told him in an aside, and he gradually began playing to the same face and grew more and more desperate, until finally, if it hadn't been for my brother, who never minds anything, we would have been frozen stiff on the stage. It makes a lot of difference!" Imagine a single smile making a difference to an object like this!

And finally Miss Cohan and I strolled home to her hotel, chaperoned by a middle-aged and very sedate couple of parents who had been romping on the stage like 4-year-olds a half hour before. It was not a bit different from taking Miss Presidio home, I assure you, except that we walked, and in a different direction. Quite a family party, with the daughter and a young man lagging a little out of ear-shot in the rear. I have done it many a time with quite another kind of a doll, one who wasn't half so good-looking as Miss Cohan, either. A doll who made such eyes at me as Miss Cohan would never dare attempt even on the Orpheum stage. Miss Presidio is, however, what is called a man's girl, and I'm sure Miss Cohan is a girl's girl; still for traveling around the country, doing high kicking and short-skirted, pink-legged doll dancing is not incompatible with being a "nice girl," if one has a father and mother with one, and especially a brother who won't let her go to Chinatown. Yes, I am sure Miss Cohan is a nice girl—look at her face here, and see if she is not.

MISS JOSEPHINE COHAN
THE CLEVER DOLL DANCER AT THE ORPHEUM
Photos by Bushnell

Mr. Hermann Schwarze (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

$100 Reward $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Wise people seeking advice on important matters consult only the best authorities. Thos. Cook & Son are the recognized authorities on Travel in all Civilized Countries. The knowledge attained during their fifty-six years of experience as travel experts, is at the disposal of all intending travelers. San Francisco Office, 621 Market street.

$5,000 will purchase half interest in United States patent controlling one of the most profitable advertising devices ever offered to the public. The device pays 25% per month on cost. Over $4,000 has already been realized from the sale of the right for three counties in California alone. The enterprise is well worth the immediate investigation of the most cautious investor. Serious illness of owner necessitates the sale. Address R. A. L., care The Wave.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

QUEEN LILY SOAP
BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE
Patronize Home Industry

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from March 22 to April 3, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar. Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

The Androus Stakes Monday, March 22d
The Ulimah Stakes Saturday, March 27th
The California Derby Saturday, April 3d

F. H. GREEN, Secy. S. N. ANDROUS, Pres.

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Monday, March 29th, First Stellar Appearance in this city of

OTIS SKINNER

Supported by MAUD DURBIN and FREDERICK MOSLEY and a Strong Company of Twenty Players

First Week: Five Nights and Saturday Matinee

His Grace, De Grammont

Saturday Night, HAMLET

Second Week: "A SOLDIER OF FORTUNE"

CALIFORNIA THEATRE AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Famous French Operatic Organization

F. CHARLEY, Impresario

To-night, Saturday, Faust! Tuesday the 30th, Aida! Thursday, April 1st, Rigoletto!

Saturday Night, April 3d, by request, La Juive!

Special, Sunday Night, April 4th, Voyage of Suzette at popular prices: 50c. to $2

To be followed by William Tell, Pagliacci, Carmen, Hamlet, etc.

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

Two Weeks, beginning Monday, March 29th
First appearance here of

MR. & MRS. RUSS. WHYTALL

In their romantic drama by Mr. Whytall

For Fair Virginia

As presented by them over four hundred times. Original cast and scenery from Fifth Avenue Theatre, N. Y. April 12th, Miss Georgie Cayvan

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, March 29

Barnes & Sisson, "the Singer and the Maid"
Last week of Henry Lee, in "Great Men, Past and Present"
The Comedian Johnny Ray, assisted by Emma Ray
Three Vilona Sisters, Musical Artists
Werner & Rieder, Tyrolean Warblers
The Three Richards, the Greatest Acrobats on Earth
Great Hit of the Four Cohans, Doll Dancers
Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Every Evening, beginning Monday, March 29th the Spectacular Operatic Burlesque

DON JUAN

(A D LIB)

A hodge-podge of mirth, music and dance! Great cast! A merry-go-round of lovely scenery, beautiful costumes and appropriate accessories.

Two Beautiful Ballets! Everything New!

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : : MANAGERS

Last performances to-day and to-morrow, matinees and nights, of the famous farcical comedy

THE STRATEGISTS

Monday, March 29th, first production at popular prices of the Latest Eastern Success

NEW BLOOD

By Augustus Thomas, author of "Alabama," "In Missoura," etc

A Sumptuous Scenic Presentation!

The entire company will appear in the play, including George Osbourne and Hugo Toland

15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO Sole Lessee and Manager

Last performances of The Great Northwest with its wonderful Prairie-Fire Scene

Commencing Monday, March 29th, initial production in San Francisco of the Sensational Comedy-Drama

"THE DAGO"

A play of absorbing interest, abounding in touching pathos, happy comedy and startling climaxes

Realistic Fire Scene! Great Blizzard in New York!

New Songs, Dances and Specialties!

Strong Cast of Chosen People

Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

Peoples Tel. 195 Sunset Tel. 573 Black

THE

Dashaway Stables

130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.

E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

RACING

Events of the Two Tracks — Abuses in Connection With the Starting-Gate.

With the opening of another week the scene has changed again to Ingleside, the wind-up at Emeryville last Saturday furnishing a very fair day's sport.

The Rancho del Paso handicap, for 3-year-olds, one mile, brought out six starters only, but resulted in a pretty race, in which Ed Purser's useful and somewhat speedy filly, Scarl Pin, 107 pounds, more than held her own with Candelaria, 115 pounds, and beat him for speed between the paddock and the winning post. Aquinas and Good Times ran badly, and the light and shelly look of the former, for some little time past, would lead one to think that he is just now in poor racing condition.

The 2-year-old racing has been decidedly interesting, and seems to leave the fillies still in command of the situation.

The flying stakes at Emeryville for fillies, four furlongs, was reduced to five runners only, two of which, Napamax and Miss Rowena, were in the Burns & Waterhouse interest. To a good start the Idalium filly, Little T. G., was quickest on her legs, Martha being last. At the end of the first furlong Miss Rowena was out in front with Martha at her heels, and Napamax five or six lengths in the rear. On reaching the head of the stretch the last-named proceeded to do a little overhauling in grand style, but was never able to get quite on even terms with the stout little Martha, who, in the final struggle, was cleverly pinched out by Miss Rowena, whom Eddie Jones forced along the rails a head in front, Napamax being a like distance behind. On the running Napamax showed to be the best filly in the race, and if appearances are not deceiving she will one day make a race mare of a high order. Everything will depend, however, on the care she gets, and if made too much use of in her 2-year-old career she will not fulfill her present promise. Martha is a sterling little piece of goods and probably a somewhat tougher sort. In this race she hardly moved in the best form of which she is capable.

On Monday, at Ingleside, the Androus stakes, for 2-year-olds, four and a half furlongs, led to a repetition of Saturday's battle between the two good fillies of which I have just been writing, and with three pounds pull in the weights Martha downed Napamax with half a length to spare. Martha got the lead at the start with Thorpe, Napamax, Salmera and Little T. G. close in her wake till the turn had been negotiated, when the field began to drop away and a determined struggle set in between Martha and Napamax, the former holding her own well and reaching the winning post with a clear half length to spare, in the good time of 0:55¼, nothing having been able to get to her head during the entire journey. Thorpe was third, beaten four lengths by his stable companion.

On Tuesday the Owas-Viola colt Outlay, belonging to Mr. P. Dunne, and to whose good looks and promise I have more than once drawn attention, made a runaway race of the three and one-half furlongs for 2-year-olds, a field of fourteen starting for the occasion. Perhaps this youngster and Sir William (Fitzjames—Ysabel) are the pick of the colts we have seen out so far here this season, and it may be noted that neither of them are by leading sires. Both were bred at Rancho del Paso. Of the two, Outlay is the more attractive in appearance and style of going, but Sir William has up to the present time surpassed him in performance.

Wednesday was an afternoon spoiled by fog, the last four races being more or less out of sight. The track was in fast condition, and in the mile race Salvation, 102 pounds, made the track record of 1:40¾, after a good race with Boots & Son's Installator, 104 pounds. The latter seemed to have the race in hand up to the paddock, but when challenged by Marcus Daly's horse was unable to stall off the rush, and was beaten pretty nearly a length at the finish.

---

Mr. August Belmont, who has recently been on a visit to the Coast, attended the races at Ingleside on Tuesday, and at an informal meeting with the directors of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club, at which Mr. T. H. Williams, Jr., President of the California Jockey Club, was also present, explained the position taken by the Jockey Club of New York on several matters wherein their views are not in accord with those of the Western Turf Congress. Readers will be aware that the Pacific Coast Jockey Club is a member of the latter body. The meeting was not productive of any particular result, but the true interests of racing are certainly benefited by a little pleasant discussion under such circumstances. The subject chiefly touched upon was the action of the jockey club with regard to Bruce's American Stud Book, and the plans for registration of thoroughbred stock, which, as things stand at present, is a source of annoyance to everybody concerned.

---

Since the recall flag was brought into use at Emeryville much has been said and written on the subject. The weight of opinion seems to be opposed to the system. I have never seen the gate operated in Australia, but from what I have been able to gather it seems to be worked with more success there than here. The idea of a recall after the barrier has once risen is certainly contrary to the principle of the starting gate, and if an illustration of its misuse were needed none better could be afforded than that given in the second race last Saturday. The final start was effected at the third attempt, in both the previous essays all the horses getting away in good line except Nebula, who wheeled round on her hind legs and broke in the wrong direction. In such a case a horse ought to be left at the post, as it is the first business of an owner and his jockey to have their animal ready to break properly, and it is unfair that other owners' horses should be bustled to help out their opponents' deficiencies. The main trouble seems to be that some jockeys want to get a jump or two before they reach the barrier, which, although an apparent line may be obtained as the barrier flies up, gives them really three or four lengths to the good. If some of them were fined for this offense the starter would be able to manipulate the gate in accordance with the principles on which it is supposed to be worked, namely, that every horse should be in line and practically motionless when the barrier rises.

---

At the recent annual show of Shire horses in London, 553 head were exhibited. At the first show in 1880 the total number was 165 head. The following are the measurements of a prize-winning stallion 10 years of age: Height, 17 hands; girth, 8 feet 6 inches; weight, 2,408 pounds; hoof, from heel to heel, 21 inches. The railways are the best customers in Great Britain for these big horses, and it is a wonderful sight to see the active and docile monsters standing alone in the midst of a net-work of tracks, with trains coming and going, waiting their turn to be hitched on to cars. With these they move off at a sharp trot and at a given signal, as the hauling chain is automatically detached, jump to one side and allow the loaded car to bang into position behind the rest of the line. No better example of horse sense can be seen anywhere.

BENEDICT.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

FOR COUGHS, ASTHMA AND THROAT DISORDERS "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are an effectual remedy. Sold only in boxes.

The Story of An Inventor.

The "Overland Monthly" has issued a reprint of "The Story of An Inventor," by William Walsh. It is a narrative of graphic power, and has received widespread comment here and in the East, and is a fitting tribute to the genius of A. B. Bowers, whom it appropriately places in the front rank amongst the great inventors of the age. The story is a fine bit of work. In the reprint a recent article in "The Wave" on Mr. Bowers is given a prominent place, and is quoted entire.

Favorite Brand of Champagne.

Speaking of champagnes, the Moet & Chandon brand appears to be the favorite among swelldom. Unaided by the influence of caterers and leaders so frequently employed, Moet & Chandon appears to have captured New York cultured society. The brand was exclusively served at the Patriarchs' ball, Washington Gridiron Club (banquet of international repute), New Year party of O. H. P. Belmont, and at the famous Bradley-Martin costume ball.—Hotel Gazette.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

FINE FUR AND SEALSKIN GARMENTS TO ORDER

Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast . . . .

AD. KOCOUR

Fashionable Furrier

51½ Kearny Street

OPPOSITE CHRONICLE BUILDING

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

THE LATEST STYLES IN

CHOICE WOOLENS

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel

Bicycle and Golf Suits

COLUMBIA THEATRE—Extra

Thursday Afternoon, April 1st, at 3 sharp

Grand Wagner Concert

OF THE

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY SOCIETY

Greatest Programme ever offered in this city

Excerpts from seven Wagner Operas

SOLOISTS

Cecelia Adler Keesing, Mathile Wilde and Katherine Flemming Hinrichs

Rhys Thomas, Alois Werner and Jacob Muller

GUSTAV HINRICHS, Director

Sale now open at box office: $1 and 50 cts.

Camilla Urso

The Great Violin Virtuose and her own Company

Monday Eve., Mar. 29, Friday Eve., Apr. 2

Saturday Matinee, April 3

AT GOLDEN GATE HALL

Seats now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co's.

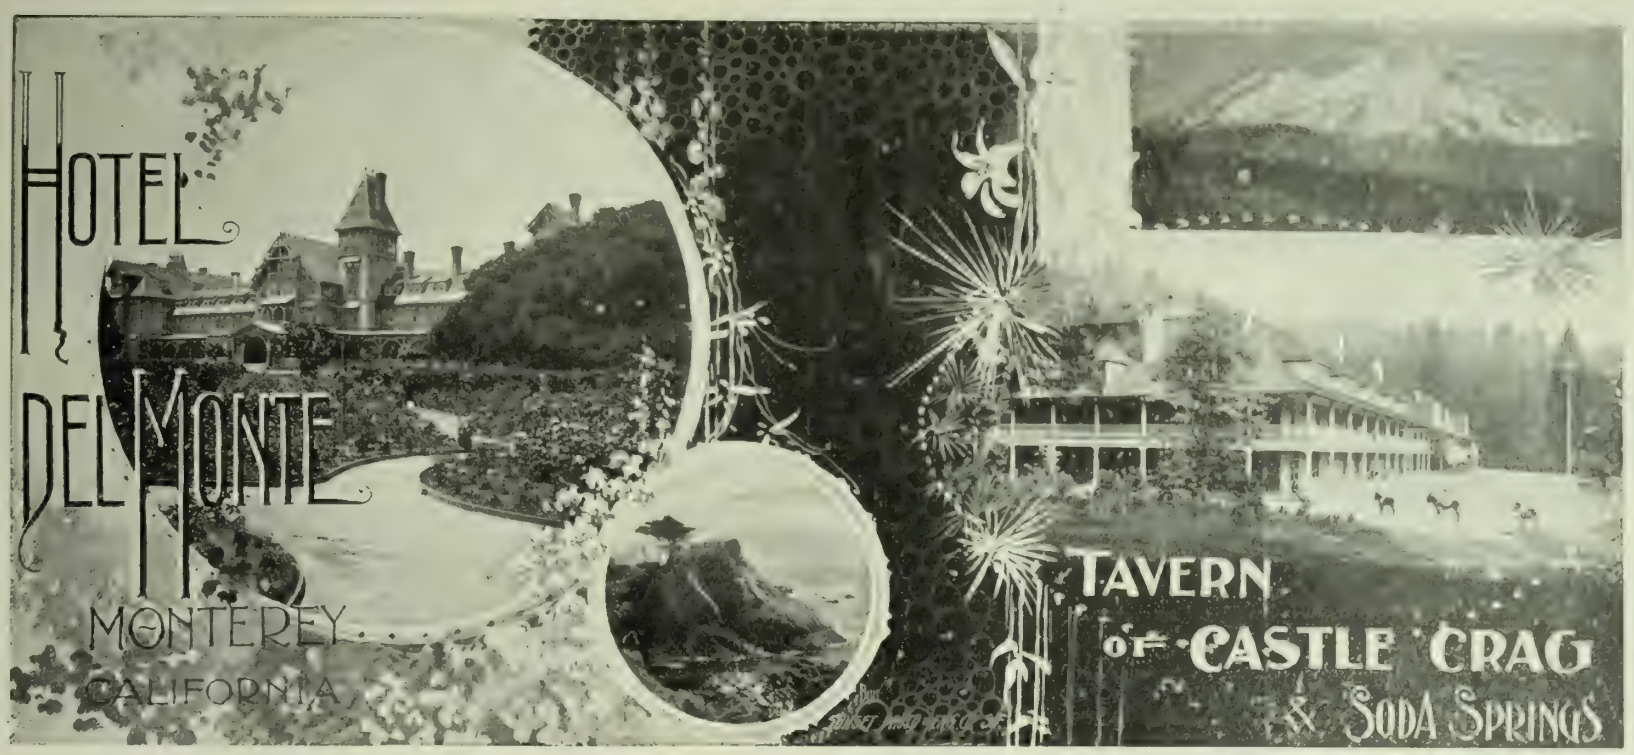
Evening, $1.50, $1 and 75c., reserved

Matinee, $1 and 50c., reserved

Under the management of W. L. GREENBAUM

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

Sunset Limited

Southern Pacific Company takes this occasion to announce that the Season of 1896-97 of this WORLD-FAMOUS TRAIN

CLOSES

Saturday, March 27, 1897
From San Francisco Eastbound

Sunday, March 27, 1897
From Los Angeles

Thursday, April 7, 1897
From New Orleans Westbound

After which dates it will be WITHDRAWN

REMAINING TRIPS

EASTBOUND

| From San Francisco | | From Los Angeles | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Saturday | March 13 | Sunday | March 14 |
| Tuesday | " 16 | Wednesday | " 17 |
| Friday | " 20 | Sunday | " 21 |
| Saturday | " 27 | Sunday | " 28 |

who contemplate a transcontinental trip will contribute immeasurably to their well-being by bearing these dates in mind and purchasing tickets via the Great Southern Pacific Route. The trip between San Francisco and New Orleans over this famous route is not merely more than a dream of delight and comfort—IT IS THE REALITY, as thousands of patrons of SUNSET LIMITED will gladly testify.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for Port Townsend, Victoria, and Alaska 9 a.m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Victoria, Vancouver (B. C.), Port Townsend, Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, and New Whatcom (Bellingham Bay), 9 a.m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. April 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. April 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Santa Monica, at 11 a.m. April 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing.

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds
All Legal Papers
Specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, April 20, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates

S. S. "Mariposa," for Australia, Thursday, April 1, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BELCHER SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Gold Hill, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 2d day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 54) of twenty-five cents (25c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, San Francisco, Cal. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the 27th day of April, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. C. L. PERKINS, Secretary.

Office, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, northeast corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 55
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied March 4, 1897
Delinquent in office April 8, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 9, 1897
J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 18191—Dept. 9.—In the matter of the Estate of SARAH SMITH, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased, with the will annexed, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator, at the office of Frank P. Kelly, 101 Sansome street, rooms 21 and 22, San Francisco, California, the same being the place for the transaction of the business of said estate, in the City and County of San Francisco.

W. R. FELTER,
Adm. of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, February 25, 1897.
FRANK P. KELLY,
Attorney for Administrator.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM O. BERG, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, March 18, 1897.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal.; location of works, Storey Co., Nev.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 111) of Ten Cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 23d day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday the 14th day of May, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine st., San Francisco.

OFFICE OF THE HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING COMPANY, room No. 11, San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 311 Pine street, San Francisco.

To the stockholders of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, and to all others concerned: Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the consent, in writing, of the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, duly filed in the office of said company, the principal place of business of said Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company has been changed from room No. 3 of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to room No. 11, in the same building, where the business of said company will be hereafter transacted. This notice is published in accordance with Section 321 of the Civil Code.

Dated March 19, 1897.
By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION FERRY WORKS
AGENTS
222 Market Street
S. F.

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are unrivalled, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are unnecessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALEX & BRUNI, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GOLDEN 141

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,593

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES.; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES.; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
301 Montgomery Street

Why not

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
Branch Stores: 302 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971. S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Secretary Carlisle once issued an order that no two members of a family should be employed in the United States Treasury Department at the same time. This order caused several dismissals and forced resignations, and one young woman, whose mother had been forced to leave, entered an indignant protest with Logan Carlisle, the Secretary's son and chief clerk of the department. She pleaded, threatened, and finally said: "Well, Mr. Chief Clerk, it's a poor rule that won't work both ways. Both your father and yourself being here, the rule is violated, and I think it a shame that such favoritism should be displayed!" Logan drummed on his desk with his pencil and assumed a far-away look. Finally he said, "Well, I guess the old man will have to go."

George Clarke, the celebrated negro minstrel, was being examined as a witness in a lawsuit, and was severely interrogated by a lawyer who wished to break down his evidence. "You are in the negro-minstrel business, I believe?" inquired the lawyer. "Yes, sir," was the prompt reply. "Is not that rather a low calling?" demanded the lawyer. "I don't know but what it is, sir," replied the minstrel; "but it is so much better than my father's that I'm rather proud of it." In a supercilious tone the attorney asked, "What was your father's calling?" "He was a lawyer," replied Clarke, in a tone that sent the whole court into a roar of laughter.

One night while De Wolf Hopper was playing an engagement at Palmer's Theatre, one of the hangings caught fire and the flames flickered into the scenery. In a moment the audience was all excitement. The curtain was rung down, but as the people could not see they were more frightened than ever. A panic seemed unavoidable, when Hopper ran out and shouted: "There is absolutely no danger, I assure you. You all know that I am dead stuck on myself, and if there was any danger of my getting singed even, I'd burn the wind!"

The photographer was as persuasive as possible, but the youngster would not sit still. Finally, in desperation, he asked the mother to retire for a moment, as he thought he could manage it alone. She had scarcely been absent a moment when the photographer called her back, announcing he had obtained the expression he required. When they reached home the mother asked: "Nellie, what did the man say when I left you alone with him?" "He thaid," lisped Nellie, "thit thill, you little rathcall, or I'll thake the life out of you!"

During Virginia Harned's first season she was playing "Nisbe" in "A Night Off" in a Texas town. In one act, where she tells her lover's fortune with cards, she happened to pick up the jack of hearts first, and holding it aloft said, "That's you!" As Miss Harned was young and a beginner, her vis-a-vis always found the right card for her and put it on top. A man in the gallery saw him touch the jack, and jumping to his feet, waved his hat and yelled, "Cheese it, Nisbe; the son-of-a-gun has cheated you!"

A woman from a fourth-story window called out to an old Jew peddler, who was toiling slowly along the street. "Vant me?" shouted the Jew. "Yes," shouted the woman back again; "come up here, mister!" The old man had little custom that day, so he hopefully mounted the long stairway. When he reached the top the woman emerged from one of the rooms, holding a howling youngster by the ear. "Mister," she said, tersely, "I've just called you up to Tommy. If he's a naughty boy, won't you put him in your bag?"

"When I told her the nature of the charge on which I arrested her," said the policeman, in giving evidence against a woman accused of robbing a pawnbroker, "she turned away from me and swallowed a bed-tick, a pair of straps, two brass candlesticks, a smoothing-iron and the bellows." "Nonsense!" said the amazed magistrate; "have you lost your senses?" "Oh, your worship!" replied the constable, "'tis the tickets of them I mean she swallowed."

The Earl of Glasgow, who was recently appointed Governor of New Zealand, dispatched an aide-de-camp with a verbal invitation to a newly-appointed minister whose natural abilities exceeded the advantages of his birth or training, to attend a dinner at Government House, to which all the magnates of the colony had been invited. The minister, instead of accepting, sent by the aide the following answer: "Much obliged, but me and my missus don't meal out."

During a general election a canvasser called at the house of Professor Froude, the historian. Mr. Froude was out, so the canvasser had to content himself with interrogating the butler as to how Mr. Froude would vote. The butler—an old servant, who understood his master well—replied: "When the Liberals is in, Mr. Froude is sometimes a Conservative. When the Conservatives is in, Mr. Froude is always a Liberal."

In the performance of "At Piney Ridge," when Burr McIntosh, as "Jack," accuses the villain of misconduct, and receiving in reply "You lie!" he makes a movement to strike him, but as ladies are present, his arm drops to his side. At this juncture, a man in front at a recent performance was so enraged at the heartless villian that he called out, "Soak him, Jack; hit him a good one for luck!"

One night recently a man in the front row of a New York audience called on May Irwin to recite "Hiawatha." The actress was almost taken off her feet—she could not remember a line of it. "I will if you'll give me my cue," she called back; "I've forgotten how it starts." He gave her the first line and the buxom May gave him the rest of it.

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Mateo and Cottages

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A charming resort, both winter and summer. A pleasant forty-minutes' ride by rail from San Francisco, with frequent train-service.

Delightful surroundings and comparative freedom from fog, together with all essentials to the comfort and pleasure of the guests, combine to recommend Hotel Mateo to those who appreciate such advantages.

Illustrated descriptive souvenir sent upon application. F. A. SHEPARD, Manager.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., San Francisco

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

Thoerner & Roesli

FLORISTS

Choice Cut Flowers and Plants
Funeral Designs

Also Artistic Designs made of Imported, Dry, Natural Flowers for Export Purposes a specialty

809 Larkin Street

BETWEEN GEARY AND O'FARRELL, SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Brushes

For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SUPPLEMENT TO "THE WAVE"

San Francisco, March 27, 1897

THE RE-ELECTION OF SENATOR PERKINS.

This week "The Wave" presents a supplement containing the portraits of the members of the Legislature whose votes entitle the Honorable George C. Perkins to the certificate of United States Senator from California for the ensuing six years. Senator Perkins was chosen on the first ballot, and it is worthy of comment that every Republican member of the Legislature, with one exception, is included in the group of his supporters. The absence of this face is a something more complimentary to Senator Perkins than to the absentee. While the Legislature was in session, an effort was made to steal from the favorite the re-election to which he was meritoriously entitled, and which had been decided in his favor by the vote of the people. Though strongly urged so to do, he refused to forsake his post of duty at Washington for the purpose of mending his political fences. His confidence in the members of the Legislature never for a moment swerved. Stories calculated to breed dissension among his followers, appealing to the prejudices and passions of men, were circulated in the hope of breaking down his forces. Legislators were appealed to with promise of reward and by every other means known to the lobbyist. Friends of the Senator who were alarmed at this onslaught urged him by telegraph to return to California. Notwithstanding the fears of his friends, the Senator was imperturbed, and refused to believe that Republican members of the Legislature would forget their pledges or their private promises made during the campaign. To the credit of these gentlemen, be it said, that, notwithstanding the great pressure brought to bear upon them, they did not swerve a hair's breadth from the course of duty, and the first ballot selected George C. Perkins by a full Republican vote, with one exception. Senator Perkins is a Californian in all his attachments, and his ties of home and business. During the next six years of his term Californians may rest assured they will have a Senator at Washington who will not only stand to the defense of her interests when they are assailed, but who will also push and urge upon Congress her claims to national legislation wherever the same may be needed. He is watchful and alert, conscious and indefatigable, and, above all, is moved by honest purposes and a desire to indeed represent the people of this State and their interests. No citizen of California owes more to the people than does George C. Perkins. He has never made a demand upon them for political support but what they have responded with a ready willingness. He is prepared now, as he ever has been, to respond to the needs and calls and demands of that people.

The following extracts from the press tell the story of his popularity, and indicate his influence in the late campaign toward saving California to Republicanism, sound money, protection, and McKinley:

George C. Perkins has been elected to the United States Senate from California when he was three thousand miles away and without the buying of votes or the creation of any scandal, and it is time to ask whether this has been a lucky political accident, or whether a new era has really dawned and the "sack" is permanently banished from senatorial elections? It would be pleasant to think the latter is the case and that what Senator Perkins has done other candidates for the same office could do—going out into the counties and securing instructions from conventions, so that when the members arrive in Sacramento they will know just what their constituents expect and making a scramble for votes impossible. Unfortunately it is to be feared that the conditions which made Senator Perkins' dignified victory possible will not be soon repeated. Not once in twenty times will a single candidate be the favorite in all sections of the State, from the far northern counties to those on the Mexican border and in the mines and the valleys alike. It is necessary to such a victory as that won by Senator Perkins not only that there should be a man as popular as he is, but that there should be only one. Usually there are two or more favorites in the field, and they divide the people in their preferences, and the people send up legislators to Sacramento who must fight it out. So we cannot expect to see the Perkins episode very frequently repeated. But it would occur oftener if so many men did not aspire to the United States Senate who have established no claim to the honor. Senator Perkins had done this by being Governor and by playing a creditable part in public affairs for thirty years. It is easy to agree upon a candidate for a high office if it comes as an earned promotion; but when men ask for high offices which they have not earned by faithful apprenticeship in lower ones, there is bound to be difficulty in reaching an agreement.—Oakland "Enquirer."

On Tuesday of last week the "Express" published the prediction that Senator George C. Perkins would be re-elected on the first ballot by the unanimous or nearly unanimous vote of the Republican members of the Legislature. The re-election of Senator Perkins is in line with good public policy and the welfare and harmony of the Republican party. Throughout the campaign, the period of holding conventions, he was the only avowed candidate to succeed himself, and he was formally indorsed by a majority of the county conventions and the legislative nominees pledged to their support. No new conditions had arisen since the holding of the conventions to change the relations of Senator Perkins to his party, and he could not have been defeated without the suspicion and charge if not the employment of bribery and corruption, and a revolt within the lines of the Republican party that would have been serious and of long standing. Senator Perkins is to be congratulated upon having won for the second time the election to the United States Senate in a clean and honorable way. Notwithstanding the fact that the Senator is known to be a man of great wealth, he has not been charged even by his political enemies with spending a dollar in the contest illegitimately, and the "Examiner," the leading Democratic paper on the coast, has paid its tribute to the cleanness of its fight by according him throughout the most enthusiastic support. Senator Perkins is particularly popular in Southern California, and the representatives of this section were his most efficient and loyal supporters throughout.—Los Angeles "Express."

When it was first definitely ascertained that the Republicans would have a majority on joint ballot in the Legislature, it was universally conceded that George C. Perkins would succeed himself in the United States Senate. Our dispatches day before yesterday created some doubt about this, but were more reassuring yesterday morning. Mr. Perkins is a clean politician, a man of marked ability, and has shown himself to be one of the best Senators this State has ever had. He is a pleasing and forcible stump speaker, and during the last campaign canvassed the entire State for Republicanism and renewed prosperity. It was his candidacy for the United States that carried this State for McKinley and made the Legislature Republican. There can be no doubt about this. He is deserving of an election, and it is for the best interests of this State to elect him. No other man in the State can do as much for us and for the country at large as he can. It would be a disgrace and a blot upon the Republican party not to elect him. We were in hopes that we should be able to record, and we believe that we shall be able yet to record, that at least one Senator from this State was elected without the aid of any boodle and without his presence at Sacramento, or even in the State. We know that Mr. Perkins would scorn to use such methods, and we believe that such methods will not prevail against him.—Eureka "Times."

While we are firm in the belief that United States Senators should be elected by the popular vote, yet the California Legislature has performed its duty, and by the re-election of Hon. George C. Perkins as United States Senator the will of the people has been done. As early as last summer it was conceded by the people that should the Republicans be successful at the polls George C. Perkins would be elected to succeed himself. As the campaign approached that alone was the legislative issue, and with the name of Perkins on the Republican banner that party carried the Legislature by a safe majority in spite of the fact that in nearly every senatorial and assembly district in the State the combined Democratic and Populist vote exceeded that of the Republican party. Such was the emphatic verdict of the people. It was an instruction to every Republican member to vote for Perkins and no one else, and Californians irrespective of party are pleased with the result. During his incumbency at Washington he has proved himself the friend of the people, and his services in their behalf have been fittingly recognized by his re-election. His wide acquaintance and influence will constantly increase, and much good legislation will be achieved for the State and nation and be credited to the Hon. George C. Perkins.—St. Helena "Star."

The re-election of Governor Perkins to the United States Senate is not a vapid compliment to an influential politician, but a fully deserved recognition of the arduous labors of an eminent public servant, whose character and abilities appeal to the confidence of the people of the country. It is Senator Perkins' eminent merit that he is not a politician in the common American sense of the word. He is the highest and best type of the Californian, one of the empire-builders, one of that legion of pioneers whose labors challenge the admiration of the world. The history of the American colonization of California surpasses in strength the story of old Roman settlements. No mythical argonauts have shown the strength and endurance of our gold-seekers. Senator Perkins represents the best influences created in California since the days of '49—influences that tend to the growth of civilization and the strengthening of the moral character of our people. We need such a statesman, not only for his conspicuous ability but for his strong personality and pure character, and we join the people of the State in commending the Legislature's prompt indorsement of the Senator's high position and eminent capacity, as a representative of the State to the great Council of Nations.—San Francisco "Emmanuel."

The election of Senator George C. Perkins to succeed himself on the first ballot at Sacramento yesterday was something of a surprise to the more conservative ones who imagined that the opposition to him amounted to a little something more than a show. If a popular vote had been the test of success yesterday the result would have been even more overwhelming than the figures from the Senate and Assembly. Senator Perkins is essentially a man of the people. Like all children of flesh and blood he is liable to err or to follow the dictates of his own conscience in opposition to a seeming majority voice of his partisans or constituents. That is but natural and should not cause vicious resentment on the part of those who fail to receive favors. He has filled the position so well that the people could hardly afford to send a new man there even if they had desired to. The greatest admiration is everywhere expressed for the character of campaigning and electioneering he has always insisted his managers should use in his behalf. Senator Perkins' return is a deserved compliment and an assurance that California will have a representative in the halls of Congress to carefully guard her varied interests in need of Federal legislation.—Marysville "Appeal."

The re-election of Senator Perkins by the California Legislature is another evidence that conservatism is at this time the dominant spirit of the country. Senator Perkins is eminently a conservative statesman. He is known to be a safe man of affairs and sound in his devotion to Republican principles. He has long been prominent both in the business and politics of the State, and if he has never distinguished himself brilliantly, has been at all times a man in whom the people have had confidence, and who could be relied upon to perform whatever duties he undertook. He is, therefore, well fitted in every sense to represent the people at this juncture and to remain for them in Congress that conservatism which they feel in their own homes. It is with sincerity "The Call" extends to the Senator-elect congratulations on his election. He is clearly the representative of the conservatism of the day, and is justly entitled, therefore, to claim in the Senate that he stands as a true exponent of the sentiments of the people of California at this juncture. Having served for some time in the Senate his experience will be of value to the State, and the Republican party confidently counts on him to justify its action in electing him.—San Francisco "Call."

Senator George C. Perkins will undoubtedly be re-elected, and no man is more deserving this recognition. California, in times past, won for herself, through the action of Legislatures in selecting United States Senators, a reputation that was not enviable. Whether justly or not it has been charged numerous times that the office was awarded the man with the sack which was the best filled and the strings to which were the most easily unloosed rather than to the one with the most ability. We do not say this has always been the case, but a fair name once blackened remains black as long as the least shadow of suspicion rests upon it. The appointment of Hon. George C. Perkins to the important place was a happy choice. His election followed, a verdict of his party, free from all doubt as to his high-minded purposes and to which no breath of scandal was vouchsafed. He has given the people of the nation and this State faithful service, and from the opening of the campaign it has been known that it was his desire to be re-elected. He did the Republican party herculean service up to the day of election. He is an able, clean, upright and intelligent man, a worthy representative of a great State.—St. Helena "Star."

It seems to be generally conceded that United States Senator Perkins will be re-elected at the coming session of the Legislature. The State may congratulate itself upon the situation. Mr. Perkins had a wide reputation as a successful business man of unimpeachable integrity before he was chosen by the people for Governor of the State in 1879. His administration of the executive office was so satisfactory, from every point of view, that he was looked upon as an available candidate for the United States Senate. His subsequent election to the Senate struck a responsive chord in the hearts of the people. He has served his term in a manner characteristic of his distinguished abilities, and his well-known integrity both moral and mental. Mr. Perkins is in touch thoroughly with the sentiments and wants of the people of the State. The State may, as we have said, congratulate itself upon having elected a Legislature with the avowed intention of returning Mr. Perkins to his seat at Washington. He is a worthy representative of one of the greatest States of the Union, in the most august legislative body in the world.—The Kern "Standard."

If McKinley was the "logical" candidate for President, it cannot be denied that Senator George C. Perkins is the "logical" candidate of the Republicans and hundreds of Democrats of this State for re-election by the Legislature soon to assemble in Sacramento, and from present appearances this fact is so very apparent that it is not likely he will have any opponent in the Republican caucus, and he should not, as his course as Senator entitles him to a unanimous vote in a Republican caucus. Unlike many Senators, who wait a session or so before they make themselves known, he went at work at once in the interest of his State, and has the confidence of all our people, irrespective of party. But few Senators have been so fortunate as he in making an enviable national reputation during a first session. His re-election will be a deserved recognition of his worth and services as law-maker and citizen of our State, and we hope our Assemblyman, Dr. T. A. Keables, will respect the wishes of the people of his asembly district and vote for him, as we know State Senator Voorhies will do. --Bridgeport "Chronicle-Union."

The people of California will be gratified to learn that the re-election of Senator Perkins was practically decided at Sacramento yesterday, notwithstanding the efforts made by the supporters of other candidates to perfect combinations which would secure his defeat. Mr. Perkins' services at Washington have been of such a character. In the campaign last fall there was a general expression of a desire in Republican conventions and by the Republican press all over the State that he be retained for a further term of six years. The experience he has acquired and the standing he has achieved at the national capital will give him an influence and prestige which a new man would be long in securing, and California has interests at stake in the readjustment of affairs under the incoming administration which cannot be safely entrusted to untried hands, and the announcement of the fact that there is to be no change in the representatives of the State in the Senate will be received with hearty approval by all classes of our citizens.—Oakland "Times."

The re-election of Senator Perkins for the full term of six years is a matter of congratulation by the people of California, irrespective of politics. He has made such an able and clean record while serving out the unexpired term of Senator Stanford that he has well earned another term. It has become so common for our representatives in Congress to be charged with being controlled by the great corporations that it is a relief to find a man against whom such a charge has never been laid. And the efficient work he has done for the State has been of inestimable value. We are glad to know that Southern California stood up for him solidly, and thus made his election possible. Had there been a break here the politicians in the north would probably have been able to create a deadlock which would have resulted in the election of some untried man. This action on the part of our representatives is but an act of simple justice, for the support Senator Perkins has given every measure in Congress which benefited Southern California.—"South Pasadenan," Pasadena.

As we predicted last week Senator Perkins was re-elected, and on the first ballot. We are very much gratified at the outcome of the election. Mr. Perkins really made his campaign before the people. Member after member of the Legislature was elected with the distinct understanding that they were to stand by Mr. Perkins. The election of any other man would have been an act of treachery that would have sealed the political doom of any man guilty of such a thing. And the best thing about the election was that Mr. Perkins remained in Washington attending to the people's business, while not even a suspicion of Colonel Masuma's presence in Washington could be found. We are gratified at the result of the election, and thoroughly satisfied with the part the "Citograph" took in assisting to attain the result.—Redlands "Citograph."

A hard working, energetic and conscientious statesman is the Hon. George C. Perkins. When you find a man in the United States Senate who makes it his business to obtain all the information possible concerning every measure which comes before that august body, who weighs well that information and then works for or against the measure as his conscience dictates—then, we maintain, you have found a man with whom the business of the State can be safely trusted. Such a man is Senator Perkins. You will find, if you read the newspapers closely, that he is always on deck, that he takes an active interest in the work of the Senate and that he does not use his office either as a social or a political convenience. California has a senior Senator of which she should be proud.—Palo Alto "Times."

As was well known to everybody, Senator Perkins was re-elected to the United States Senate on Tuesday by an almost unanimous vote. Senator Perkins is a self-made Californian, a business man of unblemished reputation; a man of good heart and liberal views; a man of the world. While we differ from him on questions of national policy, we fully recognize his worth as a man of high principle and strict integrity. He made an excellent record as Governor of this State, and no scandal has attached to his name. We are heartily glad that the choice of the Legislature fell upon Senator Perkins, and we hope and believe that neither bribery nor corruption was used to bring about that result, and that the State is spared the blistering disgrace of a boodle Senator.—Santa Rosa "Democrat."

Last Tuesday the Legislature did what the majority of Californians expected it would do. It re-elected George C. Perkins to the United States Senate. To the credit of Senator Perkins it can be said that instead of coming to California to lobby in his own behalf he remained at his post of duty in Washington, working for the interests of the people he was sent there to represent. From a moral point of view, no man is worthy of special commendation for doing his duty, but from a political standpoint Senator Perkins' conduct in the matter has been so out of the ordinary as to deserve mention. The people of California, through the Legislature, have fittingly expressed their appreciation of his faithfulness.—Jackson "Ledger."

The return of Senator Perkins, though it is just what nearly everybody expected, is very gratifying to all Californians. It has been said that California should have an orator in his place, but there is too much oratory in both houses of Congress now and too few business men. Senator Perkins, as a representative of the business people of California, is just the kind of man who is needed in the Senate, where there are too many lawyers. It is no discredit to Mr. Shortridge that he has been defeated by such a man, and he should console himself with the thought that it is no evidence that the people think him inferior, but that they are too well satisfied with Mr. Perkins to desire to change for any other man, however great his merits.—Stockton "Independent."

On Wednesday noon, in joint assembly, the State Senate and the Assembly, with due formalities, declared the result of their separate action on the previous day in the matter of the election of a United States Senator, and George C. Perkins was formally declared elected Senator. One pleasing feature of the contest for United States Senator was the clean, honorable fight made by the contestants and their respective friends for the high position. The re-election of Senator Perkins gives general satisfaction throughout the State, and we believe that his selection at the present time is for the best interests of the people of California.—Monterey "Cypress."

George C. Perkins was elected on last Tuesday by the Legislature to represent California for another term in the United States Senate. For once, at least, the Legislature of California has been guilty of doing the right thing at the right time. Senator Perkins has arisen from the ranks, and in all his public acts has shown himself to be the friend of the people, and even now, when the question of his return to the Senate was up, instead of being in Sacramento log-rolling he has been at his post of duty in Washington helping with solid logic to thwart the specious funding bill of our beloved Uncle Collis.—Newman "Index."

Among the good happenings of the week is the election of George C. Perkins to succeed himself in the United States Senate. In the political life of the country this prize is so great that personal ambition and personal enmity are sure to intervene and clash with the wishes of the people and the interests of the State. It was so here. But this only makes the result more creditable to the true-hearted legislators. Mr. Perkins stayed at his post of service, doing his duty, and no seat in that body was ever more honorably occupied than now. It gives California a good name, and twines an enviable wreath upon the brow of her Senator, George C. Perkins.—San Rafael "Journal."

Senator Perkins was elected to succeed himself last Tuesday. No piece of news since that of the election of McKinley has been received here that created such universal satisfaction. Perkins is the choice of the people. Even those politically opposed to him acknowledge his honesty and thorough business qualifications. In the late campaign he probably did more than any other man to carry California into the McKinley column, and not only the Republican party but the people of all parties can well trust to his sound judgment and common sense to properly represent them in the United States Senate.—Arcata "Union."

A better selection to represent California in the United States Senate could not have been desired than George C. Perkins. He was the choice of the people from the start, and the sideshow candidates who appeared never even caused a second's worry. The Legislature followed the wish of the people, irrespective of party distinctions, a fitting and deserving tribute; and the senatorial mantle has been placed on the shoulders of a man who will wear it with credit, and work at all times for the best interests of California and the Pacific coast in general.—Vallejo "News."

George C. Perkins was elected United States Senator for the ensuing six years on Wednesday last. This result was not unexpected. During the last campaign it was generally conceded that in the event of a Republican Legislature Perkins would be re-elected. To this many candidates were pledged, and the casting of their ballots represented the wishes of their constituents. Senator Perkins has made a faithful and conscientious representative, and by reason of his experience will be able to do more in his coming term.—Weaverville "Journal."

The action of United States Senator Perkins in remaining at his post of duty in Washington while the Legislature at Sacramento is engaged in the senatorial contest, in which he is a candidate, affords evidence of a devotion to duty, at the possible sacrifice of personal interests, so unusual as to be remarkable, in these degenerate days, and at the same time furnishes an example which the great majority of office holders would do well to emulate—a thing which, alas, and alack, we very, very much fear they will not do.—Livermore "Echo."

Senator George C. Perkins was re-elected to the United States Senate by a large vote in the Legislature on Tuesday. His election gives much satisfaction to the people of the State. He has conscientiously represented their interests in Congress, believes thoroughly in the Republican doctrine of protection, and knows the peculiar needs of the industries of this coast. Senator Perkins is a broad-minded, judicious man, and will be a safe and worthy representative of this commonwealth in the national Senate during the next six years.—Pomona "Progress."

Let us see—twenty-seven and forty-seven make seventy-four. Seventy-four is a majority, and so Senator Perkins is re-elected by the Thirty-second General Assembly of California to succeed himself as United States Senator. That's the story that is told in a telegram from Senator S. C. Smith received at this office yesterday afternoon, which ran as follows: "Perkins receives twenty-seven in the Senate and forty-seven in the Assembly." To Senator Perkins the "Echo" extends congratulations.—Bakersfield "Echo."

California has made no mistake in re-electing George C. Perkins to the United States Senate. Mr. Perkins is a self-made man, whose intelligence, industry and devotion to American interests have placed him among the most useful members of the upper branch of Congress. He is a business man in the best sense of the term, and his ability is just of the sort that will be needed in dealing with the great questions of trade and finance which are bound to come before the Senate within the next year or two.—New York "Mail and Express."

The re-election of George C. Perkins as Senator to succeed himself was particularly gratifying to the people of California. Mr. Perkins has represented his constituents in a manner which has won the commendation of both Democrats and Republicans. He has advocated every material interest in the State, and has been foremost in advancing whatever project he had reason to believe would insure the benefit of the Golden State.—Ukiah "Republican-Press."

As was believed by everyone except a few Shortridge shouters, Senator Perkins was elected by the State Legislature to succeed himself. He was the choice of the people, and the Legislature could not have honorably pursued any other course than to elect him. He now has before him a full term of six years, and the good work he has done in the past gives assurance that the interests of California will be carefully looked after in the future.—Haywards "Review."

On Tuesday last the State Legislature elected George C. Perkins to succeed himself in the United States Senate. His election was without opposition from the Republican side. Senator Perkins will make an able Senator as he has in the past. He is not a man who plays to the galleries, but his influence is great, and he is recognized as an able, honest, conscientious Senator, and he will doubtless render a good account of his services for the people.—Lodi "Sentinel."

The Hon. George C. Perkins has been chosen to succeed himself in the United States Senate. He was the choice of the people from the start, and his re-election is a fitting and deserved tribute to one who has worked for the best interests of California. The Legislature has followed the wish of the people, and a better selection for our representative in Washington could not have been made.—Suisun "Republican."

In choosing Senator Perkins as his own successor the Legislature faithfully registered the will of a good majority of the constituency. The people of California recognize in Senator Perkins a man of worth, both as a citizen and as a representative of the State in the nation's highest council, and will rejoice to know that he will continue to represent them for a full term of six years.—Redlands "Facts."

The re-election of Senator Perkins gives universal satisfaction in this part of the State. Democrats and Republicans alike are glad to know that George C. Perkins, who has always been faithful and true to the people's interests, will again represent this State in the United States Senate.—Santa Ana "Blade."

Senator Perkins will now be able to devote himself to the duties of his high office for the next six years with the consciousness of having the Republican party of the State solidly at his back. For that matter he has the respect and confidence, if not the political support, of people of all parties.—Pasadena "Star."

The re-election of George C. Perkins to the United States Senate was a foregone conclusion and gives general satisfaction. Mr. Perkins has served California with faithfulness and ability. He is a safe man, and can be trusted to legislate honestly for the entire nation as well as for his State.—San Diego "Union."

Perkins for Senator insures California a representative at Washington, of whom the whole State may well feel proud.—Ventura "Free Press."

Henry Lee at Work Making-Up  Train-Blocking on Oakland Mole

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 14  SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 3, 1897  PRICE 10 CTS

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.
CALIFORNIA

LOADING LUMBER ON MISSION CREEK

Photo by Charles Weidner

THE WAVE

is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 3, 1897

CONTENTS

Editorials . . . . . 2-3
On the Mole . . . . . 4
The "Bombardment"; by Julian Sturgis . . 5
In Yellow Robes . . . . . 5
Laying the Cornerstone of the Affiliated Colleges Building . . . . . 6
Things and People; by Boswell Jr. . . . . 7
Portraits of Henry Lee's Character Impersonations 8
A Modern Proteus; by Gelett Burgess . . . 9
In Society . . . . . 10
The Theatres . . . . . 11
Aida Reviewed . . . . . 11
The April Magazines . . . . . 12
The Doll Exposition in New York . . . . 13
Racing; by Benedict . . . . . 14
New Stories Re-Told . . . . . 16

A PRIVY COUNCIL FOR THE MAYOR.

Josiah Qunicy, Mayor of Boston, has introduced a feature of municipal government which will spread. He has gathered around him an advisory council composed of representatives of the leading commercial, reform and charitable organizations of the city. It is in the nature of a privy council. Before this board he lays all matters of municipal policy, and with its members he consults as to the conduct of municipal business. He stands as the representative of the people of the city of Boston. Those whom he has gathered around his council-board are representative of some element in municipal life and are authorities upon some phase of municipal government. The board is not political, is regulated in no way save by the wish of the Mayor, and its authority goes no further than the giving of advice, yet we believe such a Mayor's cabinet is destined to become an American municipal institution. It will commend itself to all who have studied the problems of municipal government, and most especially to the Mayors of our cities themselves, when they are honest men.

When Seth Low became Mayor of Brooklyn he formed a cabinet out of the heads of the municipal departments. He brought each department to work in harmony with its fellows; he made each official realize that he was an essential cog in the great machine of municipal administration. Instead of friction between the departments he brought all to work co-ordinately under one general plan. The success rewarding Mayor Low has become a part, a very proud part, of American history. But such a plan is not feasible where the men at the heads of the various departments are independent of each other. If each is responsible alone to the political element which elected him, each will insist upon being autocrat within his own realm. Had the new charter been adopted in this city, it would have been possible for Mayor Phelan to have had just such a cabinet as that which proved so useful under Mayor Low; but without a new charter it is possible for Mayor Phelan to adopt the idea of Mayor Quincy and appoint an advisory council which will keep him in touch with the best thought of those most interested in municipal progress.

It is not possible for one man to look closely to all departments of the city government, and often it is not possible for the Mayor to command disinterested opinion upon the proposed policy of his administration. The more time the Mayor gives to the harassing and time-consuming details of city government, the less he has in which to devise broad plans which will make for the advantage of large numbers. It is the experience of all men in such positions that owing to multitude of petty duties imposed upon them they are unable to make such a study of the problems of municipal life as to leave behind them any lasting impression. But with such an advisory board it seems to us quite possible for the Mayor to do many times the work which is now within his power and to do all of it better. Those who have followed our Mayor during the recent session of the Legislature have seen with great gratification how much could be done in defending the city against unwise legislation by a Mayor who had the intelligence and the energy to scrutinize the bills affecting the interests of his city. There is no doubt that the pen and speech of Mr. Phelan saved San Francisco from being inflicted with several measures that would have visited her with serious harm. We have not always agreed with his judgment, but with his energy, yes. It was to make possible more work of this general character that Mayor Quincy founded his advisory council.

The establishment of such a board is not a confession of weakness. Mr. Quincy is one of the strongest men in Massachusetts politics, a politician and a very practical one, is forthright and forceful. If the establishment of such a council were but a scheme for shifting responsibility, Mr. Quincy's reputation justifies us in declaring that he, no more than Theodore Roosevelt or Mr. Cleveland, would have been its author, and surely neither of the latter are shirkers.

Such a council is needed by a Mayor whenever he wishes to deal with a problem somewhat outside of his official duties. Take the matter of the unemployed in San Francisco. In order to meet by some practical scheme the situation which was present, it was necessary for the Mayor to go outside his regular official circle and enlist a council of men with sympathy and sense. His only resort was to instigate the calling of mass-meetings of business men and those interested in charitable work. How much less clumsy, how much more direct, and how much sooner a plan to relieve could have been evolved had Mr. Phelan already gathered about him a council of representatives from among the merchants, the lawyers, the mechanics and other large classes in our city. The necessity for some plan of procedure would have been earlier foreseen through the information gathered by the representatives of the working classes in such a council; and in the secret meetings of such a body it would have taken but a short time to perfect a scheme of relief which would at once have been insured the support of the most powerful elements in the city. It is with this class of questions that such a board would be found most useful. Social questions are the most serious in our municipal life, as in our national life. These will grow more troublesome with years. The municipal corporation itself is not so organized, and perhaps should not be, as to deal with many of the problems arising from a condensed, unsettled, dependent and ignorant population. But the Mayor of a city is expected to do more than sign bills and send messages. He stands foremost, not only in our politics, but in all matters which touch the business life or the social life of the people. If he is to undertake fully the responsibility of this great trust, which by the unwritten law has fallen upon his shoulders, he needs the support and information and guidance which an advisory council of the nature suggested alone can give.

REFORM THE CIVIL SERVICE.

This is not the hour for attacking civil service as a governmental policy. "The Wave" is an ardent believer in this reform, and would like to have it engrafted upon our State and municipal government. When the proposition of putting our Government employes in service for life was first broached to the American people the leaders and spokesmen of both the great political parties attempted to, and did for a time, cry it down. They almost succeeded in ridiculing the measure to death, for it was contrary to every rule of the game of politics. A few determined men, however, anxious for the welfare of the nation, stood behind the movement, and with an emphasis and force that comes with persistent and constant repetition finally succeeded in fastening civil service to the policy of our Government. The cry, "To the victor belongs the spoils," which every four years resounded in our national houses of employment from the throats of eager and hungry political spoilsmen, is now but a faint cry as compared with that of the past. It is merely an echo of tradition to-day. Civil service has proven an excellent remedy for many of our political ills, but like many another curative agency, in overdose, it is quite as likely to be as harmful as no medicine at all. The danger which threatens civil service, and that it is threatened we must admit, will grow out of evils of its own rather than from external influences. The ills of civil service are functional rather than organic, and the suggestion to remedy them should originate with the friends of the policy rather than its enemies, for if ever serious disturbance enter there, it will be because its friends are stubbornly blind as to its faults and insist upon its maintenance as an entirety rather than yield to necessary amendment. Such a course is pregnant with danger.

"Harpers' Weekly," always a staunch supporter of civil service, threatens to fall into the error of antagonizing any tampering with its pet policy. It finds enigmatical the words contained in the President's inaugural address in reference to this subject. The President said: "Reforms in civil service must go on." But he adds: "The change should be real and genuine, not perfunctory or prompted by a zeal in behalf of any party simply because it happens to be in power. The "Weekly" says:

'We cannot believe that Mr. McKinley meant thus to characterize Mr. Cleveland's extension of the classified service, for that would have been to insult most grossly the retiring President, who was listening to the speech and who has done more for civil service reform than all other Presidents put together. Moreover, such characterization would have been utterly false, and as Mr. McKinley is both an amiable and a truthful man he cannot have meant this."

Probably to a modified extent this was just what Mr. McKinley did mean, the "journal of civilization" to the contrary notwithstanding, for Mr. Cleveland's extension of civil service brings about some curious and intolerable conditions. It is one thing to sit in an editorial chair and work out fine theories of government, and quite another to make those theories dovetail and harmonize with rude and inflexible practical affairs. Cleveland, late in his administration, extended the classified service to include the Sub-treasury and the Mint. The new Republican Superintendent of the Mint will step into office without the power of appointing one single employe. Even the individual, at present a Democrat, and probably an entire stranger, who is to be his personal representative, cannot be chosen by the Superintendent. This stranger must be trusted to follow the deposits of precious metal coming into that institution for coinage from the moment of its receipt in the crude state until it is receipted for by the cashier, and yet he is not subject to removal by the Superintendent, who is under bond for a quarter of a million of dollars for the integrity of his administration. The staunchest advocate of civil service cannot find anything to commend in such a condition of affairs. In the United States Subtreasury all of the employes from the cashier down will be under the civil service rule, and the new Sub-treasurer will be powerless to name a single man who shall have the handling or the custody of tens of millions of dollars of the Government's money intrusted to his care and for which he is responsible. He is answerable to the Government under a bond in the enormous sum of six hundred thousand dollars. It would be almost, if not absolutely impossible, for either of these two gentlemen to obtain bondsmen under such a state of affairs. It is manifestly a condition that should not be tolerated for a moment. Where such grave and personal responsibility attaches to an office, at least the chief officer should have the privilege of selecting his own subordinates and his personal representatives.

We are not enamored of the class of men now in the San Francisco Mint, and doubt if ten per cent. of them would be able to pass a civil service examination which would entitle them to the positions they now occupy and which their successors must pass to obtain. The object of civil service is to elevate the standard of the service, and unless the present occupants of positions in these newly favored departments are compelled to pass an examination which will entitle them to retain their offices then will this beneficent policy perpetuate the very thing it was intended to obviate until death or resignation shall dislodge the present occupants of fat governmental berths from those two departments of the Government.

THE NEW FREE MARKET.

Governor Budd has just signed a bill providing for the establishment and operation of a free public market on the water front in this city. Free markets, so far as they have been tried in California, have fallen far short of the dreams of their founders, and have developed into very cheap and useless affairs. The bill which the Governor has signed provides that the Harbor Commissioners shall set aside a sufficient number of docks, divided into stalls, which shall be occupied by producers only, free of charge, for the sale of perishable products arriving in this city by water or rail. The bill also provides in detail for the operation of the market by the Commissioners, and for connection with the belt railroad now partially completed on East street. The free market idea is not a new one, but the application of the plan is somewhat different in the bill just passed. Ordinarily a free market in an incorporated city or town extends to the producer of perishable products the right to sell his wares without the purchase of a license. This is quite a concession. The principal reason advanced for such an exemption is the benefit derived by the consumer, who is a resident of the city extending the exemption, and who is thus permitted to purchase fruit, vegetables, fish, fowl, etc., at first hand. The present scheme, however, does not relieve the occupants of the market from municipal license, although that may follow, but it does propose to grant them store rent free of all charge. Considering that the space to be appropriated, and for which no charge is to be made or toll levied, is now occupied as a landing place for steamers and other vessels, and now produces a revenue for the Harbor Commissioners' fund, it must be admitted that the Legislature has been generous in its disposition of the water front of this city. Of course, the expense of establishing and operating this market will be a charge upon the commerce of this port. Already such charges are admittedly high, but in addition to the loss of the revenue these docks now produce, the cost of maintaining the market must be added to the deficit, and go to enlarge the burdens upon our commerce. The fruit growers and grangers generally have expressed great interest in this experiment, while the Harbor Commissioners, though not opposing it, appear dubious as to its practicability or the benefits likely to flow therefrom. Such legislation as this is quite in line with the paternal feeling that seems gradually to be taking possession of every branch of our government, State and municipal, as well as Federal. Doubtless it will be considered a popular measure by the people at large, and may even serve to redeem somewhat the reputation of the legislature which has just adjourned. While doubting the wisdom of the movement, we will watch its operation with some interest.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL CONTROVERSY.

Our correspondent, Mr. Samuels, seems amply able to take care of himself in an argument and to fortify his conclusions with respect to the Nicaragua canal with facts that appear unanswerable. The folowing is the communication received from him this week:

March 31st, 1897.

Editor of the "Wave:" Sir—In my communication in your valued issue of March 27th I took the ground that the Nicaragua canal would not be beneficial to this State, and particularly would it be hurtful to San Francisco. An editorial in the "Examiner" attacks my conclusions on the subject, and as its comments fairly represent the only class of arguments which the people of this State have had placed before them, it is quite proper to challenge their worth.

The "Examiner" states as follows: "The manufacturing industries of California did not decline with cheaper freight rates," and quotes statistics ranging from the time the overland road was opened until 1890, to prove its statement. Statistics, unless carefully analyzed, are apt to mislead. Against them I would apply the present experiences of many manufacturing industries in this State. It is yet to be incorporated in the laws of business that cheap freights from cheap manufacturing centers do not seriously injure, if not destroy, the industry of a State that has to go beyond its own boundaries for its raw material.

The "Examiner" again says: "Of course the Nicaragua canal would give Europe and the East a chance at some trade which we now possess, but the trade which might be taken away from us in that way is small in comparison with the new markets that would be opened up to us." Now, Mr. Editor, I am objecting to the canal not alone because it would give Europe and the East a chance at some trade which we now possess, but because it would give them a chance at the trade that we ought to possess, and will possess when we wake up. We have an export trade now in the Pacific ocean of about $15,000,000 per annum; it ought to be triple that. Will the "Examiner" point out what new markets will be opened to us that we cannot reach now without the aid of the canal, that will compensate us for assisting our competitors to help themselves in the Pacific? The "Examiner" further says: "It is estimated that an average wheat crop alone would be worth six million dollars more to the farmers of California if it could go to market by way of the isthmus than it is now."

How the farmers must long for the canal to be built, so that they may obtain that $6,000,000 more; but unfortunately this estimate is on a par with other canal estimates, and will not bear close scrutiny. Let us see. The average annual export of wheat does not exceed 800,000 tons. The average rate of freight will be for 1897 about $6.00 per ton; total freight to Europe, $4,800,000, out of which it is estimated $6,000,000 would be saved to the farmer by the canal. When the farmer has learned how to save $6,000,000 out of $4,800,000 he will not be in the market for gold bricks (or be a good subject for bunco men generally).

Equally unhappy is the "Examiner's" deduction that, because the Suez canal would be a good thing for European and Asiatic commerce, the Nicaragua canal would be a good thing for California. In spite of the immense saving of distance via Suez, sailing vessels to Australia and the Orient use the Cape route almost exclusively, to avoid the expense attached to the use of the canal, and for this same reason will not our grain continue being shipped around Cape Horn? It is time that this question should be taken up seriously, and that California should not be content to remain in its present state of rest, into which the advocates of the canal have lulled it by promises of future salvation.

What will benefit San Francisco will benefit the State; if the canal will do it, we are entitled to reasonable assurances on that score. A little healthy discussion of both sides of this question will not injure our prospects any, and will probably show in what direction our efforts should be applied to make San Francisco what it ought to be—a second New York.

FREDERICK S. SAMUELS.

What Mr. Samuels has to say is worthy of close attention, for he speaks authoritatively and has a definite knowledge of the subject concerning which he writes. An examination of the map of the world will convince any one that the completion of the Nicaragua canal will divert from us most of the ocean trade which we now enjoy.

San Francisco at present retains a comparatively small but increasing commerce with Australia, China, Japan, the Sandwich Islands and the South Sea Islands, the west coast of Mexico and the west coast of South America. Our trade with these countries is not one-quarter what it should be, for the simple reason that it has never been properly encouraged. Trade with Australia is possible with the San Francisco merchant because the Spreckels are operating a line of steamers between San Francisco and Australian ports. A purely local trade between these ports would not justify the maintenance of such a line of steamers. Quick transmission of mails, however, between Australia and mother England is of paramount importance to the colonies. After some experimenting it was demonstrated that a steamship line from Australia to San Francisco and thence eastward by the Pacific railways afforded the speediest route from the Antipodes to Great Britain. The Australian government has therefore subsidized the Spreckels steamship line, and that in connection with the Spreckels packet line permits us to trade with the Sandwich Islands and Australia. Our trade with China and Japan is ensured to us so long as ships' bottoms must round Cape Horn, and not one hour longer. Any schoolboy familiar with his geography would at once discover that immediately this canal is completed ships' bottoms would do the carrying trade direct from Australia to the mother country and from China and Japan to Eastern ports.

There is a tier of countries lying along the west coast of South America which geographically belongs to San Francisco in the matter of trade. Too little has been done to open up this commerce by our local merchants. Grace & Company of New York, a Hamburg and an English shipping company besides have come under our very noses and snatched this trade away from us, notwithstanding the fact they must double Cape Horn and traverse the full length of South America twice to reach their ultimate destination. We know, too, that these vessels bring to South America the manufactured articles of New York, England and Germany, and return laden with the products of those countries, consisting of hides, tallow, sugar, silver, cochineal, coffee, cocoa, nitre and ivory nuts, which have been gathered up by smaller vesels in the same ownership that are used exclusively in the coastwise trade.

It is inevitable that so soon as this canal is completed New York and the older countries will not only rob us of what little export trade we have with those countries, but will besides steal away our import coffee trade. We should be able to take the hides of the South Americans and return them boots and shoes; we should be able to take their tallow and return them soap; their ivory nuts we should transform into buttons; we should supply America with coffee as far east as the Missouri river. Factories should follow the acquisition of such a trade, and the raw material of South America should be transformed into manufactured articles in this city, not elsewhere. The hope of San Francisco lies in her ability to manufacture in competition with the remainder of America and to employ to advantage the harbor and the shipping facilities with the tributary countries which nature itself has given to us. The Nicaragua canal question is one that is alive either with danger or with promise to San Francisco, and it is a sad criticism upon our merchants that they do not come forward and discuss this question pro and con and attempt to solve it for their own as well as for their country's sake. We welcome Mr. Samuels into the field of controversy, and express the hope that he breathes in his communication, that a popular discussion of the benefits or disadvantages that are to follow the construction of this canal will result.

THE ANTAGONISTIC SOUTH.

We have received another communication from Mr. C. P. Morton, of Los Angeles, a gentleman who has from time to time contributed articles upon the antagonistic South. We may only publish Mr. Morton's last communication in part, for we have no desire to enter into a personal controversy with Mr. Otis, of the Los Angeles "Times." Our correspondent, however, tilts his lance at that gentleman, and has things to say which might not be regarded as kindly, or perhaps fair. For Mr. Otis we have respect and admiration. It is no part of our policy to enter into a personal controversy with the gentleman. What our correspondent has to say upon the general subject of the South is appended:

Editor of "The Wave."—The Los Angeles "Times" of to-day, replying to certain statements in regard to your remarks on "The Antagonistic South," says that you have conjured up a "bogie-man" by the aid of certain irresponsible correspondents of the South, who, having been personally unfortunate, have taught themeslves to believe that there is nothing good in Southern California. You have had several letters on this subject from this end of the State. I don't know the other writers and cannot say whether they are "irresponsible," or whether they have been "unfortunate," but the "Times" assumes a good deal in saying that in regard to me. I do not owe a dollar, have a comfortable sum in bank, and good real estate in several places, besides a few other little assets. I am perfectly willing to admit, however, that I was induced to come here by boom reading matter picked up at the World's Fair, several copies of the "Times" being among the rest of the reading matter that I obtained, and I am out of pocket in consequence. I broke off everything and came. When I got here I found that were I to depend upon the resources I had been led to expect to find, I would be in a sorry plight. My experience is that of hundreds of others. But, fortunately for me, I had a few resources that have enabled me to live here, the said resources being wholly outside of Southern California. Others not so fortunate have had a hard enough time in all conscience. I have too much sand, however, to give up, and I shall stay with the game till I win or lose, unless I am offered an inducement to go North or East. The "Times" knows perfectly well that this is no place for poor men, or even men of moderate means. Its own editorial columns have said so emphatically again and again, and that recently. But the "Times" regards inconsistency as a jewel. In its issue of March 27th it publishes an article entitled "The Ideal Rural Life, and in it says: "Here where ten acres of irrigated land are sufficient to support a family in comfort." That is such an exceedingly mouldy chestnut. Yet in an article to-day they say they did not publish my reply to their criticism because it contained nothing new. Why should I advance new arguments to combat a statement that was worn full of holes long ago, and never had any real substance. Ten acres support a family! But how? That is on a par with the statements of certain rich statisticians, who sitting in their luxurious offices, write of the delights of living on thirty cents per day. * * * The "Times" says in its article of to-day that I know they did not state that every family in Southern California had an income of $60 per month. That article was in the issue of February 26th. I quote: "The income for Southern California this year will be $45,500,000." (I omit items.) "Estimating the population at 300,000, this represents an income of $60 per month for each family, which does not look like living on air. It is not pretended that these figures are exact, but when they err they err on the conservative side." I wrote the "Times" stating that that was an illustration of how figures can lie, that the average income might be as stated, but that many had more and far too many much less than that. They would not do me the justice of publishing my reply, but now admit its truth, and say that they mean that. But as I said in my first article they do not like to have a man come here and tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and there are but few papers south of the Tehachapi that will not shamefully abuse any one who does.

C. P. MORTON.

Some political soreheads are making a frantic effort to destroy the influence of the California delegation at Washington simply because that body has refused to take them as seriously as they regard themselves. Doubtless their self-seeking zeal will be profitless, but it is sickening nevertheless. No sooner had the California delegation agreed upon the name of Frank A. Leach for Superintendent of the Mint than up bobs a certain Mr. Morrow, and then another sorehead, and still another, eager, anxious, furtive, resourceful, indignant, noisy, and clamoring for unmerited and impossible recognition on account of services for the party, which are more imaginary than real. The daily prints tell us that these very zealous aspirants are bombarding Washington with protests, whines and appeals. One faction first attempted to discredit the delegation with the administration, and another tried to induce that body to reverse its judgment for the benefit of their pretensions. They snarl and fight and give out the impression, which is well founded, that to the square foot California is afflicted with the most damnable lot of dissatisfied politicians that ever infested an American community. Decency and orderly procedure are to them as nothing, if they happen to obstruct some of their unjustifiable ambitions. Fortunately, President McKinley has announced that he cannot entertain applications for any Federal office that do not come through the respective State delegations. This ought to put an end to the bickerings of these men of small political worth but large political ambition, and we may confidently assert that Mr. Leach, who is an eminently respectable gentleman and an old-time Republican, will be the next Superintendent of the Mint.

The Cecil Rhodes inquiry has introduced in England a new method of journalism. Certain of the prominent editors of London papers, including Massingham of "The Chronicle," Cook of "The Daily News," and Sidney Law of "The St. James Gazette," have attended the inquiry, and have written over their own initials accounts of the affair. In reference to this departure, a veteran writer of editorials states that the only people who read his leaders and those of his brother editors are fussy old women of both sexes, and that it is a charming sensation to feel that the public are at last reading what they write, now that they have turned reporters.

ON THE MOLE

How the Man in the Tower Steers Trains in the Way They Should Go.

How do the hundreds of trains that chase up and down the Oakland mole every day find their way among the innumerable switches that split up the tracks? Who steers them to their berths in the big train house into which they throw themselves with a rattle and a rush, and rest panting and hissing while the suburban commuters swarm like hornets out of the coaches? Who is it holds back the Alameda local and rushes the overland in ahead? The man in the tower.

There are really four towers, but Tower No. 1 does most of the work, for "everything comes his way." He stands in a glass house overlooking the long peninsula, and not a train may get by without his permission. He has the time table of the road at his fingers'ends—he knows Overland, Way and Local, he knows the habits of shunting engines, and the tricks and manners of every last "empty"—when the coaches must go to the stable to be groomed, when the engines go to the coal yard to be fed, when they drink at the tank, and when they go to bed at the round house. He knows when they are late and when they are on time, and he plays with them as if they were tin soldiers. Always the same old game, though, with the same movements day after day, week after week, and year after year, save for changes in the schedule.

He can start them and stop them, but he couldn't make the trains collide if he wanted to, though the engineers were struck deaf, dumb and blind. The tracks on the mole are not built that way. It is a wonderfully conscientious system of levers and signals and electricity and pneumatic tubes, and it is called the Interlocking Block System.

Looking east from Tower No. 1: The Oakland Local coming in under the "home" signal

You have seen the engineer hanging out of the cab just before the train pulls out of the train house. He is watching for the "pot signal," a little dumpy stand at the right side of the track about a hundred feet beyond the house. After the conductor has pushed a button to warn the man in the tower and signaled to the engineer, that pot signal winks at him to go ahead, and all down the stretch are finger posts that drop for him to go ahead, or rise to stop him. As the train rushes on semaphone arms fly up and guard the train from behind—it is as plain as a series of signal boards, when you know how.

There are four main tracks on the mole, numbers 1 and 3 for incoming and numbers 2 and 4 for outgoing trains. There are twelve tracks in the train house on the pier that are regularly occupied as berths for the different trains connecting with the ferry. For every train coming over the mole there is, therefore, a specified route, which it follows on its way out or in. It is these routes that are cleared by the man in the tower, when the bell announces its approach. To do this he must manipulate a series of cranks on a table in his room, setting the combination of switches by means of the upper row, and setting the semaphone signals by means of the lower row of handles.

Setting the switches for any given route, however, includes beside the actual track to be traversed the switches leading in from other lines, so that the track is protected from any danger from trains that might run in on that route. Until all this is done the lever that sets the signal will not operate, and the train cannot proceed. Nor can the switches be changed until the train is out of the way, the interlocking system requiring a journey down into the cellar of the tower in order to change the switches if the train is en route.

Signal Man in Tower No. 1: Showing operating levers and model of the tracks and switches

These operations apply only to the signals set from the tower. Between Towers No. 1 and 2, there is an "automatic section," where the train does its own work, by means of the "Block System." This part of the road is divided into sections, marked by automatic semaphone signals. As soon as the train passes, a red danger and a blue "caution" or "distance" signal fly up. As soon as the next post is reached this danger signal drops; at the second post the "caution" arm drops, thus preserving an empty section behind each train and in the rear of that, a section where the blue arm signals, "go ahead cautiously and under control, expecting a danger signal at the next block."

Coming in to the station, the main "home" signals, set from the tower, are displayed upon the bridge over the tracks. The right-hand post governing Track No. 1 and the left-hand Track No. 3. The top arm in each case

"Home" signals on the bridge
A. Signal for main-line trains via Livermore, Niles and San Jose, coming in to berths 5 and 6. B. For same trains coming into berths 7 and 8. C. Alameda Local. D. Oakland Local via Seventh street. E. Main-line Overland trains coming into berths 5 and 6. F. Same coming into berths 7 and 8. G. Berkeley Local H and I. Automatic signals protecting outgoing trains is a guide to the extreme right-hand track and so in order according to the berths in which the trains are due.

The Berkeley Local, with its signal set to "go ahead cautiously"

All signals set from the tower are held by gravity at their normal position of "danger," requiring a controllable force to permit a train to pass. Any failure of wires or machinery is thus bound to protect the train, and the possibility of accident through damage to the signal system is impossible.

Looking west from Tower No. 1: The Oakland "empty" coming out of berth 10

Queen Victoria has aged rapidly of late, and is said to have lost much of the queenly dignity that once characterized her appearance. She drove through Hyde Park recently on her way to Buckingham Palace, and the change in her looks was so great that much comment was occasioned. She was somberly dressed in the dullest black, and apparently took little interest in her surroundings. She was accompanied by the Empress Frederick, who was also gowned in black, looking very severe. The Empress' hair is nearly white, and she looks much as her mother did ten years ago.

At the beginning of the hard times three years ago, D. O. Mills took the initiative in New York in reducing rents, and this without waiting for his tenants to make application. He announced a general reduction of 10 per cent., and as a result the Mills building retains most of its old tenants, despite the fact that it is surrounded by newer and more modern structures.

The property of Prince Borghese, adjoining the gardens of the Vatican, has been purchased by the Pope, the assent of the Government having been secured. It is believed that the purchase indicates a policy of gradually acquiring land until the sea is reached, and a Papal seaport secured on the Mediterranean, thus solving some features of the Roman question.

The Oakland Local waiting for the pot-signal to pull out

THE "BOMBARDMENT"

How a San Francisco Essayist Made a Little Go a Long Way.

I arrived in Crete the day after the bombarament. Many things had happened, but everything was then over. I cursed the quarantine officers who had delayed the steamer, and set about collecting local color, for there was plenty of that left around—thank Heaven!

I salted down all my information and filled a small note book with the data. I made a bluff at a few sketches and betook myself home. I was no reporter, so it didn't much matter. I was only indulging in a little three months' fling at the Orient, and I wasn't much disappointed at not catching snap shots of the excitement.

I wrote it all up on the way across the Atlantic, and had it in shape by the time I reached New York—about three thousand words that everybody said was "good stuff." It seemed to me that it was "timely," too, and I sent it off with postage enclosed to Harper's Monthly. It came back, of course—they always do—and I had made a try at the Century and several of the half-tone monthlies, but it was always marked "down." I had some good letters introducing me to the editors, and I got personal replies, but by the time I reached San Francisco I gave the thing up and put it away.

After I had been home a month or so, a friend invited me to a meeting of the 'Chit-Chat" Club, and I was very much impressed. There was more intellectuality to the square inch of waistcoat than I had thought possible in this town. It was rather heavy, but it was solid—there were bankers with libraries and merchants with microscopes, who encourage "local art"; they affected social questions, and had a blown-in-the-bottle culture that was almost convincing. I had to stand on tiptoe (so to speak) in order to keep up with the level of their statistics, but I must say I was flattered when they asked me to read my paper on the "Bombardment" at the next meeting.

There were many questions I couldn't answer after that reading. Good Heavens! how should I know about the armament of the fleet of the Powers? They had a long discussion over the embroglio, in which I was left carefully out of the question, but they gave me a vote of thanks, and would have had the essay printed if I hadn't objected.

The next day I met Leggett. Leggett is the wit of the "6:30" Club, and he wanted me to come around, for the 6:30's were to dine that night. So I went. The men there were all younger than the Chit-Chats, whom they guyed audibly. They were all coming men—men who hoped soon to arrive—and it seemed to be the club's office to corner the budding talent of the town. There was a bunch of "Overland Monthly" men who should have been in the Chit-Chat by this time, but still clung to the youngsters.

I was unanimously elected a member of the 6:30—the Lord knows why, perhaps because my name begins with "S" and they had got down to the "Rs" in the round of papers delivered each month. At any rate, I found I had to read something of my own at the next meeting. I didn't say anything about the Chit-Chat paper, but I had no time to do anything else, so I read the "Bombardment." They are rare wags at the 6:30. Telegraph boys came in with messages from hypothetical publishers at each course bidding for the manuscript (they eat a 75-cent dinner at the Poodle Dog), and they chaffed me every time I tried to put in a flourish that wasn't written down. Each man, in his order, gave his critique of the essay, and it was very generously damned. I went home and threw the manuscript in the trunk and thought it was played out. Not much.

Next week Wednesday I received a note in a slashing chirography from a lady who "really must insist upon my reading the charming paper that I had recently written before the Century Club, as they had set the subject for that week 'Athens and the Athenians'—and they must have it." I wrote her there was nothing about Athens in the article, and that I was engaged for Thursday. She telephoned me that "Crete would do perfectly, and I simply must come because the arrangements had been made."

So I stood up and read my paper—I was the only man in the room, and they lorgnetted me without mercy. I was told afterwards that the lady who had invited me had been blackballed four times, and when she had finally been elected she had sworn to get even with the club. But they stood it breathlessly, and the next week they had as bad a paper on "Household Art."

I had begun to think myself quite a literatteur by this time—everybody spoke of my "Bombardment," and I couldn't go to a mauve tea without being introduced as its author.

I read it next at the Geographical Society, sandwiched in between Dr. Harkness' "Paleolithic Theories" and David Starr Jordan on "Retrograde Movements of the Common Arab." I was the only one who didn't have lantern-slides, and the audience of six women and two men filled the Academy of Sciences with their yawns.

Well, I read the "Bombardment" at the Sketch Club next, at the earnest solicitation of the President, who instructed the audience when to applaud—they had the shades down and lighted the studio with brass candlesticks and marigolds. The manuscript was about worn out by this time, but I knew the thing by heart, and fully believed I had been in Canea at the time of the shelling. One more reading, and I felt I should have met every woman worth knowing in town. So when the Fortnightly sent for me I had already acquired a manner, and I did the impressing myself, instead of submitting to the operation. There was a wild striving for intellectuality written on the faces of the Fortnightlies. All of them had written papers themselves—papers crammed with measurements and distances that took hours to look up. It was an off day on account of a protracted Maeterlink recitation the week before, and all the Vassar girls were absent. There was a rarefied lemonade with wafers passed around after I had performed, and the talk relapsed into the discussion of engagements. An engagement in the Fortnightly is an event, for wildly intellectual girls don't marry till quite late in life.

I read the paper at Miss Head's school next, and my fame was confided to the tender mercies of a coming generation. I read it in the assembly hall at Berkeley. I read it in the private salon of Mrs. Beebe, a woman of gush and giggle, who entertains local celebrities on Sunday afternoons.

I am growing old now, but I am still the author of the "Bombardment." I have made my name and I intend to keep it. I have been offered a six months' subscription to the "Overland" for its publication in that magazine, but I know a good thing when I have it, and there are yet clubs in town. For we have begun the revival of culture in San Francisco and have already promised to become a "centre." JULIAN STURGIS.

IN YELLOW ROBES

A Priest Who Has Come From India to Preach Buddhism.

At the Congress of Religions held in Chicago during the Columbian Exposition, no speaker awakened more interest than the Buddhist priest H. Dharmapala, who had come from Calcutta to take part in the symposium. He was one of the most picturesque of the members of that Congress, and the attraction of his personality was strongly felt by all. One of the results of that Congress—which was the most important, if not the only attempt ever made to bring together representatives of the faiths of the civilized world — was the formation of the Maha-Bodhi Society, of which this Buddhist scholar was made General Secretary. The object of the League is to encourage a sympathetic exchange of thought between Buddhists and Christians, and to further the ethical development of the followers of both religions. It is strictly altruistic in motive, international and unsectarian in character, and its membership is open to all, without distinction of creed or color.

THE ANAGARIKA H. DHARMAPALA
Who has been lecturing on Buddhism in this city
Thors, photo

Mr. Dharmapala is a member of the Buddhist Order of Anagarikas, the initiates of which have given up their lives to the advancement of humanity, and are allowed neither to possess funds nor accept personal remuneration of any kind for their services. They wear the flowing robe of lemon, yellow and orange as badge of the Brotherhood, and spend their lives in an unselfish attempt to further the progress of their fellow men.

Mr. Dharmapala has been for some time in San Francisco, having made this second visit for the purpose of making a study of the trend of religious thought and tendency in Western civilization. He has given many lectures in the city, having spoken under the auspices of the Theosophical Society, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Forum and Sketch Clubs, and the Philosophical Union at Berkeley. He is now on his way to Boston, and will lecture at Cambridge to the students and faculty of Harvard University. After staying several months in the United States, Mr. Dharmapala will return to India by way of China, where he will investigate the conditions of development as he has here, in order to keep in touch with the movements making for the advance of the spiritual and moral side of civilization, and that affiliation of religions that is the chief end of his society.

The American Branch of the Maha-Bodhi, which is in fellowship with the Indian division at Calcutta, has for its especial field of work that of securing a better mutual understanding between Christians and Buddhists, not only by the publication of appropriate literature, but also by creating just such opportunities as the Anagarika Dharmapala is now enjoying, for Eastern Buddhists to pursue courses of studies in Western Universities whence they may be enabled to take back to their various homes the advantages of modern science and the lessons that Christianity can teach them.

The work of the parent society is concerned chiefly with the conservation of the sacred places in India made famous in the history of Buddhism.

In this endeavor Mr. Dharmapala has played a very important part, being instrumental in regaining to his order the sacred temple of Buddha, at Budda Gaya, about two hundred miles from Calcutta. This edifice, built twenty-two hundred years ago, has been for seven centuries in possession of the Brahmins, who have not allowed entry to Buddhists, nor the privilege of worshiping at the shrine of their Buddha. The temple is the most sacred in India, and is the Mecca or the Jerusalem of devout followers of Gautama. Mr. Dharmapala succeeded not only in entering the holy of holies, but installed therein an image of Buddha, by which symbol he took possession in the name of his order. He was ousted, however, but the dispute between Buddhism and Brahminism was carried to the Indian Courts of Justice, and it became a cause celebre—with the result that the British government took possession, and the Buddhists were assigned as guardians of the temple where they now worship.

The Buddhist faith differs from every other religion of the civilized world in its conception of both God and man. To the followers of Gautama Buddha, the holy master, the idea of a Divine Power over, above and through all things is not a moving impulse in life, and speculations upon the First Cause and the Supreme Being have no part in their philosophy. The individual is not, as in Brahminism, for instance, a part of the Divine Spirit; there is, properly speaking, no such thing as the individual, as there is no such thing in itself as force. Things and beings are regarded as compounds of their qualities, much as the wind does not blow, but is the blowing of the air. One existence follows from another, drawing its circumstance of environment from the law of Karma; there is no such thing as a permanent individuality — it is like the flame that leaps from one candle to another, and in the effort to keep one's self separate lies the cause of suffering.

The Western civilization seems to Mr. Dharmapala to be ripe for the regenerating influence of the Occidental altruism. Theosophy, the so-called Esoteric Buddhism, is, he says, more strictly Brahminism — that part of the faith that has been kept from the masses by the Brahmin caste. The failure he sees in Christianity is in the subservance of good works to creeds. The discussion of the unknowable is, according to his teachings, a vain waste of energy, if not a cause of suffering. To live nobly and purely, and by that training to attain the consciousness of self and the rules of being is the one thing needful.

The ruling of Archbishop Kain concerning marriages of Catholics to Protestants has caused much agitation in St. Louis society. The law set down by the prelate is that no Catholic may be married to a Protestant except in the parlor of the parish priest's rectory and by the priest of the parish at that. Catholics refusing to comply with this rule are to be excommunicated, together with their bridesmaids and groomsmen, if of the Catholic faith. The aristocracy of St. Louis is largely Catholic, and this decree has proven most objectionable. It is said Archbishop Kain has been made to feel that he has committed an error of judgment. In a recent case in which he had refused to relieve the parties of this onerous rule, Archbishop Martinelli, the Papal Legate, was appealed to by the family of the bride, and in response the prelate, whose word is decisive as word from Rome itself, warmly advised Archbishop Kain, as an elder brother of the Church, not to enforce his mandate.

Ellen Terry, whose absence from recent casts at the London Lyceum has occasioned comment, has not quarreled with Henry Irving, nor does she intend to retire from the stage. She says she is becoming tired of learning new parts, especially exacting ones, and on this account she rebelled when Sir Henry proposed to put on "Mme. Sans Gene." Although the fair Ellen does not intend to give up the stage, she intimates that retirement is preferable to hard work.

Julius Von Payer, the Australian explorer, says it is quite possible that the South Pole is inhabited. He says that since traces of life have been found near the North Pole, it is quite possible to find them also at the other end of the earth. Herr von Payer is going to head an expedition that will set out this year for the Antarctic region.

SACRED TEMPLE AT BUDDHA GHAYA
Restored to the Buddhists through the influence of H Dharmapala

LAYING THE CORNERSTONE OF THE AFFILIATED COLLEGES BUILDING

Photo by Taber

THINGS AND PEOPLE

One of our local Portias the other law-and-motion day crossed her forensic sword with that of a gentleman well known at the bar not less for his brilliant legal attainments than for his gallantry to the sex. Portia was arguing a demurrer, and became very irrelevant in her remarks. Suavely her opponent interrupted her. "Madam, if it is permissible to interrupt a lady—" She turned fiercely upon him: "I am a counselor at law and an officer of this court as much as you are, Mr. Blank. When I come here I want you to forget that I am a woman and treat me as a lawyer." "Well, Madam," he answered, "I hope, for the sake of your home, that you are a better woman than you are a lawyer."

***

Judge Ferrall and W. W. Foote were trying a Chinese murder case on opposing sides the other day before Judge Troutt in Department 8. Both of these gentlemen have warlike words in plenty, and are verbally aggressive to the last point of exasperation, though neither was ever known under any circumstances to step into the ring. They had a Roman holiday with each other, called names and glared at one another until the jury shrank before the fury of these men of war. Then Judge Troutt took a hand. "There seems to the Court," said he, "to be considerable feeling between counsel, and there is apparently a serious misunderstanding, which might as well be settled now, so that hereafter we may proceed peacefully. If counsel will agree I will have the Court Room cleared and the doors locked. The bailiff shall second Judge Ferrall and the clerk perform the same office for Mr. Foote. The Court will act as Referee and the jury shall see fair play. There will be no danger of contempt, but the Court wants it fully understood that this is to a finish, and the doors will not be opened until one of the gentlemen is 'out.' What do you say?" For the rest of that trial there was peace.

***

When Joe Redding was in practice here a ranchman sought his office with a case. Joe was not in, and the client, after waiting an hour, became impatient, and loudly declared that he would take his business elsewhere. At that moment the office telephone rang up to say that Joe was at the San Francisco Law Library in the New City Hall. The office boy was "onto his job," so he told the client to come with him, and he would take him to Mr. Redding's uptown office; so he led him to the Law Library, where Joe was deeply engaged in telling Frank Deering the latest bon mot from Bohemia. On the arrival of the rancher Joe sat down with him at a table. "Great heavens, Mr. Redding," said the client gazing around at the 36,000 volumes that surrounded them, "are these books all yours?" "Yes," replied Joe, and then, with a sigh of weariness, "and I have read each one of them nine times!" He got the case.

***

There is a general impression in mining circles that the next great field for mining operations is to be in Mexico, whose resources have hardly begun to be exploited. At present, however, the development is slow, owing to the inaccessibility of the mines and imperfect railway facilities. Thus far the large commercial interests in Mexico have been controlled by German firms, whose mercantile houses have dealt in the agricultural products rather than the mineral resources of the country. Quite recently, however, a very important firm in Mazatlan—Wooter, Barking & Co.—have enlarged their field of operations by purchasing ores. The firm assays the samples, pays a good price for the rock brought in, and then ships to the nearest smelter. The house is backed by an enormous capital, and by establishing branches in the mining districts, has been enabled to handle large quantities of ore with corresponding profits.

***

The chances for good investments in Mexican mining properties has been looked into very carefully of late by several San Francisco operators. An interesting example of the value of thorough investigation was recently given in the experience of four young Americans, who associated themselves with a California-born Mexican named Flores, to open the Rosalia mine in Sinaloa, and adjoining the claim that made the great Bradbury fortune. Three months operations under the superintendence of an acute Mexican gave no indications of any value of the worth of the mine, and the work was suspended. The superintendent then negotiated for a lease of the property to work on his own account, and his proposition was accepted. He was apparently no more successful than the former owners, and at the end of the stipulated time he offered to buy the mine at a price which cleared $2,000 in Mexican silver for each of the five owners. This seemed an easy way out of the matter, and the owners transferred their holding to the Mexican, confident that the vein was not worth working. The next day the new owners began operations with an intelligence that had been lacking before the deal, and $50,000 worth of ore was hustled out of the hole in less than three weeks. The swindled owners brought suit in the courts for recovery of the property, but as possession is considerably more than nine points of Mexican law, they were finally glad to compromise for a bonus of $2,500 apiece. The astute Mexican is still digging gold out of the vein.

***

Apropos of the lucky stroke mentioned in these columns some time ago, of Messrs. Murdock and Emerick with their "Norwegian mine." The deal was a chance venture and remarkably successful. The Tuttletown mining district had been long regarded as played out, and the town itself was a deserted village. The mine was no better than a hole in the ground, and the wiseacres of the environment were full of congratulations for the lucky fellow who had sold the claim for $20,000 cash down. But the luck of the twain at once manifested itself. Three weeks after they had begun operations they struck ore, and since they have taken out about $100 per day, with every prospect of keeping up this output indefinitely. They have been offered $150,000 for the property.

***

Murdock and Emerick, encouraged by their success, have organized a series of new companies, backed by their friends—for the most part club and army men. The association has five grub-stake prospectors exploring Tuolumne county in their interests, looking up profitable locations, and four or five mines have already been bonded for operations. Their system is to organize a separate company for every mine that is opened, and interest their associates in the various schemes of development. Among their acquisitions is the Grizzly, which in olden days produced $27,000 a week. It has been abandoned for some time, owing to a disastrous fire that burned the inside timbering, not because of the giving out of the ore. This mine, too, has been purchased and capitalized at $100,000, and it is expected to repeat the success of the Norwegian, and the Tarantula mine, which Sir Bache Cunard, recently purchased on the advice of Joseph Redidng. Here a rich strike has been made with abundant prospects of further developments.

***

In the gigantic two-column bouquet that the "Examiner" threw at itself in its issue of last Thursday there was not that card which usually accompanies floral testimonials and gives the tip anent the donor of the compliment. The cause of the increase of the "Examiner's" circulation, announced by its headline and allegorical illustration, can scarcely be attributed to its Sacramento exposure, however satisfactory to the public that news may have been. It goes without saying that the Carson exhibition was the true reason of the big jump, and, from a newspaper point of view, there is no reason why the "Examiner" should not advertise the credit it deserves. Whatever may be thought of the moral effect upon the community of the broadcast sowing of pugilistic information, it cannot be denied that the way in which the exclusive privileges were obtained and used by the allied journals was an excellent stroke of policy. The newspapers of the whole country were simply locked out of the affair. It was the biggest corner in news that has ever been made, rising far above the altitude of the ordinary "scoop." I am told that James Corbett himself proposed the deal, and Chamberlain of the "Journal" took it up at once. Both pugilists received $2,000 for their services, so they had no cause to regret the bargain. The province of modern journalism is now two-fold—to get the news and to prevent others from getting it. The "new journalism" has heretofore contented itself with the first mentioned attempt. It is safe to predict that the big dailies will go into the other departments, too, after this revolution in methods, and blockade their opponents whenever it is possible.

***

It cannot truly be said that California will mourn its first Code Commission. I cannot remember any body appointed with more fanfaronade that has made so poor a record. If ever a community needed its code revised, it is this State of ours, for the laws are a jumble, and procedure is not only lame, but gagged. It is to be hoped that the next commission will conceive itself selected for some other purpose than drawing its salary, and will really attempt to make straight the way of our courts. I am told Governor Budd contemplates selecting Assemblyman Caminetti and Senator Bridgeford, of Colusa, as two members of the Board. The third, a Republican, has not yet been designated.

***

A curious and most alarming complication threatens the administration of justice in San Francisco. It is provided in the constitution that every criminal must be tried within sixty days from the date of holding, which means that his case must be called and his trial begun in the Superior Court two months after he has been committed by a police judge or arraigned by the Grand Jury. Considering the volume of causes, this rule is more honored in the breach than the observance, though its existence is recognized by calling all causes in court within the stipulated time, the defendant waiving, at the District Attorney's request, his statutory right to a speedy inquisition. In a recent case, however—that of the People vs. Buckley—three members of the Supreme Court upheld the theory that this right of a defendant to a trial within sixty days being a constitutional right, could not be waived. In that cause the question was not directly raised, but it is absolutely before the Court in the case of Ex-Parte Olsen. Should it be decided that the rule is absolutely operative, it means a veritable jail delivery, inasmuch as all those whose trial has been delayed past the statutory period must at once be released. It also means an increase in the force of the District Attorney's office, inasmuch as there will have to be a deputy in attendance on each of the eight criminal courts. In that way alone can the rule be complied with.

***

Though the Governor denies any desire to succeed himself, there are not wanting signs that he is bursting with political ambition. On no other basis is his relation with Boss Rainey explicable. That crafty manipulator is proceeding with the executive on the same basis that he handled Superintendent Daggett. He is promising him innumerable rewards in return for immediate patronage, playing on his vanity with the skill of a master hand. It was presumed some time ago that the real wish of the Governor's heart was to be Senator; indeed, he calculated that the Populists would have a balance of power in the last Legislature, and that no selection would be made. However, Mr. Perkins was successful, and that leaves him Steve White as a competitor. Now the Governor and Steve are old friends, and it would never do for them to fight each other. For this difficulty the astute Rainey has found a solution, however. He proposes that White shall take the Democratic nomination for Governor, leaving the senatorial field open for the Stockton statesman. Of course this is a charming arrangement, though it does leave out of the problem the Senator's personal volition and elides the fact that White has several times refused to be Budd's predecessor. However, it was because of this project that Major Harney was elevated to the Water Front and that Mr. Bohen was converted into a Port Warden. In both instances Rainey will be the immediate beneficiary, though the Governor be jubilant with the prospects which the boss has enkindled within him.

***

Apropos of Rainey, I learn with pleasure that his relations with the Supervisors are somewhat strained. Not content with the amount of patronage which his personal following has already derived from the Board, he has presumed to negotiate for them with the corporations on a basis which is so advantageous for him that there is little left for them. Indeed, he acts on the assumption that half of what is gathered belongs to him, calculated on the basis that he is really fifty per cent. gross of the Board. Just at present the transaction seems to be hanging fire—the Supervisors declining to accept what he tenders, and the result may be interesting to the public. It appears, however, that the end is in sight, inasmuch as certain of Rainey's "push" have been ignominiously turned down by the Supervisors, who have proceeded to place their own friends in the places of his favorites. Indeed, between Supervisor Devaney, one of the obedient, and the Boss there has come an open rupture.

***

The Cosmos Club is now comfortably installed in its new quarters. It has converted the former domicile of the young ladies' seminary into a very admirable club house, provided with innumerable beautiful rooms for billiards, cards, receptions and every other purpose, together with abundant sleeping apartments well lighted and equipped with all the luxuries of life. Indeed, not even the Pacific-Union or the University is fitted up with a better eye to the comfort of its members. I am inclined to think the step will result in a large increase in membership. The cuisine of the Cosmos is, by the way, in the hands of a Japanese, and the members swear by the chef, whom they declare better than any other cook in town. The waiters are also subjects of the Mikado, who make silent, solicitous and obedient servitors. The institution was appropriately dedicated to club purposes with a dinner and reception on Saturday night last, and though the rain poured and the wind roared the attendance was large and jolly. After dinner there was a musical programme, with Frank Lincoln, Frank Ooffin and several quartettes to assist in the entertainment. There was also an excellent punch brewed from the recipe of the club's President, which would have won the suffrages of Father Mathew himself.

***

Several of "les Jeunes" of this city have recently been decorated with the "Order of the Roaring Lion"—the latest fad of the younger literary and artistic set in New York. The only tangible thing about the Order is the pin— a gold (colored) lion rampant, which is affected by those in the lark. This society, the object of which is the cause of much discussion among its members, is spreading like wildfire in the metropolis, and has jumped the wide continent to find a new resting place in San Francisco. The New York "Sun" has the following to say of the freak society:

"A new literary society, formed recently, already numbers among its members several well-known writers. The club has its headquarters in the publishing district on Fifth avenue, and one of the unique features of the organization is the fact that its members have decided to wear badges. The club is called "The Society of the Roaring Lion," and the badge is a small gold lion, standing on his hind legs, and plainly indicating that he refuses to be hunted by anybody without a struggle. The club has been formed only a short time, and nothing interests its members so much at present as the new pin, which is already worn by several men who are well known in the records of American literature."

Among the New York members prominent in the frolic are Tudor Jenks, Carolyn Wells, H. S. Kimball, Bliss Carman, Richard Hovey, and Oliver Hereford, and they are plying the New York and Boston papers with the alleged proceedings of the society. A branch of the Roaring Lions is surely needed in California. We rely upon "les Jeunes" to proselyte for the cause.

BOSWELL JR.

IN THE RAIN

Laying the Cornerstone of the Affiliated Colleges Building.

A few hundred persons only had the courage to brave the storm of last Saturday and attend the ceremonies of laying the corner stone of the Affiliated Colleges of the University of California. What should have been a dignified and impressive spectacle, was robbed of the greater part of its outward interest by the unpleasant drizzle which soaked the participants, and bedraggled the decorations.

The event, however, was an important one—the consummation of two years effort to provide for a fitting location for the Colleges of Law and Medicine—and the success which has been achieved is principally due to the work of Dr. R. Beverly Cole, and Regent J. B. Reinstein.

The buildings which are now in process of erection stand in almost the geographical center of the County of San Francisco, south of the Park. The site was presented the University by ex-Mayor Adolph Sutro, and the edifice will house a welcome addition to the family of colleges, and one that will greatly increase the prestige of the State University. Such a building has been long needed, and at its completion the Berkeley colleges, the Hopkins Institute of Art, and the Mount Hamilton observatory will form a group of educational buildings second to none in the country.

The corner stone was laid with Masonic rites under the direction of William T. Lucas, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Masons of California, assisted by Dr. Cole. Beneath the stone, in a copper box, were enclosed documents pertaining to the history of the University, photographs, the daily papers, and other customary mementos.

Addresses were made by President Kellogg, of the University of California; Lieutenant-Governor Jeter, Mayor Phelan, ex-Mayor Sutro, Arthur Rodgers, and Dr. R. Beverly Cole, and the opening prayer was given by the Right Reverend William F. Nichols.

The University band and a group of enthusiastic students did their best to enliven the occasion, and after the ceremony the speakers and invited guests adjourned to one of the mason's sheds and attempted to forget the discomforts of the weather.

California oranges have had an exceptionally large sale in London during the past two months. They have obtained from 12 to 16 shillings per box, and the low freight rate of 1 shilling per box from New York has had the effect of bringing the fruit within reach of the poorer classes.

MME. FOEDOR
PRIMA DONNA OF THE FRENCH OPERA CO.
Thors, photo

HENRI ALBERS
AS HE APPEARS IN THE OPERA OF "HAMLET TO BE PRODUCED AT THE CALIFORNIA NEXT FRIDAY NIGHT
Marceau, photo

MLLE. DE BIASI
PREMIER DANSEUSE OF THE FRENCH OPERA CO
Thors, photo

MR. HENRY LEE

WHO HAS REVOLUTIONIZED THE "LIGHTNING-CHANGE" SPECIALTY, IN SOME OF HIS IMPERSONATIONS

Photos by Marceau

A MODERN PROTEUS

Behind the Scenes While Henry Lee is Working at High Pressure.

Now I have played the madcap in this town with the best of you—I have gone a-larking, and made some talk, perhaps, but I intend to work seriously hereafter. And so, since Mr. Henry Lee has made such a success of "Great Men, Past and Present," why not, I thought, let him add Future, too, and propitiate him toward my future fame? So I set myself to make a friend of him, and with what modesty I could muster, I presented him with my photograph. He promised very gayly — this is one reason why I write him down hereafter a gentleman. And the rest of the work is for me to do. I have now, only to become famous. But to interview him! That is more difficult. One should himself be an artist, a gentleman, and a scholar, to appreciate him. For here is the great Archer of the London "World" who is to be eclipsed—Clement Scott, too, of the "Telegraph," and Bernard Shaw and Moye Thomas I looked at their notices in English papers—one, two, and three pages long—what can I do in fifteen hundred words, and so much verbiage gone for wastrel already! But as I look over his eulogies in these journals and at the miserable half-tone illustrations of the "Budget," of "Black and White," and of the "Sketch," and the others, I find a keyhole through which to escape from my dilemma. And the keyhole is in the dressing-room of Henry Lee. So I will look in, where no reporter has been allowed before.

For my rivals have all been in the audience with the Royal Family, who buzzed comments upon the accurate disposition of his jewels and orders—with Rudyard Kipling, who bounced with laughter at his own parody and insisted upon being introduced. They have said all that is necessary upon the cleverness and the art of his impersonations, of the wit of his lines, and the agreeable way in which they are rendered. I might say all that and more, with honesty, but you have seen him yourself and applauded, no doubt. But I have looked through the keyhole. I have been behind the scenes — the first reporter to be so honored—I have made friends with Tyras, the Royal Dane, kin to Prince Bismark's own hound, I have handled his decoration; so listen while I tell you.

It is an artist that I would introduce to you—the most interesting visitor of the week, to wit, Mr. Henry Lee. An artist, then, and to that, a gentleman and a scholar. Surely a remarkable combination of attributes to be found upon the vaudeville stage! But as the terms artist and gentleman have been usurped by the barber and the idler, and since to be a scholar is but an old-fashioned recommendation to the careless public, let me add that Mr. Lee is a fiend on detail, an enthusiastic collector, and a bit of a martinet.

I went early. I was there at seven o'clock, but I was a quarter of an hour too late! The work had commenced. Mr. Lee goes on at 9:20. It takes, then, two and a half hours preparation for a twenty-eight minute turn! There was a long and narrow dressing-room fitted up behind the Orpheum stage, where three men and a girl were busily engaged in making ready. There was a high counter, twenty-five feet long, laid out with all manner of wigs, costumes and properties; there was a row of chairs, grotesque with shirts and trousers; there was a little procession of shoes on the floor; there was an orderly series of grease-paints in front of the mirror — one, two, three, four — in an exact arrangement. It was as formal as an old maid's top bureau drawer. Did I not tell you he was a martinet?

Have you ever seen the old caricature of the king and his clothes? Here, in one sketch, is the empty costume, and there is a pitifully naked man. The question is, as Gibson would put it, "Where is the king?" So, here were Dickens, Gladstone and the Prince of Wales in their outward seeming; yet it was no Madame Tassaud show that was being prepared. Mr. Lee was the king — whether dressed or undressed, as he stood, stripped to tights and sleeveless jersey—big and brawny and muscular, like a prize-fighter ready for a mill. And no pugilist does more work than does Mr. Lee in his whirlwind rounds. There is no call of time for him to regain his wind—his seconds, instead of fanning and sponging him, fall violently upon him four to one, and man-handle him to within an inch of his life. Fancy changing into a Kipling in forty-five seconds! I shall think myself lucky if I do it in forty-five years.

Henry Lee ready for the first round in an artistic struggle against time

Mr. Lee strolled in with Tyras and a monocle at eight o'clock. He usually gives himself two hours for preparation for the struggle, and after a noonday meal eats nothing until his act is over. He stripped to tights, for each character involves a complete change, and then he passed along the line, testing every costume, examining hooks and buttons to see that all was right, and that not a split-second should be lost. Here was the German Emperor's cuirass, with the orders on its breast. I turned them over—fac similes to the last letter. Even the ribbons had been made to order, and the insignia had been copied in Paris with absurd exactitude. Here was the Emperor's sword, made by the court armorer in Berlin, the duplicate of Kaiser Wilhelm's own. Here was the Prince of Wales' Order of the Garter; one might shuffle this counterfeit with the original and fail to pick out the Royal collar. Here was Dickens' shirt-front and cravat, slavishly copied from his painting. Here were the tops of the heads of celebrities of every nation, padded and painted to the life. There were only the brains missing. But could Bismark's brain accomplish the imitation of Thackery? No—Henry Lee does better to use his own!

The three valets and the sewing-girl were classifying and arranging as in a museum, while Mr. Lee was below getting up steam. For, once the show is on, nothing can stop him. His men may put Bismark's trousers on backside before, as they did in the Palace Theatre in London; they may "madly squeeze a right hand foot into a left hand shoe," as they did once with the Dickens costume, but a little profanity, a little pure Kipling, though he be dressed as Shakespere, is all that happens. I have heard bachelors use more emphatic-remarks over the behavior of a collar-button, than he when a second's delay shortened his life perceptibly, for the quick-change artist's life is not a very happy one—one spends vitality by the double handful—one's pulse jumps to 108; and snatching a child from the track in front of a rushing locomotive is a leisurely occupation compared to the exigencies of the case of Mr. Henry Lee.

You should see the genial, senile old Pope duck and run as the drop falls, and his robes and beads fly the range of the room. You should see two men attack his vestments and seemingly attempt to flay him alive; you should see the trousers set at his feet, and the violent leap upward that clothes his legs and fastens the buttons with a single movement; the wild flicker of the towel rubbing out a Thackery, and the slash and sweep of the gestures that paint Gladstone upon a canvas of Lee. With a flip the waistcoat envelops him and is buckled behind, his wig is on with a jab, the jaw drops, the door opens to him, the orchestra has struck up an old Norwegian melody, and Ibsen has begun his address with these clever lines by Malcolm Watson:

> "If I intrude, don't scruple to say so, and I will take my balked individuality elsewhere. Some people I know object to my presence, but that only proves their want of taste. In my own country they call me the Master. Here they call me other names far less agreeable. I preach the gospel of heredity, the doctrine of living out one's own life in a suburban villa or bijou residence. I have also founded a school of Ibsenity which is not at all the sort of thing you mean. My plays are enigmas which I don't profess to understand myself. At the present moment I am writing a drama on the subject of——; but I forget — I never reveal my plots beforehand. Between you and me, they are so vague I couldn't even if I wished to!"

GELETT BURGESS.

"Making-up" for Shakespere with the aid of three men and a few Kipling exclamations

A new remedy for lovesicknes was discovered in Paris last month by a French sailor named Lineau. He suffered the pangs of an unrequited affection for two months, but, as his melancholy grew blacker every day, he resolved to terminate his unendurable existence by the pendalum method. Now, the only rope that M. Lineau possessed was of doubtful strength, and to make assurance doubly sure he decided to hang himself over the Seine, so that in case the cord failed the water might complete the suicide. He embarked and rowed to the Pont d'Arcole, to which he fastened one end of the rope, the other end he looped around his own neck, and kicked the skiff from under his feet. The test confirmed his suspicions of the strength of the rope — he fell into the river, and in a fit of absent-mindedhess, swam to the shore. After he had dried his garments and had warmed himself, he made his way home and discovered that the experience had left him heart-whole and fancy-free.

Americans who intend visiting London during the coming jubilee festivities, should engage their rooms at hotels at least a couple of months in advance. There is every indication that the English capital will be thronged with visitors, and accommodations of all sorts are likely to be scarce. A good plan, probably the very best, is to engage apartments with private families, and to include breakfast in the arrangement. It will be found more convenient and less expensive as well to dine and lunch wherever one happens to be during the day. All this will be found to be the most comfortable method of visiting London, as it will eliminate entirely the inconvenience and annoyance of over-crowded hotels.

Jean-Francois de Gravelet, once known as Blondin, the wire-walker of Niagara Falls, has recently died, leaving a fortune of $350,000. Some years ago he erected at Kensal-Green the mausoleum where he now rests, the marble stele of which is ornamented with a bas-relief depicting his most famous feat. All the acrobats of London marched in the funeral procession, which included a carriage in which, upon a velvet cushion, rested two coils of rope—the last used by the celebrated equilibrist.

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Is there aught of interest to confide in you, my dear Diary, this week? Well, perhaps the time has not halted too long or it may be that I am becoming accustomed to the enforced quietude of Lent. On Friday the Misses Taylor invited Leila and me to a luncheon at the 'Varsity Club, and we had a capital time. The table was like the very spirit of spring, all decked in gorgeous "golden cups," as the Indians call eschscholtzias. All the girls wore new spring frocks, and hats that were veritable flower gardens. The menu was not in the least "Lenten," and even the holy Leila enjoyed herself. Then I have been paying up my "left over" calls. There were so many dinner and tea calls to make during the season that I was obliged to confine myself to those and neglect some of the friends, of whom I am really fond, but who do not entertain. I asked Leila to accompany me, but she declined in her most chilling fashion, remarking with a gesture of extreme disdain that "no one pays calls in Lent, my child; have you not learned that yet?" "Ah, well, I shall originate the fashion," I replied. "You won't find any one at home; no one dreams of keeping her day in Lent," she returned icily.

However, I set forth on Monday, and found a perfect bevy of maids and matrons wherever I wondered bent on fulfilling their social obligations. I dropped in to see Mrs. W. E. Dean; all we girls do, she is so great a favorite with the young people. But she is quite ill—has been laid up with a distressing attack of bronchitis, but is no on the road to recovery. By the way, I met Ella Morgan, who told me she goes East next week to remain away all the summer, and anticipates a delightful visit. Mrs. Homer King goes also, and will remain until the schools close, when she will return with her girls. I hear that Romie Wallace intends going back with Mrs. Sprague, who has now three children, including little Isabel Donahue. The very latest fad is swimming. Quite a number of the girls go swimming every Monday and Thursday morning at the Lurline Baths, and are becoming adepts. It is quite "the proper caper," as Arthur would say. They all agree that they can enjoy their summer ocean swimming much better if they become accustomed to "still" water bathing. Then, every afternoon, we go to the riding school, and frequently take to the "road." The Thursday musical rides gain in popularity, and the hall is literally packed with people. I prefer riding to cycling, perhaps because I think so many women look charming on horseback, whereas I have yet to see one who appears to advantage on a wheel. Still, cycling seems one of the favored forms of exercise, and several parties of young people take matutinal rides to the Park and Cliff daily. Marie Voorhies, Florence Ives and Mrs. Wildman are among the most enthusiastic wheelwomen, and leave home before eight o'clock. I wish I had their pluck, but a warm couch has its fascinations in the early morning, and by the time I have persuaded myself of the desirability of early rising the greater part of the morning has passed away, and the next day I have to begin anew.

I am so distressed about poor Frances Curry. Last year we were all miserable about Eloise Davis' accident, and now it is poor Frances. You know, a party of us went to the theater the other evening and afterwards had a "collation" at the Palace Grill. We all were in excellent spirits, and when we came to the hill near the Currys' house some one proposed running down. Accordingly we started off, and poor Frances tripped, fell, split the bone of her nose and knocked out her two front teeth. Did you ever hear of anything more shocking! Had it been an arm or leg it would not have mattered nearly so much, but Frances' teeth were one of her most attractive features. She has suffered so, and not even the myriads of flowers she has been deluged with can console her. I went to see Aileen Goad yesterday to hear all about the wedding. She is the happiest girl, and full of her plans for the future. Genevieve is to be the sole bridesmaid, and only seventy-five guests have been invited to the wedding, which is to take place next Wednesday at five o'clock. They have taken a house in Sausalito for the summer.

I went again to the opera last night with papa and Arthur. It was to me the most enjoyable affair of the season. I am particularly fond of the music of "Aida," and Mme. Feodor was at her best in the part. The audience was most enthusiastic, and applaude vociferously. There was even less attempt at dressing than usual. Mrs. H. M. A. Miller looked well in a black and white striped costume with a dove gray opera cape trimmed with chiffon. The Crockers had their usual party, the L. L. Bakers, Hellmans and all the original subscribers were there en masse. We seemed to have planted ourselves in the midst of the French colony, for I heard nothing but ejaculations in that language on all sides. The Dubedats were quite close, and seemed most interested. I am in love with Albers, the baritone; he is such a magnificent-looking man, with a voice that would have given pleasure to Orpheus. But there is mamma's step in the passage, so I must quickly put out my candle and fly to bed. What should I do without the supply of candles that I providentially laid in in the beginning of the season? Like Bunner's stories, all my diary is written by cavelight. Good-bye. From your own

MISS CRICKET.

The arrival of the C. P. Huntingtons is always a social event, and their installation in their beautiful home on California street gives an appearance of life to the Hill, which nowadays, alas, is sadly deserted. Though they are not given to extensive entertaining, except, of course, Mr. Huntington's big dinner to the employes of the company, there is always a crowd of charming people at the house. Mrs. Huntington surrounds herself with bright men and women, who, during her stay, find her drawing room a charming place to spend an evening. She is much interested in music and literature, and in a quiet and unostentatious way has assisted in the education of several young musicians, who are beginning to make great reputations for themselves. The Huntingtons talk of stopping here until July, though those who look forward to their visits invariably find them cut short by demands for the presence of the President of the Southern Pacific in New York.

MOLLIE THOMPSON
THE NEW SOUBRETTE AT MOROSCO'S

Except for building operations, which are under tremendous headway, there is little happening at Burlingame at the moment. Joseph D. Grant, who believes in keeping the instituion moving one way or the other, and who makes a most energetic President, is quietly organizing an open-air Horse Show, which is to be given under the auspices of the Show Association. The idea is to have quite an elaborate affair, and instead of utilizing the flat, as before, to set it near the club house on the hill. This is a capital idea, and surely there is enough interest in horse at San Mateo to carry it through with a rush. There was a good run at Burlingame on Saturday last and quite a number of people followed the hounds over a pretty rough course, which E. D. Beylard had laid out. There are but a few more runs now until the end of the season, but the pursuit has become one of the institutions of Burlingame and vies with polo in popularity. The last run of the season will be an event, and will probably be followed by a supper and ball. We have been accustomed to declare that past seasons have been gay at Burlingame, but the prospects for the sumer of '97 are far ahead of its predecesors. Colonel Crocker assumes ownership of the Howard mansion in June. The Crocketts, Wilsons and Carolans will be in their new homes about the middle of the same month. The Kruttsnichts' villa will be finished early in July. Mrs. Carolan is now in Chicago purchasing furniture and fittings for her new home, which I believe will be inaugurated with fitting ceremonies.

That very popular charity, the Children's Hospital, is to be further assited, and there is talk of a grand entertainment to be given some time in May by its lady managers. A good deal of originality is shown in preparing the affairs of this institution, and we are promised something out of the way on this occasion.

Announcement has been made of the wedding of Miss Mattie Whittier, daughter of W. F. Whittier, and Mr. William B. Wier of New York, which is to take place at the residence of the bride's father on April 21st. Also of the marriage of Miss Ethel Cohen and Lieutenant Bent, which will be celebrated in the Unitarian Church on June 2nd. Afterwards a reception will be given by Mrs. Henry Gibbons, corner of Geary and Post streets.

* *

In Oakland all the girls are busily discussing their plans for the Bal Masque. I hear it was originated by two Berkeley maidens, who did not see why all pleasures should cease at the advent of Lent. The cotillion set is wild about it, especially the younger element. No fancy dresses are to be worn, but dominoes of every hue of the rainbow.

Some of the maidens are planning to exchange dominoes two or three times during the evening, so as to completely delude their friends. Others are preparing swell silk and satin ones, to obtain all the advantages possible out of the garb. While others who advocate simplicity will be contented with satine or silesia. Driving and coaching parties are to be the fashionable form of diversion this summer. The Pringles, Moores and Howards are all planning drives either to their ranches or into some pleasant part of the surrounding country.

There was a decided dearth of entertainment during the past week, a few luncheons and dinners being the sole attempt at enlivening the monotony of the Lenten season. On Tuesday evening Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Howard gave an informal musicale in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Sprague of Boston. They were assisted in receiving by Miss Howard and Mrs. Baker. Among the soloists of the evening were Mrs. Carroll Nicholson Madam Peck, Mrs. A. A. Dewy, Mr. Frank Coffin and Mr. Rickard.

There was also a pretty luncheon given by Mrs. George C. Perkins in honor of Miss Sheehan of Sacramento, who is at present on a visit to Oakland. The table was daintily decked with spring blossoms. Among the guests were Mrs. John F. Conners and Miss Della Mills.

The "dinner" club of Oakland bids fair to become an institution. It is composed principally of young married people, who vie with one another over the success of their repasts. It is particularly popular with the husbands, on whom, between times, original dishes are practiced. Some of these dinners are veritable "feasts of Antolycus," and in another field would confer distinction on the giver. Last week Mrs. Will Magee entertained the club at a smart little repast. Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Long, Mr. and Mrs. Edson Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Magee and Mr. and Mrs. George McNear were among those who were invited. An equally enjoyable affair was the luncheon given by Mrs. Frank M. Smith of Arbor Villa to the "Shore Acres" company on Wednesday afternoon. In Oakland Mrs. Smith is the sole society woman who entertains visitors of dramatic distinction, and invitations to her parties are eagerly sought. Her home is admirably adapted for hospitalities of all sorts and conditions. The house is large and perfect in its arrangement, and Mrs. Smith possesses the rare gift of entertaining without apparent effort.

A Coveted Distinction.

Probably no private fete has ever been discussed to the extent of the Bradley-Martin ball, and the distinction conferred upon Moet & Chandon by the selection of their champagne will be of lasting benefit to the wine, and stamps it with the approval of our ultra-fashionable set.—Bonfort's Wine Circular.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Dr. H. G. Young—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

DRAMATIC NOTES

Georgia Cayvan will present a number of plays new to San Francisco and also her old success "Squire Kate."

"Aida" will be sung at the California Wednesday evening instead of "Les Huguenots" as first announced.

"Don Juan, ad lib.," has been so successful at the Tivoli that it bids fair to enjoy a prosperous run. It will be followed by a splendid production of Sir Jules Benedict's romantic Irish opera, "The Lily of Killarney."

The famous old English comedy, "Wild Oats," will be given at the Alcazar next week. The play was first produced in 1794 in London, and since then has been a general favorite. A feature of the production will be the quaint costumes of the end of the last century.

Otis Skinner will present his own play, "A Soldier of Fortune," in the second week of his Baldwin engagement. On Saturday the Immortal Bard has the boards. He produces "Romeo and Juliet" in the afternoon, and in the evening the double bill, "The Merchant of Venice" and "Katherine and Petruchio."

The feature of "New Blood" at the Alcazar is the intensely dramatic death of George Osbourne as Courtland Crandall. It is one of the most thrilling and effective bits of work ever seen in this city, and receives immediate and enthusiastic recognition. Hugo Toland and Adele Belgarde are well up in their parts, and the remainder of the unusually long cast acquit themselves creditably.

The opera at the California this evening will be "La Juive," its final presentation. Next week is the last of the opera season. The company will give "William Tell" Monday night and on Friday "Hamlet" will be produced for the first time in this city. "Carmen" is down for the Saturday matinee, with the beautiful Pascal as the bewitching cigarerro. The farewell performance Saturday evening will be a notable one, and will include the operas "I Pagliacci," "La Navarraise," a scene from "La Favorita" and a specially arranged ballet.

Miss Mollie Thompson, who will appear as Chickey in "The Stowaway" at Morosco's next week, is a clever young woman with a record of many successes. She is a capable soubrette, and has been featured in Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown" and Canary and Lederer's "Passing Show," and some years ago came to this coast as the star of "A Pair of Jacks" company. Miss Thompson is the daughter of John Thompson, the comedian, who was a partner of Billy Emerson in this city during the palmy days of minstrelsy.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

J. W. Carmany, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

THE THEATRES

A War-Drama at the Columbia—The Strange Ways of Playwrights.

I saw Maggie Moore in one of the boxes of the Columbia last Monday night—Maggie, who in the palmy days of the old California Theater was the idol of every San Franciscan—Maggie, of the sweet and sympathetic voice—dainty, clever, winsome, hoidenish Maggie, who had captured the heart of every lad in town. Time has dealt kindly with her, but a score more of years, even though gentle in their treatment, play the very mischief with the graceful lines of youth, and our Maggie has not escaped the penalties that time inflicts. She was enthusiastic in her applause over the drama "For Fair Virginia," and well she might be, for a very even and clever company of players was telling a stirring and interesting little romance of Southern life during war times in a most creditable manner. It was a matter of some speculation with me as to who Mr. and Mrs. Whytal might be, and I confess to some apprehension as to the play, for have we not had war plays ad nauseam ever since the days of "Held by the Enemy"? and why should we expect Mr. Whytal, who was coming here so very unostentatiously, to be as good, or better, than the rest? Doubts were dispelled, however, and I think the house was quite as agreeably surprised on Monday night as was I.

Mr. Whytal is distinctly on the right track. He has caught the idea of giving a local atmosphere to his productions, and has succeeded in it, too. It was apparent that the mind guiding the stage arrangement Monday night knew the value of a "curtain" at the right moment, but the Columbia's curtain man was in need of a rehearsal on the opening night. The day is coming, I imagine, when every company of merit will carry its own curtain man; seconds count for much in such a matter with a carefully constructed modern drama. They have some sweet singing of old negro melodies in "For Fair Virginia"—never obtrusively on the stage, but always behind the scenes in the distance, and once with a warm, semi-tropic sunset scene that gradually shaded off into moonlight before your eyes. The play, which is Mr. Whytal's own handiwork, is pregnant with human interest and dramatic incident. It is neither stereotyped nor commonplace, but plainly evidences good, honest, original thought, cleverly handled. It avoids the rant and tricks of the melodrama, for the high colors do not become vivid, but rather soften off into the quieter shades of naturalness. The Columbia's boards have not held a better play or a more evenly balanced company since—since when?—well, for many a day.

There is to Mrs. Whytal a something suggestive of Kathryn Kidder. She has, like that actress, a wholesome, honest face and manner that rather appeal to me. Like Kathryn, she is unaffected, natural, softly womanly, yet unobtrusively earnest. She made an admirable Yankee girl, and I am inclined to say that she, with Uncle Zeb (Mr. John Woodward), carried off the honors of the evening. Mr. Whytal himself undertook the thankless role of Laughlin, a very unlovely person, who was traitor to about everything but his rude and overmastering passion. He is an earnest, painstaking actor, and made much of his part, but I chance to know that the role of the young lover was originally his. Even in the absence of this knowledge I would naturally not have cast such a kindly-appearing individual for the villain. He has a face almost classical, and as he moved about the stage some old, forgotten face in history, some steel-engraving of long ago, kept obtruding itself upon me, but I cannot place it. These two young actors are strangers to the San Francisco audience, but if managerial judgment is good for anything we may expect them to return and be with us frequently. The company included a Miss Lottie Briscoe, who proved herself to be a very intelligent youngster. Miss Mabel Bert was also in the company. Apparently the audience did not recognize her, though once well known and quite a favorite in a small way. Perhaps the criticism that her performance was too cold for the character of a war-time Southern woman is well merited, but such criticisms after all mean nothing. It is nonsense to set up types and demand that the actor live up to them. We naturally attribute high spirit, hot tempers and the like to the Southern woman, but it would give one a wearisome feeling to go into the South if all of its young ladies were just as our critics would have Miss Bert be under the circumstances. A friend of mine, who read my criticism of Fanny Davenport in "Gismonda," seriously took me to task for not discovering that Fanny was "nothing like unto a Florentine Duchess." "Why," said he, "she is the British matron, not the graceful, sinuous Florentine." He confessed that in all his experience he had never met a "Florentine Duchess;" that he had never visited Florence. But he had set up an ideal, and proposed that the rest of the world, and Fanny Davenport in particular, should live up to it.

"For Fair Virginia" will run another week at the Columbia, and should draw crowded houses.

Have you ever observed when a playwright dips into the musty centuries past and gone for his dramatic inspiration that he never heeds or recks of anything except the opportunity to crowd dramatic incidents one upon another without regard for the most ordinary rules of human conduct, and without taking into account any consideration as to how a real, flesh-and-blood human being would act under the same circumstances? It seems to be a generally accepted idea that in getting back to knee breeches and the days of court plaster and the minuet, we must not expect naturalness. The characters must do just what the playwright's wildest fancies may suggest, and we must accept it. Clyde Fitch in "His Grace de Grammont" has made free use of the playwright's self-assumed license in this respect, for he compels de Grammont and Mistress Hamilton and Charles II., and all of that corrupt and licentious court, to do a world of things obviously unnatural and manifestly intended simply for the purpose of putting ginger into the play. In grand opera you will observe the tenors and bassos and baritones, who are just about to engage in bloody duels and combats to the death, valiantly draw their flashing blades and amble to the front as meek as lambs, and there in peaceful unison chant you a stirring chorus, as though to contradict the warlike tenor of the lines which proclaim them to be enemies. Or perhaps a chorus of villagers and yeomen huddle themselves into a private parlor and join in some reveling chorus, and then withdraw without a rebuke or excuse. Of course, such things will not bear analysis in opera any more than in "His Grace de Grammont." They are things impossible, and so we have come to class opera and romantic comedy dealing with other centuries as being much in the same category. We accept it accordingly and expect nothing of naturalness, and therefore never attempt to analyze them along any sane human line of action. I confess to but little affection for this style of drama. Pleasing it is, perhaps; it gives costumes and scenic opportunities galore, gives the actor license to rend the passions, to roar of vengeance, and to coo of love. But, bless you, we are getting beyond that in the drama.

Mr. Otis Skinner has around him a very acceptable company of players. There was not a faulty voice among them. The women were pleasant to look upon, charming of manner, and beautifully costumed. As much can hardly be said of the men. Skinner himself has manly graces on his side, and Mosley was a commanding figure as Charles II. The Lady Castlemain of Sarah Trua was a charming bit of acting. Her lines sparkled with telling epigrams, and she understands the value of inflection. What was Skinner's conception of the character? There was no character, and therefore could be no conception of it. The playwright had given him lines where he was to be the wooing, sighing lover; in another place he was to be the ordinary courtier; in still another, the swearing, ranting man of hates. Where he was to be the courtier, he was the courtier; where he was to woo and sigh, he wooed and sighed; and where he was to rant and roar, he ranted and roared; and that was all.

B.

Dainty and unusual ideas for invitations, programs, etc., for society affairs. We originate, write, design and print them.

The chief characteristic of our work is that it is characteristic; that there is something about it to attract attention.

WILDER & CO.
20 to 24 Geary Street
Easterbrook Building

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Mr. Hermann Schwarze (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

AIDA REVIEWED

Recollections of the Local Productions of Verdi's Masterpiece.

The performance on Tuesday night by the French opera company of Verdi's "Aida," which is generally conceded to be the best production of the season, draws attention to the many times this opera has been admirably presented in San Francisco, and at the same time one is lead to apply the inevitable test of comparison with former presentations. That "Aida" should be so well done is due perhaps to the fact that it is not an opera which may be undertaken without more than ordinary preparation; in it the best efforts of an operatic organization are put forth, and if the result be a failure it is because of an actual inability upon the part of the company to cope with its manifold and exacting requirements. It may not be shunted off as "Trovatore" or "Traviata" on an "off night," with meager scenery and third-rate singers, and it is in consequence of the obstacles it presents to slipshod work that we have so often seen it given with rare excellence both as regards the singing and mise en scene. No work of equal seriousness can be repeated so often with surer success, nor is there one, saving perhaps "Cavalleria Rusticana," which is still a novelty, or "Faust," which every one likes, that can stand a continued run of five weeks, as "Aida" did at the Tivoli some years ago.

The chiefest and at the same time the surest claim the opera has upon us lies in the evenly adequate treatment of the various themes. The music has a distinctive character throughout, yet runs through so many channels with equal flow that one is not prepared to select a particular aria, or scene, or act, for special commendation. The valorous martial choruses; the impressive, semi-mystical, religious chants, the stormy passion of Amonasro's music, the cumulative ensembles of triumphal song; the rippling music of the Nile; the despair of Aida's Numi pieta; the anguish of Radames' Io son disonorato; the pathos of the final scene are severally and collectively so adequate, so satisfying, that the whole opera is dowered with a symmetry and beauty so certain that we must accept it as the highest development of the school to which it belongs.

To many older ears the strains of Verdi's Egyptian music recall memories of the first production of "Aida" at the Baldwin Theater in 1877. Clara Louise Kellogg sang "Aida," and Eleanor Carey was Amneris, than whom no one has rendered the dramatic role more exquisitely. Graff was the Radames, Verdi the Amonasro and Connelly the Ramphis. In the next presentation Carey shared first honors with Pantaleoni, a baritone of tremendous power. Marie Rose was the prima donna, and Charles Adams the Radames. Patti essayed "Aida" during her first visit to San Francisco, but the part was not musically conegnial, and she was not therein the peerless diva of "Trovatore," "Traviata" and "Semeramadi." In 1884 a fugitive troupe of singers known as the Milan Company dropped in upon us from Mexico, and opened in "Aida" at the old California Theater. An ungainly primo umo sang to us the "Celeste Aida," and carried the audience by storm.

It was Gianini whose singing of Radames was undoubtedly the best that has been heard here. The Aida was Damarini, Vilmant was Amonaso and Mestres Amneris. Gianini sang the part again with the Mapleson Company, when Mme. Furch-Madi was Aida, Steinbach Amneris and de Anna Amonasro. The American Opera Company gave the next "Aida," with Bertha Pierson, Marie Van Zanten, Candidus and Ludvig. As with all their productions, the mounting was magnificent and vastly superior to that of any other organization.

The Tivoli then put the opera on with an indifferent cast, and ran it f[illegible] weeks. A year or two later Nordi[illegible] heard as Aida, with Tamagno as [illegible]mes. Despite his fame, Tamagno's Radames, like Patti's Aida, was not faultless. He slighted the "Celeste Aida," but gave the "Vieni Meco" superbly. After this the Hess Company sang "Aida" at the Orpheum at 75, 50 and 25 cents. Guille was the Radames and Gutherie the Aida—undoubtedly the best I have heard. At every performance a repetition of the "Vieni Meco" was demanded, and I have heard the diminutive Guille sing the final phrase with his soaring note as many as four times. The Tavary Company followed after an interval of five years, and we then heard or rather saw the best dramatic interpretation of the role of Amneris in the hands of Dorre.

Quite recently the Tivoli gave the opera for a week, with Ida Valerga, a most conscientious artist, as Aida (alternating with Mme. Natali), Michaelina as Radames, de Vries as Amonaso, Holmes as Amneris and Abramoff as the priest. De Vries as Amonasro left nothing to be desired, particularly from a dramatic view point, his interpretation being the result of a tutelage under the composer himself.

And now we have heard and applauded Mmes. Foedor and Fremeau and Massart and Albers, who have just given such a complete and satisfactory performance that the memory of no other artists overshadows their conspicuous merit.

PORTER GARNETT.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

There is as much difference between "Don Juan" and "The Merry Wives of Windsor" as there is between the audiences attending both pieces. The Tivoli put on Nicolai's opera last week in an exceptionally pleasing manner, and it should have had a prosperous run, but it seems burlesque's the thing; and Nicolai and his pretty music, and Shakespeare and his wit must take themselves away and make room for the mirth and music of the clown, the cap and bells of the fool. The fault of this is with the people, not with the Tivoli; the management is not in the race for glory, but for something more substantial, and if the people won't accept "The Merry Wives" they must of necessity give them "Don Juan." The piece is put on very well, and contains a number of new and catchy songs and two very pretty ballets. Ferris Hartman as Muley brings in some new business, and makes a big hit with "Sister Mary Jane's Top Note." W. H. West makes a better Sambo than his predecessor in the role, and his new ditties take well. Laura Millard looks pretty and sings well as Haidee, and Elvia Crox Seabrooke is quite good as "Zoe."

It seems that our townsman, I. W. Taber, has attracted royal attention to himself in London, where he went recently to inaugurate the new bas-relief photograph idea. He has opened a gallery in the English metropolis, and has had the honor of picturing the Prince of Wales. Of course, this is a first-rate distinction, and will undoubtedly attract to the new gallery much aristocratic patronage. By the way, Taber's gallery has been fortunate to secure in Mr. Ross, chief operator, one of the most conspicuous operators in the United States. He is remarkably clever in obtaining effects of light and shade, in addition to a faculty at posing his subjects wherein lieth the art of the really brilliant operator. Before coming here he was with Falk of New York and Morrison of Chicago, and aided materially in making the reputations of both these names.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

THE SECRET of good cooking, even baking, economy and durability lies in the purchase of a

WINTHROP
RANGE

CHAS. BROWN & SON, 807 Market Street
COAST AGENTS Flood Building

THE APRIL MAGAZINES

Mark Twain's Place in Literature—Evolution of the Populist.

Like the fair sex, the magazines vary. From month to month, they oscillate in value and interest, the scale turning this April with "Harpers,'" in March with "The Century," in January with the "Cosmopolitan." It is difficult even with the immense resources at the command of the editors of the big monthlies to be clever the year through. Good topics grow more difficult to discover as the competition for available subjects increases. It is necessary to go far afield after matter. "Harpers'," for instance, is treating of Belgium, Mexico and South Africa, and devotes itself also to "our trade with South America." In the "Century" there is an entertaining article on "New Conditions in Central Africa," in which one encounters a number of really novel pictures. The "Cosmopolitan's" leading article is "Modern Greece," in which we are presented with some admirable views of roval and other families of the most conspicuous of European nations. The "Atlantic," however, keeps sedulously to America, and is giving us the best political material of the day. Its treatment of the great problems of our commonwealth is marked by real breadth and comprehension, and it has enlisted the service of such men as E. L. Godkin, who writes of the "Nominating System," and of Frederick J. Turner, whose contributions on "Dominant Forces in Western Life" is an attempt to trace the evolution of several great movements in American politics. The Populist, he says, is the American farmer who has kept in advance of the economic and social transformations that have overtaken those who remained behind. If we follow back the line of march of the Puritan farmer we shall see how responsive he has always been to "isms," and how persistently he has resisted encroachments on his ideals of individual opportunity and democracy. He is the prophet of the "higher law" in bleeding Kansas, before the Civil War. He is the Prohibitionist of Iowa and Wisconsin crying out against German customs as an invasion of his political ideals. He is the Granger of Wisconsin passing restrictive railroad legislation. He is the abolitionist, the millerite, the woman suffragist, the spiritualist, the adherent of Joseph Smith of Western New York.

"The Nominating System" is handled with the evenness and breadth of treatment which are the best characteristics of Mr. Godkin's manner. He traces the decline of dignity and the low tone of our politics to the usurpations of the Party Boss, who concentrates in himself the control of the election machinery and makes the office-holder tributary to him rather than responsible to his constituents. The situation is not hopeless, he believes—not more so, at least, than was the abolition of slavery or the reform of the civil service. To pass from politics to astronomy, Percival Lowell disabuses us of the lingering impression that there may be men in Mercury. Like Venus, that planet is a dead world—a body devoid of air, water and of vegetation. Charles Miner Thompson deals with Mark Twain, and pronounces him neither a great writer nor a great wit. His humor is "that of a shifting and evanescent semi-civilization, the humor of new men in new circumstances in a suddenly developing country, wherein the ups and downs of life, immensely exaggerated, both in speed and span, make a grotesque appeal to the sense of incongruity of a naturally humorous people." His greatness and prominence are attributed to his intense Americanism. Mark Twain is a typical American, who has thoroughly expressed the individuality of the nation.

The "Century" is given up to Grant, apropos of the approaching dedication of the tomb on the Riverside drive, New York. General Horace Porter's reminiscences of the great leader are very readable, but one turns with curiosity to Sherman's estimate of his superior officer, which is given in a letter to a friend. Even to him, Grant is a mystery, and he gives what he conceives is the philosophy of his life—"a simple faith that our country must go on, and by keeping up with the events of the day he must be right—for whatever is is right. He don't lead in one sense, and don't attempt to change natural results. Thus the world accounts him the typical man and therefore adores him." Among the documents which accompany these reminiscences of Grant are two of special interest to Californians. One is a reproduction of the photograph of the General at the Bonanza mines. It is a large group admirably reproduced, and in it are John Mackay, the late J. G. Fair and his wife, and Mrs. Gelette, together with General and Mrs. Grant and other members of the party, all togged out in the rough garments of miners. It seems that the original Grant letter, in which occurs the sentence, "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," is here in San Francisco, the property of G. W. Grannis. It was addressed to General Halleck and preserved by him, falling into possession of Mr. Grannis at his death. The article on Thackeray in Weimar, with several capital drawings by the great novelist, and "The Days of Joan of Arc," by Mary Hartwell Catherwood are the most important literary features of the number.

One learns in John Bach McMaster's article on "Washington and the French Craze," in "Harpers'," how wise and careful an administrator was the first President. The announcement of a French republic naturally roused great joy throughout the new States, but when its representative arrived in the person of a citizen Genet to enlist the aid of America against England in the war that France had just then declared, Washington declined to depart from the rule of neutrality, and the popular clamor did not move him from this decision. I have commented previously on the excellent matter about Mexico, which Charles F. Lummis has written. In this number he gives us a really capital study of President Diaz, which, if it be rather more enthusiastic than proper in a discriminating critique, is charmingly personal and full of interesting details. Of this month's "Cosmopolitan" the feature is the first installment of H. G. Well's new story, "The War of the Worlds." It promises to be a wildly exciting tale, with Mars as an assailant bombarding the earth with great bombs laden with agents of destruction. Besides, there is also "The History of Lady Betty Stair" by that clever and amusing writer Molly Elliot Seawell. John Brishen Walker contributes the first of what should prove an important series of articles on "Modern College Education," in which he takes the ground that the teaching of the day fails to instruct men how to live to the best advantage to themselves; that it takes the essentials for granted and merely trains certain phases of the intellect instead of the mind and the body in the rules of life.

"Lippincotts'" has one of Captain Charles King's army stories for its piece de resistance, and follows up with its usual series of brief and reasonably entertaining articles. The "Bookman" presents an excellent number, and except for a certain Philistinism should be ranked as first among the literary monthlies. The article by Norman Hapgood on "The Reporter and Literature" is an excellent presentation of the much mooted distinction between journalese and prose, and defines with unusual accuracy the attitude of the world to the reporter. In the "Pocket Magazine" is an interesting though rather far-fetched tale by Robert Hitchens, the only really good story in the number. The problem he handles is curious—the kinship of two souls and the effort of a lover to win the heart of his inamorata by first captivating her friend—a disastrous experiment, as the consequence demonstrates.

LIBRARY NOTES

From Robert W. Chambers comes a volume of verse entitled, "With the Band." It is divided into three parts, the first redolent of the military, the second entitled "Vagrant Verses" and the third "Moods." The rhymes of camp life are full of a pleasing jingle, and it is not difficult to hear the beat of the drum and the tramp of many feet while reading them. In the second part the prettiest piece is an "Egyptian Love Song," a very pleasing poem, full of passion and Oriental coloring. In "Moods," the third part of the book, the work is prose, dealing with love and death, souls and courage. (Stone & Kimball.)

"Grip," by John Strange Winter, ends appropriately, and therein lies its redeeming feature. It is a story of love and revenge, told in the first person by an egotistical Englishman. Various misfortunes, improbable and otherwise, occur to the different characters, many of which take place in a French prison. "Grip" is not much better nor much worse than the preceding novels of John Strange Winter—it has, at least, the virtue of being uniquely written. (Stone & Kimball.)

"The Fault of One," by Effie Adelaide Rowlands, is a tale of English life. It contains plenty of action and any amount of love, and will rank well with Miss Rowland's preceding works. (J. B. Lippincott Company.)

"Zenobia and Other Poems," by G. H. Thornton, has been issued by the Griffith Publishing Company of this city. The little book contains a number of poems of all sorts and subjects, and of quality as varying.

"An American Nobleman," a tale of the Canaan wilderness, by William Armstrong, is one of Rand, McNally & Co.'s latest publications. The story is written in the Carolina dialect, and seems to be well told.

Anthony J. Drexel-Biddle has written a book, "The Madeira Islands," in which he describes the life, manners and customs of that colony in a very entertaining manner. (Drexel-Biddle & Bradley Co.)

"Literary Landmarks of Rome" (Harper & Brothers) is the latest addition to the series of "Literary Landmarks" which Lawrence Hutton has written for the Harpers. It describes the historic houses of ancient Rome, and also the residences of certain modern celebrities. The American authors of whom mention is made in this interesting volume are Cooper, Motley, Helen Hunt, Miss Olcott and Constance Fenimore Woolson.

"Beauty and Hygiene," which has just been gotten out by Harper & Brothers, is a treatise on the cultivation and preservation of physical beauty. It is claimed therein that beauty is not to be obtained from the use of nostrums, but may be cultivated by legitimate means. The most efficacious preparations are set forth here, and all manner of suggestions made as to the development of curves and the care of the complexion.

Julia Magruder's latest book, "Miss Ayr of Virginia," is adorned with covers of the most approved poster fashion. It comprises a number of short stories of varying interest and quality. The principal one, that of Miss Ayr herself, is the tale of a simple Southern girl who manages in her simple Southern way to outshine her fashionable New York cousins. A rather commonplace plot, but the denouement is certainly rather startling. (H. S. Stone & Co.)

$100 Reward $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Wise people seeking advice on important matters consult only the best authorities. Thos. Cook & Son are the recognized authorities on Travel in all Civilized Countries. The knowledge attained during their fifty-six years of experience as travel experts, is at the disposal of all intending travelers. San Francisco Office, 621 Market street.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

WHY SHE MARRIED JACK

"Oh, you dear thing!" cried the girl in the empire jacket, as she stepped aboard the cars, "to think that I've only just heard of your marriage. I was away at the time, you know, and I just can't forgive you for not letting me know all about it."

"Well, you see, it was very sudden," said the young woman in the fur collarette, according to a writer in the Chicago "Times-Herald." "I only knew it myself forty-eight hours before it happened. You see, I had decided to be married in the spring, anyhow, but I liked Jack and Edgar equally well, and I just couldn't decide which—"

"Yes," said the girl in the empire jacket, breathlessly, "and how did you decide?"

"I put them both to a test," said the young woman in the fur collarette, "and Jack stood it."

"You didn't make them fight a duel, did you?"

"Mercy, no. That is away behind the times. I just took each of them for a walk and stopped before a milliner's window to—"

"You clever, original thing!"

"Yes—to admire the hats. I said to Edgar, 'I'm trying to decide which one of these suits me best. I've tried them all on and I can't decide. Give me your opinion.'"

"Yes, yes, don't stop; I'm dying to hear—"

"He pointed to one bearing a ticket which said 'Marked down to $1.49,' and said: 'That one, by all means; it would just suit the shape of your head!'"

"Oh, I see; a husband like that would tell you that you looked better in a calico frock than—"

"A silk? Exactly. I rejected him that day. The following afternoon Jack and I went for a walk."

"And stopped before the same window?"

"Mhm. Then Jack displayed his real nobility. He said: 'If I had anything to say to it, I'd select that one.' It was placarded 'The very latest, $22.' I knew I'd never find such a noble creature again, so I married him two days later!"

"And you were right, too. Of course, the first thing he did after you were married was to buy you that hat! How awfully romantic! Of course, you haven't worn it out in two months—you must let me see it when I come to call to-morrow!"

A queer look flashed over the bride's face, and she gasped: "Why, no, he didn't. I—I never once thought of that. Conductor, stop the car!"

"Why, where are you going?" asked the girl in the empire jacket.

"To Jack's office," said the bride, firmly. "I—we have an errand to do before I go home!"

Chicago Times-Herald.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

A Slight Cold, if Neglected, often Attacks the Lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and effectual relief.

$5,000 will purchase half interest in United States patent controlling one of the most profitable advertising devices ever offered to the public. The device pays 25% per month on cost. Over $4,000 has already been realized from the sale of the right for three counties in California alone. The enterprise is well worth the immediate investigation of the most cautious investor. Serious illness of owner necessitates the sale. Address R. A. L., care The Wave.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

GEO. H. KAHN,
OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., Cor. SUTTER.

AGE

STRENGTH AND QUALITY

OF

Gooderham & Worts

CANADIAN

Rye Whiskey

GUARANTEED BY GOVERNMENT

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood & Sherwood

SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND
LOS ANGELES

Polished Hardwood Floors

$1.50 per Square Yard

Fine Work—First-class References

INLAID FLOOR CO.

602 Market St., Crocker Building

Telephone Main 5998

FINE FUR AND SEALSKIN GARMENTS TO ORDER

Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast . . . .

AD. KOCOUR

Fashionable Furrier

5½ Kearny Street

OPPOSITE CHRONICLE BUILDING

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS

AGENTS
222 Market Street
S. F.

In photo-engraving, as in other lines of trade, you sometimes pay superior prices for inferior workmanship. We guarantee superior workmanship, by a new process, at moderate prices. Send for estimates to

THE WAVE PUBLISHING CO.

24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

THE DOLL EXPOSITION

Waxen Damsels as Exemplars of Fashion's Decrees.

NEW YORK, March 24.—I went this afternoon to pay homage to all the dolls at the Waldorf. "Vogue" has organized the exhibition, and all the swellest tailors and dressmakers have exhibited their cleverest and daintiest work in dressing these marionettes. They compete for four cash prizes, given by New York's most swagger women—one by Mrs. William C. Whitney, for the best dinner or ball gown; one by Mrs. Bradley Martin, for the best street dress; one by Mrs. Oelrichs for the best garden-party frock, and a fourth by Colonel Albert A. Pope, for the best bicycle suit. It was really a social event. Carriages blockaded the entire street, and told of some real attraction at the ball room entrance. This is the most famous of all New York's ball rooms, for it is here that the "four hundred give their cotillions; here that Mrs. Astor entertains her guests and here was the scene of Mrs. Bradley Martin's much talked-of fancy-dress ball. It is a room one hundred feet square, decorated most elaborately in the Louis XVI style. Today, upon entering, I scarcely recognized the surroundings. The decorations had wrought such a change. However, the familiar strains of the Tzigane orchestra struck my ear, and I recognized around me members of the smart set in its best bibs and tuckers. They so completely filled the room that it was well-nigh impossible to catch a glimpse of the hundred dolls; but as each little beauty in her smilax bower dawned upon my wondering eyes I marveled at the art which had so cleverly mimicked the people about me.

Occupying the entire main floor of the ball room were a hundred little pedestals, each surmounted by a smilax arbor, under which stood a proud little lady some two feet high, gowned in every detail as a woman of fashion. There were blondes and brunettes, blue eyes and black; there were waxen hands most daintily gloved, and tiny feet most fastidiously shod. The lingerie, of web-like cambric most elaborately trimmed. Tiny satin corsets bound their little waists. The hair of each model was dressed in the latest fashion, and the hats worn with the street and garden costumes were, for the most part, creations by Youmans. Every variety of costume was represented. There were dolls in dreams of ball toilets, in reveries of garden gowns, in smart tailor suits and in graceful neglige. There were little gray-haired widows in deepest mourning, bicycle girls on perfect "machines," and dolls in riding habits with scarlet jackets, mounted on prancing steeds. Among so many stylish costumes it is difficult to make a choice. Let me see, the first doll that attracted my attention wore a black tailor-made gown, which, instead of being braided, was trimmed in waving lines with bias bands of the same material, and black satin forming very intricate patterns. The same effect was seen on the waist, the lower half of which was of satin and the upper part of the cloth. The blouse was open and faced with white satin, and had a very curious button, a cameo, on each of the small lapels. The front was draped with an Egyptian foulard handkerchief of bright red, turquoise blue and vivid green. A small turnover collar showed above the stock, faced with turquoise blue taffetas, the same silk being used for a girdle which fastened at the side with a little frill. Coming from under the lapels of the blouse was a sailor collar of linen crash, with a wide insertion of cream linenlace. The top of the sleeves was the most original part of the gown. They were caught across the top in a loop laid in two upward-turning plaits. This gives a broad effect without any fullness, which is most unusual and very chic.

A charming summer creation has an accordion plaited skirt of pale green India silk, trimmed near the bottom with two rows of black French lace. The fullness of the plaits at the top is confined under a short, stiffened apron of the silk, which preserves the slim effect of the hips. The waist opens with lapels over a low glimpse of white silk muslin, above which is a high tucked yoke. Two bands of black ribbon velvet come to a point at back and front, and go high under the arms. Little loops of narrow black velvet finish the edge of the apron and of the bodice.

A striking bicycling costume made with a view to capturing Colonel Pope's prize, is calculated to win the hearts of all women cyclists. The skirt is specially designed for the bicycle, and is patented. Its chief feature is a double plait at the back, which falls over the saddle and gives the effect of a divided skirt without its disadvantages.

The doll show was such a success last year that a permanent organization has been formed to give a similar exhibition each spring. Its aim is to encourage artists to give up copying Paris and make New York the center of fashion. The competition is not confined to Gotham, but is open to all the tailors and dressmakers of the United States. Some of the choicest gowns were designed by Western firms. One of the two garden frocks designed by "Caroline" of Chicago has a fair chance of winning the prize, and a dinner gown from St. Paul attracts much attention.

On Saturday evening the prizes will be awarded, after which each little lady will retire to her home.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

Argonaut OK WHISKEY

IS FIVE YEARS IN WOOD BEFORE BOTTLING

E. MARTIN —AND— CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

521-523 Market St., San Fran.

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE MARK THIS LABEL ON Stewart Hartshorn AND CO. THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

BALDWIN THEATRE
AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS
Commencing Next Monday, April 5th, Second Week
Matinee Saturday
OTIS SKINNER
Supported by MAUD DURBIN and FREDERICK MOSLEY AND A STRONG COMPANY
First Five Nights
A SOLDIER OF FORTUNE
Saturday Matinee, Romeo and Juliet
Saturday Night, double bill: Merchant of Venice and Katherine and Petruchio

CALIFORNIA THEATRE
AL HAYMAN & Co. INCORP'D PROPS
GRAND OPERA SEASON
Famous French Operatic Organization
Last Performances!
Monday Evening, April 5th, William Tell
Wednesday Evening, April 7th, Les Huguenots
Friday Evening, April 9th, benefit Henri Albers, Hamlet
Saturday Matinee, Carmen
Saturday Evening, Grand Farewell, Triple Bill
Pagliacci, La Navarraise, scene from La Favorite

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
Great success of the "Best of all War Plays"
MR. AND MRS. RUSS WHYTAL
In the Romantic Drama
For Fair Virginia
Beautiful Scenery! Brilliant Company!
April 12th, Miss Georgie Cayvan

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, April 5th
DELMORE & LEE, Gymnasts Extraordinary
With Illuminated Revolving Ladders
Titenia, Toe Dancer
The Four Cohans The Three Vilona Sisters
The Three Richards
Werner & Rieder, in New Tyrolean Warblings
Lillie Laurel Johnny and Emma Ray in a New Sketch
Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
A Hit! The Latest! The Very Latest!
The Operatic Spectacle
DON JUAN
(AD LIB)
New Songs! New Dances! New Novelties!
Two Beautiful Ballets! Perfect Cast!
Next: The Lily of Killarney; or, The Colleen Bawn
Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Last performances to-day and to-morrow, matinees and nights, of Augustus Thomas' Great Problem Play, NEW BLOOD
At Ye Playe House known as YE ALCAZAR THEATRE
W ll be enacted on Mondaye, Aprille 5th, and each night after, Ye Great Comedie
WILD OATS
In whiche Ye Famouse Alcazar Companie of Comical Players, also one George Osbourne and one Hugo Toland will appear to amuse ye publick
Ye prices are 15, 25, 35 and 50 pennies. Benches will be kept when ordered inne advance. Use ye magic wire Black 991 to speake to ye ticket man

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE
WALTER MOROSCO : : Sole Lessee and Manager
Last performances of THE DAGO
Commencing Monday Evening, April 5th, Revival of the Exciting, Successful Melodrama
THE STOWAWAY
Magnificently produced, with new Scenery, Appointments and Effects. Special engagement of the Queen of American Soubrettes, Mollie Thompson, just from a long series of successes in London and South Africa.
A real safe blown open by the real "Spike Hennessy" with real burglar's tools
Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

GRAY HAIR RESTORED
to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant odor. $1.00 a bottle
LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle
LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st., N.Y.
Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

RACING

Two-Year-Old Races at Ingleside—Prospects of the California Derby.

But for the interesting character of the two-year-old events there has been little in the racing at Ingleside since last writing worthy of special mention. The weather has been cold, with some rain, and the attendance at the track has been lighter than for some time past. Several of the Eastern contingent have already retraced their steps to prepare for the coming season on the other side of the continent.

Among the two-year-old division Morello stock has appreciated considerably, and that he should have been cut off so early in his career at the stud is much to be regretted. He has left no doubt of his ability to produce fast and shapely youngsters, and if they get fair treatment one or two of them should certainly grow into race horses. The Burns & Waterhouse filly Recreation (Morello-Picnic) has shown speed and gameness on two occasions since last report, winning at half a mile in 49¾ seconds, and again in the Ullman Stakes on Saturday last at four and a half furlongs. In the former race Little T. G. went out in the lead, and for three-fourths of the distance kept from four to five lengths ahead of the field. A hundred yards from the winning post her bolt had been shot, and the Burns & Waterhouse filly, taking up the running, scored an easy win with four lengths to spare. The only other youngster in the race that made the least show was the Salvator filly Salmera, who finished up a length behind Little T. G.

In the Ullman Stakes the field consisted of Recreation, The Cheat, Sir William, Imperious, Aluminum, Outlay and San Carlos, all of these, with the exception of the last named, being above the average of the season. Recreation was chopped at the start, and The Cheat, getting out in front, showed a clean pair of heels to his opponents all the way till the final tussle, as the paddock was reached, where Recreation, getting up, struggled with him neck and neck, and with the help of Thorpe's determined riding, beat the Deceiver colt by a short head on the post. Six lengths behind came Sir William with Imperious, who had shown speed and was second to the middle of the stretch, a close up fourth.

On the previous day in a four-furlong race a disastrous start led to the leaving of the good colt Rey el Salto, in Baldwin's stable, and three others at the post. Morellito broke with the best of the start, but dropped back and left the running to be taken up by Barney Schreiber, who turned into the stretch with a lead of three lengths. From that point the former colt settled down to racing, and making up his ground eventually caught the judges' eye with a head to spare. The Islington colt Michael, who, by the way, was originally christened Mica, was one of the last away, but made a bold attempt and landed in third place within a length of the winner.

Monday furnished a two-year-old field full and brimming over, sixteen going to the post for the $350 four-furlong sprint. Of these six were sporting silk for the first time and of the remainder not one had previously been returned a winner. The start was a good one, Lord Marmion and Imperious getting out in front and making a race together to the head of the stretch, with Michael lying handily a length in the rear. Half a furlong from home the last named went to the front in comfortable style, and reached the winning post a couple of lengths in advance of Imperiout. Front de Boeuf was third, just beating Bliss Rucker, who had run creditably, by a head. Michael is a racy looking colt, and together with Niton, also by imp. Islington, is a credit to the brother of Isinglass.

On Tuesday the four and a half furlongs two-year-old race resulted in another victory for Morellito, who ran in the ruck the greater part of the journey, and just got his head in front of the Baldwin entry, Los Prietos, at the finish, Hermoso, who had shown in the van most of the way, having to be content with third place half a length in the rear.

On Monday last in the mile, purse $500, the class of horses was an improvement, as a whole, on those which have been meeting lately, though unfortunately a bad start, with Greyhurst, notoriously a troublesome brute at the barrier, left standing, marred the appearance of things considerably. Damien, 110 lbs, at once took the lead, with Schiller, 110 lbs, waiting on him into the stretch, where Good Times, 106 lbs, assumed second place, David, with the much heavier impost of 121 lbs, keeping handy throughout. Fairly straightened out for home, however, Damien was evidently the victor, and able to saunter home at his leisure, Good Times and David finishing behind him in the order named.

---

To-day is to be celebrated at Ingleside the first California Derby, a sweepstakes for three-year-olds, guaranteed value $5,000, $4,000 to the first, $500 to the second, $300 to the third and $200 to the fourth horse. Weight for age, maidens allowed 10 lbs. One mile and a quarter. Acceptances were due yesterday only, and are therefore not available for the purpose of these notes. Original entries numbered seventy-three, but in all likelihood not more than ten horse will be seen at the post. The following are expected to form the field:

E. J. Baldwin's b. c. Estaca.
C. T. Boots' b. c. The Roman.
Burns & Waterhouse's b. c. Candelaria.
Burns & Waterhouse's br. c. Caspar.
S. C. Hildreth's ch. c. Lincoln II.
H. Eugene Leigh's b. c. Good Times.
E. W. Purser's ch. f. Scarf Pin.
E. Ryan's br. c. Howard S.
*A. J. Stemler's b. f. Lumina.
*B. Schreiber's g. g. Greyhurst.
*Doubtful.

Of the foregoing Howard S. is perhaps most fancied by the public, as he has proved himself to be a high-class colt with a liking for a distance of ground, has recently been running in good form and has shown up well in his work during the last few days. He changed hands in the early part of the week, Edward Ryan being reported to have paid J. H. Shields $5,000 or $6,000 for the son of imp. Whistle Jacket. Another colt who has been earning good opinions recently is Charles Boots' The Roman, and it is not easy to gauge just how good he may be, as lately he has shown his ability to beat everything he has come across. Perhaps his best performance was on March 25, when he gave Lincoln II., a pretty reliable horse, 8 lbs in a mile race and won with comparative ease. The form of the Burns & Waterhouse pair is pretty well exposed, as is that of Scarf Pin, Good Times and Lincoln II., the two last mentioned being certainly held safe by more than one horse in the race. Estaca, Lumina and Greyhurst are the uncertain quantities that may have to be reckoned with in the game of chance, but as, on the other hand, it is quite possible that Howard S. and the Roman may be better than they have yet shown themselves, the honors seem to await their taking, and I should rely on the former to prove his right to be considered the best three-year-old in California.

---

Captain Coe, a capable English turf writer, recently made the following remarks:

"I shall watch the running of Mr. Lorrillard's horses this season with some interst, for I have my doubts as to the manner in which the system of training pursued by this prominent American owner will work out. Last year his horses could not be trained exclusively on American plans, for the simple reason that the means were not at hand; but last autumn a dirt track was completed, and upon this trials will be timed. This method did not pay Mr. Crocker last season, and none have yet forgotten the Eau Gallie fiasco. It was also said Americus was tried by the clock a certainty for the Jubilee Stakes. Possibly he was, but he did not run, and all we can do it to take it on trust."

Before the Lincoln Handicap the same authority wrote:

"Diakka, according to all Newmarket watchers, could not look or go better. I don't write this as though it were anything in his favor, for it has almost become a by-word that, if Newmarket is unanimous in favor of any horse sheltered in a home stable, then the best thing to do is lay aginst it."

---

For a very long period of years it was the aim of breeders of high-class horses for harness purposes in this country to raise animals that were free from any tendency to "pull up their knees," the idea being that such action was so much waste of both time and effort. But since the craze for speed, and speed alone, began to die out many enthusiastic horse-lovers have become inoculated with a fancy for the high-stepper, which was getting as hard to find as the proverbial needle in a hay stack. So catching has been this new taste that in the course of a very few years it has come to be the ambition of nearly every man or woman of fashion, with horsey proclivities, to possess animals with what the dealers call "flash action," so that breeders, dealers and others concerned now maintain that the most valuable quality a harness horse can possess is knee action, soundness, of course, being a sine qua non. The result is that all sorts of extravagances have held sway, and we hear of the "park fold" of the knee and other nonsensical and nauseating diction. The "park fold" in a horse is probably about equivalent in merit to the "Alexandra limp" in a woman. Again at the horse shows real merit has frequently been discounted by some flat-catching weed with showy action in front that would make him useless for any good, honest, practical service. Nothing is more desirable in a harness horse than fine, bold, true action well off the ground, when it is accompanied by the power to keep it going with undiminished elegance over a journey of fourteen to sixteen miles in the hour, but the mere ability to step high without getting away makes the subject only fit to be the servant of a Jew money-lender in Hyde Park or of some nameless feminine person, less chaste than chic, when airing her charms in the Bois de Boulogne. It will be a thousand pities if breeders are tempted to try and produce these extravagant goers, to the detriment of the genuine article, which is best exemplified in the good specimens of the hackney breed. No harness horse should go with a straight leg, and good knee action is indispensable. Its goodness, however, does not consist in the mere act of lifting, but in the style in which it is done, to judge of which needs education and experience, engrafted upon natural taste altogether out of the common.

BENEDICT.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

ELECTRIC..
Supplies
Construction
Repairs
CALIFORNIA
ELECTRICAL WORKS
409 MARKET STREET

RACING! RACING!
California Jockey Club
Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, April 5 to 19, at OAKLAND RACETRACK
Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine
Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp
Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.
Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.
THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB
(INGLESIDE TRACK)
The Only Perfect Winter Track in America
Racing from March 22 to April 3, inclusive
Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine!
First Race at 2 p.m.
Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar.
Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.
The Androus Stakes Monday, March 22d
The Ullman Stakes Saturday, March 27th
The California Derby Saturday, April 3d
F. H. GREEN, Secy. S. N. ANDROUS, Pres.

Hartwell, Mitchell & Willis
Successors to Dodge Bros.
FINE STATIONERY
Engraved Visiting Cards, Wedding Invitations, etc., in latest styles
225 Post Street near Stockton

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of
Artificial Stone in all its branches
Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty
Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

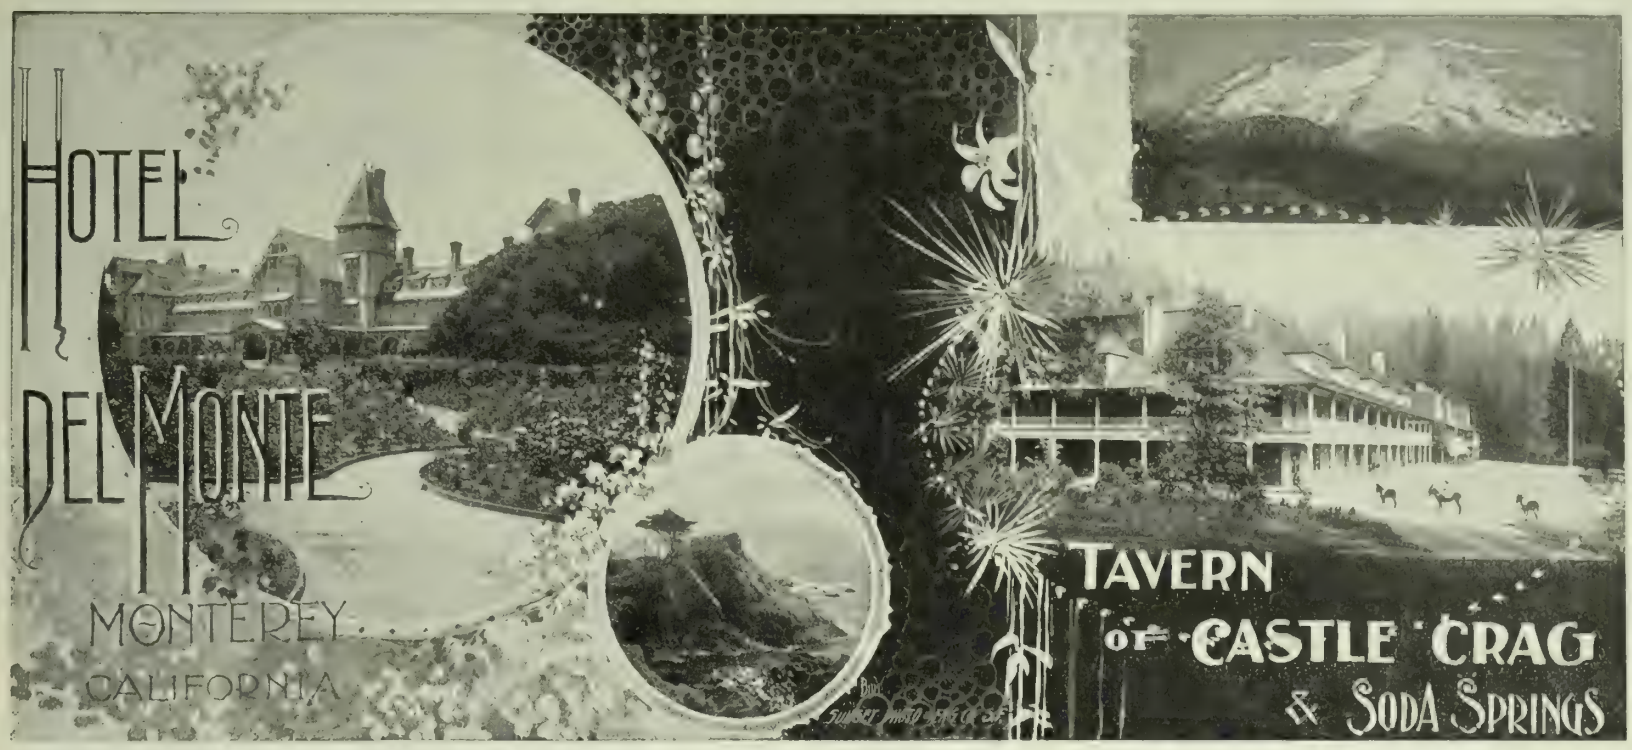
A. K. DAGGETT
Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. P.
Telephone 305

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

Fiestas Carnivals and Summer Outings

A grand round of merrymaking throughout the land

La Fiesta de Los Angeles

Will take place in the Southern Metropolis April 20th, and continue five days. Unique day parade of Spanish caballeros, Chinese with their Great Dragon, Mexican vaqueros, etc. Beautiful electric night parade of California flowers. Great Water Carnival, Floral Parade and Battle of Flowers. Novel Street Carnival at night.

Golden Gate Carnival

To be held in San Francisco during the week commencing May 3d, promises to be the most brilliant festival ever witnessed in the west. Unique features never before introduced, and an unbroken succession of surprises and attractions. California's thrilling and romantic history since the days of '49 will be typified, and many novel creations will exemplify her marvelous industrial development. It is proposed to fix this event permanently in the Golden Gate Calendar.

The season for

Summer Outings

Will soon be here. If your plans are not mature, and you desire more information about the many attractive retreats all over the State, send to the General Passenger Agent of the Southern Pacific Company for circulars and folders describing the Camping and other Resorts of the grand Shasta Region, Castle Crags, Lake Tahoe, and neighboring attractions on the Sierra Summits, Yosemite and the Big Trees, the Santa Cruz Mountains, Lake County and Southern California. REDUCED RATES in many directions. Inquire of Southern Pacific Company agents.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. April 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. April 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. April 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, April 20, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates

S. S. "Mariposa," for Australia, Thursday, April 1, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Peoples Tel. 195 Sunset Tel. 573 Black

THE

Dashaway Stables

130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.

E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

CHOICE WOOLENS

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors

623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel
Bicycle and Golf Suits

BELCHER SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Gold Hill, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 2d day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 54) of twenty-five cents (25c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, San Francisco. Cal. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction: and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the 27th day of April, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. C. L. PERKINS, Secretary.

Office, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, northeast corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 55
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied March 4, 1897
Delinquent in office April 8, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 9, 1897
J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM O. BERG, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, March 18, 1897.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal.; location of works, Storey Co., Nev.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 111) of Ten Cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 23d day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday the 14th day of May, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine st., San Francisco.

OFFICE OF THE HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING COMPANY, room No. 11, San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 311 Pine street, San Francisco.

To the stockholders of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, and to all others concerned: Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the consent, in writing, of the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, duly filed in the office of said company, the principal place of business of said Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company has been changed from room No. 3 of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to room No. 11, in the same building, where the business of said company will be hereafter transacted. This notice is published in accordance with Section 321 of the Civil Code.

Dated March 19, 1897.
By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 6610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. TOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES.; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

A. D. Cheshire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres.
W. O. Macdougall, Secretary

California Undertaking Company

Finest Funeral Parlors in the City

Tel. Main 971 S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Three different waiters at a hotel asked a prim, precise little professor at dinner if he would have soup. A little annoyed, he said to the last waiter who asked the question, "Is it compulsory?" "No, sir," answered the waiter; "I think it's mock-turtle."

Henry Ward Beecher was bantering Bayard Taylor about his poetry in the presence of Eli Perkins. "I wish you would give up writing poetry and stick to lecturing and writing about your travels, Bayard," he said; "your poetry will never make you famous." "I would rather be a third class poet than a first class lecturer," said Taylor, indignantly. "Well," said Beecher, "you ought to be happy then—you're both!"

Miss Maud Powell, the violiniste, on one of her recent tours, sent her violin, a valuable instrument, by express, carefully packed in a stout wooden box, but when she came to claim it, it was missing. She described the appearance of the box to the official, and a sad and sympathetic look came over his face. He sighed and went away, and soon returned with the box held coffinwise, and said in a consoling way, "We had it on the ice!"

During a recent all-night sitting in Tasmania Assembly, Attorney-General Clark took off his boots, and dreamed in his socks on a bench, and Gill, M. H. A., snored heavily beside him. Someone called the chairman's attention to the situation, but he refused to interfere. "The remarks of the honorable member who is asleep," he said tartly, "are as much to the point as those of honorable member who unfortunately remains awake."

During the progress of the famous Beecher-Tilton trial, the celebrated preacher was reading the editorial comments in the "Sun." "I wish Dana would not say such severe things about me," he said. Eli Perkins, who was in the room, remarked that Mr. Dana had recently declared in a lecture that it was right and proper to publish in a newspaper anything the Lord permitted to happen. "Dana goes beyond the Lord," said Beecher. "He publishes things that the Lord didn't permit to happen."

A well-dressed, distinguished-looking gentleman entered the Treasury building in Washington the other day, and politely asked for Secretary Gage. "Can't see him," brusquely returned the private secretary. "He's busy and must not be disturbed," and he relapsed into profound thought, totally ignoring the caller. "May I trouble you to hand Mr. Gage my card when he is at leisure?" politely interrupted the visitor. "Certainly, sir," said the secretary, taking the card, but not looking at it. It occurred to him to do so shortly after the distinguished-looking caller had left, and he read the name, "Garrett A. Hobart." He relapsed once more into thought, and a neat note of explanation and apology was subsequently sent to the Vice-President.

When Colonel John Hay, the new Ambassador to England, was private secretary to Lincoln, a public man of some note acted rather offensively to the President, and he determined to write him a letter containing a piece of his mind. He told the President of his intention. "That's right," said Lincoln; "do so; give it to him; write out just what you think." Hay wrote the letter, brought it to the President, and read it aloud. From time to time Mr. Lincoln interrupted with "Good! Good! That fixes him!" Hay was delighted with the success of his scheme. "He will get the letter to-morrow morning," he said, when he finished; "we will see what he has to say in reply." "But," returned the President, "you don't intend to mail this letter? I wanted you to write it out, because it helps one to ease his feelings, but you must not think of sending it. You would only make the man mad without doing good to yourself or the administration." Of course the letter was never sent.

"I've heard a good deal about coercion," said the man with a heavy mustache and a big gold watch chain, as he leaned over the desk of a Washington hotel. "But it's my opinion that the public in general don't know what coercion is. Just wait till you get women in politics, then you'll find out something about it." "Have you ever had any experience with women in politics?" inquired the clerk. "Not with women in politics, but I've just had experience with a woman in business which shows how quick the sex is in recognizing an advantage and how heartless it can be in making use of it. I run a dime museum. One of my chief attractions is a bearded lady. About two weeks ago her husband came to me and said that she wanted some new costumes; that she was tired of trying to keep up appearances with her old ones. I just laughed at him, but he assured me that she was in earnest. I told him to tell his wife that we weren't paying her milliner's bills. He went away, and came back with the message that she wasn't going to be put off; that she wanted three new dresses, and that she wanted 'em made by the most expensive modiste in town. 'What'll she do if she doesn't get 'em?' I asked. 'She's awfully set in her own way,' he answered; 'I shouldn't be surprised if she resigned right off.' I laughed at him again and told him that I had a contract with her for the season, which it would cost her more to break than she could earn in six months." "That ought to have settled it," the clerk remarked. "It didn't, though. In less than ten minutes he came back to my office on a run. 'You've got to compromise, somehow,' he said. 'You've always been a friend of mine, and I don't want to see you get the worst of it.' 'She can't get around that contract,' I answered, beginning to feel a little apprehensive. 'She isn't going to try to. She says she'll stay her time out and appear every afternoon and night, as she agreed to. But when I left she had her things on, and you'll have to run if you want to catch her; by this time she's half way to the barber shop—she's going to get shaved!'"

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Mateo and Cottages

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A charming resort, both winter and summer. A pleasant forty-minutes' ride by rail from San Francisco, with frequent train-service.

Delightful surroundings and comparative freedom from fog, together with all essentials to the comfort and pleasure of the guests, combine to recommend Hotel Mateo to those who appreciate such advantages.

Illustrated descriptive souvenir sent upon application. F. A. SHEPARD, Manager.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY

E. L. G. STEELE & CO.

208 California St., San Francisco

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

Thoerner & Roesli

FLORISTS

Choice Cut Flowers and Plants
Funeral Designs

Also Artistic Designs made of Imported, Dry, Natural Flowers for Export Purposes a specialty

809 Larkin Street

BETWEEN GEARY AND O'FARRELL, SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

. . ALSO . .

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company . . Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The California Derby, by Benedict — The Great Relay, Illustrated

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

VOL XVI. No. 15 — SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 10, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS.

HOW THE TOWN LOOKS FROM THE SPRECKELS CUPOLA

A curios photograph of Market street, taken from a platform on the corner turret, 280 feet above the pavement, by E. W. Jensen

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 10, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2–3 |
| The Bicycle Relay Race | 4 |
| The Red House: by Gelett Burgess | 5 |
| The California Derby: by Benedict | 6 |
| Race-Track Management | 6 |
| Things and People: by Boswell Jr. | 6 |
| An End to the "Lark"; by A. Jeune | 8 |
| The Pennsylvania Railway's President | 8 |
| An Eccentric Kaiser | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| Career of the Girl with the Diamond Tooth | 11 |
| Mrs. Atherton's Novel: a Review | 12 |
| The Theatres | 13 |
| Racing: by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

A SPECTACULAR GOVERNOR.

The gubernatorial chair of this State has never before had its upholstery weighted down with such a tinseled, spectacular and altogether uncertain being as Mr. Budd. A kaleidoscope is not less fixed in its revolving effects than is the attitude of this chief magistrate of our public affairs. He shifts his opinion and changes his friends as frequently as he does his hotels in San Francisco, and perhaps for reasons quite as obvious. An examination of the legislative measures through which Mr. Budd has run the blue pencil of gubernatorial disapproval is interesting and instructive. He signed the bills which continued the salaries of the members of the State Bureau of Highways, but strangely enough vetoed all the legislation that authorized the Bureau to perform any work or accomplish any material good. He vetoed the claim of Jose Ramon Pico for some eight thousand dollars, which had received the approval of several Legislatures and which Pico declares the Governor had promised to sign. Yet he approved the claim of Dennis Jordan for sixty thousand dollars. Pico is a picturesque but broken-down veteran, who, during the early days of the rebellion, when wealthy and fired with patriotism, organized two companies of soldiers at his own expense and took them to the front to battle for the Union. Until poverty came upon him he never thought of making any request upon the State for the refunding of this money. Jordan is an ex-contractor with a claim having merit, doubtless, but not in any way superior to that of Pico's. As a member of the Board of Examiners, our Governor strongly and insistently advocated the notorious coyote scalp claims, concerning which there has latterly been so much scandal. He declared before the Board of Examiners that the State was bound in honor to pay these claims and that they were, in point of fact, judgments against the State; yet the bill which authorized the payment of these bounties was pocketed by the Governor. He approved the appropriation of one hundred and ten thousand dollars to the Mendocino Asylum, and that of fifty-six thousand dollars to the Preston School; yet he vetoed the appropriation of forty thousand dollars for the printing of the State series of public school books, and by this latter act has contributed to the delight of the book-ring that has for years been attempting to break down our admirable system of furnishing school books at bare cost. But this was not all. The Governor had a personal quarrel with the State Printer—a circumstance, by the way, that is calculated to bestow a clean bill of health upon the latter officer. To wreak his spite and hatred upon the Republican State Printer, who refused to permit a Democratic Governor to run his office and dictate his appointments, Mr. Budd closed down the whole establishment by vetoing the appropriation necessary to sustain the State Printing Office. This was a blow, not only to the public schools and to the State at large, but was damaging to labor as well, and turned many printers and book-binders out of employment. We do not deny to the Governor the right to quarrel with those whom he sees fit to place under the ban of his displeasure, but it is little short of criminal that he should be allowed to punish the State, disrupt its affairs and close our public institutions simply to work out his spite and malice towards a public officer.

SHOULD JUDGES FILE DISSENTING OPINIONS?

For the second time within a brief space the Supreme Court of the United States has been hopelessly divided on a grave and far-reaching question of the law. The country has been given additional evidence that vagueness and uncertainty enter largely into our jurisprudence, and license has been granted to defeated litigants to question and doubt the wisdom of our courts. The law is not an exact science, but to the mind of the thoughtful layman it seems as inexplicable as it is unfortunate that it should not be exact enough to permit the Judges of our courts of last resort to at least approximate the harmonious in their conclusions. A division of a court, wherein the voice of one member operates to portion out a judgment favorable to the appellant or respondent, is neither a healthy nor a desirable thing. It tends to strip from the judiciary its impersonality and from the law its sacredness, the two chief attributes that give dignity to our courts and induce the defeated litigant to bow in silence to their decrees. A dissenting opinion, even though saturated with wisdom, subserves no good purpose in a court of last resort. Speaking from a point of view purely ethical, such dissenting opinion should be discouraged, if not prohibited. The law of the land is established when a court of last resort files its conclusions. The dissenting opinion of an associate judge or justice is merely a criticism leveled at established law, and is a mischief-breeding device which, even though not calculated so to do, tends to break down and destroy that abundant faith and confidence that should abide with the people. To whom is such a dissenting opinion directed? To whom does it make appeal? Surely to no higher power, for than our Supreme Court there is no higher tribunal.

The dissenting opinion is a legal document written by an associate justice to point out the weakness, the shortcomings, the inadequacy and the wrongfulness of the prevailing opinion of the court, which, notwithstanding the dissent, is the declared law of the land. The effect of such an opinion is to break down public confidence in the wisdom and justice, and perhaps in the integrity, of the associates of the dissenter. It is an appeal, as we have said, not to an appellate court which may reverse or modify the prevailing judgment, but it is directed to the bar and to the people at large. No man who will give the subject a moment's thought will deny that this practice has a tendency to encourage a disrespect for our judiciary and the judgment of our courts. It is upon the impersonal character of the judiciary and the approximate certainty of the law that much depends. A five to four decision, which is just as binding and quite as conclusive upon the litigant and public generally as a unanimous judgment of the court, is destructive, not only of certainty, but of impersonality. Such opinions are becoming to be regarded merely as the views of Jones, Smith, Black, White and Robinson, against the views of Green, Brown, Doe and Roe. Sixty millions of people are expected to bow their heads in unmurmuring submission to the decrees of our Federal Supreme Court, and for the well-being and for the reputation of that august body it would be infinitely better if dissent were signified simply by a line saying, "I dissent," or "Judge ——— does not participate in this opinion." If there is any justification for the dissenting opinion in our higher courts, we should like to hear it.

THE NEWSPAPER MONOPOLY.

There are no more eloquent or insistent opponents of monopoly than our good friends of the daily press. One cries "Down with the Sugar Trust," another vents itself against the Whisky Trust, and still others against railroads, water companies and other unfortunate institutions, which have come under the ban of the editor's displeasure which it has proved profitable to abuse. And the people, dear trustful people, applaud these sonorous editorials and call-to-arms headlines of the newspaper, uttering praise by interview and letter for these "champions of the people's cause." It is a very happy combination our press has established. "Down with monopoly," shouts the daily paper. "Hurrah for the daily paper that is down on monopoly," shouts the mob. The paper's circulation booms and the proprietor cynically chuckles at this gullibility of his beloved fellow citizens.

While the different papers have their different monopolies to declaim against (and part of every working newspaper plant to-day is a rich and ripe monopoly to attack), they are all silent, unanimously so, on one of the greatest monopolies of the day, one that probably causes the American people quite as much suffering as any other—the newspaper monopoly. They keep it to themselves, these good friends of the people, that there is a little combine between all the daily papers of the land by which it is practically made impossible for competitors to come into the newspaper field.

No one newspaper can afford to gather the news of the world for itself. Hence arises necessity for association or alliance in the newsgetting business. Out of very small beginnings in this work have developed the great press associations composed of the newspapers now in existence. Thus it comes about that the newspapers that are hold in the hollows of their hands the fates of their communities as to newspaper competition. The newspapers of San Francisco can say whether they will permit a rival in the field or not. The Portland "Oregonian" has kept its great field to itself, notwithstanding its remarkable development, by holding the press facilities. Rivals have risen out of the ambitions of men opposed by the "Oregonian," out of the desire of the Democrats of Oregon for an organ, out of the felt need of Portland for a more progressive newspaper, but all have gone down, because the "Oregonian" held the press franchises, which are to-day a newspaper's breath and blood. If one man were rich enough to take to himself all the morning papers of San Francisco he could do this same thing, and give us as much or as little of a newspaper as he pleased. As it is if Mr. Fitch or Mr. Tevis or Mr. Crocker wished to start a new daily paper as a business scheme, he would find himself unable to secure a franchise for this city without the consent of the proprietors of the papers now established. And if he should attempt to make a newspaper without such press service he would be compelled to spend thousands of dollars for the same matter which costs his rivals but hundreds—a business plan which would hardly commend itself to any man of money. So it results that control of franchise carries with it a newspaper monopoly.

A few days ago Mr. Depew was interviewed as to the growth of trusts, monopolies and great industrial combines in the United States. He referred them all to the one cause—ability at first to secure a special rate over some railroad and ability in the end to compel special rates over all. This frank statement by such an authority is but an echo of the charge made last year by President Stickney of one of the great Western roads, and before that elaborately developed in Mr. Lloyd's book upon the growth of the Standard Oil Company. Along parallel lines, as we have seen, has come about the development of a newspaper monopoly. The business of the newspaper is to give news. If they can combine and own the machinery by which this news is gathered and sell solely to themselves they need have little to fear from the coming up of new papers.

The newspaper has simply grown with the times. Combination is the spirit of the day. It is so in all industries and in nearly all professions, even in the law. In the great cities of the East now there are but few small firms. The young lawyer no longer thinks of hanging out his own shingle. He enters the office of Smith, Jones, Thompson, Groves & Tompkins, and becomes one of forty clerks. And he is gray haired and fifty before his name becomes tail to a firm name. This same tendency in the law is showing itself in San Francisco.

Horace Greeley started the New York "Tribune" on a few cases of type and his own brains. He made a great paper. But let Horace Greeley attempt to start a newspaper in New York to-day—how long would it take him to find out that things are not now as they were in the forties. It may have been noticed that when a W. R. Hearst or a Joseph Pulitzer goes to New York now to engage in the newspaper business he doesn't start a paper of his own. He buys one already in existence, even though, like the "World" or the "Journal," it is a losing property. The franchises are valuable; indeed, they are essential.

The result of such a situation in the newspaper business is that having a monopoly the newspapers can do as they agree between each other. No matter how they fight one another in their columns the long-headed proprietors get together on policy affecting all. If any one seeks to break into the fold they know that they are possessed of a weapon that will kill him. People are compelled to buy newspapers of a character they despise because there are none other, and can be none other until the present owners please. The newspapers may fall to the most insulting and scurrilous personality, or sink to filling their columns with filth, and there can be nothing done but idly to protest. No effectual opposition can be established.

We call the attention of our big brethren of the dailies to this little oversight of theirs, trusting that in the discussion of the combinations of the big to crush out the little they will give us the benefit of their own experience. Possibly some of them will be as frank as President Depew or President Stickney. And it may be that they will appreciate that it is not easy to resist the current of the business world, which rushes for combination of hands and the consolidation of wealth. At any rate, if they will explain how the modern newspaper is run we think it will not be difficult for the people to understand that there must be some reason for monopoly whenever the most earnest anti-monopolists in theory are forced to become monopolists in practice.

SOMETHING FOR OUR MERCHANTS TO CONSIDER.

That portion of the press and public which find pleasure in advocating arbitrary reductions in transportation rates to interior points have an opportunity of assisting to secure rate concessions in a legitimate manner if they see fit to go about it. It is a fundamental rule in the transportation business that the volume of traffic determines the rate. Indeed, in mercantile life the same rule obtains. It is a primary rule of trade, and practically states the difference between a wholesale and a retail business. Any factor that operates to diminish the volume of freight passing over the lines of railway entering San Francisco also operates to diminish the earnings of those lines, and to that extent lessens the probabilities of reduced railway rates. The reverse of this is also true. To increase the volume of traffic is to multiply the chances of rate reductions. So far the proposition is as simple as a course in a kindergarten.

It would be nonsensical to expect our merchants to increase the volume of their Eastern shipments without a correspondingly increased public demand, simply to work a reduction of railroad rates; but with little trouble to themselves they might join in an effort to influence the McKinley administration to withdraw the privileges extended by this Government to the Canadian Pacific railroad, and eliminate that corporation from the domestic carrying trade. If this could be done the tonnage of our American transcontinental railways would increase surprisingly. Such an increase would not result in reduced overland rates, for those rates are fixed by other considerations and are uniform on every transcontinental line, no matter what route you may select. But San Francisco's best interests are not promoted by a low overland rate. It is to our interest—manufacturing and commercial—to secure as reasonably low local rates to interior points as may be possible. And an increased volume of overland traffic might assist to this end. Fortunately for us, the lines of railroad that gridiron our State, many of which are constructed in advance of State development, are all in the ownership or under the control of the management that operates our transcontinental lines, and the benefits coming to a common treasury from an increased volume of overland traffic might easily be applied and made to inure to the benefit of local traffic.

The New York "Sun," in a recent editorial, directs attention to the baleful influence exerted upon the traffic of American railways by the bonding privileges and treasury regulations under which the Canadian corporation is permitted to engage in the interstate carrying trade along our northern border without being subject to the operation of the interstate commerce law. Mr. Halliday, a well-known and reputable citizen of this city, in an article upon the "Commercial Decline of San Francisco," written for "The Wave" in February, 1895, very clearly pointed out the havoc to our commerce wrought by this foreign institution. The Canadian railway was built for a political object and is maintained for military strategic purposes. It is an institution of the English Government, running entirely across the continent, with feeders pushing down into the business centers of the United States and carrying, independent of our regulative laws, a very large proportion of American domestic freight. The United States statute books are adorned with some very stringent provisions which prohibit foreign ship-bottoms from engaging in domestic trade. Indeed, the privileges at present vouchsafed the Canadian railway are expressly contrary to the declared policy of our Government. If it is a good thing to permit the Canadian railway to indulge in domestic commerce at the expense of the American common carrier, why is it not an equally good thing to permit foreign vessels to engage in the same trade and transport freight between San Francisco and Portland? There is no difference in the principle involved. The Canadian railway is merely an adjunct of the British war department. It is a military picket line established along the entire length of our northern boundary. It would be a valuable institution to that Government and a threatening one to this in case of hostilities between England or Canada and America. It was in recognition of its value for war purposes that its constructon was suggested and encouraged. Its subsidies are simply enormous. It received from the Government of Canada one hundred and five million dollars in cash or equivalent, and one hundred and ten million dollars in guaranteed securities. It has a land grant of twenty-five millions of acres, which is exempt from taxation for twenty years. It has mail contracts amounting to eight hundred thousand dollars, and controls five thousand and five hundred miles of railway, and is directly under the patronage of our neighbor, Canada. These governmental concessions enable this foreign road to enter into a lively competition for domestic freight to the disadvantage of American enterprise, and at the same time maintain an institution that may one day serve as an enemy to something besides our commerce.

But besides stripping from our American railways this domestic carrying trade, this same great institution is industriously at work diverting from San Francisco our commerce with the Orient and the Australias. It has established a line of steamers to Australia and the Sandwich Islands in competition with the Spreckels lines, and has established another to China and Japan in competition with the Pacific Mail and the Occidental and Oriental companies. The maintenance of these lines as part of the Canadian railway can only operate to the commercial injury of San Francisco, and rob it of trade running into the millions annually, and yet, strangely enough, our merchants sit supinely by and permit the mischief to continue. Here is an opportunity for an agitation along practical lines, and we offer the suggestion to our merchants, curious to see if it will result in the lifting of a single hand.

Taking up our commercial interests from another point of view. There appears to be no united or general movement in connection with the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty. San Francisco has over three millions of export trade annually with the Sandwich Islands. History is being made to-day that may result in cutting that trade in two, and yet there is no evidence of activity among the hundreds of merchants who take profit from its existence. Something is needed in our local mercantile life. Some leader, some general manager, a man who will be alive to trade possibilities, whose duty it should be to outline plans of commercial campaign, and see to it that the commercial side of our life is stirred to activity along broad lines that will accomplish permanent and beneficial results.

THE ANTAGONISTIC SOUTH.

The Los Angeles "Times" insists on dinning into our unwilling and unbelieving ears the statement that the people of its section of the State are too busy and too prosperous to have either the time or the inclination to entertain or manifest antagonism toward the northern part of the State. It dismisses the subject with the self-satisfied and off-hand assurance that this antagonism of the South is a "bogie man" which we have conjured up by aid of certain "irresponsible" correspondents from that end of the State, who, being personally "unfortunate," have taught themselves to believe that there is nothing good south of Tehachapi. We have received a letter this week from another one of these "unfortunate" and "irresponsible" correspondents, which is published in another column. The author of the communication indicates, as has every other correspondent from Los Angeles writing upon this subject, that the people of the Southland are neither too busy nor too prosperous to malign the State north of Tehachapi. Indeed, these gentlemen all seem to agree that our very "prosperous and industrious" neighbors owe their prosperity largely to industrious misrepresentation of the North. We would hesitate to assume the attitude we have taken upon this subject if our only authority for so doing was the mere statement of correspondents. The knowledge we have obtained is peculiarly our own, for we have tested and proved the existence of that feeling in a recent visit to Los Angeles. The testimony of our correspondents is only cumulative evidence. Stick a pin in the ordinary Los Angeleno, and he bleeds antagonism for the North. Approach one of our Southlanders in the guise of a stranger in search of information, and manifest any inquisitiveness as to the resources of the North, or express an inclination to go thither in search of a home, and you will be astounded. From the tongue of the ordinary denizen of our south county there will roll off as well rounde and complete a series of willful misstatements, outrageous lies, and gorgeous inventions concerning the climatic and commercial conditions north of Tehachapi as were ever invented by Baron Munchausen. When you go south try this experiment upon our southern neighbors, test it for yourself, and nothing but the horror of a street brawl will restrain the inclination to clutch the lying rascal by the throat and choke the falsehood back into his splenetic gland. The stomach of the South holds an irritating substance, for which our contemporary should supply a cathartic. Let it institute an investigation, and it will doscover, not a "bogie man" conjured up by irresponsible correspondents, but a tangible something which needs discouragement rather rather than defense. It is a mischief-breeder, not only to the South, but to the North as well. If a similar sentiment existed here against our Southland, The Wave would cheerfully give it the attention it deserved. Why should our contemporary dally with the subject?

The following communication on the antagonistic South has been received from Los Angeles. Another communication, which is not published, is purely a personal attack upon the proprietor of the Los Angeles "Times." The enemies of Mr. Otis will have to find some other channel through which to vent their feelings, and in this connection we assure our southern readers that personal feeling is absent from our strictures on the South. There is a bad feeling down there, which we hope by exploiting to minimize. Already there are signs of improvement, but we hope for more still:

To the Editor of the "Wave": Sir: I have read your comments as to the attitude of people in the Los Angeles region in misrepresenting the upper part of California, likewise the editorials in the "Times" of that city condemning the motives of your paper, and sneering at the correspondents and informants as men who "could not make a living in the lower part of the State." I have an idea that the charge may be true in some instances. I have been residing at Los Angeles, having been induced to locate there instead of coming northward, as I originally intended. I have been able to make a living there, and presume I could continue to do so, though it would be no reflection on my ability or industry should I get left or pushed aside in the eager scramble for the places when there are too few for all. Most of the employed are practically working for their board and clothes, and many for even less, cheap though commodities and living are. The employed are not individually or collectively able to command higher pay, because there are hordes of applicants waiting for every position, regardless of the amount of compensation.

A large proportion of the farms are for sale, because they were bought on boom valuations, and as prices of products have declined, there is either too much money invested or the debt is a burden because of interest. These owners echo the cry of real estate agents that the sun rises and sets in Southern California, albeit many of them would hasten eastward if they could sell out. Few would come to Northern California, for they have been misinformed concerning this section, and believe what they utter against it to homeseekers. It takes not only hard work, but capital, to succeed in orange, olive or lemon-growing, and in other specialties, and as most men generally run short of either money or energy, there are not a few disappointed, unable to make a living, and ready to sneer at the entire State. Take it in the city. The lodging-houses and furnished rooms hold thousands of people who live on the oil-stove scale for ten or fifteen cents per day with their vanishing funds, or with remittances from relatives, or from eastern homes rented to others. Some are kept from leaving by climatic attractions, and some because they have burned their bridges behind them, or they might go home, as the "Times" loftily advises them to do. This class of people may have been thrifty all of their lives—industrious and ready to grasp any promise of employment—but it avails them naught if there are too few opportunities to go around. It is their persistence that forces down the compensation of those who are employed. They are also the victims of scores of keepers of lodging-houses, restaurants, drug stores, saloons, delicacy stores, and other places that are established and conducted mainly with a view to selling, for a part cash payment, and reverting to the original owners, thus going through the process time and time again. The "Times" fattens on advertisements of this character. The columns teem with ads of fake business opportunities, and when an eastern man has bit, gone through the mill, and is moneyless and out of work, he becomes one of these gentlemen who cannot make a living. The city is full of discontented men, unable to make a living—doctors, lawyers, laborers—many unwilling to admit their real condition, or to own up to their reasons for hanging on, but all are ready to say that there is nothing good above Tehachapi, because they have heard that song before, and since coming to California, and being secretly disappointed in their hopes of success in the "garden spot," they decry the balance of the State to give vent to their energy. It would not be popular to condemn the Sunny South, but it is to denounce Sacramento and San Francisco.

From inquiries and knowledge I can safely assert that in Los Angeles, barbers, clerks, drivers, cooks, cashiers, salesmen and all classes of employees receive from 25 to 50 per cent less pay than they do in any northern town or city. I have obtained facts and figures, but will take space only to make the above general assertion, except that I will cite one class of work that is poorly paid, though that is no worse off than the others where brainwork is required. I refer to newspaper work. In order to be sure of my ground, I went to an active, up-to-date reporter who is my friend. I chose to go into details in this line because I wished to know how generous the paper was with its people when it attacked "the man who cannot make a living." The "Times" is the one successful paper in the city. When one of the thousand luckless lawyers wishes to sell his books, the "Times" takes toll. When one of the ninety drugstores wishes to sell out for "part cash," it throws out its line into the pool from the "Times" deck. The "Times" has severed all relations with the Typographical Union so that it may pick up hungry printers, lured westward, who ignore union prices. It pays reporters and staff from twenty to fifty per cent less than is obtained by their equals in northern places. There are a score of applicants waiting for employment at the terms offered, and there might be just as many waiting if the rates were put lower. The afternoon papers, of course, pay less, one daily setting the limit at $10 per week, regardless of a man's ability and past experience as editorial or local writer, while some of the employees get $5. The "Times" values its plant at $250,000, in a sworn statement, and the editor's property at $100,000. His wife, daughters, and a son-in-law are, to the exclusion of some of those unable to prosper, on the pay-roll of the stock company of what a reporter facetiously termed this "great family paper." Being so well fixed to make a living, the editor has only a fling for the immigrant who cannot, and hurls anathemas upon the unfortunate who dares blame the country or prevailing conditions, or hints that there is a better land, far, far away. The fact is, that newspapermen, as well as all classes of people, "including a few hack-drivers and real estate sharks," of which "few" is hardly the word, habitually talk down Northern California—except a small number of citizens who have drifted there from the upper section. They are usually found oyal to their former homes. EXPERIENCE.

THE BICYCLE RELAY RACE

Bay City Wheelmen Achieve the Varney Grail.

For the third successive year the California century bicycle relay race has been won by the Bay City Wheelmen, and the Varney cup is now the undisputable property of the club. The third race was run last Sunday over the one hundred mile route down the peninsula to San Jose and up the further side of the bay to Alameda. It was an exciting race, beset with hardships and mishaps throughout its course, but was won only by the indomitable pluck of the victorious club against what seemed a disastrous handicap at the start.

The trophy must, under the rules governing the competitions, be won thrice before it can become the permanent property of its owner. The Bay Citys won in 1895 with a record of 4h., 56m., 47s.; in 1896 it covered the same course in 4h., 56m., 12 3-5s., and last week it cut down the time to 4h., 49m., 39s., on a slightly different track.

The race was conceded to lie between the Olympic Club Wheelmen and Bay City Wheelmen of this city. the young giants of the Acme and Reliance Clubs of Oakland and the Garden City Cyclers of San Jose. But just for true sportsmanship, and to keep up the interest, the Alameda Cyclers, California Cycling Club, Capital City Wheelmen of Sacramento, the Imperial Cycling Club and the San Francisco Road Club sent in their teams and fought their best all the distance.

Promptly at nine o'clock the ten men who were to ride the first relay were instructed to line up by Starter John F. McGlynn. Owing to the immense crowd around the starting point, at Tenth and Market streets, it was some little time before a space could be cleared sufficiently wide to allow each man a fair start, but at ten minutes past nine everything was in readiness and he gave them the word to go. The course lay down Market street one block to Ninth street, and each man was desirous of reaching the corner first, so as to lead on the ride down the Ninth-street cable slot as far as Folsom street.

The sharp turn was safely made, an immense crowd of spectators being present at this point to see the men pass. Out the asphalted boulevard the men flew along, Davidson and Hardenbrook setting most of the pace. Another turn was made at Twenty-fifth street, and here the first accident of the race occurred—Davidson's rear tire went flat from a puncture, and he soon found himself riding on the rim of the wheel and losing ground at every turn of the pedals. At the Potrero avenue turn he secured the loan of another wheel from a boy standing by and was soon chasing hotly after the bunch, now some distance ahead of him. Scott of the Acmes meanwhile had also a puncture, and suffered two more and rode three strange wheels before he finished his relay. Davidson punctured again, got another wheel from a clubmate close at hand, pulled the handlebars out of that one on the Six-mile hill, got another wheel from John Leavitt, whom the Bay Citys had stationed on the hill for just such an emergency, and again punctured that before he finished.

In the second relay Noonan and Coulter collided, and Curtis, the Alameda athlete, met disaster and was replaced by his trailer. The Olympic rider slipped and smashed his wheel at the beginning of the third relay, but jumped upon his predecessor's machine and finished only one second behind the fastest messenger.

The remainder of the history is but a record of minor accidents, and a hard race ridden pluckily in spite of all obstacles. Davidson of the Bay Citys was the most unfortunate of all, breaking four wheels on the first relay, that includes the dreaded "six-mile hill." This handicap could not have been made up but for the good work done by the Noonan brothers in the second and third relays, and Ben Noonan shares the honors with Krafts for the hard pace he set in the third, which he finished sixty yards ahead of his competitors.

When it is remembered that there were 100 riders in that race, with one hundred trailers and helpers, judges and timekeepers innumerable, an idea may be gained of the excitement on foot and a-wheel along the course.

The scene on Central Avenue in Alameda, across which was stretched the tape marking the finish of the race was a repetition of that of former years, but with the exception that there was a far greater crowd there to welcome the athletes who pedaled the last ten-mile relay, and far more excitement and enthusiasm than ever.

For blocks and blocks along the avenue—in fact, throughout the entire last mile of the course—the sidewalks were black with spectators, and finally the throng reached such proportions that the walks would no longer provide the necessary room for the waiting thousands, and they began to encroach upon the avenue, despite the fact that it had been stoutly barricaded with ropes and was patrolled by specially appointed marshals and the Alameda police.

The critical portion of the run lay in the ninth relay, a hard stretch from Alvarado to San Lorenzo, where in the two last races Emil Ulbrecht of Los Angeles has saved the day for the Bay City Club. This division was ridden by C. A. Krafts, who was easily the hero of the struggle. Krafts is considered one of the greatest unpaced roadsters in the country, and his phenomenal work last Sunday warranted the estimation in which he was held. The Bay City, Olympic and Reliance riders were only twenty-five seconds apart at the beginning of the fight, but Krafts' terrific spurt after passing Alvarado opened a gap that the rivals could not make up, and Kenna, with the two-minute lead presented him by his doughty partner, sailed up the homestretch, banging in with a collapsed wheel.

There was a wild scene when this athlete crossed the tape just as one of the pedals snapped from his wheel and the machine itself collapsed. Kenna did not fall. He cleverly disengaged himself from the wreck and delivered Mayor Phelan's letter—the document that had been carried over the century circuit—to Chairman Foederer of the Alameda Board of Trustees. Had Kenna been compelled to ride another hundred yards he could not have finished without an accident.

The wonder is that he ever got home on that wheel. Two miles from the tape his rear tire flattened and he was compelled to ride on the rim. Then one of the pedals loosened and the whole machine began to wobble; but he kept on as long as he could keep his balance on the machine.

Wing of the Olympic Club was next to Kenna in the last relay, and crossed the tape within a few seconds of two minutes behind the Bay City man. Bates of the Reliance Club came in third, three minutes behind Wing; Decker of the Acme Club was fourth and right on the heels of Bates. The representatives of the other contesting clubs came straggling in during the succeeding eight minutes. The color-bearer of the Alameda Cyclers was the only one who did not finish.

The minor interest centered in the struggle between the Acme and Reliance Clubs, the rival Oakland organizations. Bates succeeded in landing the Reliance packet in third place by a short length, and made his club's showing the surprise of the day.

So it was the race was lost and won—six minutes and thirty-three seconds better than ever before. The fastest time made by any rider in a relay cannot be accurately told, because the third relay is ten and one-half miles and the tenth only nine and one-half. But E. J. Smith of the Acmes has the credit of the fastest ten-mile relay—the fifth, into San Jose—which he negotiated in the snapping good time of 25 minutes and 52 seconds.

But it's Krafts and the Noonans of whom the tales are told—and the trophy is Bay City's for ever and a day.

BAY CITY WHEELMEN'S VICTORIOUS RIDERS
Boye & Habenicht, photographers

START OF THE 100-MILE RELAY RACE AT TENTH AND MARKET STREETS

M. Stanislas Meunier, the French geologist, has advanced a theory in regard to the two mysteries connected with the planet Mars, the nature of the so-called "canals" and the phenomenon of duplication. The strange dark lines which criss-cross the orange-colored area of the planet with geometrical regularity, and which have a breadth of about thirty or forty miles, are sometimes numerous and distinct, while at other times few and faint. A large number of canals which have once been observed, but were utterly invisible a few years later, have subsequently been seen again in precisely the same place as before. The appearance of a second line, of the same general character as the first, parallel therewith, and at least seventy-five or a hundred miles away, is of infrequent occurrence, and the duration of the spectacle is comparatively limited. M. Meunier's theory, briefly stated, is that the second line is a shadow, reflected from the surface of the real canal upon a translucent cloud sheet suspended above the surface of the planet. And in support of this hypothesis he is able to cite a series of laboratory experiments.

It has been found that myopia, or nearsightedness, may be cured. This effect is to be obtained by an operation upon the eye, in which a cataract is artificially created by puncturing the crystalline lens, and after this has been done extracting the lens themselves. This will enable the patient to see long distances without the aid of glasses. The dangers accompanying the operation are so slight as to need scarcely any consideration. It offers no difficulties to the physician and very little inconvenience to the patient. The famous scientist, Professor Fukala of the University of Vienna has made numerous and successful experiments with different cases of myopia on patients of every age and sex, and unhesitatingly recommends the operation.

THE RED HOUSE

A Midnight Colloquy on Happiness in the Latin Quarter.

The black, noisome alley that climbs out of Broadway near the "Buon Gusto" and the "Fior d'Italia," and stealthily threads the shadows cast by the gloomy wall of the County Jail, debouches into the slimy passage wherein is hidden the "Red House." Here is the outpost of Decency, lying hugger-mugger in the very sink of the town, fallen below even the disrepute of the Quarter.

It is a narrow way, shut in by low, hollow-eyed houses, unregenerate of aspect, decrepit with premature old age, slatternly of door and window, marred and pocked with evil use, foul under foot and over head, peopled with beggars, tongued with foreign curses — a slinking haunt of the human jetsam of the town — gone down through spending to saving, through saving to scrimping, through scrimping to starving, through starving into the shelter of the Red House, to snatch a moment's respite before the end. Here is the insecure haven of the castaway, for whose meagre salvage a dark-browed owner bandies with pauper derelicts for the few cents that their want has spared them. Here, for a nickel spent, one may drown sorrow for a while in a tin pint-pot of rancid wine. A frugal spendthrift may nurse the potion all afternoon, and put out the fire that is left in him, strangling the few wild memories in sour grape juice. On the morrow the fog of fears has closed in again, and the gift of stale oblivion must be renewed at what price Fortune charges.

Misery pinches in Hinckley street. Behind scurvy doors the last wail of dying manhood sounds in one's fancy as from far away — far as the shores of Youth — hidden in the smoke of passion — over seas of death-in-life, sordid, unclean, hopeless, tainted with despair. Why listen to its echo, when for a nickel one may dream torpidly for an hour — a smack of the dry lips, and the squalid, filthy street opens — one's arms are untied and one may swim forth for a while into the Sea of the Impossible, and fend warily with the things that never were.

In the evening mist, Hinckley street is blurred, mysterious — a reach of lane, groping upward toward the Hill. It is thick with vapors; it is tense with restless silences; a little purlieu of despair. Half way up — one splotch of yellow light—the bleared windows of the Red House. And here, one night, I came with my friend, bent on no morbid inquisition, neither. We had gone from place to place in the Quarter, touching elbows with lights-o'-love and Bohemian. We had chaffed the pavement stragglards and jostled the night-wasters, eddying with the currents of humanity that drifted hither and yonder along the Coast. Here was a people living out its simple life, candid and unashamed. And so we made our way to the Red House as a last resort.

A knock; and then two tumbling steps down into a crazy, unclean room. Rotting wreaths of smoke wavered, clinging to the papered ceiling. A sanded floor rasped the soles of our shoes. There were those here who had been men. A few looked up as we entered, and stared doggedly. At a near table were two that sipped their tin measures of wine silently, with more than one look cast over their shoulders at our intrusion. We, too, were silent, for the air was thick and sodden. It was a room for whispers, save when the turn of a card forced an oath, or the surly bubble of some feud boiled into an instant strife. There have been mad times in the Red House. It is not so sleepy of a Saturday night, when there are coins loose, and the raw-boned Swede at the bar hardens for the clinch that is imminent.

We hitched our stools toward the men by the window, and answered a surly welcome. We clinked tins with them, and played nervously for their confidence. By degrees the men thawed and accepted us. There was an Irish sailor there who had buffeted every misfortune that man and the elements could send. He had a long yarn of tropic horrors, of rape, mutiny, desertion, long peril in the sea, the shark's clutch ashore on the water-front, where Jack turns child again and is fooled out of his wage at every landing. He had broken across the Isthmus, and fought the fever barefooted. Fate had wantoned with him since his birth, and had left him empty of all save rage against the wreck of his hopes that he broke his shins on at every play for a new deal.

The mood was on us both for a bargain with these souls. Here was a nut to crack, with small hope for meat inside, but it was worth trying. My friend is of the artist's temperament, and the scene swayed him like the page of a tale. He was himself a strange figure on that stage — a man to be remembered anywhere, but he was more than usually picturesque set in that group like Prince Florizel in the waterside bar.

"Gentlemen," he cried, slapping the board, "What is happiness? That's the question! Here we are all hungry for something that we have not. You are, and I am — and this Irishman here that has just told his story — you have lived dogs' lives, all of you, by your own confession, blown crosswise by every ill wind out of Heaven. What's in this thing, mates, that keeps us afloat?"

The bunch of men started up into life at the enthusiasm, and groped inwardly to find the words to respond. It was a long pull up out of the talk of the place, and it set their wits a-sailing.

"A belly full of grub — that's happiness!" said the Irishman. "That's enough for me, and enough for any man after he's put up with what I have! You're a book-learned man, sir; I see by your clothes; and what you're after in a joint like this with the likes of us, when you have your club to go to, that's none o' my business, but if I was as full inside as you, I'd stay at home nights and keep warm. Yessir, that's happiness; ain't it, mates?"

There was a whine of the door, and a drab came down two steps. "Yah!" sneered the man, "there's happiness, and damned cheap at that!"

The Swede took her by the elbows and forced her out again, and came over to us.

"Look you here," said he; "I've been a seafaring man myself, and I know hard lines and tarred ropes. I've been a master, and I owned a bark onct. I own this place here, and I made fifteen hundred outen a sailor-boardin'-house. I got the call on the whole gang; that's happiness — to have the right to say so, and it goes. What's money if you don't know how to use it? Look at these bums here—ain't I got all the money out of 'em by Sunday morning? I got a pull, too, and I'll be fixed soon, where I can do what I want. That's what I'm after. I got the money, and I'm going to make 'em stand around and do what I say. And they'll do it, too!"

"I'm a married man," began a blear-eyed Russian that had been mumbling and tracing patterns on the table with his finger-nail as we talked.

"God help you!" said the Irishman.

"Lemme talk!" whined the Russian. "I've got two half-caste children in Sitka. They're happy! Hap-py! That's where it is — you're happy when you don't know no better. When you're goin' to school and you don't think—when you ain't got nothin' to remember, and all the dirty work's ahead—that's happiness—along o' fourteen years old—twelve to fourteen—that's happiness! Ain't that so, sir?" He had been maundering on as in a trance. He pulled himself together, and looked hungrily at us, with his jaw dropped.

"Ah! It's a big question," said my friend, "and I don't know just who of us has the rights of it; but it's something more than a full stomach, which is all right for a start. It's more than power, too. Perhaps the kids are happy; but, by God, we're men, are'nt we? See here—

THE "RED HOUSE" ON HINCKLEY STREET

I stand for beauty. Who's going to be happy in a cesspool like this? We're not swine — we're men, and we've had a big, wide world made for us. Put me in the open under God's sky, and let me hear the leaves rattling and feel the tickle of the wind, and I'll be happy!"

The men gave him a stupid smile, and we drank again.

"That's all right for dude talk," said the Irishman. "I don't go much on the pretty—it don't feed ye!"

"And what do you say, youngster?" said the big Swede.

"I'll starve and I'll hide," said I, looking at him squarely, "but it seems to me a man's got to fight for something more than that. Why not call it Fame, and have done with it? We'd all like to be big."

"You're a newspaper-man, sonny. I'm a-thinkin'," said the Swede. And there was no more talk in him for that night.

The conversation sagged again as each of us looked into ourselves for a better argument. The shuffling cards dropped upon the table behind us, and finally the men at our side alone were left.

"Well, gentleman," said the artist, "good night to all of you, and we'll be off, each man to his own business. God help us—and good luck to every man, with a friend to stand by him. Good hunting, little brother!" and he grinned at the Irishman.

We rose to go at last, shaking their knotted hands, but of a sudden the door opened, and a slim girl came down into the smoky room to us with a smile. Not such a painted woman as the other, thank God, but blue-clad, with the bonnet of the Army circling her pale face, and the papers under her arm. She, too, was alone, though she would have said Someone was with her.

"Madam," said the artist, pulling off his hat, "you have come in the nick of time, for we are on all sides of a grave question, and can come to no conclusion. You have found happiness, no doubt, and I would you might convince us. Here is a man who is all ready for you," and he set a hand on the Russian's shoulder; "but the rest of us are invulnerable. God knows, I wish we might accept what you bring us."

The girl stared at him blankly. Here was something out of her experience. She began to speak, but I stopped her.

"Tell him that perhaps there is something better than happiness," said I.

I glanced back at the picture as we opened the door and stepped into Hinckley street. The Swede had returned to the bar that he was polishing aimlessly. The two men had gone back into oblivion again. The girl had dropped to her knees on the sanded floor.

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is a true story, this, far too true and too big for me to write. Here we were, five men faring on different roads toward the unattainable. If my characters are but sketchily done, with a scant palette, it is because of the size of my canvas and the mastering strangeness of the rencontre. Call it but a beginning then, with the shadows only half indicated, for we pass our romances hastily by, with a meager glance, in the hurry of our living.

The Irishman you, too, may have seen outside the little avenue of despair—you may have hob-nobbed with the Swede, too, or crouched to him, under the lash. And I make no doubt there is a trace of the Russian in us all.

But the lass should be left in the foreground, for she was not one of us. She had something, too, that was bigger than she could understand or describe.

GELETT BURGESS.

A COLD WELCOME IN THE HEART OF THE LATIN QUARTER

THE CALIFORNIA DERBY

Triumph of Scarborough at the Ingleside Course.

A fresh page in the history of racing on this Coast was turned over on Saturday last, when the first California Derby was brought off at Ingleside.

JOCKEY COADY

The actual contest itself was not productive of any great excitement as a spectacle. To the hard-shell Westerner there was vouchsafed a good big crumb of satisfaction in the success of a colt bred on the Pacific slope from an old-time strain that has coursed through the veins of many a rare bit of blood holding pride of place in days of yore; and this, moreover, when prophet, scribe, tout and talent had been busily broaching and backing their contrariwise opinions.

To the traveled spectator whose good fortune it may have been to have done his share towards making a crowd on courses over the sea, whether in Europe or the Antipodes, not to mention those of this continent across the divide, it perhaps seemed strange to observe so comparatively small an assemblage within the gates of Ingleside for the first local Derby, and it would not have taken such an onlooker long to discover that here racing almost entirely lacks that holiday element which is elsewhere noticeable on special occasions.

By way of protest against the matter-of-fact spirit of the community one intrepid sportsman proudly approaches the scene, and bravely swinging his six-in-hand

JOHN ATKIN
Bushnell, photo

coal black steeds, harnessed to an unique description of chariot, alongside the rails across from the stand draws up in solitary and stately grandeur, and then dismounts with his party of one—a man like unto himself—to view the proceedings of the day from the same point of vantage as the common or garden holder of the Ingleside franchise at a "dollar a nob," seat included. Methought it was a cruel triumph for the prudent citizen or citizeness—and the latter was in great force—who had achieved the same goal in consideration of the rash outlay of one nickel for electricity. And my heart was sore, for I dearly love to see the ways of the good old days preserved in gallant style. That there seemed to be . thing dramatic, nay, well nigh tragic, in this little bit of the show, need cause no wonder, when it is remembered that the great and only Walter Morosco had improvised this touch of realism for our benefit. If, then, it be not possible to emulate in San Francisco the glories of the hill at Epsom, the gathering of carriages at the Grand Prix, nor yet the features of an American Derby in a World's Fair year, nor those of Morris Park or Sheepshead Bay on great days, let it at least be seen that we had material good enough to make our first Derby a race worthy of a niche in the temple of sporting fame.

BAY COLT SCARBOROUGH, WINNER OF THE FIRST CALIFORNIA DERBY
Photo by Green, Oakland

Mindful here, however, as every sporting writer needs to be, to "cut the cackle and come to the 'osses," it may now be said that the event of the day was fourth on the card, which thus displayed the conditions of the race with the names and other particulars relating to the runners:

E. Ryan's br. c. Howard S. (imp. Whistle Jacket-Zelica) 122 lbs.
W. Boots & Son's b. c. Vincitor (imp. Brutus-Mollie H.) 122 lbs.
Burns & Waterhouse's b. c. Candelaria (imp. Midlothian-Cosette) 122 lbs.
Burns & Waterhouse's b. c. Altamax (imp. Maxim-Altitude) 122 lbs.
P. Dunne's b. c. Good Times (imp. Rossington-Famine) 122 lbs.
S. C. Hildreth's ch. c. Lincoln II (Bramble-Mary M.) 122 lbs.
E. W. Purser's ch. f. Scarfpin (Springbok-imp. Emerald) 122 lbs.
Atkin & Lottridge's b. c. Scarborough (El Rio Rey-Fonsette) 122 lbs.
E. Corrigan's ch. c. Joe Ullman (Riley-Hattie Harris) 112 lbs.

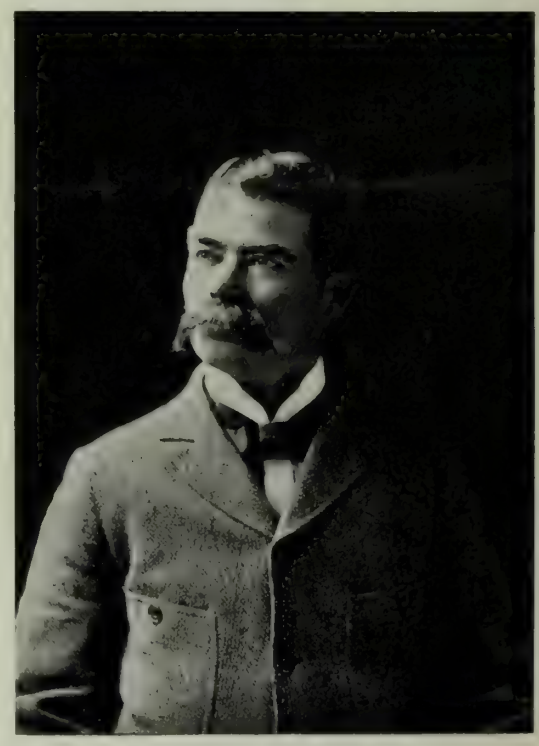
The California Derby. A sweepstakes for three-year-olds (foals of 1894). The Association to guarantee the value of the stake, $5,000; $4,000 to the first, $500 to the second, $300 to the third, and $200 to the fourth horse. Entrance $15 each to accompany the nomination; $100 additional to start. Maidens allowed 10 lbs. Acceptance to be made through the entry-box the day preceding the race. One mile and one-quarter.

The inspection in the paddock showed Scarf Pin to be the fittest-looking animal of the lot. Howard S. looked sleek as a mole, and just in that sort of order to set off his beautiful quality. He seemed short of muscle, however, and as if another week's work would put him into better shape to answer a question. Altamax and Candelaria were in nice order, Good Times about as fit as hands could make him, Lincoln II. as clean as a smelt, hard in condition and glossy in coat; Scarborough by no means in prime health, but drawn fairly fine, considering that his near hind fetlock joint had been badly cut recently and showed a severe wound, with the marks of another gash on the point of the off side hock. Joe Ullman looked fit and Vincitor tolerably so likewise.

In the betting ring at the close of operations, which were fairly lively, prices ruled as follows: 8 to 5 Howard S., 7 to 2 Scarf Pin, 7 to 2 Burns & Waterhouse stable, 5 to 1 Good Times, 15 to 1 Scarborough, 25 to 1 Lincoln II., 40 to 1 Joe Ullman, 70 to 1 Vincitor.

With but a brief interval occupied by the riders in maneuvering at the barrier Starter Havey sprung the strings to a perfect getaway, and the race for the first California Derby was on.

As the horses settled down to work Scarborough appeared slightly in the van, with Howard S., Altamax, Lincoln II. and Scarf Pin next until reaching the paddock, when the order changed, and Joe Ullman, coming up on the outside, showed the way past the stand, Scarf Pin, Candelaria and Good Times close up and Howard S.—whose position had been thus early sacrificed—Good Times and Vincitor tailing off. Rounding the first turn Scarf Pin assumed the lead with Candelaria at her girths,



THOMAS LOTTRIDGE
Bushnell, photo

Good Times a length behind and Howard S., who had lost half a dozen lengths, making a big effort on the outside of the course to overhaul the leaders. The half-mile post being reached the pace got hotter, and Scarborough was seen to be forging his way to the front, getting on all but even terms with Scarf Pin at the three-quarter mile post, with Good Times a length behind, Howard S. at his shoulder and Candelaria close up to the latter. Rounding the turn Good Times was seen to falter, and soon after Howard S., when called upon, failed to respond, and there seemed nothing then but a clear run home through the stretch for the two leaders, Scarborough and Scarf Pin, the former having got to the front at the beginning of the last furlong, and Altamax alone of the others seeming to have any running left. Then came the final tussle, Scarf Pin being urged along hard by Tod Sloan, but worn down by the sweeping strides of the El Rio colt and, notwithstanding all her gameness, forced to succumb by a head on the post, Altamax running into third place three lengths in the rear, with Howard S. half a length behind and Lincoln II., Candelaria, Good Times, Vincitor and Joe Ullman strung out in the order named. Time, 2:11¼, on a somewhat heavy track. Coady, a San Francisco boy, rode the winner with excellent judgment, it being his first mount on the horse. Scarborough was trained by his owners, in whose stable Ed Purser's Scarf Pin also received her skillful preparation.

Scarborough was bred by Theodore Winters of California and Nevada, and sold as a yearling in this city in November, 1895, for the sum of $800, being purchased by his present owners. As a two-year-old he ran twenty-eight times, being in the money on twenty occasions, and winning twice at Ingleside, once at Milwaukee and once at Windsor, Canada. As a three-year-old he has started in seven races, winning once previously, while it may be mentioned that he has met the favorite, Howard S., since first coming out on six occasions, and in each has finished in front of him. In appearance the son of El Rio Rey is a well-proportioned colt, with a plain, but clean-cut, intelligent head, having a narrow blaze widening between the nostrils and near hind fetlock white, a long rein, well-placed shoulder, moderately high wither, full girth, loins a shade light, but muscular, standing about the same height, sixteen hands, at the shoulder as behind, and with a rare good set of limbs. His strong points are his make-up in the stifle and his wide, flat, muscular thighs and gaskins, excellent feet and an over all wear and tear, blood-like look. While a level-headed colt, he is a handful to ride, and needs a strong boy to do him justice.

THE FIRST CALIFORNIA DERBY
ATKIN & LOTTRIDGE'S SCARBOROUGH, RIDDEN BY COADY, WINS BY A HEAD
Photo by Green, Oakland

Concluding with a few words about the owners of the Derby winner, it may be noted that John Atkin was born at Scarborough, Yorkshire, England, in 1860, and came to this country in 1880, since which time he has been in California and New York at alternate intervals. Since 1884 he has been connected with the turf, and for the last three years has had a stable with his present partner. Thomas Lottridge was born on a farm near Ottumwa, Iowa, in 1862, and is a good specimen of a steady, smart, young American turfman, who has graduated in the ranks of the stable boy, jockey, trainer and owner.

Scarborough has no engagements at present, but, if all goes well with him, will probably appear next in the Spreckels Cup (handicap) at Ingleside. About the middle of the ensuing month the stable will proceed to Saratoga, and after a few weeks' rest there will take in the New York circuit. An endeavor has been made this week to arrange another meeting for the Derby candidates, but as the winner is at present on the shelf in consequence of the injury to his near hind fetlock previously alluded to the race cannot be arranged. A good deal of comment has been made on the bad showing made by Scarborough in a race at five-eighths of a mile a few weeks ago, where the other competitors were of inferior class, but it is not generally known that the horse struck into another in front of him fifty yards from the start, fell down on his nose and knees, the mark of which he bears to this day, and was practically pulled up by his jockey. All things considered, my own impression is that no wise man will take liberties with this colt whenever or wherever he sports silk.

BENEDICT.

RACE-TRACK MANAGEMENT

The Changed Executive at Ingleside Determined to Foster Pure Sport.

So extensive and growing is the interest displayed in turf affairs in this section of the country that it may be well for this journal to offer to the public some little information with regard to recent happenings bearing upon the management of the local tracks, and to venture upon such comment and advice as the situation would appear to suggest.

The main difficulty underlying all turf government in the United States is that the betting ring, composed of two opposing elements of layers and backers, is taxed to provide resources which are needed by jockey clubs and other racing bodies to meet the expenditure for stakes, purses and the general outgoings of the various meetings, as well as of the establishments devoted to their conduct. Such being the case, and bearing always in mind that the man who pays the piper has a right to call the tune, the authorities are compelled to recognize in the manner and effect of their administration that particular element in the racing world, which is of all others most dangerous to its well-being. No one is so quixotic as to hope or believe that racing can be carried on without the adjunct of gambling, but, even so, few will be found bold enough to maintain that it should be exploited for the benefit in the first instance of what is most obnoxious in its surroundings. Living as we are in a world not yet perfect, it will often be found that the middle of the road in many instances affords the best and safest going.

Now it may be remembered that, when some three years ago the project of establishing a second race-track in the vicinity of this city was uncovered, the opinion was very generally expresed that its promoters were influenced by motives which were reckoned to be on a par with those of only such men as are qualified for a prolonged term in San Quentin. Time has gone on, however, the old Bay District, which had so long held the fort, has succumbed to city development, and we this winter have had two new tracks, Ingleside and Emeryville, the former in its second season, at work in friendly rivalry, whereby owners and the race-going public have not been otherwise than benefited. Up till a month ago everything was running at the former track under the proprietorship and management of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club, with ostensibly the utmost smoothness. The sport was accounted clean, the officials were regarded as au fait at their work and their patrons, both owners and visitors, were apparently thoroughly satisfied. With a sudden shock came the news that Mr. A. B. Spreckels, the President of the club, was so disgusted with the internal working of affairs that he had resigned his position, would no longer continue to maintain the large racing stable he had gotten together for sport and pleasure, and that his large holding of stock in the incorporated club was for sale at a considerable discount on par, notwithstanding that large surpluses were coming into the treasury from every fortnightly meeting. With the exception of the dispersal of his stable Mr. Spreckels has since carried out his programme, and in the early part of this week the transfer of his stock holdings was effected to Vice President Henry J. Crocker. As to the former gentleman's motives and reasons for his action we are not precisely informed, and therefore prefer to regard them as concerning himself alone, until he may choose to take the public into his confidence. But in the meantime, according to published reports, it has been made to appear that Mr. Spreckels' resignation was prompted by his failure to secure the entire control of the stock of the club, and not for the reason that the racing methods were unacceptable to him. In the columns of this paper regret, to which we still hold, has been expressed that his retirement had been gazetted and that there should be any prospect of his relinquishing his role of sportsman and race horse owner. What does concern the public and ourselves, however, is that so long as gentlemen of standing and repute in the community are willing to devote their time, money and influence to the support of important racing organizations, they should be deemed as little likely wittingly to permit any chicanery or sharp practice in the conduct of racing under their ken as they would in their own private or business affairs, much less to act on the same Board with a colleague who would deliberately plan and carry out schemes for defrauding the primary supporters of the club, namely race horse owners, for the benefit of his own pocket. Those who have perused the press reports relating to the first California Derby run off on Saturday last will not fail to follow the allusion and many who may not must have heard the talk of the street, where those who take an interest in racing are gathered together. But this point of view has not so far apparently occurred to those who have had the most to say on the way matters have progresed at Ingleside since Senator Androus succeeded to the presidency and Vice President Crocker felt called upon to give further hostages to fortune in his commitments in respect of time and money to the P. C. J. C. In the West we are of necessity ever face to face with contradictions, and a striking one is that while less particular to avoid the appearance of evil we seem more prone to condemn on suspicion. It may be well, therefore, to remind the public, and especially those who are broad-minded enough to wish to see the sport of horse racing flourish, and not sink into a mere merry-go-round gambling medium in this State, that much has already been done by the Pacific Coast Jockey Club to improve the tone of racing in California, and that those responsible for its proper conduct are more interested than anybody in the furtherance of the good work already done.

On many counts it is an advantage that members of the executive should not themselves be directly or indirectly interested in the running of horses, and this is pretty much the present status. In Mr. Henry J. Crocker and Mr. Walter S. Hobart we have young, energetic men of means and spirit, who, though not claiming any extended experience of the racing game, have both graduated as leaders in horse circles, and are entirly above anything derogatory or unsportsmanlike, besides being able to fall into line with their colleagues in all matters needing business sagacity. It is in the association of men of their stamp and inclinations with older men of the world, who know some of the ins and outs of the game, that is calculated to benefit the cause, and in time possibly lead to other developments which will keep California abreast of the movement that is being quietly persevered with in other parts of the country to make racing a fit pleasure for men of character and position.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

There is no poor music in San Francisco. Read the papers and see for yourself. Read (if you can) poor Bosworth's efforts to distribute saccharine to our musical fraternity. The life of the musical critic in San Francisco is not a happy one. It is a small town, too small and too remote to permit critical comment and comparisons with the achievements of the world to the East. Musicians are narrow and prejudiced enough anywhere, but in this place their sensitiveness amounts to a disease. I am told that Stewart was forced to retire from his Sunday column in the "Examiner" through antagonism aroused by his attempts to review the musical events of the week. It would seem that an honest expression of opinion, by such an able musician, upon any performance, might be accepted with as much assurance of honesty and fidelity to his ideals of art as any dramatic or literary review, but it is not so. It is not advisable for a musical critic to criticize. If he says a singer appeared nervous, or did not come up to a former achievement, he must expect personal abuse, he must be insulted with accusations of partiality or pique, and the Managing Editor next day receives hot-headed inquiries as to why his critic is permitted to vilify our "local talent." A feud may be raised by the mere statement that a leader used four bassoons where the composer's score called for but two, and so week by week his critiques must become more and more vapid, until he contents himself with the reprinting of the bare programme or honeying it with a dash of praise haphazard, so that each performer gets an equal share. This is the Bosworth's method of escaping the embarrassments of his office, and his remarkable efforts in the use of complimentary synonyms are laughable. When H. M. Bosworth dares unfavorable comment the pill is so thickly coated that a little expurgative will suffice in order that an "Examiner" review may be quoted in the artist's scrap book of puffs. "Mme. Berthet's Marguerite (may not be great, but she) seems to fit the role admirably," and "(though evidently annoyed by hoarseness) Prevost was more acceptable than on any previous occasion."

Phil Hastings is married; and to a girl who will undoubtedly keep him in the way he should go. Not to know Phil Hastings, the most popular theatrical press agent in town, is a misfortune to the Bohemian who is in search of a true friend. There are enough that do know him, however, to attest their appreciation of his good fellowship, and to congratulate him upon the luck that has fallen upon him. Literally from the clouds, one might say—as Miss Ruby Hawkins has won fame in the gentle art of parachute descensions at the Chutes. Phil is an all-around clever man in his line as well as out of it—gentlemanly, well educated and well bred. His association with vaudeville artists and professional people generally has made him especially popular with the theatrical fraternity, and his talents as a song writer have won him a place in the hearts of their audiences. He will be chiefly remembered by his "O, what a Difference in the Morning," which had such a run two or three years ago. The couple were married last Monday at the Church of the Good Samaritan, and left for a honeymoon in Monterey, with the most enthusiastic good wishes of their friends.

***

"Spike" Hennessey, who is exploited on the bill boards as an ex-convict, is remarkably diffident anent his career, behind the scenes. It has been a good "card" in the past, and his technical knowledge of burglary has kept him his engagement for several years. What is a good recommendation on the stage, however, proves a bit uncomfortable one in private life, and the notorious crook is very willing to lay it aside with his costume and his tools. The sight of a real criminal cracking a real safe with real gunpowder is a marked contrast to his hang-dog demeanor when any information is desired as to the minor details of his actual adventures. "Oh, say I'm 'Spike' Hennessey," says he. "That's all there is; the newspapers never go into personalities—no, I dunno nuthin' at all about no jobs nor no gangs—the papers never say nuthin' about that—they never do, sure. Say I'm 'Spike' Hennessey, that's all!"

He "doesn't know nothing" about no penitentiaries nor no "lays" nor no nothing. If this transpires "Spike" Hennessey may lose his job. He would better talk.

***

What an interesting book might be made out of mining romances. I have heard dozens of delightful tales, in which Dame Fortune appears in a guise so generous as to discount all prevailing envious rumors of her fickleness. It may be that she hides for a time from her favorites the light of her countenance, but when she smiles there is a golden radiance that beams from her eyes, which, if it be not happiness, is a substantial accessory thereof. Of course I am referring to that Dame Fortune who presides over mines and miners. She beamed the other day on an old wooer of hers, a Colorado man, named H. B. Gleason, who, save that he had followed her arduously, had no reason to suppose himself destined for her gifts. Somewhat dispirited by the reverses of life, Gleason found service in Yuma in charge of an electric light plant, which furnishes light and power for that exceedingly hot country. The air there is charged with old mining traditions, and Gleason's thoughts running that way, it is not astonishing that he decided to grubstake an unfortunate Dutch prospector, C. G. Eichubleer, who had come to him for assistance. That was the stroke of fate. Eichubleer set off with his kit and his mule into the Short Horn mountains, and a few weeks later word came that he had found a claim. Gleason accompanied the messenger to a place some miles northeast of Yuma, and there, in a box canyon, found his partner pounding and washing some pieces of black rock which showed no sign of free gold. Yet the bottom of the pan, when emptied, was covered with the yellow metal, and he soon realized that they had struck a veritable bonanza. The ore is the richest found in the region. It seems he had wandered casually into this box canyon, and had literally stumbled across a ledge twelve feet wide with an ore streak across four feet of it. Some of the rock assayed $2,000 to the ton, and there is such a splendid development that Gleason and his partner ask half a million each for their find. One of the first miners to see the property was C. D. Lane of the Utica, whose La Fortuna near by has paid several hundred thousand in dividends. As soon as Gleason's boss heard of his engineer's good luck he demanded to be taken in on the find, but as the man had not participated in the expedition he was refused, and retaliated by discharging his millionaire employee.

***

Since then hundreds of prospectors are traversing the Short Horn mountains after locations. One grubstaker told the fortunate discoverer that he had been in that canyon two weeks before, and had seen nothing to indicate gold. "I can't see how you could have missed it," returned Eichubleer. "Well, sir," explained the other, "I found some good pieces of 'float' below on the plain and followed into the hills after it. I walked over that ledge several times, and did not catch on. Why, I left the bits of rock in a cave round the corner." Sure enough, they found the ore where he had described. The southern country is full of queer stories of lost mines. Years ago there used to come to Yuma at odd interva's an old Frenchman, whose pockets were always plentifully lined with gold dust. No one ever saw him come in, and when he left he succeeded in baffling the cleverness of those who tried to track him to the source of his wealth. Finally his visits ceased, and it has never transpired whether he had been murdered or had returned to Paris. It is thought that this mine of Gleason's is where he gathered his gold, and the presumption, zealously credited, clears up another mystery of the desert.

BOSWELL JR.

AN END TO THE "LARK"

The Brief History of a Freak Among Freaks.

In 1895 the Chap Book had already begun its successful career as a less radical exponent than the Yellow Book of the remarkable literary revolution that made the year typical of the vagaries of the "end of the century" madness. It was smart, unbridled by convention, emancipated from the "Home Circle" policy of the standard monthlies, sufficient unto itself, and by alliance with Henley's "New Review" enabled to bring out the works of a younger set of writers whose vigorous work was in such contrast to the "safe" stories of the monthly magazines. Suddenly, without warning, the storm broke, and a flood of miniature periodicals began to pour over the land. The success of the "Chap Book" incited the little riot of decadence, and almost all of the innumerable booklets were indifferent imitators of the Chicago bi-weekly. The stalls supplied by the news company were overrun by the "first numbers" of these amateur magazines. There was a craze for odd sizes and shapes, freak illustrations, wide margins, uncut pages, Jenson types, scurrilous abuse and petty jealousies, impossible prose and doggerel rhyme. The movement asserted itself as a revolt against the commonplace; it aimed to overthrow the staid respectability of the larger magazines and to open to younger writers opportunities to be heard before they had obtained recognition from the autocratic editors of the elect. It was a wild, hap-hazard exploration in search of a short-cut to Fame; it proposed to carry Prestige by storm. For two years the struggle lasted, one tiny booklet rising after another and disappearing in a few months from the shops where it had been tolerated.

Among the "brownies" there were not more than two or three that had any saving grace of originality to justify their existence or bore any evidence of literary quality that compelled serious aceptance. Among this few, however, was the "Lark," almost the first among the group, and at the present time closing, voluntarily, its career, just as it has succeeded in winning a distinctive place for itself in the world of letters. It has been a freak among freaks, but has made and held its place by a rare quality of spontaneity—an indefinable subtlety of humor and whimsicality that made it unique. It has been governed by a policy of optimism that contrasted vividly with the cynical satires of its fellows, and has combined sense and nonsense in such baffling proportions that one never knew what to expect or how to take it, unless one was in the fellowship of its ideals. It stood for a cult of which it was the only organ. It was not for the Philistines.

The "Lark" was started as an independent venture, more in fun than earnest, by Bruce Porter and Gelett Burgess, in May, 1895. The instant recognition it met among a class of readers, not large, but influential, induced Mr. Doxey to assume its publication, and since its first number it has borne his imprint, and made his name widely known among publishers. The first issues were exuberantly gay and irresponsible—untrammeled by considerations of popularity—the personal and intimate expression of the vivacity of its editors. It was a frolic pure and simple. Since then it gathered a set of young people of the same naive impulses. Mr. Ernest Peixotto and Miss Florence Lundborg came to assist in the illustration, Mr. Porter Garnett contributed a series of tours-de-force in the line of the literary purist, and "les Jeunes became affiliated as a group—one that represented the new Western impulse—standing for ingenuousness, freedom and freshness of life. The "Lark" has had its chief recognition among literary people rather than the general reading public, who were unable to fathom its intent. It was taken up by the press, with an amiable indulgence, as a youthful prank that was sufficiently amusing to be remarkable, while not to be taken too seriously. The "Lark," indeed, has rather encouraged this view, and has given its sermons in the guise of frolic and its nonsense the sober aspect of verity.

For a year no female contributors or advertisements were allowed, but with the second book of the "Lark" the bars were let down, and two new writers were initiated into les Jeunes—Miss Carolyn Wells and Miss

WILLIAM DOXEY
PUBLISHER OF THE "LARK"

Juliet Wilbor Tompkins—later, Yone Noguchi, the young Japanese poet, joined the ranks, and gave a new direction to the serious verse the "Lark" had been publishing, by a series of original poetical monologues.

With the April number of this year the "Lark" suspends publication, having fulfilled its mission. To keep it up longer would be to force the impulse. Its work has been done. It has made its pages known in the East as no California publication has ever been known before—it has stood for the reaction against decadence—and prophesied the renaissance. Les Jeunes have dispersed, for there is more serious work to be done. But their little straw-colored pamphlet will not be soon forgotten.

A. JEUNE.

Reviewing literary California, a writer in the Boston "Literary Review" has this to say of William Doxey, whose portrait appears above:

We have as yet but one publisher of real books (not to speak of editions of poems by women and graybeards, in padded covers and embossed ornamentation) and what Mr. Doxey could do with the material that its authors would risk with a local house has been well done, importing his own paper and book-cloth, and even his types for editions that barely pay the expenses. He has brought out three creditable books this year, and if confidence is established, there may still be literature in California. But the literary worker cannot afford to risk his efforts, he must be assured of a wide audience and generous advertising. So it is chiefly the poets that accept the nearest chance, and we have seen printed volumes that have done us scant honor. To be sure, no one reads their verses, but poets unfortunately have at times money or influence, and the stuff gets itself printed and is laid away on the shelves.

But as soon as the time shall come when an increase in the population shall ensure a market for the good literature that will be demanded, the supply will not be lacking. As yet the largest class of readers feed on the newspapers, and the feminine portion want only the "latest" books in the libraries. Society is not stratified here, culture has no empire of her own as on Boston's new made land, there are few leaders, and a book's popularity progresses by fits and starts.

Small chance here for that "dinner-party success" that Stevenson often asserted went furthest to launch an author's fame. Yet California has called more than once across the continent. It is a land of surprises and in the younger generation is our hope.

LES JEUNES
A farewell conclave in the editorial rooms of the "Lark"

THE PENNSYLVANIA'S PRESIDENT

How Frank Thompson Became a Railroad Manager.

Frank Thomson, the newly-elected president of the Pennsylvania Railway, has been in the service of the company for almost forty years. At the age of seventeen he entered the great shops at Altoona, and during the four years that followed mastered the craft of mechanical engineering so thoroughly that he could not only completely construct a locomotive, but also run it with the skill of an experienced engineer. When the civil war broke out, young Thomson enlisted, and came under the notice of Thomas A. Scott, who had been appointed by Secretary of War Cameron to be Assistant Secretary in charge of the trapsportation of government troops and supplies. The young cadet rapidly gained favor with Mr. Scott—so much so that he found himself at the age of twenty-one at duty in Alexandria, Va., organizing the transportation of the Army of the Potomac. This was a most important piece of work, and it entailed much labor and responsibility upon the young man, as it involved the building of bridges, construction of new lines of railway, and re-construction of old ones. It was an extremely important post, but young Thomson acquitted himself most creditably in the discharge of his duties, distinguishing himself for his obedience, quickness of perception, and prompt attention to the commands of his superiors — characteristics that he has always demanded and received from those beneath him.

In 1864 he terminated his military duties and returned to Pennsylvania, and was appointed superintendent of the eastern division of the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad. From this he was promoted gradually to higher positions, until in 1888, he was made first vice-president. In all these positions Mr. Thomson made careful studies of the different phases of railroad management and of the needs and necessities of a great railway system. Mr. Thomson has practically grown up with the Pennsylvania Company from almost his very beginning, and is so thoroughly identified with its interests and advancement that it is almost as much a part of him as he has been of it. He was fortunate in passing the early years of his career under the guidance of such men as Thomas A. Scott and Goorge B. Roberts — two men who took great interest in his advancement.

The individuality of Mr. Thomson has become thoroughly stamped upon the Pennsylvania Company, and is evident everywhere in every department of the great system, and it is through his individual efforts and wonderful activity that the Pennsylvania has become what it is, his military experience and discipline proving of great advantage to him in his management of the company. Mr. Thomson is a lover of books, of music, and of nature. He is fond of good plays and of good companions. He is an enthusiast of nature, and an excellent one to solve the mystery of the salmon stream. He is a man of much diversity and accomplishment, in which he differs exceedingly from his predecessor in office — the late George B. Roberts — who lived the life of a recluse more than anything else. He lived in the Bala woods near Philadelphia, and was seldom seen in the streets of the city. But when he was, and when he spoke either officially or otherwise, it was with the voice and decision of a man of force and authority.

The American people have been given an object lesson in the results of Protection which seems to have escaped the notice of most of the Republican journals. The Dingley tariff bill does not propose to alter the schedule on iron and steel manufactures, but adheres to the rates fixed by the Democratic measure, the Wilson tariff bill. Under the encouragement of Protection, the iron and steel industries of America have developed to vast proportions. While they were young and struggling, Protection gave them hope against overwhelming odds and permitted the American to compete in the home market at least with his foreign competitor. Soon the inventive American skill and daring American enterprise combined to devise improvements in methods and machinery. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were at first expended in fruitless experiments, until now, after a long series of years, perfection has been approximated. The plants, the methods and the machinery employed in the working of this metal have undergone a radical change. The advances made in that respect in America enable the home manufacturer of steel rails and sheet steel to produce these articles cheaper than England to-day, and even ship them to that country in competition with it. The steel used for pens and fine springs, once made exclusively in England, is now shipped from Pittsburg to Sheffield, and other manufacturing centers of Europe. And so the industry stands to-day almost ready to withstand Free Trade itself, and meet in the common markets of the world the products of England or any other country.

A ECCENTRIC KAISER

The Sanity of the German War - Lord Questioned.

The individuality of Emperor William is, just at present, troubling Europe more than his policy, and the question of his sanity is again receiving serious attention. Quite a number of people have assumed that the strange actions of the Kaiser are due to his exaggerated self-importance and his funny notions of Divine Right, but of late his oddities have taken a shape beyond the most preposterous form of self-conceit. Ever since the last visit of Empress Frederick to London it has been whispered about in the inner circles of Royalty and Diplomacy that he is quite wrong in the head, and that the question of his retirement, for a time at least, and the creation of a regency under his brother Henry, has been informally discussed by the Imperial Cabinet.

THE KAISER

The cause of William's accredited insanity is known to the medical world as "otitis media"—chronic inflammation of the middle ear. As far as heredity is concerned, William has a father, a great uncle, a great great grandmother, a great grand-uncle, a great grandmother, and a great grandfather, all of whom died from either insanity or blood taint—weighty evidence in a question of insanity. The Kaiser's actions are hardly reassuring, and his "humor" is peculiar, to say the least. Strange stories of his vagaries are told in Berlin. He was to have opened the Industrial Exposition at Treftow, near Berlin, and went thence in his yacht. In advance of him steamed a police launch. When the Emperor saw the little boat laboriously puffing and snorting ahead of him, he gave orders to put on full steam and ran away, arriving at the exposition ten minutes before he was expected. Of course there was no one there to receive him, and he was furious during his whole stay. On another occasion he wandered through the streets of Potsdam at midnight and dismissed all the sentries he encountered. Then he went to a young lieutenant on watch, who had dozed, and waking him, thundered out:

"Call out your guards."

Of course there were no guards within hearing, and the lieutenant was harshly reprimanded.

But perhaps one of his strangest acts was done one night while visiting the North Cape on his yacht. He piped all-hands aloft, and, arrayed in a surplice, he preached on the goodness of the Almighty in giving to the German nation such a ruler as himself, and the next day he went off in a small boat looking for the whale that swallowed Jonah.

The next of kin to the Emperor is his eldest son, Frederick William, a boy of fourteen, who is being educated as a soldier. He is a lively lad, full of fun, in good health, and showing, so far, none of the traits of the Hohenzollerns. This is probably due to his mother, a Princess from Schleswig-Holstein, who was selected by Bismarck as the helpmate of the then future ruler of Germany. It was first proposed to wed the young man to a British Princess, but Bismarck objected. "The race of Hohenzollerns has been spoiled enough by British blood," he is reported to have said. "This Prince must marry a Holstein cow."

Prince Henry, who will have to become regent, should necessity arise, is the idol of the German nation. He is a dashing sailor, a good fellow, and is immensely popular and democratic. He is the practical head of the German navy, and has on many occasions represented his imperial brother. His wife, Princess Irene of Hesse, is a sister of the Czarina. Emperor William's insanity is not improbable: it is in the natural course of events. Of late he has been ruling in a manner inconsistent with his earlier career. He has set himself up as the first of Kings, and as such deems it his duty to protect the rights of sovereigns. It is upon this principle that he regards Prussian capital upon the banks of the Spree, a minor European King, instead of lording over all the continent as the great exemplifier of Divine Right. And further, if Divine Right were in force William would not be styled Emperor of Germany at all, for that title lawfully belongs to the Emperors of Austria.

---

The Queen of Greece, who was the Grand Duchess of Russia, was married at the age of sixteen. Her husband, King George, was five years her senior, and had already reigned in Greece four years, having ascended the throne at seventeen, and notwithstanding her extreme youth Queen Olga soon showed that she was admirably fitted for the duties of her new station. Shortly after her marriage she founded the Evangelismos, which is described as the finest model hospital in the world. She has made herself immensely popular among the Greeks by her charities, and has long since been given the title "Queen of the Poor." She is still a remarkably handsome woman, the handsomest, it is said in all Greece, and like all the Romanoff Princesses, has had a thorough training in music and the languages. The greatest grief of Queen Olga was the death of her eldest daughter, a beautiful girl, who died at the age of twenty, having been married a year previous to the late Czar's younger brother, the Grand Duke Paul. Her oldest son, the Duke of Sparta, is married to the Princess Sophia of Prussia, sister of the German Emperor, who won much popularity with her future subjects by joining the Greek Church upon her marriage. The other members of her family are Prince George, who is in the navy, Prince Nicholas, a lieutenant in the army, and the Princess Marie who is engaged to a Russian Grand Duke. Queen Olga's summer home is at Corfu. It is a beautiful place, and is full of interesting mementoes of the Russian, the British and the Danish Royal families.

QUEEN OLGA

---

Maurus Jokai, the Hungarian novelist, has written in thirty-two years 200 volumes of romances, numerous short stories and several plays, essays and translations, and during a large part of the time has edited two newspapers, and has taken an active part in politics as a member of the Hungarian Parliament. In his leisure moments he has become an excellent gymnast, fencer and horticulturalist, in addition to carving busts in ivory and painting pictures. This is a remarkable record of industry, unequaled, probably, in all Europe. Mr. Gladstone is another indefatigable worker. He wastes little or no time on any occasion whatever. If he is left alone for five minutes in a friend's house or in a railroad station, he will produce pen, ink and paper, or a postal card, and proceed to dispatch his correspondence. It is said he can dress for dinner in five minutes taking things leisurely, and in three minutes when in a hurry.

---

Chauncey M. Depew does not believe in the idea of an aristocracy of wealth. He says that he knows of only two families whose wealth has increased in succeeding generation, the Vanderbilts and the Astors. The faculty of making money is of frequent occurrence, while the art of keeping it is rare, and instances Daniel Drew, who at one time was worth nineteen million dolars and who died in debt, and another speculator who had three million dollars in bank and now is earning about twelve hundred a year. Mr. Depew believes that the [illegible] money making inventions of the future will be [illegible] electric motor, which will supersede the overhead t[illegible] and the flying machine. In inventions, and in imp[illegible]ments in and the cheapening of transportation, that great fortunes are mainly made.

---

The Duchess Maria Josepha, wife of the celebrated oculist, Duke Charles Theodore of Bavaria, devotes the greater part of her time to the care of the three eye hospitals of the Duke, one of which is established in the Royal Palace at Tegernsee, and the others at Munich and Meran. The Duchess is assisted in her work by her daughter, the Princess Maria Gabrielle, who takes as much interest in the philanthropy as her mother. Both these royal ladies assist Duke Charles in most of his operations and are skilled and trained nurses. The Duchess is a Portuguese Princess, being a sister of Don Miguel of Braganza, and is also sister-in-law to the Empress of Austria.

---

Theodore Moss and Marc Klam, two Gotham impresarios, had an argument over the relative weight of a complete ballet costume with that of an ordinary outfit for street wear. Moss claimed that the regulation ballet costume would weigh about one-fifth as much as the ordinary street costume. Klam insisted that there was a greater difference in their relative weights, and a wager was made of a supper and champagne for the entire "In Gay New York" company, which was appearing at Wallack's Theater. The wardrobe mistress of the company was sent for, and one of the Fougere costumes secured. It was put on a postal scale, and the entire affair, consisting of silk tights, gauze skirt, bodice and slippers, marked exactly on the pound. A street costume was then weighed, and showed just sixteen pounds.

A NEW HAWAIIAN SCARE

The U. S. "Philadelphia" anchored in Honolulu harbor. This photo was taken during the disturbances which preceded the deposition of Queen Liliokalani

---

The opening of the restored Borgia apartments in the Vatican may be termed the greatest artistic event of the latter half of the century. The work has taken four years to complete and an expenditure of $100,000, great economy having been observed. The apartments consist of the Borgia Tower, three large halls of one hundred meters each, and an immense salon called the Hall of the Pontiffs, two hundred and fifty meters in size. The restoration has been a complete triumph, and the gorgeous rooms, with their precious tapestry, frescoes by Pinturicchio and di Betto, and their beautiful majolica pavements, look exactly as they did in the time of the magnificent Borgias.

---

There are indications that the product of the famous Cripple Creek district in Colorado will be surpassed in richness by that of the West Kootenai gold fields in British Columbia. These mines have developed wonderfully in the few years in which they have been worked. This year the entire product of the region is expected to go over $12,000,000, or more than half what it has been in all the twenty-five preceding years in which the mines have been in operation. The Kootenai district is a good place for prospectors, as more than half of the region in which the paying ores are supposed to be is as yet unexplored. A great majority of the mines are owned by American citizens, and the big smelter at Trail is controlled by Montana capitalists, who have there an investment of $1,000,000 or more.

---

The death of the Japanese Crown Prince brings into notice the extravagant sums expended upon royal obsequies in the island empire. When the Dowager Empress Asaka died, last Jaunary, the Diet voted an appropriation of $700,000 to defray the cost of her funeral. The preparations consumed almost a month, and before they were completed $100,000 from the imperial fund had to be added to the original grant. The ceremonies took place at Kyoto, the ancient capital, and continued for two days. The coffin, a boat-shaped box of white wood, was placed on a large chariot drawn by two yoke of oxen, and was followed to the royal cemetery by an almost endless procession, including all the high officers of State, a multitude of nobles and an entire army division.

A DRILL OF UNITED STATES MARINES IN HONOLULU

The privilege of landing armed men in the Hawaiian Capital is granted only to the United States

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Think of it, Diary dear, only ten more days of Lent. Hurrah! then, for Easter and gaiety. I hope old Father Time will put wings to his heels for these last ten days, as mamma has issued her fiat that no child of hers shall go out during holy week. I pouted and fumed, but it was all put on, as, of course, there is no amusement to speak of, and I shall be all the fresher for Easter. I had a perfect love of a gown, a Baer creation in the newest spring shades, and a hat that will, I fancy, please even Arthur's fastidious eye. Nothing of any great importance has occurred this week. There was Aileen Goad's wedding, of course, but that was a simple affair. You should have seen the decorations, though—they were magnificent; myriads of American beauty roses were massed everywhere and the mantels banked in violets. Bishop Nichols performed the ceremony. Aileen looked even lovelier than I anticipated, in a heavy satin gown, her corsage cut square and filled in with point lace. Genevieve was maid of honor, also in white, and four little girls held the ribbons. After the ceremony the sixty guests, who were all old friends of the family, went to the dining-room, where breakfast was served. I hoped to get the ring when Aileen cut the cake, but was, alas, doomed to disappointment. Never mind; Mamie McNutt got it when Ella was married, and she has not yet said yes to any of her adorers. That is a consolation. Afterwards Aileen and Mr. McIntosh went off to Sausalito, we think, although they would not give us any definite information as to their plans. Genevieve and I went to see their Sausalito home the other day. It is a quaint little cottage with three bedrooms upstairs and a living-room, dining-room and kitchen down stairs. Aileen has furnished it in real country fashion, with dotted Swiss curtains, rugs and very light chairs and bric-a-brac. It is an ideal place and I quite envy her such a charming summer home. Genevieve and Mr. Goad are going to Santa Barbara at the end of the week.

I do love engagement dinners, and am on the qui vive of expectation over the Baldwin-Glascock affair, to be given at the Varsity Club on the nineteenth. Mrs. Baldwin has invited twenty young people, all Aleck's and Jessie's best friends, and as we are congenial spirits we anticipate a capital time. We are to wear high-necked organdies, with bright stocks and sashes. I have a new one, white over orange, which is most becoming to my peculiar style. Talking of weddings and engagements, Mattie Whittier's cards are out. I don't know who are to be her bridesmaids, though I hear Ethel Cohen has selected hers. Helen Hopkins, Emma Butler and Ida Gibbons are among them. You know a great deal of her trousseau was destroyed in the fire—was not that unfortunate? She is to live at the Presidio and keep house on an infinitesimal scale, as Lieutenant Bents' quarters comprise a three-roomed cottage—fancy that!

Frances Curry is greatly improved, and the doctors say her face will not be even scarred; is not that fortunate? Della Mills is laid up with an abscess of the ear and is suffering intensely. We are all so much interested in Will Andrews, who is preparing to go to Europe to study. You know he sings at St. Luke's and has a fine baritone voice of quite unusual volume, besides which he is young—only twenty-four—and exceedingly good looking. He is to give a concert at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium on April 29th, which promises to be a smart affair. Mrs. Salisbury has taken him up and is to give a reception in his honor before the concert. Mamma, Leila and I have been attending Archdeacon Webber's addresses, and Papa and Arthur are quite enthusiastic about the half-hour noon services at the Merchants' Exchange. They say they are simply packed, which seems surprising when one considers how indifferent men are as a rule to all things connected with religion. I don't believe I have ever met a more inconsistent woman than my mamma. You know she has condemned all my lenten junketing, and yet she did not even dream of refusing Mrs. Alvord's invitation to lunch on Tuesday afternoon. It was a pink luncheon, and the table was so pretty, mamma said. Mrs. Whitelaw Reid was very handsomely gowned. I believe the affair was to have been given after Easter, as Mrs. Alvord is a close stickler for Lenten observances. However, as Mrs. Reid is to leave for the East on Saturday it had to take place this week or not at all. And now, diary dear, I must be off to church. I am going regularly every afternoon for these two weeks. So farewell. MISS CRICKET.

***

The spirit of Lent is observed among the church people of Oakland far more rigidly than on this side of the bay. This is especially noticeable among the young people, who heroically refuse invitations to opera or theater, and have actually been known to say an unwilling nay to that joy of maidenly hearts—a girls' luncheon. Among the matrons the tea and thimble parties abound, and the Grandmothers' Club continues to grow in numbers and in popularity. These ladies, in addition to the milder amusements of sewing, have introduced cards into their afternoon program with much success. Mrs. Robert Watt entertained the Lenten "Thimble Bee" again last week. All the articles that they are now making will be sold at a sale to be given after Easter. These ladies have also organized a sewing school in West Oakland, and have seventy pupils, ranging from six to thirteen years of age.

Few children's entertainments are as amusing as the "dolls' party" given last week by Misses Freda and Helen Button to twenty-three of their little girl friends. The house was trimmed in yellow buttercups, and each little maid appeared carrying her doll. The youngsters were charmingly dressed in soft silks and organdie frocks, while the dolls were gorgeous Parisian importations for the most part. They played games, fed the dolls and dilated upon the virtues of their respective babies, as is the fashion, I am led to believe, among mothers of an older growth.

A birthday surprise party was given to Mrs. John Stanly on Tuesday afternoon by her daughter, Mrs. Cayhill. The afternoon was spent in playing cards. Mrs. Wheaton, Mrs. Folger and Mrs. Bromwell carried off the prizes. There are a few informal lunches to chronicle this week, among them: Mrs. T. L. Barker gave a married ladies' affair to fourteen on Wednesday last, and Mrs. Will Henshaw entertained several of the Deux Temps set on Thursday. The only tea of any degree of interest was given on Tuesday afternoon by Mrs. Frank Brigham in honor of Miss Peck. About fifty people were invited. During the afternoon several musical selections were given.

Mrs. F. M. Smith gave a very smart entertainment on Friday evening to the members of the First Congregational Church. An interesting musical program was followed by supper in the ball room on the third floor. The two hundred guests were seated at round tables decorated in pink begonias and maiden hair ferns. Special cars were run during the evening from Oakland. Mrs. Smith was very prettily gowned.

Mr. H. O. Hunt, formerly the organist of St. John's Church, announces an organ concert at Hamilton's Hall on April 29th.

Miss Lou Wall is rapidly recovering from her injuries and anticipates leaving New York for home on April 13th. Miss Wall is now able to walk with a crutch. There seems to be a peculiar fatality attached to the Oakland maidens as far as casualties are concerned. While the bicycling craze prevailed numberless girls were laid up with sprained ancles, broken knees, etc., and the scourge still continues, Miss Florence Hush being the latest addition to the list. She was exercising in the gymnasium, and jumping over some of the lower bars, when she fell and dislocated her knee. She was taken home and on alighting from the carriage again injured it, tearing the ligaments. It is now in a plaster cast, and Miss Hush hopes to be able to walk in the course of the next two months.

Now that the Transvaal is again a great question, and Cecil Rhodes is the hero of London, there ought to be something more than a passing interest in the lecture which Mr. H. A. Butters has promised to give in aid of the Balboa boulevard. No one knows more about South African than Mr. Butters. He amassed great wealth there and had many experiences. He made a collection of fine photographs, with which he will illustrate his talks—there are to be two of them—and the Christian Association has tendered the use of its beautiful hall. The first lecture is to-night and the second a week hence.

MISS GEORGIE CAYVAN

Who begins an engagement at the Columbia next Monday in "Squire Kate"

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

MODES FOR MALES

What One Must Wear to be Saved From Unfashionableness.

The waistcoat is the garment of premier importance this season. His Highness of Wales has so decided, and so must it be. There are all sorts of them, and they may be worn at any time. Silk waistcoats of various degrees of conspicuousness are much in vogue, but the double-breasted Newmarket is probably the most popular. It is made up in wool, plaids or brocaded mixtures, and has buttons and buttonholes, so it may be fastened close up about the neck, if the owner be so ill-advised as to desire it.

Double-breasted sack coats are the proper thing for business purposes, and the three-button cutaway, which is about as appropriate, is to be long of waist and short of skirt. There is a call for slightly padded shoulders. The full dress coat is about the same, but it has a rival which promises to be popular among men of fine form. It is a species of double-breasted swallow-tail, which one is supposed to wear buttoned, and with it is worn a waistcoat, the edges of which show beneath. Trousers are to be very much smaller, measuring sixteen inches about the bottom. They are long at heel, the curve catching the instep. The loose hanging Chesterfield, the top coat for universal wear, will have its looseness exaggerated to absurdity. The edges will be corded, and the cuffs, collar and revers decorated. The paletot, which is graceful in contour, may be worn safely on all occasions.

In haberdashery, color will run riot; jacqueminot, old pink, olive, reseda, charmille, and blue in every comparative stage from ciel to navy. In shirt materials batiste, percale, divinity and madras divide honors, and clouded and stripe effects are to be quite the thing. They are very popular at present. Shirts for full dress wear, one authority informs us, may have soft full fronts, or if so desired, plaited bosoms, but I presume the plain effect will remain proper among conservative dressers. Cuffs are rounded at corners and worn with chain links. In shirts for ordinary wear, pinks and blues are quite correct. Clouded effects are smart, but the stripe's the thing—those running diagonally across the bosom for the whimsical, but for the ordinary man of quiet taste stripes running vertically are more desirable. Real novelty shirtings have a touch of black in their construction. A thread of black among the brilliant pinks, blues and greens, gives tone and lends a subduing influence. Windsor scarfs take the lead for neckwear, and are to be broader and longer than ever. Old-time scarfrings are used to some extent in tieing them, and by this means flowing ends and puff effects are obtainable. The broad tie is proper for a business shirt; handkerchiefs and tie must invariably match or be in harmony. Undressed kids fastened by one button of smoked pearl are the gloves for street wear, and lavender and white decoratively stitched are worn with frock coats and Tuxedo jackets. White gloves are permissable only for evening use. Like to the rainbow will be underwear—it is to be seen in green, lavender, sky blue and old rose mixtures, in in some instances in red of bewildering shades. The garments will have broad satin facings and bindings of galloon. Hosiery is to be vivid in coloring, but black with embroidered instep will be most popular.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

FROM 3 TO 23 (?)

The Eventful Career of the Girl With the Diamond Tooth.

An ex-Human Fly with a diamond tooth, gowned in lavender and lace, with a tot in her arms, seated upon a divan sprinkled with dozens of photographs of herself and booked for contracts till the end of the year 1898. A puzzle. Find the heroine!

It is easy to find the diamond tooth; there it is, glittering in the southeast corner of her smile, as if she had taken a small bite of an arc light.

It was easy to find the photographs, too,—there they were, of Mollie Thompson as Topsy in Kiralfy's Spectacular Combination, as the "Gay Parisienne," when she drove onto the stage of the Oxford Music Hall, London, in a victoria drawn by two live horses trained for the stage, with a little coach dog trotting between their feet,—as she was when she sang her great song, "You Don't Dare

To!" in Johannesberg,—and all the rest of them.

But was this she who had been the "Human Fly" and had walked in vacuum shoes across the roof of Barnum's big tent, with her hair hanging down like a No. 7 sable paint brush? She will never do the Human Fly again, for the last time she missed the net, and fell upon a pile of stones, and it cost her four months in the hospital. The life of the Human Fly is likely to be eventful, for a Human Fly has no wings.

Mollie Thompson swore with tears in her eyes that she was NOT born on the stage, and that she never went NEAR a theater till she was three years old! The child in her arms was all of that, but had never danced the Highland Fling in the Bella Union Theater as her aunty had, nor had she traveled with her father's company and done children's parts until she was promoted to be a full-fledged soubrette—with a diamond tooth.

Mollie Thompson may be twenty-three years old, as her agent asserts—as, too, her diamond may be worth $500—one wouldn't like paste in one's mouth and so it is undoubtedly genuine;—but if she is only twenty-three and could possibly have done more things than she has done, she would have had to work Sundays. After her Highland Flings she went on the road. Her father was a star and she a juvenile asteroid, having learned to talk and to dance of the same nurse. Mlle. Aimee excited her to interest, and Mollie Thompson aspired to become a Human Fly. She discovered the maker of Mlle.

Aimee's vacuum shoes, and for two years she crawled across the roof of a circus tent. After her tumble she forswore the pendulum gait and the flying trapeze, and transferred her acrobatic varieties to the stage.

See Mollie Thompson now, the inventor of a skirt that will preserve a lady's modest aspect while she stands on her head; an umbrella-like costume with springs that keep one's petticoats from opening. It was a great achievement, invaluable to ladies who turn flipflaps, head over heels, for other people's amusement.

A few years as a Human Umbrella, however, was enough for one who had been a Fly in her time. Her ambitions soared toward the possession of a diamond tooth.

She played in "A Pair of Jacks" and she played in "The Hustler," but still no diamond tooth! A six months' journey across the Oxford Concert Hall stage in the Gay Parisienne's victoria brought her at length to the promised land. To Paris for a diamond tooth went Mollie Thompson;—out went ivory, in went gold and now she smiles a $500 jeweled smile.

There is money in vaudeville. Mollie Thompson was booked for years ahead, like a bud at her first ball. She sang "You Don't Dare To!" in English on the Continent with foreign gestures and cosmopolitan cart-wheels. Mollie Thompson must have her heels in the air, or she's not happy.

A whirl in South Africa, a season or so doing handsprings in Australia, that all the world may see the diamond tooth, and behold her back in San Francisco in boy's clothes for the first time in her life, trying to smoke cigars on the Morosco stage, wondering what men do with their hands, anyway, and longing for skirts again, no matter how short they may be. And engaged up to the end of the year 1898! Small need to patronize local fortune tellers has Mollie Thompson. She has her future in cold black and white, and, like the Milkmaid, while she has the diamond tooth, "her face is her fortune."

MISS MOLLIE THOMPSON

Starring as a soubrette at Morosco's Grand Opera House
Bushnell, photo

The scene of "The Spirit of an Illinois Town" Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) by Mary Hartwell Catherwood, is set in a prairie settlement called Trail City, a place of scattering homes, real estate offices and twirling windmills. The story, which has appeared in the "Atlantic Monthly," is well written, very well written, but one arises from a perusal of it sad and unsatisfied, with deepened impressions of the melancholy of existence. One is relieved to know that Sam marries Lucia, but that is all there is to be glad for. Poor Kate, "the spirit of the town," is killed by a cyclone just when she has had her greatest happiness, and Seth's ungrateful wife makes his life miserable by turning up inopportunely instead of obligingly dying, or at least staying away. There is litle pleasure in reading such a tale as "The Spirit of an Illinois Town." Like the incidents of life, its action leaves one longing for happy conclusions.

An interesting book on birdology is Olive Thorne Miller's "Upon the Tree Tops" (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) Mrs. Miller is an authority on birds and she writes of their homes and habits with an enthusiasm that is most infectious. The book is illustrated by J. Carter Beard.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

AT THE PLAYS

The Personality and Performances of Otis Skinner—Shows of the Week.

Mr. Otis Skinner should have commenced his engagement at the Baldwin with "A Soldier of Fortune" rather than with "His Grace de Grammont." The former is infinitely the more pleasing play of the two, and the company appears to decidedly better advantage in it. There is less of the impossible in the matter of situations and the like, although heaven knows there are enough of impossibilities to startle one out of his senses. Skinner has my sympathy, and something of my affection. He is a manly, dashing, heroic figure of a man, nas a full neck, a well-rounded head, and eyes clear as a hawk's. His voice is full and round, and he is, indeed, a typical soldier of fortune. He looks and acts the dare-devil soldier who would willingly lead a forlorn hope, or carve out his destiny with his blade. But you have the impression all the while that in some way he is "missing it" in the selection of his repertoire. You have seen women who have just missed being beautiful. Well, Skinner impresses me somewhat in the same fashion that this kind of woman does. You feel there is merit there, but you feel, too, that it is just missing success. He seems not to have found a play that will fit his abilities and yet draw. "A Soldier of Fortune" and "His Grace de Grammont" are not up to date. They do not come within a mile of touching the demands of the theatre-goer, and this weighs heavily against him. His company is good. For instance, Maude Durbin made a most attractive Blanche Daubigny. She has a sweet manner and a pair of handsome eyes, which she uses to advantage. Sara Truax, Miss Aberle, Naomi Roberts and Mary Breyer were all most acceptable, the house was appreciative, even enthusiastic, but it was not crowded, and that's the test, after all.

"The Waifs of New York" will be the attraction at Morosco's next week. It is the play that made Kate Emmett famous, and it contains any amount of realism, including a real fire engine drawn by real horses. Miss Mollie Thompson as Willie Rufus introduces some new songs and dances, jumps into a net from the third story of a blazing house with the baby heoroine in her arms, and, later on, again saves the life of the child by clinging to a trestle while a train rushes furiously over it. Mlle. Loretto, late of the "Prodigal Father" company, introduces several specialties, and Fred Ford, a boy tenor of remarkable register, is also to sing.

The new people at the Orpheum next week include the Merrilees Sisters, premier singers and dancers. They are clever young women, and have been for two seasons with "Old Hoss' Hoey of Evans and Hoey. Harris and Walters, eccentric comedy duo, who introduce a lot of up-to-date songs and topical hits, are also on the list, as are Kronemann Bros., grotesque gymnasts, and Evans and Vidocq, conversational artists. The Rays make their final appearances.

Primrose and West's minstrels follow Otis Skinner at the Baldwin, opening on Sunday evening, April 18th. The company numbers over one hundred members, and is the most complete minstrelsy organization before the public. The combination is first rate, and includes, besides George Wilson, George W. Primrose, William West and a number of colored singers, who give a distinct character to the ensemble.

Miss Dorothy L'hote's debut at the Calliornia last week in "An Unequal Match" was very much of a success. In the trying role of Hester Grazebrook, Miss L'hote looked charming and made a most agreeable impression. She is a tall, slender blonde, with good features and engaging personality. Miss L'hote, who is, by the way, a Stanford girl, will leave shortly for the East, where several good openings are awaiting her.

Next week the Tivoli will put on Sir Jules Benedict's beautiful Irish opera, "The Lily of Kilarney," with Laura Millard as Eily O'Connor, Elvia Crox Seabrooke, Anne Chute; Rys Thomas, Hardress Cregan; J. P. Raffael, Danny Mann; Ferris Hartman, Mr. Corrigan, and W. H. West, Father Tom. A number of new pieces will be given after the Easter holidays, including the first production of an annual review entitled "Miss Frisco."

The benefit for the new club house of the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association will come off at the California on Friday evening, April 23. The feature of the performance will be a fairy extravaganza, "The Fairy Bride," in which one hundred children will take part, introducing a number of pretty songs and dances.

Miss Pearl Ladd will shortly give a piano recital at the California. Miss Ladd, who is only thirteen years of age, is exceptionally talented, and plays the most difficult compositions, including Beethoven concertos and Liszt rhapsodies.

Hugh Conway's famous drama "Called Back" will be given at the Alcazar next week. The play has been one of the greatest dramatic successes of the time, and in the hands of the Alcazar Company should have a satisfactory production.

The sixth and last concert of the most successful series of symphony concerts ever given in this city by a local organization will take place at the Columbia Theatre Thursday, April 22d, instead of the 15th, as that day falls on Holy Thursday.

Wadsworth Harris of the Otis Skinner company gave a dramatic recital in Marysville on Saturday, March 27th, at the residence of N. D. Rideout. Mr. Harris, who is a reader of much ability, delighted a large audience.

Ward and Vokes are soon to appear at the Columbia in their success "A Run on the Bank," now in its third and last season.

Indications do not promise that we shall see any "elaborate simplicity" this season or simplicity of any kind—nothing but general "fussiness" and frivolity from the top of a bunchy neck ruche to the hem of a much-ruffled skirt. Stately belles and "Gibson girls" have had their day, at least for a time, so would seem to say the first installment of spring models which you know are always designed for the American market. This would imply that we know what is to be worn in America before we have any reason for discovering what the Parisienne is going to adopt; which is largely true, although the couturiere is not the sole autocrat in the matter. Between her and the defined modes of the spring stands the buyer; generally a man or woman of such long experience that one wonders where his apprenticeship was passed, and perhaps, after all, successful "buyers" are born, not made, and know instinctively what their feminine public will choose, like a successful manager of foreign stars and music-hall novelties.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

J. W. Carmany, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

Mr. Hermann Schwarze (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

A stove is like a husband —
A good one is a treasure and a pleasure
But should you perchance a bad one get
'T were better far you ne'er had met.

Get a "Winthrop" and be happy!
THEY MAKE KITCHEN WORK A PLEASURE
CHAS. BROWN & SON
807 Market St., Flood Bldg., S. F.

MRS. ATHERTON'S NOVEL

An Excellent Story, in Which There is Both Action and Reflection.

There have been published within the twelve-month two interesting novels purporting to treat of contemporaneous American life. "Rose of Dutcher's Cooly" essayed to present the girlhood and growth of a daughter of the middle West. She was born and reared on a Wisconsin farm, was trained under the coeducational system at Madison University and escapes from the travails and restrictions of farm life to find work and recognition in Chicago. In "Theron Ware" the problem is less a question of environment, though the conditions which govern both dramatis personae and plot are as purely American. That book exhibits the disintegration of an individual by stress of exterior relationships with which he was too weak to cope, and introduced, incidentally, a phase of church politics which made an excellent and novel background. The life of a country town and the play of a set of original characters on one another contributed to produce a brilliant if unconvincing effect. Quite as interesting as either of these, if less broadly founded, is "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," (John Lane) by Gertrude Atherton.

Sitting aside, for an instant, the plot, one realizes there is an immense amount of material in this book—material in the sense of observation of certain phases of American life. They are not the phases which Hamlin Garland or Harold Frederic have treated, nor will an acquaintance with the works of Edgar Fawcett or W. D. Howells instruct one as to the existence and principles of this world of Mrs. Atherton's. She has devoted thought and study to the creation of her heroine and the composition of her background, and she has produced a book that will surely attract attention and induce discussion. It is radical in its interpretation of social questions, daring in its conclusions and most uncompromising in its criticism of religion, journalism and matrimony. Withal it is brilliant with color. The narrative is kaledioscopic. One flits from the parlors of a Christian Temperance home to the apartments of a comic opera prima donna. Existence in the ancestral parlors of an aristocratic mansion on the Hudson is suceeded by life in a hall bedroom in a New York boarding-house. From society which Patience adorns as the beautiful wife of Beverly Peel, a scion of the Four Hundred, she flits to journalism, in which she gains prominence as a reporter on the "Evening Day." Returning to nurse her invalid husband, she is accused, at his death from an overdose of morphine, of having administered the drug to release herself. She is tried and defended by a brilliant advocate, whom she had known in her childhood and who realizes all her masculine ideals, but is convicted, sentenced to be electrocuted and is actually in the execution chair at Sing Sing awaiting the death shock when a reprieve delivers her into the arms of the advocate, who has finally proven her innocence. Add to this the scenes of her childhood in Monterey, her life with a drunken mother on the Sparhawk ranch off Carmel Bay, and you have a narrative sufficiently varied to win the sufferages of innumerable readers.

After reading "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times" it would be preposterous to deny Mrs. Atherton's ability. Even if the characters be superficially constructed they are extremely well done and decidedly interesting. One's experience may not contain a woman who has such an undue allowance of beauty, magnetism and intelligence as the heroine, but that renders her none the less delightful. One may realize that the vicissitudes of of Patience's career represent rather the ambition of her creator to rehearse phases of life than the essential outcome of the elements in her character, but the scenery and the details are so intrinsically fascinating that one forgives the artifices by which they are introduced. Besides, there is no artificiality about the style, which is excellent, being direct, decisive and graphic. Indeed, barring the chapters of Patience's childhood, which lack conviction and the final scene which is mere melodrama and untrue this is certainly a capital piece of fiction.

There are a number of well-planned and highly dramatic situations, most of which fit naturally into the narrative. Mrs. Atherton is certainly to be congratulated on her management of the case against Patience. The chain of circumstances compels the verdict.

Quite recently Mrs. Atherton attracted an international unpopularity by her characterization of the American male as a mere machine of commerce and vastly inferior both to the female product of this glorious country and to the ordinary Englishman. This view she emphasizes in her book. She is especially severe on the manner of wooing which the New York man affects. Patience is complaining to Hal, the sister of Beverly Peel, whom she subsequently marries, of the attempt of said Beverly to kiss her. Hal, who is up in the ways of society, men, responds:

"You mustn't take life so tragically. I've had several weird experiences myself, although I'm not the kind that men lose their heads about as a rule; only given the hour and the occasion, some men will lose their head about any woman. Perhaps I should have said New York men. They are a rare and lovely species. They admire God because he made himself of their gender and knew what he was about when he invented woman. I was out on a sleighing party one moonlight night last winter, and on the back seat with a man I'd never seen out of a ballroom before. The way that man's legs and arms flew around that sleigh made my hair curl. You see, a lot of us are fast, but then plenty of us are not. The trouble is that the men can't discriminate, as we look pretty much alike on the outside. They're not a very clever lot—our society men—and they don't learn much until they've been taught. Then when they are forced to believe in your virtue they feel rather sorry for you, and later on are apt to propose—if you have any money."

GERTRUDE ATHERTON

* *

Subesequently Latimer Burr, whom Hal is engaged to marry, is introduced to Patience, and is much taken with her. It is their first meeting mind, and this is how he comforts himself:

"I never talked so well," he said. "You inspired me;" and he took her hand in the mater-of-fact manner she knew so well.

"You talked quite as well before you saw me—"

"I knew you were there—"

"Kindly let me have my hand. I have only two—"

"Nonsense! Let me hold your hand. I want to! I am going to— Why are you—"

"Haven't you Hal's hand?"

"Oh, my God! You don't expect me to go through life holding one woman's hand? Hal is the most fascinating woman in the world, and I love her—but I want you to let me love you, too."

"It is quite immaterial to me whether you love me or not; and, I think, if you want plain English, that you are a scoundrel."

"Oh, come, come. You—you—must know more of the world than to talk like that. Why am I a scoundrel?" He looked much amused.

"You are engaged to one woman and are making love to another."

"Well, what of that so long as she doesn't know it? I shall be the most uxorious and indulgent of husbands—but faithful—that is not to be expected."

"You must have great confidence in me. Suppose I describe this scene and conversation to Hal?"

"You will not—not out of regard for me, but because you love Hal—dear little girl!"

* *

Though rebuffed on this occasion, Burr tries again, and airs some theories which Mrs. Atherton would have us believe are generally lived up to by Gotham gentlemen:

"A beautiful woman that does not love her husband always loves another man."

"Or is willing to be loved by the first man that happens to have no other affair on hand."

"You have said that you like me."

"I didn't say I loved you!"

"I'd make you!"

"Oh!" with a deep contempt he was incapable of understanding, "you couldn't. But tell me another thing; I'm very curious. Has it never occurred to you that a woman must be wooed, that it is somewhat necessary to arouse sentiment and feeling in her before she is willing to advance one step? Why, you and your kind demand her off-hand in a way that is positively funny. What has become of all the old traditions?"

"Oh, bother," he said. "Life is too short to waste time on old-fashioned nonsense. If a man wants a woman he says so, and if she's sensible and likes him she meets him half way. Men and women of the world know what they want."

"That is all there is to love, then? It no longer means anything else whatever?"

"Oh—you are all wrong. If you were not a spiritual woman I wouldn't cross the room to win you. One can buy the other sort. It is your spirituality, your intellectuality, that fascinates me as much as your beauty."

* *

Not alone to the male element of New York society does this critic confine her strictures. The women impress her as thin, artificial creatures:

He glanced about at the girls in their bright gowns, which clung to their tiny waists and hips, their narrow chests and modest busts, with the wrinkleless perfection that has made the modern milliner the god he is. Their polished skin and brilliant shallow eyes, their elegant sexless forms, their haughty poise and supercilious air, laid aside among themselves but always in reserve, their consciousness of caste, were the several parts of a unique and homogeneous effect, which, Patience confided to Mr. Wynne, must mark out the New York girl in whatever wilds she trod.

"Oh, it does," he said. "The New York girl is sui generis, and so thoroughly artificial a product that it seems incredible she can exist through another generation. I will venture to predict that the species will be extinct in three, and that American women of a larger and more human type will gradually be drawn into New York, and found a new race, so to speak. Why, it seems to me that the children of these women must be pigmies—imagine one of those girls being the mother of a man. It is well that New York is not America."

* *

The most entertaining pages of the narrative are those in which Patience Sparhawk turns journalist. There is a James E. Field, the editor and proprietor of "The Day," evidently a portrait of Charles A. Dana of the "Sun"—a clever characterization—to whom she applies for a post. She traverses the "Day" building and is turned over to Morgan Steel, who incarnates the type of man evolved by the "new journalism" of which we now hear so much. This is an abbreviated rendering of the scene:

"What can you do?" he asked coldly.

"Oh, nothing," she said desperately, "absolutely nothing. I suppose you feel like remarking that the 'Day' is not a kindergarten."

"Well, it certainly is not. Nevertheless, as Mr. Field thinks that you have ability, and wishes you to write for his paper, I, of course, shall do all I can to abet him. I shall begin by giving you a few words of advice. Have you a good memory; or should you prefer to write them down?"

He spoke very slowly, as if he had a deep respect for the value of words.

"I have read a great deal," said Patience, proudly, "and my memory is very good indeed."

There was a faint twitching of one corner of Mr. Steele's mouth, but he continued in the same business-like tone:—

"Read the 'Day' through carefully, morning and evening. Observe the style in which facts are presented, and the general tone and atmosphere of the paper. Cultivate that general style, not your own. Remember that you are not on this newspaper to make an individual reputation, but to become, if possible, a unit of a harmonious whole, and to give the public the best news in the style to which this newspaper has accustomed it. When you are sent on an assignment remember that you are to gather facts—facts. Keep your eyes open, and cultivate the faculty of observation for all it is worth. When you have gathered these facts put them into as picturesque a shape as you choose—or as you can. But no rhetoric, no rhapsodies, no flights, no theories. If the facts admit of being treated humorously, treat them in that way, by all means—that is, if you can imitate a man's humor, not a woman's flippancy. A good many women can. And never forget that it must not be your humour but the inherent humor of the subject. Be concise. When you feel disposed to say a thing in ten words say it in five. That is all I can think of at present. Be here at 8 o'clock to-morrow, and I will give you an assignment."

C.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

$100 Reward $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

QUALITY IS NOT SACRIFICED FOR QUANTITY
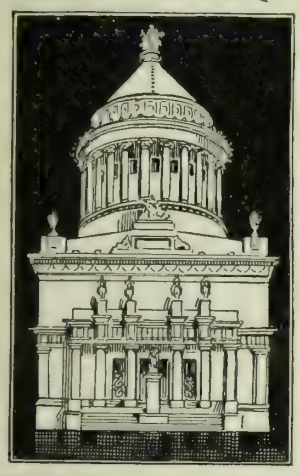
IN
KEYSTONE MONOGRAM WHISKEY

The largest bottle of the finest Whiskey in the world

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
Sherwood & Sherwood
San Francisco
Portland
Los Angeles

THE APRIL CENTURY



GRANT MEMORIAL NUMBER

General Horace Porter describes the new Tomb of General Grant and writes most interestingly on "Campaigning with Grant." There are other articles on General Grant and much besides, including first chapters of a new serial story.

Ready on all news-stands April 1st,—a superb number of "The Greatest of Magazines."

FINE FUR AND SEALSKIN GARMENTS TO ORDER

Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast . . . .

AD. KOCOUR
Fashionable Furrier
5½ Kearny Street
OPPOSITE CHRONICLE BUILDING

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of
Artificial Stone in all its branches
Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty
Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

THE THEATRES

Certain Tribulations of a Disillusionized Playgoer.

Sone one ought to write a book on theater nuisances. The lady with the all-obscuring hat is not the only nuisance in the house. There are others. I expect it was realized long ago that indifference to the rights of our neighbors is merely a development of one form of selfishness. I remember being assured once that the best way to discover a man's real character is to go camping with him. Three nights at the theater, however, will evoke all the selfishness and vanity there is in a man quite as effectually as a camping trip.

But, to my nuisances, or at least the most common of them: You all know the chatter-box, usually female, but often otherwise. She, or he, is one of my particular detestations. Probably "she saw the same play in New York," and rattles off the minutest circumstances under which she was vouchsafed that pleasure, and is so permitted to contribute to my discomfort. The curtain has gone up, and just as sure as there is a touching dramatic scene, she is bound to declare: "Why, that is not the same man who had that part in New York. This company is not half as good as the one I saw in New York. Now look! That is the villain. Isn't he handsome! Just delicious. Now he'll come in again—no, they don't kill her, they only think they do at first. Now watch him." And so she rattles along happy in the sound of her own voice, but she prevents all of her neighbors from enjoying the performance. One night at "Gismonda," two young gentlemen from New Zealand wore my patience thin in the same manner. They sat behind me and discussed the manners and customs prevailing in Antipodean theaters, and I fervently wished they were back in their island home never to return.

"The man who goes out to see a friend" has been worn almost threadbare, but still he is the same old nuisance. Recently at the French opera they were singing "Les Huguenots." I noticed an old gentleman and his wife who were located in the end seats and had settled themselves down comfortably to enjoy the music and the singing, but an unkind fate had placed a stupid young idiot in the same row, who insisted on going out after every curtain fall and not returning until the next act had fairly commenced. I watched the old gentleman's ire rise with a good deal of sympathy, and I did hope that he might finally smite the Jack-a-napes the last time he performed the trick, but he didn't.

They are running a spectacular burlesque entitled "Don Juan Ad Lib." at the Tivoli this week, and are doing very well with it. Ferris Hartman's costume in the first act offers the student of surgery an admirable opportunity to study anatomy. I don't think it is possible for any other human being other than Hartman to devise such weird and ridiculous garments as he manages to invent. One cannot but think how Ferris would shine in the back row of the French ballet with the costume he wears in "Don Juan." William H. West is amusing as Lambro, a retired Irish pirate. He is a versatile actor, and his work is entitled to a great deal of credit. Some friend of Laura Millard ought, in all kindness, to advise her to practice before a mirror, so that she might avoid the muscular tension that draws her mouth so out of shape. She is a comely young lady, and has a most pleasing voice, but her production is marred by this habit, which she has probably unwittingly fallen into, and which I am inclined to think could easily be corrected. Otherwise it is a most acceptable performance she gives, and my criticism is intended as suggestion rather than as censure. Besides the stars, there are in "Don Juan" pirates, sea-nymphs and fishermen, slaves and fisher-girls, with ballets and dancing to suit the most exacting. B.

* *

In "Wild Oats" the Alcazar company makes its first attempt at old English comedy, and the attempt may be termed a success. The best work in the production is done by George Osbourne as "Ephriam Smooth," Francis Powers as "Rover," and Adele Belgarde as "Lady Amaranth." Mr. Osbourne's "Smooth" is an exceptionally good bit of acting, thoroughly artistic and consistent. Mr. Powers looks well as the strolling player, and his work is excellent, the best he has given us for some time, but his habit of elevating his eyebrows is very bad and should be discouraged. Miss Belgarde as the demure "Lady Amaranth" awakes to love and the vanities of life in a most charming manner. Her simple gown becomes her as well as her modest demeanor. May Buckley's "Jane" is a dainty bit of work, and Gordon Foster's "Sim" amusingly clever.

Otis Skinner gives a double bill at the Baldwin this evening consisting of "The Merchant of Venice" and "Katherine and Petruchio," a condensed version of "The Taming of the Shrew." The third and last week of Mr. Skinner's engagement commences Monday evening with a production of "Richard III." Tuesday evening "The Lady of Lyons." "Richard III." will be repeated on Saturday evening and "The Lady of Lyons" at the Saturday matinee. "The Merchant of Venice" and "Katherine and Petruchio" will be given a second time Wednesday night. "Romeo and Juliet" Thursday, and "Hamlet" Friday.

The performance of the French opera company at the California this evening will be the most notable of the entire season. It will include the overture of "William Tell," second act of "L'Africaine," intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana," third act of "La Favorita," with Albers in the cast. "La Navarraise," with Mme. Feodor as Anita, and the grand ballet from "Faust." To-morrow night the company will make its farewell in a performance of "La Traviata." Popular prices wil prevail and the ballet arranged for the occasion will be the most brilliant of the season.

Miss Georgia Cayvan will open at the Columbia on Monday evening in Robert Buchanan's pastoral play, "Squire Kate." Miss Cayvan has had exceptional success throughout her entire season, her new plays and excellent support attracting much attention. "Squire Kate" will run through the first week, and for the second "Mary Pennington, Spinster," will be produced, and also the double bill of "Goblin Castle" and "The Little Individual."

FOR ALLAYING HOARSENESS AND IRRITATION OF THE THROAT, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are wonderfully effective. Avoid imitations,

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

J. F. Cutter
EXTRA
Old Bourbon
has been a staple family and medicinal whiskey for a quarter-century

E. MARTIN
—AND—
CO.
411 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO

Polished
Hardwood Floors
$1.50 per Square Yard
Fine Work—First-class References
INLAID FLOOR CO.
602 Market St., Crocker Building
Telephone Main 5598

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

REASONS FOR USING
Walter Baker & Co.'s
Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

Easter Opening!

MISS I. E. CONNOR has received a large shipment of the latest patterns in

French Millinery,

Bonnets, Hats, Etc.

All our patrons are respectfully invited to call and examine our new display of goods.

EASTER BONNETS AND HATS
A SPECIALTY

MISS I. E. CONNOR
36 Geary Street San Francisco

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97. Beginning MONDAY, April 5 to 19, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S. F. at 12 m. and 12 30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track: buy your tickets to Berkeley.
Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND Co. INCORP'D PROPS

Commencing Monday Evening, April 12th, Third and Last Week of
OTIS SKINNER
Monday, Richard III Tuesday Lady of Lyons
Wednesday, Merchant of Venice and Katherine and Petruchio
Thursday, Romeo and Juliet Friday, Hamlet
Saturday Matinee, Lady of Lyons
Saturday Evening, Richard III
Sunday, April 18, PRIMROSE & WEST'S BIG MINSTRELS

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

Two weeks! Limited engagement of America's Favorite Society Actress
Miss Georgie Cayvan
AND HER ADMIRABLE COMPANY
In a reperto re of New and Interesting Successes!
Week of April 19th
Robert Buchanan's Charming Pastoral Drama
SQUIRE KATE
Week of April 26th, change of bill

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, April 12th
A GREAT BIG BILL
Merrilees Sisters, European Premier Singers and Dancers
Harris & Walters, Eccentric Comedy Duo
Kroneman Brothers, Grotesque Gymnasts
Evans & Vidocq, Barnes & Sisson, Lillie Laurel, Delmore & Lee
Reserved seats 50 and 25c: balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
Commencing Monday, April 12th, Picturesque Production of Sir Jules Benedict's Romantic Irish Opera
The Lily of Killarney
THE COLLEEN BAWN
A Superb Cast! Beautiful Light and Water Effects! Scenery, costumes and accessories all new!
Lovely Ballads, Soul-Stirring Ensembles and Finales! An operatic reproduction of Boucicault's famous play
Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : : MANAGERS
Last performances to-day and to-morrow, matinees and nights, of the famous Old English Comedy, WILD OATS
Monday, April 12th, Grand Scenic Production of Hugh Conway's Superb Play CALLED BACK
Produced with Special Scenery, Costumes and Effects!
The entire company will appear in the play, including Mr. George Osbourne
15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager
Last performances of THE STOWAWAY with its Great Burglary and Yacht Scenes!
Monday, April 12th, Elaborate Scenic Production of Katie Emmet's Great Comedy-Drama
THE WAIFS OF NEW YORK!
A melange of fun, songs, dancing, etc.
Second week of America's Star Soubrette, Mollie Thompson. Many clever artists specially engaged Wonderful Fire Scene! Startling Railroad Scene on Harlem Bridge!
Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

OAKLAND, SAN LEANDRO & HAYWARDS ELECTRIC RY.

Connects with the Broad Gauge Local at Fruitvale every half hour for San Leandro, San Lorenzo and Haywards
Classic and Popular Music every Sunday from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m. at Haywards Park.
The Club House Cuisine is excellent!

RACING

Excellent Two-Year-Old Running—The $10,000 Burns Handicap.

So much has been going on in the racing world during the last few days that special mention is made in other columns of this issue of matters of more than usual importance.

In the latter part of last week some little fickleness on the part of the weather tended to make the going at Ingleside a bit heavy for the close of the meeting, but since the change of scene to Emeryville the moderate amount of rain that has fallen has not been of any serious consequence.

---

The two-year-old form is being gradually reduced to an ascertainable quantity, and, as the distance of races increases with the progress of the year, the difference between good, bad and indifferent begins to display itself; but, as some owners are too persistent in their efforts to make hay while the sun shines, it is not to be expected that the youngsters wil every time run true to form.

Profiting by a somewhat ragged start, in which Michael and Juan del Rico were chopped at the outset, the latter's stable companion Rey El Salto, Flushington and Hermoso made a good showing in the half mile on Thursday week, and finished close together in the order named. The following day Marcus Daly's smart little filly Salmera, sister to Salvation, made a runaway race for a similar distance, nothing else in the field being near her at the finish. On Saturday, in the opening 4½ furlongs, a field of fourteen faced the starter, and were kept dallying at the post some considerable time, owing to the fractiousness of Outlay, who eventually jumped off to a rising barrier with a clear lead of three or four lengths, and, remaining in the front all the way, scored an easy victory, the Baldwin filly Los Prietos just stalling off for second place, Miss Remsen, a neat filly by Owas, the sire of Outlay, who, in turn, was but a head in front of Morniga. On Monday, at Emeryville, the Sir Modred colt Hermoso took the lead in the four furlongs purse, and on this occasion maintained his undoubted speed to the end of the journey, managing to land in second place, with the Salvator colt Bliss Rucker closing up a big gap pretty fast in the last fifty yards. The following day brought to the post a field of 15 maidens for 3½ furlongs, some half the number sporting silk for the first time. The start was an even one, but failed to produce anything like a race. The winner turned up in the unfashionably bred Melvin Burnham (Joe Norwood—Sound), who scored a clever half length victory over Allie Belle, a daughter of the Kentucky sire, imp. Pirate of Penzance. On the same afternoon we were treated to another short cut for the babies, in which no less a number than seventeen tempted fortune. With a position next the rail, and good handling on the part of Slaughter, the imp. Ormonde filly Rosormonde, running in the colors of her lessee, Mr. J. Naglee Burke, held her own throughout the journey and finished up a clear length in advance of Front de Boeuf, notning else in the field being in within reasonable distance of the pair as the winning post was passed. The filly is the second of Ormonde's get to race in America and the first winner born in this country to the great horse.

Wednesday furnished two good two-year-old events, in the first of which Bliss Rucker well earned his first bracket, though the Torso filly Torsida, who ran a close up second, made a great run from a bad start. In the General Arthur Stake, nine-sixteenths of a mile, only six went to the post, all being of the better class. The running was made by Miss Rowena to the head of the stretch, but she had to give way to Michael and Gypceiver halfway down the straight, when it looked as if the Islington colt was going to land the stake. Like a flash, however, Miss Rowena's stable companion, Recreation, who was giving him ten pounds, shot out and with a desperate effort beat the chestnut by a short head on the post, Gypceiver third upwards of two lengths back. The winner thus confirmed her right to be considered especially smart, and it is only a pity that Rey El Salto declined the contest, as the meeting of these two youngsters would have added further interest to the race. It must be remembered that Michael has lately had a pretty good doing and was perhaps hardly at his best. The time for this race was 55 seconds.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream—it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

Since the meeting opened on Monday at Emeryville the fields have been more remarkable for quantity than quality, furnishing little of interest to any but inveterate punters, who have but to find the pea and they are happy. But all this should be sharply corrected when we come to assist to-day at the great $10,000 Burns Handicap for all ages, 1¼ miles, supplemented by the Waterhouse Stakes, $1,250 for two-year-olds, 4½ furlongs. Out of the 72 entries for the former, the richest stake on the coast, 17 have accepted, and from 12 to 15 horses seem likely to come to the post, drawn from the following list: Salvation 120, Vinctor 120, Wheel of Fortue 117, Ruinart 116, Schiller 113, Installator 112, Argentina 112, Yankee Doodle 110, Lobengula 107, Judge Denny 106, Nebuchadnezzar 106, The Roman 105, Grady 102, Candelaria 102, Altamax 100, Osric II. 96, Mollie R. 90. Wheel of Fortune won the event last year, but whether she can repeat the performance under present conditions is doubtful. Much will depend on how the race is run, but Salvation, Ruinart, The Roman and Altamax should be able to give a good account of themselves.

---

The comparatively limited extent to which breeding is now carried on at Palo Alto, and the impending break-up of Mr. William Corbitt's stud farm at Burlingame, must tend to relieve the market, and help others who hold good track and road horses to realize in the future to better advantage than if those two important concerns had continued to breed on the scale that formerly prevailed. California has been a source of supply for the rest of the country for many years now, so far as fast harness horses are concerned, but with the disposal of Mr. Corbitt's stock in New York this month local resources will become notably reduced. The remembrance of this fact should give encouragement to those breeders who are still in the ring. Under the circumstances this does not seem to be the time for them to throw up their hands, especially in view of the steadying effect produced upon the market in the East by considerable purchases to meet the European demand for the American trotting horse. France, Germany, Austria and Russia are all importing good fast horses for speed contests, while the British Isles continue to be a good market for shapely, well-bred animals, with power and action suited for carriage work. Throughout the older countries individuality is of more moment than pedigree, and one perhaps would hardly err in thinking that a like tendency is being developed in the United States.

No one need be afraid to breed good horses, and the scare that has been caused by the absolute cessation of all demand for scrubs has worked nothing but good. Those who raised such animals had really no claim to a profit. The experienced horseman knows well that good horses always are and always will be in demand, for they come but too seldom, and, even when born and raised, remain to be made before any satisfactory disposal can be made of them, excepting racing stock, in which case the buyer must be prepared to run the risk attached to establishing the full market value of the animal, and which is always discounted in the price he pays to the breeder.

It is a strange commentary on the condition of the horse-breeding industry in this State when men who are interested in the largest concerns of the kind, nominally raising fine horses of every description, have to supply their own requirements by buying Eastern horses—when they want carriage horses. This is an actual fact, however, and the horses that are bought are nothing special, but ordinary useful animals. No State or group of States in the Union can do better than California in the matter of thoroughbreds and trotters, and in the face of such a fact as is mentioned there would appear to be a fine opening for the use of capital with intelligence and the requisite horse judgment and experience in breeding and making good carriage horses, not only for local sale, but for outside markets. Indeed, in this regard, the State has not got beyond the days when people used to bring ready-made wooden houses round the Horn, while her forests were full of magnificent timber, just as the fields are now of horses.

BENEDICT.

---

$5,000 will purchase half interest in United States patent controlling one of the most profitable advertising devices ever offered to the public. The device pays 25% per month on cost. Over $4,000 has already been realized from the sale of the right for three counties in California alone. The enterprise is well worth the immediate investigation of the most cautious investor. Serious illness of owner necessitates the sale. Address R. A. L., care The Wave.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

LIBRARY NOTES

There is a most unnatural young woman in "The Mistress of the Ranch" (Harper & Bros.), and her name is Phoebe Ellen. Her sister Anne, however, is charming and amiable and is beloved of Sam Tinker, who does prodigious things on her behalf and finally saves her from the poison which the said Phoebe has administered. There are other sensational incidents—a landslide, an operation on the brain of sister Anne, from which the doctor dies, and sundry other events. There is a certain plot interest in the tale which persuades one to follow it to a conclusion, but otherwise the construction is not brilliant.

"Easter Bells" (Harper & Bros.) is the timely title of Margaret E. Sangster's latest book of verse. The most noticeable, and at the same time the redeeming feature of the work, is the deep religious and sympathetic sentiment.

In her latest book, "A Virginia Cavalier," Mollie Elliott Seawell treats of the boyhood and youth of George Washington. The work is full of local color of the time, brings in some thrilling adventures with Indians, and gives a vivid idea of the maneuvers and customs of the period. (Harper & Brothers.)

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence
Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure
Vina Brandy
Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.
19 Spear St., San Francisco
MANUFACTURERS OF
High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease
DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS
Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

European Tours
When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's greatest Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowest rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.
THOS. COOK & SON
621 Market Street San Francisco

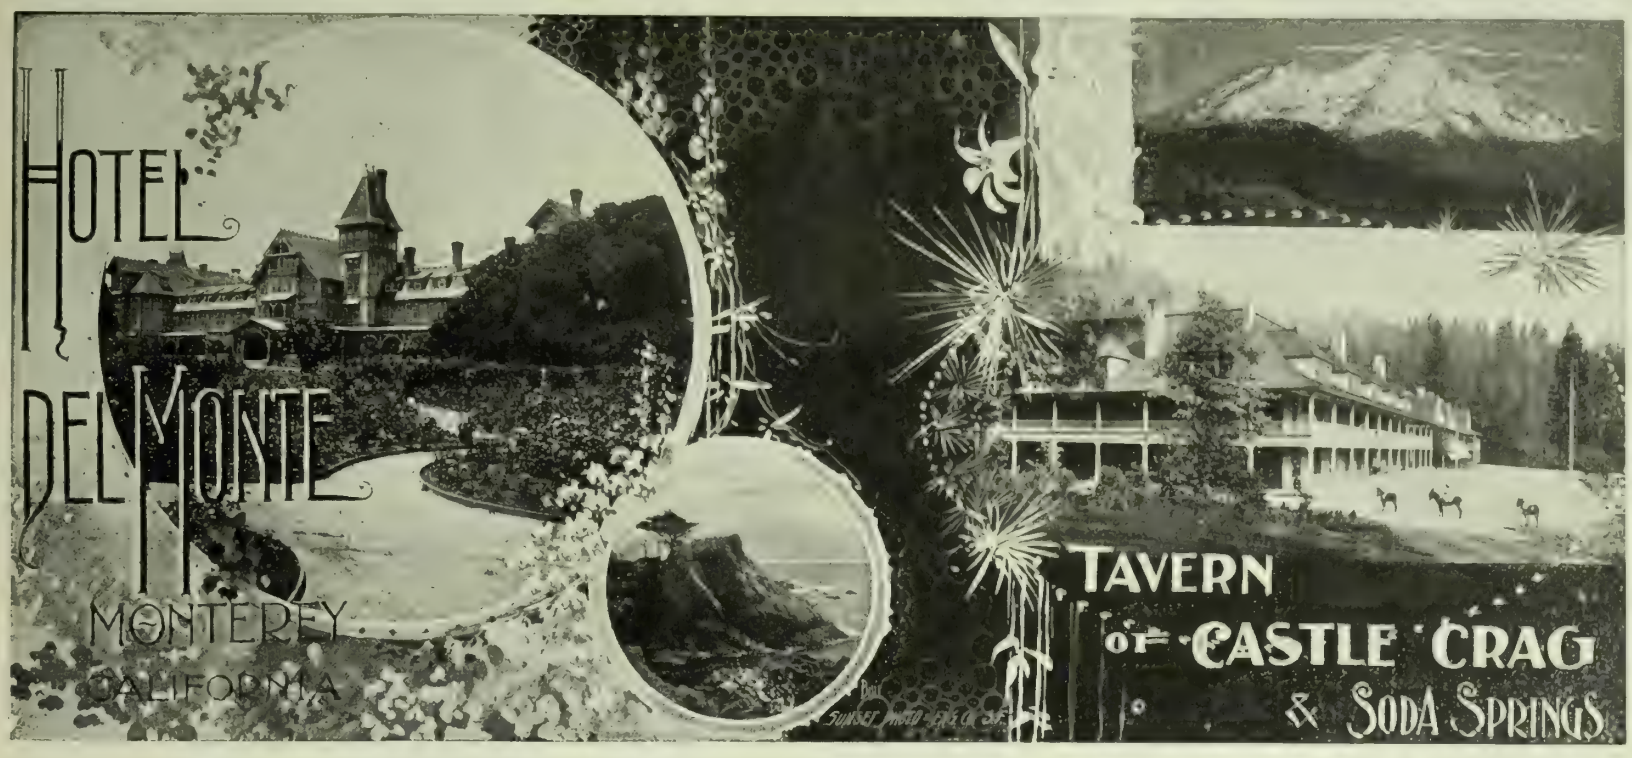
La Grande Laundry
Telephone Bush 21
23 POWELL STREET

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT
Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. P.
Telephone 305

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

In photo-engraving, as in other lines of trade, you sometimes pay superior prices for inferior workmanship. We guarantee superior workmanship, by a new process, at moderate prices. Send for estimates to

THE WAVE PUBLISHING CO.

24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA
ELECTRICAL WORKS
409 MARKET STREET

Peoples Tel. 195 Sunset Tel. 573 Black

THE Dashaway
Stables

130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.
E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

THE LATEST STYLES IN
CHOICE WOOLENS
H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel
Bicycle and Golf Suits

OCEANIC Steamship Company
Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, April 20, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.
S. S. "Monowai," for Australia, Thursday, April 29, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER
DENTIST
22 Geary Street : : First Floor
The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses, billiard tables, brewers, book binders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM O. BERG, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, March 18, 1897.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal.; location of works, Storey Co., Nev.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 111) of Ten Cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 23d day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday the 14th day of May, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine st., San Francisco.

OFFICE OF THE HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING COMPANY, room No. 11, San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 311 Pine street, San Francisco.

To the stockholders of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, and to all others concerned: Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the consent, in writing, of the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, duly filed in the office of said company, the principal place of business of said Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company has been changed from room No. 3 of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to room No. 11, in the same building, where the business of said company will be hereafter transacted. This notice is published in accordance with Section 321 of the Civil Code.

Dated March 19, 1897.
By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Fiestas
Carnivals and
Summer Outings

A grand round of merrymaking throughout the land

La Fiesta de Los Angeles

Will take place in the Southern Metropolis April 20th, and continue five days. Unique day parade of Spanish caballeros, Chinese with their Great Dragon, Mexican vaqueros, etc. Beautiful electric night parade of California flowers. Great Water Carnival, Floral Parade and Battle of Flowers. Novel Street Carnival at night.

Golden Gate Carnival

To be held in San Francisco during the week commencing May 3d, promises to be the most brilliant festival ever witnessed in the west. Unique features never before introduced, and an unbroken succession of surprises and attractions. California's thrilling and romantic history since the days of '49 will be typified, and many novel creations will exemplify her marvelous industrial development. It is proposed to fix this event permanently in the Golden Gate Calendar.

The season for

Summer Outings

Will soon be here. If your plans are not mature, and you desire more information about the many attractive retreats all over the State, send to the General Passenger Agent of the Southern Pacific Company for circulars and folders describing the Camping and other Resorts of the grand Shasta Region, Castle Crags, Lake Tahoe, and neighboring attractions on the Sierra Summits, Yosemite and the Big Trees, the Santa Cruz Mountains, Lake County and Southern California. REDUCED RATES in many directions. Inquire of Southern Pacific Company agents.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. April 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. April 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. April 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. TOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES.; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
301 Montgomery Street

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

A. D. Cheshire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres.
W. O. Macdougall, Secretary

California Undertaking Company

Finest Funeral Parlors in the City

Tel. Main 971 S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary
Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

A gentleman recently entered the Salon d'Or at Monte Carlo, approached the tables where the cards were being shuffled preparatory to beginning the play, and placed notes amounting to $2500 on black. This staking a maximum before the play had begun attracted much attention, and a bystander remarked: "Rather bold play, sir!" "Well," said the player, "I dreampt last night that I saw the table exactly as it is now, and on the first coup black won." The cards being duly cut, the tailleur proceeded to deal out the cards for the first coup, and black won. A suppressed "Oh!" from the bystanders greeted the announcement, and then, from across the table, came, in tones of agonized entreaty, a lady's voice: "What did you have for supper last night? Do tell me!"

M. de Sartines, at one time Chief of the Paris Police, was a master of his profession, and he almost invariably brought to justice any criminal to whom he gave his attention. He was once requested by the Chief of the Vienna Police to discover and seize a fugitive criminal who had fled from Vienna to Paris, and a description of the man accompanied the request. Sartines gave orders for the search, and after two months wrote to the Vienna officer: "I have sought the criminal you described on all sides, and for a long time in vain, but at last the efforts of my agents are rewarded. He is in Vienna, which city he has not left at all. You will find him at Fauborg X——, No. 56. There is a flower-pot in his window."

A gallant captain was called up by his colonel to explain his assaulting the sentry on his return to barracks after dinner on the previous night. The captain had forgotten the incident entirely. The sentry declared that the officer was evidently drunk. The captain's Irish soldier servant, however, emphatically protested that his master was sober. "How is it that you are so sure that he was sober?" asked the colonel. "Did he speak to you?" "He did, sorr." "What did he say?" "He tould me to be sure and call him early in the morning, sorr." "That seems all right," said the colonel; "and did—ah—did the captain say why he wished to be called early?" "He did, sorr. He said he was going to be Queen of May."

In a remote settlement of the Northwest, far away from lawyers and law books, a man was charged before the local solon with having unlawfully taken a small flat-bottomed boat, the property of a neighbor. The charge having been proved, the justice went carefully through the criminal statutes, but could find nothing, in his opinion, bearing on the case except a clause relating to "piracy on the high seas," and accordingly sentenced the offender to death. On the application of the prosecutor, who had no idea that the offense would entail such terrible consequences on the accused, who was the "sole support of six," the sentence was commuted, by consent, to a fine of two dollars and costs.

An old gentleman in Hungary, a short time ago, left all his property, valued at about $10, to Pope Leo. In obedience to the law, the mayor of the town sent His Holiness the following summons: "To His Holiness, residing in the Vatican, Rome, Italy—You are hereby summoned to appear, without fail, on the 15th instant, before me, the undersigned mayor, in the matter of the bequest of the priest, Anton Syurky, deceased. You are further requested to bring with you the amount of the official fee, namely, five florins seventy-five kroitzers." How aggravating it must be for the Holy Father to realize that he is a prisoner, and can't get out!

It was at a table d'hote dinner at a hill station in India that a very young officer just up from the plains found himself seated next to a lady whom he took for one of the grass widows common in those parts. He made himself agreeable, but his neighbor seemed a good deal out of spirits, so he said, sympathetically, "I suppose you cant help thinking of your poor husband grilling down below?" But the lady was a real widow, and when he learned that he changed his seat.

The summit of his ambition had been reached by an aspiring Scotchman. He had been promoted to the Magisterial bench. With head as high in the air as he could carry it, he swaggered along till he went bolt up against a quadruped, which had not the manners to get out of the way of the newly-made dignitary, and was lazily browsing by the wayside. "Man, mind my coo!" cried the indignant owner. "Woman, I'm no longer a man—I'm a bailie!"

The late Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher once made a rather savage remark to her husband concerning Theodore Tilton. "You shouldn't be so bitter against Theodore," remonstrated the famous preacher, in a sympathetic voice: "you shouldn't be so bitter—there's some good in him." "Yes, Henry, I s'pose there must be," said Mrs. Beecher, knitting her brow; "I s'pose there must be, for no good ever came out of him."

An illiterate young man once got a friend to write a letter for him to his sweetheart. The letter was rather prosaic for a love-letter, and he felt that an apology was due to his sweetheart for its lack of tender nothings. It was as follows: "Please excuse the mildness of this here letter, as the chap wot's 'riting it is a married man, and he says he can't 'bide any soft soaping—it allus gives him the spazzums."

An Irish gentleman was dining out the other night, when somebody insulted the Queen. The gallant and loyal Irishman was on his feet in an instant. "Sir," said he to the culprit, "the duello is not now in fashion, but if you had made that remark fifty years ago, I would call you out to-morrow morning!"

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS
AGENTS
222 Market Street
S. F.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULE, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., San Francisco

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

Thoerner & Roesli

FLORISTS

Choice Cut Flowers and Plants
Funeral Designs

Also Artistic Designs made of Imported, Dry, Natural Flowers for Export Purposes a specialty

809 Larkin Street

BETWEEN GEARY AND O'FARRELL, SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company . . . Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

JOHNSON & CO.

New Spring Goods just arrived

Ladies' Jackets to order

Merchant Tailors

24 Montgomery Street

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Chinese Embassy by Flashlight  Dockery's Pure Food Crusade

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 16  SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 17, 1897  PRICE 10 CTS

Squire Kate is the elder of two sisters, and is struggling with poverty

She is in love with George Heathcote, whom she believes returns her regard

But George's affections are set upon her younger sister, Hetty

He is bitterly opposed by his miserly step-father, Gaffer Kingsley

Kate overhears George and Hetty plighting their vows of love

Overcome by the wreck of her hopes, she denounces and repudiates her sister

The shepherd discovers Gaffer's attempt to break up the match by poisoning Hetty

And Kate, exonerated from suspicion, gives her fortune and blessing to the happy pair

"SQUIRE KATE"

A graphic synopsis of the new play at the Columbia Theatre as rendered by Miss Georgia Cayvan's company.

THE WAVE

is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 17, 1897

CONTENTS

Editorials . . . . . 2-3
For Pure Food . . . . . 4
Evolution of a Dispatch . . . . . 5
Things and People: by Boswell Jr. . . . . 6
A Biter Bit: by Justin Sturgis . . . . . 7
Wu Ting Fong . . . . . 8
Stellar Extremes . . . . . 8
A Spring Fancy (Neuvain) by Gelett Burgess . . . . . 9
Views of Leona Heights . . . . . 9
In Society . . . . . 10
The Burns Handicap: by Benedict . . . . . 11
Bas Bleus: a Lenten Literary Discussion . . . . . 12
On Leona Heights . . . . . 12
The Theatres . . . . . 13
Turf Government; by Benedict . . . . . 14
New Stories Re-Told . . . . . 16

A NEW CONSTITUTION.

It is not in human nature to be satisfied with things that are, and this characteristic finds expression from time to time in governments. Twenty years ago there began an agitation in California for a new constitution, which in 1879 resulted in the adoption by the people of a new fundamental law that was as novel as it was vicious and impracticable. The people who wanted the change were deaf to pleading, blind to reason and possessed with an all-consuming itch to bring about a change simply for a change's sake. They wanted a change in a blind, stubborn, unreasoning way, and they got it; and with it came all the ills and misfortunes that conservative predictions had declared would inevitably follow in its train. If punishment could have been confined to the citizen responsible for the innovation we might have made merry over their deserved discomfiture, but this pernicious document affected all men alike, affected the State itself, and drove millions of dollars hurrying eastward for investment, never to return. We have had nearly seventeen years of constant litigation over this abortive "improvement." The dockets of our courts have been crowded, and the State and its citizens put to immense and unnecessary expense in order to establish, defend and assert rights under its provisions. Many of the most objectionable features of the document have been practically nullified and rendered harmless by the judgments of our courts. Property and other rights have been adjusted, settled and determined under it. From all appearances we are about ready to settle down with a knowledge that at last public and private rights have been pretty clearly defined under our present fundamental law. Just as this auspicious hour is approaching there appears a movement to call another constitutional convention and submit to the people another instrument. A demand, general in its nature, for such a change, which is silent as to the specific amendments proposed, is pregnant with mischief to us all. So far no clear statement has been made as to the character of the constitution sought, but in a general and indifferent way it is said: "We need a new constitution," or "Conditions have changed," or "We must keep abreast of the times." These things mean nothing; or they may mean much. The "Call," which seems to be particularly enamored of this movement in behalf of the new constitution, may perhaps offer some reason for its interest. If it has in mind specific changes which it considers necessary or advisable to make, will it suggest what they may be, so that the wisdom of them may be discussed? If our constitution is lame in any particular then it may be amended. If it is lame in many particulars, then also may it in those particulars be amended, piece by piece, section by section, provision by provision, and we shall not take the desperate chance of having the hand of cunning inject into it provisions which may seem innocent upon their face, but which carry with them sinister design and purpose. There is danger in this constitutional convention. There is danger that it may be just as was its predecessor, loaded with gilded nothings to catch the public eye and so blind the people to faults of omission and commission that may not be easily remedied. Will the "Call" suggest wherein it would have our laws amended? And then let us set about in an orderly way to secure such amendment, after a full and fair discussion. It is a little early to discuss this question, but it is one that will be fruitful of discussion in the future, and fruitful, too, of harm, mayhap.

THE FOREST RESERVATIONS.

More than a year ago the President of the United States, in pursuance of a resolution of Congress, requested the National Academy of Sciences to designate a commission, to be composed of men known to possess some knowledge of forestry, who should recommend to the government some course by which a portion of what remains of the public domain might be reserved in perpetuity for the public purposes. The gentlemen appointed on the commission examined, as carefully as the time at their disposal allowed, the remaining areas of public land in which they thought it possible to make such reservations as would tend to preserve the mountains from denudation and to preserve a source of supply for the natural streams and the ditches of regions which depend on irrigation. As a result of their examination the commission recommended to the President to withdraw from entry and sale certain tracts, aggregating about 35,000 square miles of wild lands in remote regions, mostly mountainous and unsettled. Under the authority conferred on him by law, President Cleveland, in the last days of his administration, issued a proclamation reserving the tracts so recommended for public purposes. It was understood, and so declared at the time by the Forest Commission, that their recommendation for the withdrawal of this large area looked, in effect, only to the securing of tracts out of which, after more complete and careful investigation, the final reservations might be carved. It was to give time for a full consideration of the great problem of forestry, and for the elaboration or development of a system of forest administration, that they recommended the immediate withdrawal of a sufficient area to ensure that, when a system of forestry shall be ready, there shall be some forest land remaining to be administered in the public interest.

No sooner was the executive proclamation issued than there arose a clamor from the regions in which the reservations had been made, from which it might easily have been inferred that the people of those parts had been made the victims of the most high-handed robbery and oppression. Protests rained in on the Executive and the legislature. It was whiningly represented that the "poor man" would by the President's action be cut off from his opportunity to make a home for himself in the wilderness; that he would not even be permitted to cut the logs for his humble cabin; that the hardy prospector would be shut out from all opportunity to uncover the stores of mineral wealth within the reserved acres; and that the gentle and honest shepherd would find no pastures for his flocks and must be ruined, in spite of the encouragement given him by the new Dingley tariff, if his sheep were not to be at liberty to devour every green thing that grows on the remnant of the national estate. And the protests and denunciations invariably wound up with the demand that the forest reservations be forthwith "restored to the public domain." The fact that the sole purpose in establishing the reserves was to preserve them as a part of the public domain did not seem to strike the protestants at all. It is one of the remarkable results of the extravagant liberality of our national land policy that land which is protected from private greed, by being reserved for purely public uses, is no longer regarded as "public land."

But it is not the poor settler who is whining and protesting against the policy recommended by the Forest Commission. The lands reserved are not such as are, at this day, attractive to the home-seeker. It has been the aim of the commission not to include agricultural lands in the reserved area. The prospector has wider regions still unexplored than all that are included in the reservations yet made. And as for the sheep-herder and his all-devouring flocks, they are a pestilent nuisance, and we are glad to see them shut out from some portions of the fair wilderness that nature has given us. We in California have had ample experience of the imported barbarian who leads his flocks through the mountains and valleys, leaving behind them not a green thing from the grass roots to the highest reach of a sheep's neck, and we would be glad to see every sheep-owner compelled to keep his sheep on private land, on pain of having them turned into mutton if found trespassing on the public domain. The improved condition of the national parks in this State since the army officers in charge of them have made it unwholesome and very unprofitable for sheepherders to trespass on them, and the contrast with the unprotected forest areas adjoining them, furnish a valuable lesson as to the destructive effects of free sheep-herding on the public lands.

The outcry against forest reserves is not the voice of the people. It is nothing but the selfish clamor of a few individuals who see their opportunities for gratifying their private greed unexpectedly abridged. That Senators and Representatives in Congress are found ready to voice the sentiments of these disappointed land-grabbers is not to be wondered at, and nobody should be deceived by it. The time is past when a representative of the public interest could be expected to refuse the assistance of his official position to a powerful constituent whose interest might be adverse to the real interest of the people. One saw-mill owner can make more noise over this matter than a thousand citizens whose interest is merely that of all other citizens not interested in saw mills.

The people of the State of New York have, at great expense and with much difficulty, bought for the State a small area of timber land in the Adirondack region. This year they are about to devote a million of dollars to effect an enlargement of the area. Of course the saw-mill men and the wood-pulp interests are loud in their objections, but the people of New York pay very little attention to them. So proud are they of their little forest reserve that they have declared in the Constitution of their State that no portion of it shall ever be alienated; and when there was submitted to the people an amendment of the Constitution by which it was sought to authorize the State authorities to dispose of some small portions of the area the amendment was rejected by a majority of more than 330,000 votes.

The proclamation of President Cleveland made, in effect, a free gift to many States of forest areas much greater than that which the people of New York were glad to purchase at a great price. In California we have large areas reserved in the Sierra Nevada which will prove to be more and more valuable to the people of the State as the years pass by. Some time we shall awake to the knowledge of their vital importance to us, and we shall insist that the whole reserved area shall enjoy the admirable protection which the National Parks now receive from the troops assigned to guard them. And now it might be well for the gentlemen of the Sierra Club, and of other organizations of men who want to see some part of our great forests preserved for later generations, to find some means of assuring the government at Washington, and, more especially, our own Senators and Representatives, that the sentiments of Californians on the subject of forest reservations are not accurately voiced by a lot of sheep herders and saw-mill men.

CALIFORNIA AND THE CANAL.

We stand woefully in need of a commercial awakening here in San Francisco, and if harping upon our neglected trade possibilities, and dinning into the manufacturing and commercial ears tales of diminishing trade opportunities, will have a stimulating effect, then we stand ready to contribute to that end. One grows tired of having the public spirit which exists in Chicago constantly brought in view, but even though the illustration be stereotyped, Chicago stands typical of American advancement, and reference to it is necessary in the nature of things. Chicago long ago recognized the danger she might suffer through a Nicaragua Canal, and long ago took steps to obviate those dangers. With the outer world she had no water communication, but her mercantile life set industriously to work, and has finally succeeded in inaugurating a series of canal improvements that will make it possible for foreign ship-bottoms to dock at the Chicago wharves, entering the great lakes by way of the St. Lawrence river. And further than this, the same forces have underaken the great project of connecting the lakes with the Mississippi, and so enabling Chicago to distribute in the river flat-boat the output of her manufacturies and the products of wheat, flour, beef and hams in competition with the world. The construction of the Nicaragua Canal to-day would not be a detriment to our inland metropolis, for it would add markets now impossible to her. We venture to prophesy the early approach of the day when Chicago's commerce on the seas will strike terror to New York mercantile life. We need some Chicago spirit here. We need unity of action. The importer who handles half a million dollars worth of goods per annum in San Francisco, and in the handling employs a dozen clerks, under the present arrangement has no interest in common with the local manufacturer, who, if he must turn out the same amount of goods, is compelled to employ labor by the hundreds. The importer's fight is for low rates of transportation from foreign ports of manufacture, while our local manufactories depend for their very life upon the establishment of a transportation rate which will operate as a protective tariff against cheap labor and cheap fuel of other countries. Producers are the bone and sinew of a country. Our prosperity depends upon the prosperity of our producers. The increase of our consuming population depends upon the increase of our manufacturing interests. A whole block of importers, with buildings crowded from basement to attic with the wares and manufactures of other countries, is not of half as much importance to the welfare of this community as is a single home factory employing one hundred hands.

Mr. Merry, the advocate of the Nicaragua Canal, says: "No one can value manufacturing interests more than myself. To make manufactures profitable it is necessary that raw product shall be abundant and cheap; that labor shall be low as at any point in the republic (even with a protective tariff); that coal and water power shall be cheap; that there shall be a large population for consumers in the vicinity, and that transportation to consuming markets shall be at lowest cost."

Note well what the gentleman proposes for California: "That labor shall be as low as at any point in the republic" if we are to have home manufactures, and that "raw product shall be abundant and cheap." These, according to his views, are the two prerequisites for successful home manufacturing, and it is to these ends Mr. Merry promises the construction of the Nicaragua Canal will promote. That the price of labor will fall in California with the completion of the Canal there cannot be the slightest doubt, yet we will venture to assert that every representative of labor who has spoken upon this subject has advocated the construction of the canal, and regards it as a holy duty to shout for its completion. "Abundant and cheap raw product!" Will Mr. Merry explain where this material is to come from, and what its character may be? The gentleman also points out that "were the canal open, steamships from Europe would crowd our wharves laden in their holds with merchandise, and with immigrants in the between decks; our population would at once increase; our lands would be settled up; with increased population would come a clientage for manufactures, and we should gradually build up a home market for them, while the surplus would have cheap water freights for distribution."

More ships from Europe, no doubt, would come to our wharves laden with the manufactures and merchandise of the older countries, and with "immigrants between decks," but are these things desirable? Our city is crowded now with idle, houseless, workless men. California needs men with mouths to feed and purses to pay for the feeding. We need money to develop, not "between decks immigrants," who are deterred from coming here overland, because "it costs all they have got to reach here." We have more than our quota of idle men. Think of it! Mr. Merry would have us treble and quadruple the army of our poor and unemployed, for the purpose of increasing local consumption, and so encouraging local manufactures. It is ridiculous upon its face. According to this gentleman, these "immigrants" are to be developed into "producers" in some mysterious way, and the canal will then offer these "producers" a market. Meanwhile, the success of these "immigrant producers" will increase the home market for our manufactures. This is a heavenly condition of affairs upon paper, but it scarcely seems practicable. We have not the space in this issue to reproduce Mr. Merry's entire communication which was sent to the Evening Bulletin, but we will be glad in the future to publish whatever he or any other gentleman may have to write us upon this subject, and discuss their attitudes pro and con.

NEW PHASES IN THE EMANCIPATION OF WOMEN.

Pent up against the dam of political debarment from the franchise, the Woman's Rights question, like a steadily rising flood, has begun to overflow its banks, and is inundating the whole field of Emancipation. It is doubtless only a question of years when the movement in favor of the equal rights of women shall break down Legislalative barriers, but meanwhile the agitation finds vent in the hitherto undeveloped ramifications of the main question.

The most recent evidence of this unrest has been given in Mrs. Clara Foltz's late sensation at Delmonico's in New York. Mrs. Foltz has remarkable ability in finding a quarrel when she wishes one, and she usually has such a desire. The exploiter of the famous California Venus has been politely ejected from Gotham's famous restaurant, in compliance with an order that denies women the right to enter the place after 6 o'clock in the evening without an escort. There is rough skirmishing to be done in the van of every reform before the way is cleared for the less ardent supporters, and the world cannot progress without fanatics to bear the brunt of the ridicule, which is the first weapon of the upholders of Mrs. Grundy's regime. It has been the women who have flung sneers at these cranks that have reaped the results won by their short-haired sisters. Mrs. Foltz has not, from a man's point of view, an attractive personality. We have become reconciled to the woman in medicine and in art, but we still shrink from her appearance in law, or upon the lecture platform. We do not, as a general thing, admire the woman who raises her voice when she talks, and would debar her from all professions requiring that exhibition. But if men will not champion women, women must champion themselves, and if we must have female lawyers, they can do worse than leading the attack upon the rights that have been so long witheld from them and their sex.

Mrs. Foltz undoubtedly has justice on her side; such a regulation as Mr. Hollender of Delmonico's has adopted should be enforced with discretion. But some such rule is needed to keep out the undesirable customers that have given such places bad names, still it would seem that an ounce of discrimination would have prevented the pounds of trouble the restaurant now has upon its hands. Mrs. Foltz' aggressiveness has been various. She is now making another hot fight for the Public Defender Bill; a measure providing for the services of a public official gratis to defendants in criminal cases. Mrs. Foltz's sympathies are here again with the under dog, and she would facilitate the feuds kindled by the back-yard amenities of the lower walks of New York life. She has seen women "strip their wedding rings from their fingers and pawn the shawls from their backs" to pay retainers to shyster lawyers to secure help for a wayward boy, or escape the malice of a neighbor whose purse enables her to punish the defendant with "costs," whatever be the issue of the case. There will be a great deal of fish to fry in the New York courts when this bill is passed, and it is more likely to increase teapot tempests than lessen them.

So much for these trickling outlets of the Woman question. A still more radical movement has been started in England for the facilitation of marriage, and London is now discussing the possibility of the establishment of matrimonial bureaus to work along respectable lines, for the benefit of the "masses." It is characteristic of the middle classes that almost every woman looks forward to marriage as the horizon of her hopes, and it is properly so. To the common woman marriage means an enlargement of her life impossible under other conditions. It is also characteristic of the men of the same caste, that when they come to a marrying age they "look around" to find a desirable partner; they are moved by the instinct of the "Genius of the Race," seeking to prolong the existence of the Race rather than by sentiment. To bring these two factions together legitimately is the effort of the movers in the new enterprise, and the subject is receiving a great deal of attention from the English press and from prominent people.

William T. Stead, as might be expected, approves this radical movement, and asserts that the conditions of modern civilization require such an institution to break down the barriers of formality, and the thoughtless and haphazard selection of large cities. Mrs. Swan, the novelist and editor of the "Woman at Home," calls it a "human as well as a humane work," and thinks it could be made beneficial to the middle classes, especially those secluded from the opposite sex. The British Weekly, one of the leading religious journals, refers to the "important symposium," and "St. James' Gazette" has come out in favor of the work. Sir Walter Besant finds a Matrimonial Bureau a thing of ugliness, unnatural, artificial and shameless, and advocates as a compromise the establishment of parish social clubs to promote the mutual acquaintance of young people.

As a contrast to this effort to increase the number of marriages comes news from New York of a restrictive league, as necessary, perhaps, as the other. A society is said to have been formed among the more serious-minded of Gotham's maidens pledged to refuse marriage to men tainted by consumption or other transmittable disease, or to any man in whose family there is a predisposition to such affliction. It is a beautiful superstition of the super-civilized feminine mind that Cupid can be broken to harness and driven by the head line. But Cupid is a balky little beast. He will start and not stop, or stop and not start. His blindness can be remedied by no known operation of the human intellect. Love laughs at legislation. The subject, though a little unpleasant, will do for afternoon teas, and weak-lunged lads may be very pleasantly damned over the cups, but a girl that has a head strong enough to govern her heart has little need of alliances to purify the race, and the ponderous question of heredity will work itself out among those that have preserved their sentiment, and who won't care whether their lovers' grandsires were consumptive, paralytic, apopletic or otherwise; they will let Love pass Quarantine.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

We are in receipt of another communication from Mr. Frederick S. Samuels concerning the Nicaragua Canal. It is a partial reply to a letter which appeared in the Evening Bulletin from Mr. William L. Merry.

Editor of "The Wave:"

William L. Merry, than whom the Nicaragua canal has no more doughty champion, and whose personal interests are closely identified with that undertaking, takes exception to my assertions in your columns of recent dates that the Nicaragua canal would be detrimental to California, and San Francisco particularly, and in the columns of the "Bulletin" presents his arguments, which to reply to in extenso would occupy more space in your valuable columns than you could spare, even for this important subject.

I wish it distinctly understood at the outset that I believe a canal would be of the greatest importance to the world's commerce, including the United States in general; but that, once constructed, it will displace California, and with her, San Francisco, from the great commercial position which she ought to occupy relative to the trade of the Pacific ocean. I feel confident that we are going to face the issue, sooner or later, but I feel equally confident that when we understand what that issue means, we shall not petition Congress to speed the enterprise. Rather, we shall wake up from our present somnolent condition, and endeavor to strengthen ourselves in markets which we can now reach, with a view of holding them when the great scramble comes. San Francisco once had the trade from Mexico to the Arctic ocean. How her boundaries have been forced inwards by competing railroads north and south, is a matter of local history. This, however, was inevitable, and equally inevitable will be the still greater loss following the completion of the canal.

In Mr. Merry's pamphlet entitled, "The Nicaragua Canal, the Gateway Between the Oceans," which has the advantage of having been issued by authority of various Chambers of Commerce on this Coast, he points out the possible cost of transportation on California products through the canal to New York, viz: $3.87 per ton of 2240 lbs., and assumes the time en route from San Francisco to New York to be less than seventeen days. If this rate of freight and time of transportation hold good for one direction, they hold good for the other, and how long would the rolling mills, iron foundries, machine works, packing houses and a host of other industries exist, with less than one-fifth of one cent per pound freight as their only protection against the cheap manufacturing centers of the Eastern and Southern States? If refined sugar could be landed direct at San Diego, San Pedro, San Francisco, Portland and Tacoma at the rate quoted, would not our refining industry be affected, to the detriment of the beet grower? Would not the importation of ham, bacon, lard, butter, cheese and kindred articles, be vastly increased, to the injury of our farmers? This rate and time for transportation would simply mean annihilation to many industries in a State that can ill afford to lose any.

If the cost of transportation through the canal can be brought to such a low point, we can bid farewell to Mexico, Central and South America, as markets for our flour, and possibly we may meet the competition of the Middle West in the markets of the Orient, where we must look in future for the disposal of our surplus grain. bread will largely supplant rice as the staple food in Japan and China.

Mr. Merry proposes the influx of immigrants to fill up our lands. Our great need just now is more consumers and fewer producers. We want a home market, which is the best in the world for the farmer. If San Francisco had 700,000 population instead of 350,000, the State would sell to itself a much greater quantity of cereals, fruit, dairy produce, wine, meats, vegetables, etc., and fewer potatoes would rot in the fields, and less fruit be left unpicked on the trees. To increase this consuming population, we want to promote our manufacturing, commercial and other industries, and that surely cannot be accomplished by making this a distributing point for Eastern manufactures, to the exclusion of home-made products. In an office 10x12—and there are many such, and constantly augmenting in number in this city—sits an agent of an Eastern manufacturer. Probably the only tax he pays in the State is the poll tax, and he will by his competition cut down the value of local manufactures to a point which either leaves little or no profit or closes the factory doors. If this can be accomplished now, with present rail freights from the East, what could be done with cheaper freights and quick transportation via canal?

In 1895 a circular was issued calling for a manufacturers' convention to be held in San Francisco. This circular contained the following: "Eastern manufacturers are virtually sapping the life blood of our home industries, which will be almost entirely swept out of existence unless steps are taken to check the evil." This circular was signed by the Mechanics' Institute, Board of Trade, Chamber of Commerce, and Manufacturers' and Employers' Association. Are not the conditions today the same, if not worse than in 1895? And yet we memorialize Congress, and even subscribe money to obtain still cheaper transportation than is working us the injury at present. Are we consistent, or only ordinary asses?

This one question alone, Mr. Editor, could be carried to an indefinite length, and when it is considered that but a small percentage of our population are farmers, and that the balance depend upon our mining manufacturing, transportation and commercial industries for their livelihood, you will appreciate the importance of making Californian seaports entrepots for the commerce of the Pacific, and not reducing them to mere way ports or coaling stations for the convenience of those nations or States whose people have the spirit of commercial conquest to a degree that bodes ill to our future.

FREDERICK S. SAMUELS.

Inspector Dockery sampling a can; showing the marshes whose drainage used to fatten consumptive kine

A roadside analysis: Examining milk with the Babcock machine

The cow that wheezed: Inspecting a suspicious bovine

FOR PURE FOOD

Health Inspector Dockery's Picturesque War Against Adulteration.

If any man has tasted romance in this last year in San Francisco it is James P. Dockery, the Terror of the San Bruno Road, as he might well be called, were a half-dime novel to be written of his exploits. If he has become famous before this, he has fairly earned his reputation of being one of the nerviest officers in town.

Mr. Dockery was appointed a year ago last October as Milk Inspector for the Health Department, to enforce a long-neglected ordinance respecting the adulteration of milk. He was given $100 a month, and he had seven square miles of territory (consuming some 900,000 gallons of milk per day), to protect, single handed, doing his own inspection, analysis and clerical work. The office was sneered at as a sinecure, and he was expected to use it as such, keeping hours from 9 till 4 with the rest of the tax-eaters. Had he done this, and other even less savory things that were in his power, the existence of a Bureau of Food and Milk Inspection would not today be a possibility.

The San Bruno Road has never had a very pretty reputation; it is shut in on one side by the hills, on the other side lies a stretch of foul marshes, the cesspool of the Army street sewer, and of the refuse of the tanneries and soap works. It is not too pleasant by day, but at night and in the early hours of the morning it is a bad part of town. Many things have happened on the San Bruno Road. Here night after night Dockery drove alone and began his work. There were exciting times for the stout little man with the gray eyes. The drivers of the milk wagons did not take kindly to his curiosity, but he held them up as cavalierly as any highwayman of the old days. With a six-shooter in one hand and a lactometer in the other, he mixed his romance with realism. Many a wild-eyed Portuguese or Italian driver has struck at him from behind, more than one shot has been fired, and many a wagon load of milk has been poured into the dust of the San Bruno Road. He was here, there and everywhere. His nocturnal raids read, in the papers, like the exploits of an outlaw.

It was not an uncommon thing for him to go ninety hours with but six hours' sleep in that period. For a year he kept up the reign of terror, until the dairymen dared no longer send watered milk into town. His report shows for nine months, 228 arrests, 127 dairies visited, 1,722 samples taken from wagons and 265 from hotels, groceries and restaurants, 7,280 gallons of impure milk destroyed, 3,784 cows inspected and 36 consumptive cattle killed. Mr. Dockery earned his $100 a month. How much more than that he earned may be seen by the existence of the bureau of which he is now the chief inspector. It would not have been possible without his efforts.

Laboratory of the Department of Food and Milk in the City Hall

It would be impossible for such a campaign not to produce enemies, but in the only charges that were ever preferred, the complainants (who had been convicted of adulterations) refused to appear at the trial. There is no doubt of the confidence in which he is held by the Health Department, as there is no doubt of the salutary effect his work has had upon the dairies, and in his present position his efforts will no doubt be still more effective and of wider influence.

The inspection of milk as at present organized is conducted under the municipal ordinance passed last January. The Board of Health is by this law invested with full authority "to inspect milk and dairy cows and to regulate the sale of milk as well as to prohibit it and punish the disposition of unwholesome, impure or adulterated milk." Under an enactment of the State Legislature two years ago, the same department is authorized to enforce the pure food law, which greatly widens its powers.

The Board of Health has therefore created a sub-department for the inspection of food and milk, of which Mr. Dockery is at the head, controlling the operations of some eighteen assistants. His inspection of milk as at present carried on is modeled upon the usage in Ohio, and is in this line the most effective supervision in effect in the United States. Every can of milk coming into town is inspected at one of four stations, and as a check to subsequent adulteration several outside officers are continually at work at the hotels and restaurants and grocery stores, seizing samples for analysis. As it is against the law to sell impure milk, these retailers are held strictly liable for the offenses they may commit, and the result has been a marked improvement in the supply of the city.

Running the gauntlet in Station No. 3: The Lactometer test

Of the four stations, No. 1 is at the Ferry, No. 2 is at Fourth and Berry streets, No. 3 at Army and Alabama streets, and No. 4 at Geary street and Central avenue. At one of these posts each wagon must report on every trip, and every can must be inspected with the lactometer. If the milk comes up to the required specific gravity the wagon is labeled and a record filed, showing the number of the permit and the result of the test. As each dealer has filed an affidavit with the Board certifying to all data in regard to his business, it is easy to see by the daily station reports what wagons have failed to pass in for examination, and those running the gauntlet are held strictly acountable. Should the quality of the milk be suspected by the approximate test of the lactometer, samples are taken for a more thorough analys:s by means of the Babcock machine. This test consists in mixing 17 cm. milk with the same amount of sulphuric acid in a flask which is revolved in the centrifugal machine for eight minutes. Upon the addition of hot water, the butter fat is separated from the fluid and should show 3 1-5 per cent. of the volume. There are several other rough tests—the graduated cream gauge and the "little detective," which shows the specific gravity of the liquid.

The milk supplied to all public institutions must also be tested at the stations, and if up to the standard is sealed with leaden pellets.

Too much credit cannot be given to the unselfish work of J. B. Reinstein in the organization of this department. Although not directly interested in any way, he has, in the capacity only of a citizen, brought his influence to bear in the institution of the movement for pure foods, and has devoted much of his time to the establishment of its routine. The investigation of foods outside of the milk supply has only just been commenced, but it is being carried as far as the insufficient appropriations permit. The first amplification of the work of the department was directed toward the detection of adulterations in jellies, ketchups and condensed milk, and the same procedure is used as with the seizure of milk. Agents are sent out to buy samples of the articles suspected, which are taken to the laboratory to be analyzed by the chemist. An idea of the beneficial nature of these raids is shown by the fact that in less than one month the evidence secured by Mr. Dockery's assistants resulted in 38 arrests, of which cases 7 resulted in convictions, and in two of the others the jury stood 10 to 2 for conviction, and $385 in fines was collected.

Daily reports are filed in the office of Food and Milk Inspection, showing the tabulated results in each department; from the milk stations, outside inspection of milk and other foods, and the veterinary expert's examination of the conditon of dairies and cattle. The new department has in the few months it has been in existence amply demonstrated its usefulness and has produced remarkable results from the appropriation at its disposal. It should not, however, be dependent upon the patronage of politicians, and as soon as it is emancipated from the uncertainties due to changes of office, it may be expected to do still more efficient work.

EVOLUTION OF A DISPATCH

How the Associated Press Gathers and Distributes the News.

In a saloon at Mojave two miners conversed in whispers. One explained; the other listened. They began to dispute; raised their voices. The lie passed. The first drew a fistol—fired. The second fell with a bullet in his heart. Blood ebbed out to the floor. The murderer fled through the door, mounted a horse tethered to a post and fled out upon the desert.

That is the action of the story. In the parlance of journalism it is worth in that condition about one hundred words. The correspondent of the Associated Press in Mojave—who is also the proprietor and editor of the "Weekly Mojavean"—telegraphs the facts to the Los Angeles office, and is told in reply to learn the cause of dispute, the identity of the victim, his birth-place, history and occupation. He discovers that the two men have just returned from a prospecting tour, and that the murdered had found a ledge which both sought. It promised rich developments, and they had quarreled about its ownership. In his satchel are specimens of quartz heavy with gold. It is evidently an important discovery—maybe a second Randsburg. The story grows more interesting. Two hundred words in addition are ticked off to Los Angeles, and the day editor in Western headquarters of the Associated Press in San Francisco is sent a dispatch with the bare facts stated and the possibilities indicated. He recognizes the name of the victim as the scapegrace scion of a wealthy New York family, and the murderer as a well-known Colorado prospector. To Los Angeles he wires at once, asking for full particulars, then sends the news to headquarters in New York and then to Denver, where the prospector is known. In New York a reporter—the Associated Press has a regular staff of correspondents there under Assistant Ma[illegible] Charles L. Diehl—is sent to the parents of the s[illegible] grace, and breaks the sad news, obtaining also details of the boy's career and the reasons of his banishment. In due course, the event finds its way to the news editors of the big morning dailies, who telegraph to their special correspondents in Los Angeles for further particulars, and then proceed to gather, through their city editors' departments, all current gossip about both victim and family, elucidated with photographs. All this is meat for the Associated Press, which has the privilege of examining all the proofs of the story filed for that purpose and supplementing its own report, which is sent then to Chicago, Washington and San Francisco to be re-distributed according to the discretion of the night editor, who grades the message according to certain well defined rules of journalism, which he has had instilled into him by a long apprenticeship as a reporter or correspondent.

At three-thirty o'clock the afternoon papers are out with a dozen lines and a scare head. At 4:30 the message has lengthened and the head grows blacker with the commingling of murder and gold. During the night telegrams pour over the wires from Mojave to Los Angeles and thence to San Francisco. The tale is important enough to enlist the attention of Superintendent Dunning, who orders his Southern correspondent to take the first train to Mojave and interview every one concerned. The morning papers have several columns about the event—portraits, if possible, a picture of Mojave, together with statements from various mining experts about the chances of the ledge being the long lost Pegleg mine. Next day it is discovered that the unfortunate man has a wife in San Bernardino, and she is communicated with through the local reporter, who sends her story to Los Angeles and thence through the country as the demand necessitates. Twenty-four hours later the posse of sheriffs returns without the murderer, the press correspondent returns to Los Angeles. The Mojave representative sends news of the inquest, and the event passes out of the province of journalism into that of the detective, and becomes news again in case of a dispute over the dead man's estate or the capture of the assassin.

About in this way is news gathered and distributed. The Associated Press is but a combination of newspapers throughout the country banded together for the purpose of gathering and distributing the history of events. In the United States there are over seventy millions of inhabitants and towns without number. No paper is wealthy enough to have its own representatives in each of these centers, and it must rely on the journal nearest to an occurrence for the details. The value of an event is measured first by its intrinsic interest, and then by its local significance. The Associated Press gathers its reports according to the specified requirements of its patrons, and collects every month fixed tolls for the service. When you open your favorite morning paper and find in the telegraph news department dispatches from Savannah, Kansas City, Galveston, Calgary and Mexico you don't realize the circumstances and associations which enable the collection and printing of all these facts and figures. This gigantic agency has been at work throughout all the previous day and night collating the facts which are spread out so simply before you. Literally it brings the world to your breakfast table for two cents—at an expense, indeed, of hundreds of thousands a year, but contributed from so many sources that the cost is reasonable to each. It is an immense organization, administered from Chicago with ramifications the earth over, maintaining big staffs in Washington, New York and London, exchanging news with Renters' Agency for Europe and the Colonies in confidential relationship—with the big financial centers, competent to make men famous or notorious, and to mould public opinion as no other power in the world can—a tremendous potency for good or evil. Indeed, one might call it the arterial system of the journalistic corpus, of which the newspapers are the nerves.

Operating the leased wire in the Associated Press headquarters

The Western headquarters of the Associated Press are in three rooms of the Western Union building on Montgomery street. It is not an impressive establishment, and is provided with but little in the way of furniture or machinery for the accomplishment of its functions. There are desks and typewriters. From one room comes the click of telegraphic instruments. There the operators are sending and receiving the news over a wire leased from the Western Union. Some twenty thousand to thirty thousand words a night come in and are deftly and speedily transmitted to sheets of tissue paper with manifold layers between on the typewriter, and copies sent to the telegraph desks of the papers. The "Examiner" and "Chronicle" have loops connecting their offices with the leased wire of the Associated Press, and their own operators take the messages simultaneously with their delivery in the Press rooms. This is a tremendous convenience, as it saves valuable moments in transmitting the matter to the composing rooms—and time is important at midnight in a morning newspaper office. The reports vary according to the events—sometimes the "Chronicle" has delivered to it but fifteen thousand words of Associated Press. The next night it may be served with thirty thousand. That it prints all it receives is rare, for every great paper has its own correspondents and supplements the routine report with specials. The New York "Herald," for instance, seldom uses the Press material, save as a barometer of events; it selects what it desires and orders the facts from its own representatives. But this is only possible to a paper with millions of revenue. However much is printed, the same tolls are collected—from the morning papers $1,000 per month, from the evening dailies $400 per month. Over this latter arrangement has arisen a lawsuit about the admission of the "Report," which, it seems, was to be given a franchise in return for reduced tolls to the other members of the Association—the "Bulletin" and the "Post." In charge of the Western office is James P. Dunning, who made a reportorial record by his report of the great Samoan disaster. His duties are executive and supervisorial, for on him fall the responsibilities of the circuit which includes all the States west of Montana. A force of day and night editors collate the news as gathered from the proofs of the newspapers, and send it ticking north, south and east, according to the requirements of their patrons.

JOHN P. DUNNING
Imperial, photo

WU TING FONG

Arrival of the New Chinese Minister En Route to Washington.

The steamer Gaelic brought last Sunday the new Chinese Minister and his suite, a company of sixty very distinguished and brilliantly robed Cedestials, en route to Washington. Wu Ting Fong, who is to represent the Flowery Kingdom at the court of President McKinley, is about 50 years of age; a capable looking Mongolian, with a strong, determined cast of countenance. He speaks English fluently, being a graduate of Oxford, where he studied law, and he has held several important positions under the Imperial Government. He is accompanied by his wife and his son, Wu Chu, an attractive boy of 11 years. Ho Yow, brother-in-law of the Minister, and Secretary of the Legation, and Li Ching Hsu, a nephew of the famous Li Hung Chang, beside a cortege of attaches and servants. The Minister was met at the dock by the Consul and his personal suite, delegations from the Six Companies, and other prominent Chinese, and was escorted to his quarters at the Occidental Hotel, where he occupies nearly the entire Montgomery and Sutter street fronts, on the sceond floor.

Wu Ting Fong has important commissions to perform in this country, and before he goes to Washington will endeavor to reconcile the feud between the Sam Yups and See Yups, whose rivalry has so recently made trouble in San Francisco. He is also empowered to select a successor to Fung Yung Heng, whose term as Consul in San Francisco has expired, and it is probable that Ho Yow, the Minister's brother-in-law, will be appointed to this post, which is one of the most important in the service. Ho Yow is a Sam Yup man, and is au fait with the situation in this city and much interested in the term. Besides several appointments to be made as soon as the party arrives in Washington, the Minister has to negotiate treaties with Mexico, Hawaii and Spain, and perhaps with Cuba. Wu Ting Fong has taken great interest in the question of Chinese immigration, and is strongly in favor of a more liberal treaty in its regard than the exclusive policy now in force. During his stay here he has made many friends by his cordial interest in the country which he has not visited since 1877. Indeed, the hotel has been besieged by all kinds of applicants for favors, and the Minister was actually given a reception by a deputation of clergymen, who undertook to discuss the missionary question with him.

A BITER BIT

Justin Sturgis is Interviewed by a Wily Diplomat.

A pleasant greeting of the most democratic informality assured me. The Chinese Minister motioned me to a seat, and smiled as if he expected to have a good time with me—a quiet cordial smile it was, undimmed by reserve. At his side sat his aide, with a forked Spanish smile to twist me upon when I was well done.

"Is this your first visit, Your Excellency?" I began.

"O, no! the second," he answered. "I was here first in 1877. Do you have earthquakes here?"

"Oh, frequently," I hazarded, a little distractedly.

"Aren't you afraid of your tall buildings," said he.

"Oh, they're well put together," I replied. It was more than I could say for my wits. "How many persons are there in your party?"

"Sixty," said His Excellency; "but do your cable-cars run all night?"

I countered with an inquiry as to the ladies of his party, but he set the pace a little faster.

"Are you a native of California?" said he. You'll not be interested in my answer, nor whether I'm married or not, but he was, or seemed to be. "What is the 'Forum'?" he asked next.

I began to writhe under the catechism, but his aide cut short my archæological dissertation by asserting that it was a bar-room.

"And what is the Diamond Palace? I had an invitation to visit," said Wu Ting Fang.

I snubbed that advertisement, and opened upon him again, but his wind was better than mine.

"What is the population of San Francisco?" he quizzed. For the life of me I couldn't remember whether it was three hundred thousand or thirty thousand. So I made a wild bluff which he didn't seem to suspect.

"They say your city is built upon a mountain," he continued.

"Oh, yes," I assented; "in fact, upon several. Do you bring your own cook?"

"Certainly," said the Minister; "and barber also. Now who is the President of Stamford University?—or is it Stanford?"

"David Starr Jordan," I said.

"He invited me to visit. They say there is a professor of the Chinese language."

"It is at the State University," I explained.

"Indeed? What are the most interesting places in the city?"

"That depends upon what one is most interested in," I said, a little coldly, though it is true enough. I thought of recommending the phonograph resorts, but refrained. "How soon do you start for Washington?" I said. instead.

"In a week," replied the Mandarin. "It is very noisy here—there is much noise all night long. How long have you been writing?"

As I glanced at him I noticed something I had not observed before. It was a little silk-covered book, which he held carelessly enough in his hands. But it was his glance at the book that I noticed. The diamond button in his cap ceased to hold my eye, and the stately old gentleman with the plum-colored jacket smiled at my chagrin.

In the folds of his sleeve was a book of questions and answers, offensive and defensive, that had been lent him to use on such as I by that terrible old man, Li Hung Chang.

JUSTIN STURGIS.

Justice Field has no intention whatever of resigning from the Supreme Court bench, even though the dailies assert the contrary. He is anxious to serve until after next October, when he will have completed his twenty-five years of service, thus breaking the Court's record. The Justice contemplates writing a book of reminiscences, legal and political, and with his wide knowledge of men and acquaintance with affairs, should produce a most readable book. He is already at work on the volume.

President Faure is to have the wish of his heart—the privilege of returning the Czar's visit. He journeys to Russia this summer on an ironclad, escorted by a French squadron. He will be lodged in the new Peterhof Palace, and will have all the supreme honors extended to the sovereigns who are also to visit the Czar this year.

The Chinese Minister, Wu Ting Fong, his wife, and Wu Chu, his son, in their parlor at the Occidental Hotel

MISS PEARL LADD

The precocious thirteen-year old pianiste, who is to give a concert at the California Theatre next Wednesday, is a pupil of Otto Bendix, and is not only a remarkable interpreter of Chopin and Beethoven, but has several adult pupils, and feels competent to criticize Paderewski, Zeisler, and other minor artists. This versatile young lady will also give a Spanish dance, read the potion scene from "Romeo and Juliet," and do almost everything except raise the curtain.

Photos by Thors

THINGS AND PEOPLE

No one has yet diagnosed the Governor's system of reasoning. It is a private and personal method of logic and there is but one guide to it—the "Examiner." If the monarch admires a measure, it is reasonably certain that Budd will also favor it. On the contrary, should Mr. Hearst denounce any bill or course, depend on it our Executive, no matter what his previous condition of mind or servitude, is sure to find that public policy demands he veto it. For instance, take the coyote bill, which excited such a scandal at the close of the session. The appropriation to pay due claims was just and should have been approved. The bill which provided for their settlement was an administrative measure, drafted by the Governor himself. In the discussion which arose the Senate the measure was referred to as Budd's bill, and when it came to a vote Lieutenant Governor Jeter, in order to be right on the subject, sought a delay to confer with his chief, and was assured he might safely commit himself. Yet, in the face of all this, lo! the Governor vetoes the appropriation and assigns as a reason the scandals attending its passage. Does not this place his victim, the Lieutenant Governor, in rather an invidious position? But then the ways of our Executive are past all explanation.

***

The annual election of officers at the Bohemian Club passed off very quietly last Monday. There was no opposition ticket, and the regular nominees were elected as per programme. William Sproule, the Shakespeare of the last Midsummer Jinks, steps out of the Directory into Dr. Chismore's shoes, and will be assisted by Vanderlyn Stow as Vice-President. Donald de V. Graham retains the Secretaryship, and James A. Thompson will be Treasurer for another year. Clarence Beckford, William G. Stafford, Colonel Grannis and Dr. Powers will constitute the Board of Directors, with Lawrence Buntin to fill Mr. Sproule's vacancy. At the annual meeting Dr. Chismore reported the club in good condition, financial as well as otherwise. There has been a revival of active interest in the club amongst its artists during the past year, and many valuable pictures have been added to its already famous collection. A noble landscape by Keith, "The Eternal Round;" several masterly portraits by Yates; a fine wood interior by Latimer, have been the principal accessions, and the Jinks cartoons of Matthews, Strong, Peixotto and Robinson have been prominently placed in the rooms. The bust of Uncle George Bromley and the "Laughing Pan" of Marion Wells, the latter having been modeled for the last Midsumer Jinks, have proved a welcome change in the character of the club's art contributions. The caricatures and sketches in the wine room have contributed not a little to the good fellowship in the club, and have created a renaissance of that intimacy whose lack has been deplored by the old-time Bohemians.

***

There is but one excuse for the number and variety of the mining stories which "The Wave" has publishd, and it is the love of the writer for romance. Success and attainment make available climaxes, and there is no transition so brilliant and so interesting as that from poverty to wealth. Of course the attainment of riches is but one form of romance, but most of the joys of life are based upon income. Love and adventure must be financed on business principles, else there is a scarcity of bread—or at least meat and salad. In these hard times success is not being achieved out of the Sierras. Only the miners are gathering gold. Yet I cannot but believe it an incentive to brave effort on the part of others whose time has not yet come to know that men are really obtaining that substantial consideration which, if it is not happiness, is the next best substitute for it, and, at any rate, more permanent.

***

Keefer, whose name has been so frequently in the papers of late, in connection with the Jupiter mine, and whose sudden disappearance has created so much consternation, is an example of a modern "pocket miner;" that is, he gives little time to digging gold, but works the pockets of his subjects. The Jupiter mine, which was utilized as the base of his operations, is situated in Calaveras county, and no one knew anything of its value but Keefer. He was an impressively tall man, of fine figure, and his method of operation was very subtle. By careful scanning of the assessor's books and the real estate offices, he woudl gather information about women with property. He would then manage to meet them in a social way, and his conversation and appearance would give them a favorable idea of his prosperity. The talk would, of course, take the direction of mining, and Keefer would describe the remarkable success which had attended his efforts. He would speak learnedly of drifts, winzes, leads, veins, dips, stopes, shafts, tunnels, upraises, cross-cuts, levels and sumps, and his ready use of all these terms was very impressive to the feminine mind. A trick of his method was never to ask anyone to subscribe, but it was, indeed, a hardened dowager who could refrain from requesting to buy stock after listening to his conversation, and he generally played them very skilfully; oftentimes to the amount of eight or ten thousand dollars. He must have made a fortune out of the Jupiter mine and its extensions. Those who don't know Keefer may recognize him by the fact that whenever the climate would permit it he used to wear a magnificent sealskin overcoat, which was really the finest thing of its kind ever architectured by tailor in San Francisco.

***

A most interesting personality is Mrs. M. L. Ludington, who incarnates all the characteristics of the newest womanhood and yet is a perfect lady. She is young, a widow, and as good a business man as there is in the State. It is as a mining promoter that her identity has become notable. She has engineered several big schemes with a dexterity which her male competitors have good reason to envy. Maybe her success is due to the fact that she does not attempt impossibilities, and is contented to achieve honestly what she essays. Moreover, I have it from the lips of a very eminent capitalist that no expert ever stated a proposition more concisely or more lucidly than does Mrs. Ludington in offering the refusal of a property. Something about the career of this lady may not be uninteresting. It seems she is of German ancestry, was born in Illinois and brought to California while a baby, learned thrift and self-reliance by the loss of her mother, and was married as a young girl to a wealthy business man named Ludington, who moved to Mexico to prosecute a certain deal in mining lands. He died suddenly leaving his widow to extricate his affairs as best she could. In facing the situation she displayed a degree of grit and energy which would have done credit to a veteran, for she learned the language, studied the inheritance laws of the southern republic, and returned to California with a substantial sum. This experience developed in her a love of business, and seeing an opening in mining promotion she engaged her capital and her time in that line of exertion. It is her policy to visit districts in which there are mines whose owners have refused to negotiate with the ordinary promoter. In a frank and serious way she engages the attention and confidence of her clients, and rarely fails to come away without a bond on the desired property obtained on better terms and longer time than any of her male rivals could achieve. Once being possessed of a property, she has no hesitation in spending money to exhibit its resources. She hires the best expert service, runs shafts, and obtains every possible fact before submitting the property to an investor. Her reports are models of their kind. Quite recently she sold the Crystalline group of mines to S. Webber Parker for one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, though this is but one of many transactions, and after the deal he congratulated her on her thoroughly business-like manner of statement. Otherwise, in a business parley this lady is rarely at a loss, being fluent, fertile and concise, and she can readily maintain herself in argument with the best equipped members of the sterner sex.

***

The Chinese Minister's suite, now domiciled at the Occidental hotel, is not the first Celestial Embassy that has been there. A number of years ago another party of diplomats from the Flowery Kingdom stopped at the Occidental, and at that time Hughey, one of the pets of the institution, was stationed in charge of the parlor. Hughey was not a servitor of great intelligence, but he might be depended upon to carry out orders irrespective of persons. One day there came to the hotel, to pay their respects to the Ambassador, Vice-Consul Bee and the Chinese Consul, all decorated in their best bibs and tuckers. The Ambassador received them in the parlor, and the distinguished Chinese wore their caps, according to Imperial Celestial etiquette. Hughey came up to them and said, "Youse have to take off your hats in the parlor!" Consul Bee glowered at him, but said nothing. The factotum repeated, "Youse have to take your hats off in the parlor." Bee grew red in the face, and Hughey seeing that they didn't intend to comply with the order, or that they didn't understand him, or that something was wrong, went down stairs and said, "There is a lot of Chinamen wearing their hats in our parlor, and they wont take them off." At the same time Bee marched down stairs, wildly indignant, declaring that the Chinese Empire had been insulted, and that it was a disgrace that such a thing should happen in a civilized country. There were all manners of apologies and explanations before the situation was finally smoothed over.

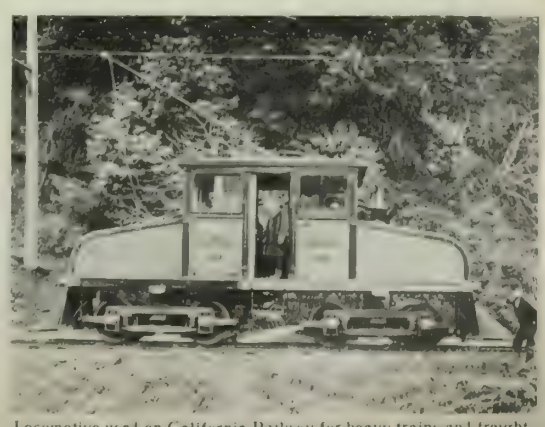
***

Apropos of the Chinese at the Occidental Hotel, I am told there is a pretty girl down there who has recently essayed to teach the Secretary and several of the swell attaches how to waltz. She had them up on the second floor hall, and put them through their paces according to the latest Terpsichorean modes. They took to the instruction enthusiastically, and subsequently have been practicing along the other passages, much to the amusement of the guests.

***

Some weeks ago the Sacramento "Bee," at considerable expense and with commendable enterprise, uncovered a nest of blackmailers and boodlers in Sacramento, for the doing of which it was and is entitled to the hearty thanks of every good citizen in that community. The name of Mr. Weinstock, a member of the firm of Weinstock & Lubin, was mentioned in the detective's report published in the "Bee," but not in connection with anything odious, criminal or reprehensible. No charges of the slightest character were made against the gentleman's integrity. It was merely stated that the "combine" crowd had imposed upon Mr Weinstock to the extent of obtaining from him a promise to invest some money in a new daily paper to be established at the capital city. Distinct and definite charges of a quasi criminal character were, however, made against a number of other individuals; but, strange to say, Mr. Weinstock, whose honesty was never brought into question by the "Bee," has been induced to commence a libel suit against that journal for $50,000. At whose instance the gentleman took this step does not appear, but to a disinterested observer his action is quite incomprehensible. He has voluntarily placed his own person and his own reputation as a buffer between public opinion and the guilty parties, which certainly is a very unwise proceeding, and one which no prudent friend would advise. Its consequences cannot serve Mr. Weinstock. It will not purge him of wrong doing, for he has not been charged with wrong doing. It will not prove him any more innocent or any more honest than the community now believe him to be, for his innocence and honesty has been clearly established and admitted by the "Bee" itself, which he is suing. Such a suit can only operate to harass and annoy a public-spirited journal, and in a measure protect the guilty, two things the gentleman should certainly avoid, for they are not to his credit.

BOSWELL JR.



Locomotive used on California Railway for heavy trains and freight. The first of its type brought to the coast.

STELLAR EXTREMES

A Lover of the Fleshpots and a Devotee of Art.

As far as the North is from the South, so far is Emily Soldene from Georgia Cayvan — two stars that have met in San Francisco this week. They stand for the old and the new regimes, and their mottoes might be written, "Gather the roses as you go," and "Art for Art's sake."

Life has been a sweet and succulent morsel for Emily Soldene, which she has nibbled at with a relish for sixty years. And now, ample and complacent, not yet too old for creature-comforts—an amiable vagabond, she says—the sunshine of success still warms her, and she is as ready for what may turn up as a child of six. A very youthful matron, with only the lines upon her face that pleasure has put there — if there was ever a comfortable smiler at the world's ways, 'tis Emily Soldene. There is a large package of her—room and enough on her face for a smile at the follies of men. She has been but a looker-on, she says — amused spectator at the passing show, judging them as men for the gossip that was in them, whether they were "johnnies" or aristocrats, and now serving them up with her own caper sauce for the delectation of the public. Down into her diary went Tom, Dick and Harry, and up they come now in the printed pages of her "Memoirs."

She was in the vanguard of that army of British Blondes that have permeated the stage since the beginning of the comic opera — she was the peroxide Queen of the Wings, and collected toll from many a stage-entrance frequenter. But it is not of these she would talk. There are others. There is not a city that is not mapped out on the little chart of her life, and if San Francisco has been spared, it is only because the size of her volume forbade.

In her first book, "Young Mrs. Staples," she has drawn on the local color of the town, and has selected that deep red tone abounding in Mason street, which is the scene of one chapter. The book is lurid and melodramatic, told in the amateurish and slangy diction of the Chicago Sensational Series, with as much literary quality as one should expect, perhaps, from a "footlight favorite." The Soldene's ambitions are now all literary. For a long while she was paid to contribute her own frank and unedited opinions of dramatic and musical happenings in Sydney, and while at home, her letters on "London Week by Week" were the chief cards of several Australian papers — the Melbourne "Evening News," the "Town and County," and the "Illustrated News." These were as racy and gossipy epistles as ever were catered to Antipodean readers, and Emily Soldene's wide knowledge of prominent persons (as well as the persons most likely to be talked about) warranted special editions. The Australians were indeed, Miss Soldene asserts, only too glad to get her out of their country, that more letters might be forthcoming. The success of this correspondence encouraged her to utilize the confessions of her diary, and the advertising her published anecdotes and comments have received nourishes the smile of contentment which she has been so long able to preserve.

There are more memories yet to appear — more spicy stories to set tongues wagging over the doings of the past. Emily Soldene has been a very good "watcher." And now en route to London (as much as anywhere) she is again in the only other city where she ever settled. Here she stayed two years—and she finds it a good place to stay—in fact, Emily Soldene is, as usual, contented as a cat in the sunshine. The same old town and the same show of life and love and labor. As good as London, she says, for in any place, one gets into ruts and lives a little routine. It doesn't seem as though Emily Soldene ever was used to ruts — not by her "Recollections," at any rate—unless it were the ruts of pleasure. She still sings, where the mood moves her, but while her pen can flow as freely as it has been able to, her chief interest is in writing. There are more cats to be let out of her bag, and no one knows which way they will jump.

***

It is usual nowadays to find an actress ladylike, but it is still more grateful to find her womanly. Miss Georgia Cayvan has too little Latin blood to be a poseuse; she is too much a New Englander to be picturesque in manner. She has evaded the brand of the profession by making it an art—a distinction which makes for simplicity and naturalnes. She has that essential quality of her race that compels deep-rooted motive to nourish endeavor. It is not a temperament governed by impulse, but the constant intellectual restraint.

You may trust a Yankee to put brains into whatever he or she attempts. The spirit of analysis does not often go with the artistic temperament, but when it does the results achieved have a delicacy and refinement—a sharpness of edge, so to speak—that is not obtainable by either emotion or instinct.

Perhaps the most significant change in the drama of the old school has been the organization of the "company" to work together on artistic, almost scientific lines, to produce a pleasing whole. The old stock companies did this instinctively, but it was a rare combination of talent that so played into each other's hands as to take every dramatic trick. The "star" has almost universally ignored the "unities." It is, in fact, the star's chief object to occupy the centre of the stage and keep the company down several tones in the scale of color. One can forgive this if the actor has the quality of genius, and we may accept the support as we accept wooden trees and pasteboard houses, but with those artists that occupy the middle ground the audience demands harmony in the play and an unity of effort that keeps the story bowling with a rapid, even movement.

Miss Cayvan has no small amount of this talent of organization, well trained in her art, with a rare ability to see things large and in their right proportions.

"We are still looking for a good play," said Miss Cayvan. "We get them by dozens, and my eyes are almost ruined by the manuscript. but seldom find one that is more than passable. I have never heard of a play being a success that I have refused. They say I have an uncommon faculty of judging whether a book is playable. So we must put up with revivals until some one strikes the right note."

"There is a dramatic instinct," says she, "that is like the literary instinct of an editor, or perhaps more like the feeling of a musician who plays 'musically' rather than technically. Indeed, a play is not unlike an opera, where the audience is the conductor. It must go with verve and snap, and above all, in time. One line must follow another in perfect dramatic rythm, on the beat, as it were — not too quickly, not too slowly — but at just the precise moment that must be instinctively felt by the actor. She illustrates this, partially. "Suppose here a fragment of a dialogue:

"He: 'But I love you!'

"She: 'O, no; not that!'

"He: 'Have I no right to even that much?'

"Now, to get the full effect, the second line must come in 'on the beat'—a pause, a quick, sure answer, and the impression is made. If it comes too soon, or too slowly, all the force of the situation is lost. It is hardest of all for the young actor to see the stage pictures as they are formed, and to think of himself as but a part of the whole scene; for this we must rely upon the stage manager to prevent over- or under-acting of the players. It might seem that all this should go without saying, but it is on such common-sense considerations that an artistic success depends.

"It is the same way with one's make-up, which should only heighten the hints given in the natural type of one's face — just enough to counteract the sallow effect produced by the artificial lights of the stage. Many of my kind church friends have said, 'It's so nice to see your face without any make-up,' but, indeed, I do make-up—and such a remark is the best kind of a compliment on my judgment."

A SPRING FANCY (NEUVAIN) BY GELETT BURGESS

I had forgotten all about the Spring;
The winter seemed not rude when in the rain
I heard the meadow lark, mad-mannered, sing!
The fields so long in sober garb had lain
I had forgotten all about the Spring,—
When April came a-trippling down the lane!
She set the orchard gayly blossoming,
The earth awoke and shyly smiled again;
I had forgotten all about the Spring!

All the Comforts of Home

A Vista of the Heights

Restaurant and Grounds

The Bandstand and Homeier's Band

The Switchback

VIEWS OF LEONA HEIGHTS

A TYPICAL CALIFORNIA PLEASURE RESORT SITUATED IN ALAMEDA COUNTY

See page 12

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

You should know without being told, Diary, dear, how anxious I have been to persuade Father Time to hasten his lagging footsteps during Holy Week. Alas! he has loitered by the wayside, and I have simply been bored to extinction. On Saturday I had my last pleasure. In the afternoon I went to "Carmen," and enjoyed myself tremendously. I saw any number of the girls, and all agreed it was the best afternoon performance the company had given. Later, I strolled into the Sketch Club and examined the pictures. Some of the girls have real ability, but I don't think their exhibition this time is as good as the last. Still, there are some capital bits. I always like Helen Hyde's studies, Miss Briggs' landscapes and Blanche Letcher's pastels. But there are several new members who also do creditable work. Afterwards I went to Carrie's to dinner, and in the evening we again went to the opera. All the subscribers were in evidence for the last time. The L. L. Bakers, Hellmans, Crockers, with their families, Borels, etc. There was but little dressing. Carrie says it is bad form to dress in Lent, even at the opera. I am glad to find a reason, although it is so paltry a one, for certainly San Francisco opera audiences have been, to put it mildly, a shabby looking lot. I hope, however, that the next opera will be given at the Baldwin Theatre. It is so much more roomy, and the seats are wider, softer and more comfortable.

Fancy, Miss Jacobs of San Diego is engaged to Lieutenant Drake. She went to Miss West's school and graduated with Ethel Keeney, Leontine Blakeman, Marie Wells and all of that set, is only nineteen, and an awfully jolly girl. Her people are immensely wealthy, and have a charming place in San Diego. She is quite handsome—tall, dark, with fine coloring. I don't know when the marriage is to take place. Maraquita Collier is to be married in June to young Atherton Macondray. Won't they make a cute couple? We are all devoted to the Collier girls. I believe the wedding is to be a quiet one, but Maraquita has promised that if she has only three outsiders I shall be one of them. The most pleasing bit of news we have heard for some time is that Lieutenant Cloman has received the appointment of instructor in military tactics at the University of California. He is to have Lieutenant Winn's position. Few army officers are as popular as Mr. Cloman, not alone with girls, which, if you are an army man, is not altogether a distinction, but with men. Arthur says he is a capital fellow, and even Papa, who is blase on most points, becomes cordial when he is mentioned.

Mamma Leila and dear Aunt Sybil have been dissipating in religion all this week and are really exhausted. They find church-going quite as fatiguing as the frivolous amusements I indulge in, and come home quite worn out. On Sunday we all went to Trinity Church in the morning to hear Archdeacon Webber discourse, and found that our kinsfolk and acquaintances had done likewise. In the evening we had an early dinner and went to Grace Church. Mr. Clarence Eddy played the organ, and only Aunt Sybil has a pew I doubt whether we should have found standing room. After the service Mr. Eddy played several secular selections, among them the Intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana. It was simply inspiring. Have you ever noticed how religious good music makes one feel? One can hardly credit the effect it has. Besides all this, we have been attending the afternoon services at Trinity regularly. Archdeacon Webber has discoursed on all subjects from a non-sectarian standpoint, and we have been exceedingly interested. However, we are none of us as good as the Catholics. I hear that a number of the ladies of St. Mary's Cathedral are holding a retreat at the Convent of the Sacred Heart on Eddy street this week. They have instruction and meditation every day in the chapel of the convent.

Mamma is a member of the Sorosis Club, and has gone there with marvelous regularity every Tuesday afternoon to hear Mrs. Fairweather lecture on Wagner. She has become quite an enthusiast, for Mrs. Fairweather has so realistic a fashion of describing mystic heroes and heroines that one can enter into the spirit of his compositions. Mrs. Fairweather illustrated the lectures by playing selections from the compositions on the piano. The maternal relative intends also going to the Browning lectures by Mrs. Fairweather.

We are all dreadfully disappointed about the ball Mr. Greenway was to have given after Easter. It seems it is not to come off, as the weather is too warm for dancing, Mr. Greenway says. I am heartbroken, but then I should not mind dancing in the tropics. That is not the real reason, though. So many of the girls are going into the country immediately that they fear the ball would be a failure.

Well, good night, Diary, dear. I fly to welcome in the summer season. Shall my winter success see summer failure or shall I gather in a bigger garland in my junketings? In any case, farewell to Lent, languor and dullness. The cricket's best season is to come.

MISS CRICKET.

---

The marriage of Mr. Samuel Schwartz and Miss Helen Sutro is to be celebrated next Wednesday evening at the Sutro residence on Pine street. On account of the recent death of the bride's father, Gustave Sutro, it is to be a very quiet affair, only the family assisting at the ceremony. Dr. Voorsanger will officiate, and for their wedding tour the happy pair proceed to Costa Rica, where Mr. Schwartz is interested in coffee planting. Subsequently, they will return to San Francisco and reside with the family.

In these warm days a salt water swim in the early morning is not only holy and wholesome, but also enjoyable and exhilarating. Quite a number of young ladies have taken to gathering at the Lurline Baths of a morning and enjoying a dip before breakfast. Most of them are good swimmers, and those who are not are gaining dexterity by practice. Among those who may be met there are the Misses Sutro, Hecht, Neustadter and Frank, among others.

* *

The Lenten pall becomes deeper and grayer in Oakland as the forty days draw to a close. Only a very few luncheons and dinners offer themselves to be chronicled this week. The younger people, tired of the enforced quietude, have done most of the entertaining. Miss Marietta Havens had a dinner for several of the Friday Fortnightly young people the other evening. Miss Pauline Fore, Miss Florence Green, Miss Grace Gorrill, Messrs. Walter Magee, Bruce Cornwall, Ira Boss and Otto Wedemeyer were among those bidden. The table was prettily decked in pale-pink carnations and maidenhair ferns. Then Miss Carrie Ritter entertained the Club of 21 on Saturday afternoon. This club anticipates continuing its meetings during the summer, merely varying their form. On this occasion they spent the afternoon playing cards.

The girls of Miss Head's school in Berkeley formed a Lenten club and met once a week to sew for the poor. During the afternoon Miss Head read to the class, combining instruction with their work. On Wednesday afternoon they had a sale, the proceeds of which are to assist in endowing a bed in the Children's Hospital. At first they hope to be able to rent a room and support one or two children. Later they hope to have a ward under their charge.

Mrs. R. Y. Brown gave an informal reception on Wednesday last in honor of Mrs. Hoadley of New York. Mrs. Brown was assisted in receiving by Miss Florence Brown, Mrs. Wheaton and Mrs. Henshaw. On Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. George McNear, Jr., entertained the "Dinner Club" and spent a pleasant evening. Their next occasion will be at Mrs. Pierce's, in about two weeks, when the club will say farewell until the fall. This has been easily the most popular club thus far formed by the young married set. A smart affair was the dinner given on Thursday evening by Mrs. Goodfellow to thirty people. The tables were exquisitely decked with spring blossoms.

In spite of the rigorous observance of Lent, Miss Beck of Milwaukee has been entertained quite extensively during her visit to Oakland. On Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Brigham gave a tea in her honor, and on Friday Mrs. Charles Alexander entertained her in a similar fashion. Besides these affairs, she has been the recipient of various small dinners and luncheons.

To explain the connection between music and digestion is beyond my physiological acumen, but that there is some such connection is beyond peradventure. The condition has been recognized by Justin Ladagnous of the Maison Riche, who has an orchestra play through the dinner hour for the pleasure of his patrons. It is an excellent idea, and has proved most popular. Since its inauguration the Riche has been the scene of innumberable dinner parties—and after Lent the institution will undoubtedly be even more liberally frequented by fashionable people than before. It may also be added that it is excellent music that is being dispensed.

The new Blue Book is out—and thank goodness. It is a necessity. The old one, though but a year old, is out of date, because of the innumerable changes in address made within the twelvemonth. The '97 edition is brought out in first-class shape, and is a compact, cleanly printed book. C. J. Hoag is again responsible for the compilation of names and details, but Hartwell, Mitchell & Willis are the publishers.

AT THE PLAYS

Merrilees Sisters at the Orpheum — Return of Dents O'Sullivan.

The Merrilees Sisters are English—quite English, with just an attempt at the French. They wear long black gloves and long, colored gowns, and sing about—it is hard to remember just what they sing about, but they sing it in a taking sort of a way, and dance with a most taking sort of abandon. One of the young women has a wink that would do even Cissy proud. Besides the Sisters there are also the Kronemann Brothers—all the way from Europe. Their costumes are neat, all white and green, and they go through innumerable grotesque gymnastics, to the accompaniment of the most delightfully quaint English. Such an act as the Kronemanns' is a relief, an infinite relief. Mlle. Titenia is the very daintiest figure that has appeared at the Orpheum for a very long time. Her toe dancing is really remarkable of its kind, and her manner is refreshingly natural.

At the Tivoli this week "The Lily of Killarney" is given an excellent production. Laura Millard as Eily sings charmingly, and looks to the life the traditional stage colleen with her red cloak, laced bodice and high-heeled slippers. Elvia Crox Seabrooke is infinitely more pleasing as a woman than as a man, and as the vivacious Anne Chute looks very pretty, especially in the first act, where she introduces "Killarney." Rhys Thomas' role of Hardress Cregan is unsympathetic, but he carries it well, and sings with good effect. Maurice Darcy's Myles Na Coppaleen is well sustained, and Ferris Hartman as Mr. Corrigan gives another evidence of his versatility. The opera is mounted very well, the cave scene being especially pretty.

The appearance of Mr. Dennis O'Sullivan in "Shamus O'Brien," at the Tivoli on Monday evening, April 26th, is really a musical event. Mr. O'Sullivan has been very successful in England as a member of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, and in "Shamus O'Brien" has made for himself a notable record. The opera is by Dr. Villiers Stanford, and was produced in London in March, 1896, and since then has been sung in New York, making one of the hits of the season. Correct scenery and costumes have been prepared for the production, and the cast supporting Mr O'Sullivan will include Miss Myra Morella, late of the Abbott, Conreid and Carleton companies. "The Lily of Killarney" will be continued through Easter week. It is a capital production, and has been received very well.

Mr. Dennis O'Sullivan will be the soloist at the concert of the San Francisco Symphony Society, which occurs at the Columbia next Thursday afternoon. The concert will be the sixth and last of the present series, and the programme is very fine. It includes Weber's overture to "Oberon," Rubenstein's "Fifth Symphony," the first time in this city; the "Queen Mab Scherzo," from Berlioy's "Romeo and Juliet Symphony," and the famous "Nutcracker Suite" by Tschai Kowsky.

Next week at Morosco's Mamie Sheridan Wolford will appear in the soubrette role of her own play, "The Brand of Cain." The play is a most sensational affair, with any amount of villainy and injured innocence. A number of startling scenic effects are introduced into the piece, including a realistic thunder storm in a Spanish chasm, and also a tremendous explosion, in which the power house of a quarry is totally destroyed.

The Orpheum has an exceptionally good bill for next week. Signor Achille Alberti, late baritone of the Mapleson Grand Opera Company, and Mme. Annina Orlandi, mezzo soprano of the same company, will give selections from grand opera. Marzelli and Millay, comedy acrobats, introduce a novel act, and Herr Grais and his trick baboon and donkey repeat their successful performance of last season.

Primrose and West's minstrels open a two weeks' engagement at the Baldwin to-morrow (Sunday) evening. The company comprises two minstrel bands. Primrose and West's modern minstrels, and a complete company of colored comedians and singers. There are over 100 performers in the organization, including George H. Primrose, William H. West, George Wilson and Jimmy Wall.

The Stanford University and Apollo Choral Associations, containing from 250 to 300 voices, will give two great musical festivals, one at Stanford University, Sunday, May 9th, and the other at Metropolitan Hall in this city, Saturday, May 15th. The combined associations will be under the direction of H. B. Pasmore, and will render choral works from the greatest composers.

Mrs. Gertrude Auld-Thomas gives her song recital next Friday evening at Golden Gate Hall. She will be assisted by Mr. Samuel Savannah, a clever young violinist, and Mr. Robert E. Newell, an excellent pianist, who makes his debut here. Mrs. Thomas' numbers will include the aria from Mozart's "Magic Flute," "Les Larmes" by Massenet, and Chaminade's "Tie me Dirais."

The lady managers of the Children's Hospital announce a Parisian fete to be called the "Gingerbread Fete," to take place during the month of May. The affair will last an entire week, day and evening, and the proceeds go to the general fund of the Children's Hospital.

Mr. Wendell Easton's illustrated lecture on "California Country Homes" took place at Golden Gate Hall Wednesday evening. Mr. Easton's talk was very entertaining, the reference to orange and lemon culture being especially interesting.

The last Bacon-Minetti ensemble concert of the season will come off at the Association Auditorium on Saturday, May 1st.

Moet & Chandon.

The cellars of Messrs. Moet & Chandon, the largest champagne house in the world, contain over eight miles of walks, and about twenty-six million bottles of champagne. The different sections of the vast cellars are named after the various countries to which shipments are made. Russia and England occupy the largest place, special provision having been made for the requirements of the Courts. In this country Moet & Chandon has also been received with great favor, and has recently been served exclusively at the Patriarchs' Ball, Washington Gridiron Club Banquet, of international Epicurean repute, the New Year Party of O. H. P. Belmont, and the renowned Bradley-Martin costume ball.—Hotel Gazette.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

THE BURNS HANDICAP

Second Anniversary of the Great Ten-Thousand-Dollar Stake.

Ten starters for a stake of ten thousand dollars, and not one chance in ten for the horse that does not run his race from start to finish. Such was the state of affairs on Saturday last when the bell rang out the final call for the great Burns Handicap on its second anniversary. A perfect day, a splendid track, and an open-looking race, betokening the skill of the handicapper, had all contributed to foster excitement and furnish pleasure for a crowd unusually large.

For once the interest in the various competitors for their own merits seemed to overshadow the gambler's instinct, and there was evidence of a general feeling that we were about to see a great race run and won by a horse that would thereafter be entitled to fame. The only possibility of doubt that seemed to lurk in any one's mind was whether by some strange chance or other Dame Fortune would not bestow her favoring smiles on the stable, in honor of whose senior partner, Colonel Dan M. Burns, the great race is named.

For no other reason could Candelaria have been made the favorite, and the circumstance only goes to prove that California is as ever a superstitious land. Given now and then such a race as we had that day and the time should come when nearer 80,000 people than a mere 8,000 will turn out to see the big events of the turf on these Western shores.

In the field of ten that faced the starter all but three were bred in California, and those three formed the tail of the show at the finish, whipped in by an erratic mare that was practically friendless. Of the three first horses two could claim a winner of the English Derby for a grand-sire and the third a great grand-sire of like prowess, with a grandsire winner of the 2,000 guineas and fastest miler of his time, and well they sustained their noble lineage; for, in a hard race, run under a good test in weights about as true as was possible, they fought out the battle, straight and turn, to the death, holding on with that depth of courage which only thoroughbred blood can bestow.

In the saddling-paddock the first to claim our attention are the two sons of imp. Brutus, The Roman and Installator. The former is drawn fine as a herring, and considering his still somewhat tender age the treatment looks venturesome. His older stable companion compares favorably in respect of muscle, even allowing for the difference of years, but is not in racing points the equal of the youngster. Schiller is a fair specimen of an upstanding, blood-like race horse, fit and strong. Salvation, with head and neck in shape and contour simply unsurpassable, stout, yet lithe of limb, wins all our approval, save for the bar sinister at foot. Wheel of Fortune, game and natty mare, in order that leaves nothing to be desired; Candelaria, clean and fit to go; Lobengula, ready as Green B. Morris can make a horse, which leaves little to be said; Judge Denny, hard and sleek; Argentina in good muscle, but a bit waspish; and last, but not least, Ruinart, a fine, leathering young horse, not in perfect fettle, but strong as a lion and in make-up looking fully master of the big impost he has to carry.

The following is a detailed note of the conditions of the race and the runners:

A handicap for all ages. Entrance $20; $30 additional for horses not declared by 4 P. M. day after weights are announced; $100 for starters. The California Jockey Club to guarantee the value of the stake to be $10,000, of which $2000 to second and $1000 to third horse. Weights to be announced five days before the race. Horses not declared before 4 P. M. the day preceding the race to be liable for full starting fee. Winners of any race after the weights are announced to carry five lbs. extra; if handicapped at less than weight for age, seven lbs. extra. One mile and one-quarter.

E. A. Mizner's br. h. Ruinart (4 yrs.) St. Carlo–Queen Alta) 116 lbs., M. Bergen 1
W. D. Randall's ch. h. Salvation (5 yrs.) Salvator–Chimera, 120 lbs., Shaw 2
Elmwood Farm's b. c. The Roman (3 yrs.) imp. Brutus–Beauty, 105 lbs., Snider 3
J. Harvey's ch. m. Wheel of Fortune (5 yrs.) Gano–Jennie B., 117 lbs., H. Martin 4
Elmwood Farm's b. h. Installator (5 yrs.) imp. Brutus–Installation, 112 lbs., Coady
Burns & Waterhouse's b.c. Candelaria (3 yrs.) imp. Midlothian–Cosette, 102 lbs., Thorpe
G. B. Morris' br. h. Lobengula (5 yrs.) Hudson–Zulu, 107 lbs., W. Martin
B. Schrieber's b. h. Schiller (4 yrs.) imp. St. George–Fraulein, 113 lbs., Slaughter
McNaughton & Muir's b. h. Judge Denny (4 yrs.) Fonso–Belle of Nantura, 106 lbs., E. Jones
Santa Anita Stables' b. m. Argentina (4 yrs.) Gano–Dolly L., 112 lbs., Shields

In the betting market, business proved brisk, prices closing as follows:

Three to one Candelaria, 3 to 1 Boot's (Elmwood Farm) stable, 8 to 1 Salvation, 8 to 1 Lobengula, 9 to 1 Schiller, 9 to 1 Wheel of Fortune, 12 to 1 Ruinart, 20 to 1 Argentina, 40 to 1 Judge Denny.

Passing out from the paddock the decade paraded before the stand and cantered to the post, The Roman moving especially stiff and proppy, and Salvation seeming to feel the ground a bit hard for his liking. Of the others Ruinart, Wheel of Fortune and Lobengula best pleased the eye.

After allowing just a few moments for Argentina to compose herself, Starter Ferguson lost no time in getting the field off his hands to an even break, Salvation soon showing in front as they passed the stand, Lobengula, Judge Denny and Installator being his immediate attendants, with Ruinart, Candelaria and The Roman closing up the rear. Rounding the first turn Installator worked his way up to the leader and the pair raced together down the back stretch, Wheel of Fortune half a length away at the three-fourth mile post, with Lobengula, Judge Denny, Ruinart and The Roman following on till the far turn was reached, when the terrific pace had begun to tell. By that time Judge Denny, Schiller and Argentina were done with. The Roman was seen to be fast making up ground round the turn, and, as Salvation drew away a couple of lengths from Installator, the stable companion of the latter assumed his place. On the outside Wheel of Fortune was going strong, while Ruinart, whom Bergen had ridden under the whip for the previous six furlongs, was now receiving another strong dose and rapidly overhauling the leaders. As they came on down the stretch The Roman improved his position and drawing level with the son of Salvator, appeared to have the race in hand. But in barely time enough to fetch one's breath a vision is seen of a raking brown horse, with splendid stride and masterly rider, swooping past the son of Salvator and, closing with The Roman in one magnificent rush, Ruinart lands on the post with full a head to spare; Salvation, who had struggled with the utmost gameness throughout the entire journey, finishing up third a short half a length away.

Following on in a long tail were Wheel of Fortune, Installator, Candelaria, Lobengula, and Schiller, with Judge Denny and Argentina out of the hunt. Time: First quarter, 0:25½; half, 0:50¾; three-quarters, 1:15¾; mile, 1:41; one and one-fourth miles, 2:06¾—a new California record.

Thus were we given a race that will be ineffaceable from the memory of all who had the good fortune to witness it, and the honors of the occasion may fairly be divided so far as the horses are concerned with almost even hand amongst the first three, for each one proved himself a race horse every bit of him.

As for jockeyship the display of Bergen in the last twenty strides was in the highest form of the art, only attained by the inborn horseman, and a welcome relief to the scrambling, poking style, of which we get such a surfeit. It did one good to see Marty sitting up firm in his saddle, with the consciousness of power and skill, making ready with hand and eye to land at the moment required.

Mr. E. A. Mizner, the owner of Ruinart, is away in the wilds of Alaska, but his interests were carefully provided for by his friend, Mr. R. Porter Ashe of this city, who had entrusted the preparation of the horse to Merckel. The latter is entitled to great credit for the shape in which the horse came to the post and completed his task.

* * *

The gallant race run by Ruinart in the $10,000 Burns handicap has directed attention very emphatically to his sire, St. Carlo, the property of Mr. W. O. B. McDonough, and located for the last four years at his Menlo stock farm, Portola, San Mateo county. St. Carlo is a chestnut horse, standing sixteen hands, and was bred by the late August Belmont at the Nursery stud, Kentucky, having been foaled in 1887, making him 10 years old, or, in other words, just in the prime of life for work at the stud. For some little time past he has been generally spoken of as a coming young stallion, and would probably have been more conspicuous all along but that he fell under the shadow, both as to romance and renown, of the great Ormonde, with whom he is associated at Mr. Macdonough's farm.

St. Carlo is by imp. St. Blaise, he by Hermit out of Fusee, and his dam was Carina, by the good race horse and sire Kingfisher, son of Lexington and imp. Eltham Lass by Kingston. His second dam was Carita by imp. The Ill-Used out of imp. Camilla, fourth dam Agnes, a daughter of Black Agnes by Velocipede.

ST. BLAISE · IMP. ST. BLAISE-CARINA, BY KINGFISHER
PROPERTY OF W. O. B. MACDONOUGH

In conning over the names in this pedigree one cannot fail to be struck by the extraordinary value of the blood of Fusee, the dam of imp. St. Blaise, her progeny having been in addition to the last mentioned, Match Girl, imp. Candlemas, Hallowmas and Fuse. St. Blaise won the Derby and was a few years ago sold in this country, as every one knows, for $100,000. For Matchbox, a son of Match Girl, the sum of $90,000 was paid a short time back in England, while Matchmaker, another of her sons and therefore a grandson of Fusee, promises to make a great name for himself at the stud.

Moreover, Vesuvian, a prominent Derby candidate, is out of Fuse. All this is amply sufficient to show that this particular strain of blood is right on top on the other side at this moment, while to bring things nearer home it may be pointed out that the best performer in California to-day without question is the 5-year-old Magnet, a son of St. Blaise, and therefore a grandson of Fusee. The value of St. Carlo's blood is further enhanced by his own excellent record as a racehorse, he having won the great American at Brooklyn and the Foam stakes at Coney Island, came in second in the great Futurity at Sheepshead Bay, giving the winner thirteen pounds in the best field of horses, twenty-one in number, that ever started for that event.

Amongst the stock which St. Carlo has already produced in addition to Ruinart, are the very smart 3-year-old gelding, Zamar II., Joan, Charlemagne, Dancing Girl, Alakuma, St. Dunstan, and several promising 2-year-olds, conspicuous among which are the winners Count of Flander and St. hilip, together with Lord Mormion and Charles Le Bel.

It is evident that St. Carlo is to have a permanent name as a producer of high-class race horses, and those breeders who avail themselves of his services should greatly benefit thereby.

The Two-Year-Old Running — Emeryville Handicap.

In the Waterhouses Stakes, 4½ furlongs, last Saturday, the field consisted of Miss Rowena, Recreation, Michael, The Cheat and Rosormonde, and was a gift to the Burns & Waterhouse stable, Miss Rowena winning easily, with her companion, Recreation, hard held. Michael lost ground soon after the start, was subsequently badly crowded on the rail, and could not make his run. It may be well to repeat that Recreation is an exceptionally smart filly, and she has every appearance of growing on.

The Emeryville Handicap, $1,000, for all ages, six and a half furlongs, brought out a field of eight, of which Caesarian carried top weight, 122 lbs, and was beaten by a bare head, after making all the running, by a smart bit of riding on the part of Coady, who brought California, 118 lbs, up on the rail and neatly scored the trick. St. Lee, 115 lbs., was third, a couple of lengths away with Zamar II. a neck behind, Candelaria, Double Quick and Vincitor a couple of lengths apart in the order named and Bernardillo beaten off. Nothing looked better in the paddock in point of condition than the winner, and this, added to good judgment and bold riding on the part of her jockey, undoubtedly helped much in the result. The time, 1:21, was good.

BENEDICT.

In the article on Lenoa Heights, on page 12, read Haywards or Niles train to Sather, instead of "Niles train to Sowther."

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

DR. H. G. YOUNG — Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

VINTINE is the tonic for spring and summer. For weak and nervous women and overworked business-men it has no equal. Its beneficial results are lasting. Sold at drug stores and

AT

BROOKS'
Homœpathic Pharmacy
119 Powell St., San Francisco

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

No tipping of waiters at Johnson's family restaurant, 28 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. Moderate prices.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

BAS BLEUES

A Lenten Discussion of Books, Heroines and Literary Morals.

The Lowell Literary Club was in session. Its president, Mrs. Sangster, had just delivered herself of a denunciation of Gertrude Atherton, and the entire membership was awaiting the onset of Miss Printain, whose joy it was to oppose the dicta of the president. They were sweeping and as moral as a church steeple, these contentions of Mrs. Sangster's, while Miss Printain was a decadent person of radical instincts and liberal views. In the president's family divorce was a forbidden topic, and the especial offense of "Patience Sparhawk" was that she had left her husband to become a journalist, and moreover had individual impressions about the Creator. Both were crimes deserving of electrocution.

"A gifted being as Patience was must be judged by other standards than those that petty conventionalities prescribe," declared Miss Printain. "She may not have been an angel, but why compel her to live with Beverley Peel? Bad temper is fatal in a woman, but it is impossible in a man. Besides, was she not honest in declaring herself about both her husband and her religion?"

"A woman should suffer in silence," declared Mrs. Rawdon, whose husband is hen-pecked. "Having married for better or for worse she must make the best of her circumstances, and the world need know nothing of her pains. Patience Sparhawk should have developed a temper as violent as Beverley's, and that would have cured him in no time."

At this remark a significant glance went round the circle.

"However," interrupted Mrs. Sangster, "if girls would only go in for physical development as Candida St. John did in 'The Career of Candida,' I'm sure we would hear less of domestic troubles. Though Adrian, her husband, committed all manner of sins, she held to him like a true woman, and refused to marry the man she loved while he lived."

"Much good her virtue and her muscle did her," retorted Miss Printain. "A useless sacrifice of self aids no one and is really an injury to two individuals—both to the object and the victim."

"Am I to understand that you advise physical culture as a means of self-protection for women against their husbands?" asked Mrs. Rawdon of the president. "It is not necessary. The women whose husbands are most solicitous are those who scream at a mouse and need helping off a cable car, I know."

"Besides, I don't think a nice woman wants her arm bunched up with muscles like those Dawson girls," declared Mrs. Davis, a fashionplate lady, whose husband is a great amateur athlete.

"Maybe Miss Printain approves of Mrs. Jack Ashton in Street's new book, 'The Wise and the Wayward,'" said Mrs. Sangster in her most sarcastic tone.

"On the contrary, it is you who have exalted success most enthusiastically," was the reply. "Mrs. Ashton is no worse than many another woman who marries a comfortable man and makes the best of her opportunities. Most of them were created for her, by the stupidity of the admirable Nelly, who, being short-sighted and tactless—which is but a specific way of declaring her brainless—deserved her fate. The least one asks of a fool like her is that she cling round the neck of her husband, and that she failed to do. He must have liked a fool anyway, or he would never have married her."

At this outburst the club murmured in disapproval.

"Is it not an admirable example of literary work?" suggested Miss Gresham, interrupting an outburst from Mrs. Sangster. Miss Gresham's pose is critical. "Really, it is capitally modeled, and one has such a lucid impression of the dramatis personae. The characterization is so true and the milieu so cleverly rendered."

"To my mind," interrupted Miss Printain, "Street is one of the most capable of the new men. He has the power to render prosaic facts in plain colors and does not stop to gird at the sad fate which overtakes those whose weaknesses have led them into difficulties. I agree with Mrs. Ashton that the world is much what we make it. If you expect little and do what you may, you will be comfortable and have a tombstone; if you are foolish and insensible of your advantages, then unhappiness is inevitable."

"Now that Miss Printain has expressed the gospel of opportunity," interrupted Mrs. Rawdon, "possibly Mrs. Sangster will tell what she thinks of 'The Impudent Comedians.' Personally I rather like Mr. Frankfort Moore's book, and I'll read this if it is proper and moral."

"It is all about actresses," replied the president. "It seems amusing enough, but I protest that Mr. Moore might have found better materials for heroine-making than Nell Gwynne and Kitty Cline and Peg Woffington, who were notorious stage favorites in the disreputable days of Charles II. They took part in the immoral plays of the period, and are not the kind of women with whom one cares to associate."

"Then I shall not permit my husband to read the book," declared Mrs. Rawdon—"I mean my girls, of course."

Again the club smiled.

"Is it fair to criticise a novel from the point of view of history?" asked Miss Gresham. "Really I was much entertained by the several stories which tell the adventures of Mrs. Woffington and Mrs. Cline, and cannot see where the moral question comes in. If the manner and style of an author entertain one and if there is nothing intrinsically vicious about his treatment of a subject, why object that his characters, when they were in the flesh, were improper personages? I am sure Mrs. Rawdon's daughter will find nothing injurious in Mrs. Siddon's rencontre with the Dublin students, and I am persuaded Mrs. Sangster herself must have laughed at the humiliation of Jack Bates. Admitting the texture is thistledown, I prefer that substance to such indigestible compounds of harum scarum adventure as 'A Woman's Courier' or such an obvious imitation of Anthony Hope as Clinton Ross' 'The Puppet.'"

"I find stories by Mr. Ross in many of the Eastern weeklies," interrupted the president, who is a great respector of institutions. "He cannot be the fool you describe if the publishers will pay for his matter."

"On that basis Marie Corelli is the greatest novelist in England," Miss Printain put in. "The ability to steal a method is not an index of literary talent. It is true Anthony Hope could not have written 'The Puppet,' but we would never have had the book if the 'Prisoner of Zenda' remained in manuscript. As for the 'Woman's Courier'—though Weyman still writes of adventure, that is no reason to proscribe rivalry. One can pass a pleasant hour following the career of James Talbot, even though he is neither a first-rate hero nor an eminent scoundrel."

"I must confess having liked 'The Puppet immensely," piped Mrs. Davis from her corner. "Even if you literary people think it poor, we Philistines may find it amusing. I did, for one."

The club smiled in a patronizing and indulgent way at the speaker.

"At any rate," announced Mrs. Sangster, "though I purpose that my girls, when she grows up, shall have biceps like Candida, I thank heaven she has not hair like Patience Sparhawk. No woman could possibly be proper with red lips and such a dead-white complexion. Besides, had she not red glints in her hair?"

"I would rather have her hair and her skin than be like your friend Mrs. Jack Ashton," declared Miss Printain as a farewell shot at the president.

With which the Lowell Literary Club adjourned.

$100 Reward $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address F. J. CHENEY & CO, Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

$5,000 will purchase half interest in United States patent controlling one of the most profitable advertising devices ever offered to the public. The device pays 25% per month on cost. Over $4,000 has already been realized from the sale of the right for three counties in California alone. The enterprise is well worth the immediate investigation of the most cautious investor. Serious illness of owner necessitates the sale. Address R. A. L., care The Wave.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

ON LEONA HEIGHTS

A Sequestered Paradise Reached by the California Railway.

The reputation which San Francisco enjoys as a tourists' paradise is indeed well merited. After a month spent in here I am prepared to say that no large city has within so short a radius and so easy of access the numerous and varied attractions of this city of the Sunset. Among all the charming trips it was my fortune to take, I think I have enjoyed none more than the excursion to Leona Heights a few days ago. A day of restful pleasure, or action, if you will, where you see nature's rarest smile, where every prospect pleases, and you forget for the moment that even man is vile. Only an hour and a half from town—beauty and variety all the way there and back, too—round trip, 40 cents. Strange as it may seem, I have been asked quite often "Where is Leona Heights.

Out in the foothills back of Oakland is this delightfully sequestered spot, where the least little climb will open a promenade of surpassing grandeur. These "Heights" are reached by the California Railway. This was originally a steam line, and is unique in that it is the first instance where electricity has superseded steam where very heavy grades and other difficulties were encountered. The cars are the same pattern employed in regular railway traffic—reminding one of a Pullman palace car and provided with air brakes. In fact, the road is modern throughout, even to the switchback, which illustrates in a small way one of the methods of fin de siecle mountain climbing. En route we pass Beulah Park, where are several of the charitable institutions of the Salvation Army. A little further on Mills College is pointed out. This is one of the substantial and time-honored centers of learning on the Coast, and a short visit later convinced me it is indeed the Wellsley of the West.

On arriving at the heights one is put down on the broad veranda of the restaurant, where the best of accommodations are to be had from a dinner a la carte to the lightest refreshments. An air of quiet pervades the place, making it particularly delightful as a family resort. The hoodlum need not apply, for he is not wanted, and no provision has been made for such entertainment (?) as he deems necessary to a "good time." There is no bar; all refreshments being served at tables, which occupy the spacious sitting rooms and verandas. The dance floor is also lacking, the conclusion of the management being that this is not what people want who come out for a day's recreation and change in the country. There are shaded walks and inviting nooks, while every hillside is ablaze with flowers and every canyon abounds in choice ferns. The patient donkey waits to transport you to the summit for a most entrancing view or to the deep, rock-walled gorge, where dashes a brooklet forming innumerable pretty waterfalls. The Sunday concerts are an attractive feature. Horneir's band dispenses the most charming music from a band stand, which for design and acoustic properties excels any I have seen. It makes one poetical—

The hills and vales resound,
Every heart with rapture bound.

At night, when under the glow of the thousands of electric lights the grounds are indeed enchanting. There one is almost tempted to become sentimental and sit in some retired cove, where the balmy wind fans the drooping leaves, and talk soft, sweet nothings to the especial pretty girl you have brought with you.

How do you get there?

On Saturdays and Sundays take any ferry (broad or narrow gauge). If the broad gauge, you may leave the Oakland train at Twenty-third avenue, or the Alameda train at Park street, Alameda, in either case taking the Alameda electric car connecting with the California railroad direct to the heights. If you decide to take the narrow gauge boat, remember to board the Alameda train to Park street, thence the electric car as above. One may leave the Oakland local at Seventh and Broadway, and by taking the Alameda car either way may enjoy a pleasant ride through either of the Brooklyns of San Francisco. Those who prefer close connections and few changes will take the broad gauge boat on the even hour and the Niles train to Sowther, just beyond Fruitvale, where direct connections are made with the "Heights" train. On other days take the broad gauge boats only on the even hour and the narrow gauge boats as above mentioned.

The choice of routes may be had either going or coming, and I took advantage of it on my return through Alameda, and the ride revealed to me what a lovely city of homes it is. And as I sat in the bow of the boat enjoying the surpassing beauty of a "sunset through the Golden Gate" my thoughts ran back through the events of the day with its volume of sight-seeing, and I kept saying "All for 45 cents—remarkable." And, indeed, it is.

TOURIST.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

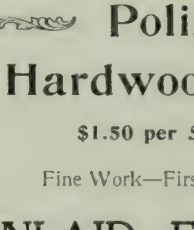
For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

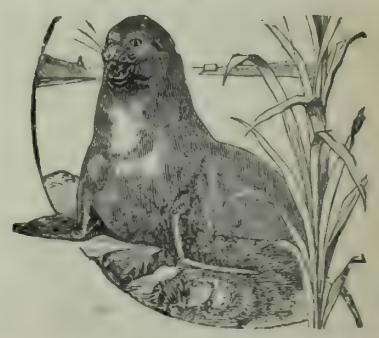
REASONS FOR USING
Walter Baker & Co.'s
Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

Polished
Hardwood Floors
$1.50 per Square Yard
Fine Work—First-class References
INLAID FLOOR CO.
602 Market St., Crocker Building
Telephone Main 5198





Fine Fur and Sealskin Garments
TO ORDER
Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast.
AD KOCOUR, Fashionable Furrier
5½ Kearny Street
OPPOSITE CHRONICLE BUILDING

KEEP COOL

AND DRINK

SCHLITZ BEER

Made with the proper proportion of Malt and Hops, and, being absolutely PURE, is superior to all other beers

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood

AND Sherwood

SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND
LOS ANGELES

$500 IN GOLD GIVEN AWAY

Are you a smart speller? We give $500 away in prizes to those able to make the largest list of words from the word FASCINATES. You can make at least twenty, we believe, and if you can you will get a present anyway, and if your list is the largest you will get $100.00 in cash. Here are the rules to follow: Use only words in the English language. Do not use any letters in a word more times than it appears in FASCINATES. Words spelled alike can be used only once. Use any dictionary, and we allow to be counted proper nouns, pronouns, prefixes, suffixes, any legitimate word. This is the way: Fascinates, faces, face, ace, es, ate, eat, neat, sat, sit, etc. Use these words. The publisher of THE AMERICAN WOMAN will give away, on May 15, the sum of $500, divided into sixty prizes, for the largest lists of words as above, $100 to the person making the largest list; $50 for the second largest; $25 each for the next three largest lists; $20 each for the three next largest; $15 to each of the next three; $10 to each of the next nine; and $5 to each of the next forty largest lists. We want you to know our paper, and it is for this reason we offer these premiums. We make no extra charge for the privilege of entering this word-building contest, but it is necessary to send us 25 cents, silver or stamps, for which we will send you our handsome illustrated 52-page magazine for six months, and the very day we receive your remittance we will mail you free the following ten popular novels, by well-known authors: "A Bird of Passage," by Beatrice Harraden; "The Raised Hand," by Virginia F. Townsend; "What the Storm Brought," by Rett Winwood; "A Heart Unspotted," by John Strange Winter; "Her Lost Kingdom," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; "In Three Weeks," by Walter Besant; "Where the Chain Galls," by Florence Marryat; "A Bachelor's Vow," by George L. Aiken; "The Fugitive Bride," by Rett Winwood; "How Mabel Was Saved," by Marietta Holley. This offer is the greatest you have ever had made to you. Send your list at once. If you win one of the prizes your name will be published in our June issue. Address THE AMERICAN WOMAN, 119 and 121 Nassau street, New York City, N. Y.

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA
ELECTRICAL WORKS
409 MARKET STREET

European Tours

When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's greatest Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowest rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.

THOS. COOK & SON
621 Market Street San Francisco

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of
Artificial Stone in all its branches
Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty
Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

La Grande Laundry Telephone Bush 21
23 POWELL STREET

THE THEATRES

Otis Skinner Goes and Georgia Cayvan Comes With a New Play.

Mr. Otis Skinner leaves San Francisco after a three weeks' engagement at the Baldwin, not richer in purse, perhaps, but certainly better off in the way of friends in the front of the house. When he returns to us, as I hope he will, some day, with a repertoire more in touch with popular ideas, he will find among his audience from orchestra to gallery a goodly number of staunch friends to give him a hearty welcome. Skinner—I don't fancy the name, though the man is to my liking—has a graceful, pleasing personality, and, moreover, is blessed with an abundance of intelligence. His Richard III on Monday night was sufficient evidence of this if we had no other, for it was a well-sustained and careful piece of acting. His figure, heroic and manly, was out of tune with the crippled and distorted Richard, but friend Skinner's face is of that plastic and mobile character that permits him one night to play the hero with the frank and open countenance, and the next the soured, embittered and murderous cutthroat with a countenance to match. I want to serve notice on the world that this man has my approval as an artist, and my pleasant prophecies for his future to boot. He is not by any means perfection, but he has every attribute and qualification necessary to obtain it. To his repertoire I file objection—violent objection. It requires a man of transcendental reputation to fill our theaters now with Richard III and the like. Had Irving played the part on Monday night, the house would have been packed from pit to dome. He might have repeated it for a week with similar success, but the public would have been attracted, not by the play, but by the personality of Irving. You can no longer conjure with the name of Shakespeare; it is the exponent who draws, not the divine William. To "His Grace de Grammont" and "A Soldier of Fortune" I file objection because they are out of date, melodramatic and distinctly unnatural, and depend upon the two latter qualities for their success. "Madame Sans-Gene" and "The Prisoner of Zenda" have educated us clear and away beyond this style of play. Some two years ago the venerable Henry Jarrett, that old prince of managers, brought out for Palmer an English actor—Heaven forgive me, I have forgotten his name, but think it was Willard—who gave us "Judah." It strikes me, and Otis may have this advice gratis, for I like him, that this Willard must have a repertoire into which Skinner would nicely fit. Then why, the American play not being forthcoming, could he not bargain with Willard, and give us a fresh repertoire until something better happens his way? This advice all runs to the dollar and cents view of the case, which is, after all, the chief desideratum.

It is not often that women are quick to recognize the fact that age and embonpoint make a difference on the stage. Ordinarily they hesitate to abandon the successful roles of more youthful days, and cling to them with desperate and stubborn determination until—well, until public disfavor forces complete retirement. Such is not to be the case with Georgie Cayvan, however. She is too wise for such an altogether foolish and suicidal proceeding. You can remember her of old, at least I do, in the society drama, when she was younger and much more lithesome. To-day she would scarcely harmonize with her former stage surroundings, but if you have the good fortune to see her at the Columbia in "Squire Kate," you will declare that she is a very wise and very business-like little woman, and you will agree with me and with her in the wisdom of the change she has made in her roles. She has a play and a company at the Columbia well worth your money and your time. It is drawing crowded and enthusiastic houses, and her engagement promises to be one of the most successful of the season.

"Squire Kate" is not a great play, but it is pleasant, clean and wholesome. You leave the house with a satisfied and contented feeling, and there is a warm place in your heart for the self-sacrificing, unselfish heroine. The third act is the gem. It seems hardly possible that the author who conceived the first two acts, which are noisy with over-boisterous and revelling yokels, could have planned and written that strongly tragic little scene in the hayfield, where Squire Kate (Miss Cayvan) discovers that the man whom she has silently worshiped for years is infatuated with her younger and handsomer sister Hetty (Miss Jerrold), for whom she has worked and slaved, and practiced a lifetime of self-denial. Squire Kate is a pathetic figure, as she leans on the old farm gate listening to the words that kill hope and happiness within her. It was a strong, moving, masterful scene, and Miss Cayvan rose with fine effort to every difficult dramatic requirement and gave us a piece of acting which shall, to her credit, live in my memory for a long while to come.

The ladies of the Baldwin Theater who were not cast in "The Lady of Lyons" had a box at the Columbia Tuesday night, and gentle little Miss Durbin (Mrs. Skinner), she of the fawn-like eyes, testified her appreciation of Miss Cayvan's art by crying heartily during that bit of tragedy in the hayfield. You might naturally imagine these stage-folk could not be moved by mimic scenes, but for my part I have found the true artist is one whose sympathies are easily aroused. Miss Durbin's tears spoke well for her, and the amusement of her companions over her display of emotion quite contrarywise.

There is a notable feature to Squire Kate. Its characters are all so clearly defined that they might well have come from the laboratory of Dickens' mind. There is Gaffer Kingsley "of the Warren," a hard, miserly, money-lending old wretch, who was cleverly handled by George Woodward. In Geoffrey Doone, a farm overseer, one had a glimpse of plain, homespun man, full of love and faithfulness and tenderness. Arundel, a shepherd, was another well-drawn bit of character. Nash, the tax-collector, Lord Silversnake, and Dr. Dutton, all have attributes peculiarly their own, and all are factors in making for the success of the play. There is a jolly little love scene between Jabez and Amanda, the farm servants, that brought down approval from the house. Young Heathcote's courtship of Miss Hetty had a delicate and charming touch. Miss Jerrold, as Hetty, was a pretty, winsome little lass, and Mr. Johnson, as young Heathcote, was quite such an earnest, handsome fellow as might engage the affections of such a maid.

There is love all through the play—good, wholesome, honest love, that entertains and pleases you. Miss Cayvan is decidedly a favorite here, and that, in my judgment, means much for one; for it is a pet hobby of mine that a San Francisco audience cannot be won except on merit.

B.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

GEO. H. KAHN, OPTICIAN, 201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

Electrical Supplies
BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.
523 Mission St., San Francisco

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Easter Opening!

MISS I. E. CONNOR has received a large shipment of the latest patterns in

French Millinery,

Bonnets, Hats, Etc.

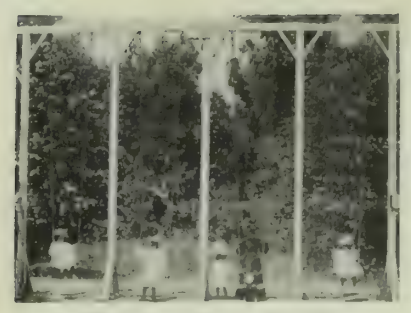
All our patrons are respectfully invited to call and examine our new display of goods.

EASTER BONNETS AND HATS
A SPECIALTY

MISS I. E. CONNOR

36 Geary Street San Francisco

FOR HOARSENESS, COUGHS, ASTHMA AND BRONCHIAL TROUBLES, use "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes. Avoid imitations.



Easter Club's Picnic

San Lorenzo Grove, Sunday, April 18th. Take Oakland Local to Fruitvale, connecting with O., S. L. and H. Electric Railway to the Grove every half hour. Round trip, including admission, Fifty Cents

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL. HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

SUNDAY EVENING APRIL 18 Two weeks! Mat. Sat.

PRIMROSE & WEST'S GREAT BIG MINSTRELS!!

BLACK AND WHITE

ONE : HUNDRED : PERFORMERS !

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

During the second and last week of her engagement beginning Monday, April 19th

Miss Georgia Cayvan

AND HER COMPANY

Will present for the first time here a new and original comedy, by W. R. Walkes, entitled

MARY PENNINGTON, SPINSTER

Every Evening, including Sunday! Saturday Matinee! April 26th: Ward & Vokes in "A Run on the Bank"

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, April 19th

Engagement of the noted singers, Sig. Achille Alberti, Baritone, Mme. Annina Orlandi, Mezzo-Soprano

MARZELLE & MILLAY, Comedy Acrobats

HERR GRAIS and his Great Trick Baboon and Donkey

ED LATELLE, Comedy Musical Artist

KRONEMANN BROS., MERRILEES SISTERS, HARRIS & WALTERS, EVANS & VIDOCQ, DELMORE & LEE

Reserved seats 50 and 25c: balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Every Evening

Artistic rendition of Sir Jules Benedict's Irish Opera

The Lily of Killarney

Great Cast! Magnificent Ensembles! Superb Effects!

Monday Evening, April 26th, careful presentation of Charles Villiers Stanford's Romantic Opera

Shamus O'Brien

First appearance in this city of Mr. Denis O'Sullivan, the Eminent Baritone

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager

Last performances of The Waifs of New York

Commencing Monday, April 19th, Limited Engagement of the Favorite Eastern Actress

MAMIE SHERIDAN WOLFORD

In her original creation of Nora Logan in the Realistic Scenic Romantic Drama

THE BRAND OF CAIN!

A play containing the most startling Explosion Scene ever produced! Thrilling Situations!

Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

COLUMBIA THEATRE—Extra

Next Thursday Afternoon, April 22d, at 3:30

Last Symphony Concert

GUSTAV HINRICHS, Director

MR. DENIS O'SULLIVAN, Soloist

Rubinstein's Fifth Symphony, first time, and the Famous Nut Cracker Suite

Reserved Seats, 50c. and $1. Now on sale

CALIFORNIA THEATRE

Saturday Evg., Apr. 24th, Only Piano Recital

GIVEN BY

PEARL LADD

CALIFORNIA'S YOUNGEST ARTIST

Assisted by Nathan Landsberger, the Lombardero String Sextette, and Matildita, the Royal Spanish Dancer

Reserved Seats, 50c., 75c. and $1.00

On sale at Sherman, Clay & Co's, April 22, 23, 24, and at theatre on evening of performance

GOLDEN GATE HALL

Next FRIDAY Evening, April 23d, 1897

Gertrude Auld-Thomas

ASSISTED BY

Samuel Savannah, Violin

Robert E. Newell, Piano

Reserved, $1.00. General Admission, 50c.

Box office at Sherman, Clay & Co's April 22-23

TURF GOVERNMENT

The Pressing Need of Reciprocity Between East and West.

If any justification were needed for directing public attention to turf affairs it could readily be found in the echoes from the East of the informal discussion which took place recently during the visit to California of Mr. August Belmont, president of the New York Jockey Club. On one occasion in particular, at Ingleside, both the Pacific Coast Jockey Club, a member of the Western Turf Congress, and the California Jockey Club, unaffiliated to either of the main bodies which legislate for the turf in the United States, were represented by those who control the respective destinies of our two local jockey clubs. From the properly authorized statement of Mr. Belmont's views, published since his return home, it is evident that he attaches considerable importance to the meeting in question, and is encouraged to believe that its occurrence may fortunately be found to have paved the way to the establishment of at least some measure of reciprocity between the Jockey Club and the Western Turf Congress. For the well-being of the turf in America it is devoutly to be hoped that a result so desirable may be attained.

Probably the most significant admissions made by the president of the Jockey Club were that the New York authorities do not consider that the Turf Congress has legislated in a manner otherwise than that which seemed to itself beneficial to racing interests in the territory under its jurisdiction, and that at no time have either East or West, as represented by the two organizations respectively, been hostile in sentiment or overbearing in attitude one toward the other. Mr. Belmont candidly admits that this has scarcely been the view of the position commonly accepted by the general public, but his authority on the point cannot be questioned, and the sooner the hitherto erroneous impression is corrected the better. Throughout his remarks Mr. Belmont exhibits the same diplomatic skill and courtesy of expression which were observable in his personal contact with the gentlemen whom he met at Ingleside, and is therefore careful to premise that his interviews here were in no sense official. At the same time he realized that those with whom matters were discussed were the holders of high offices in the Western racing world, so that under all the circumstances it can hardly be deemed unreasonable to invest these interviews with all the importance which usually attaches to semi-official pourparlers, when interests presumably opposed to each other are in search, as in this instance admittedly, of a common basis of agreement. If the main foundation of any compact be the regulation of racing affairs with a view honestly to secure sport for its own sake, and not for mere pelf, it is not being too sanguine to believe that a satisfactory understanding will be speedily reached, and in course of time become so strong as to be permanent.

As is well known, the Jockey Club has succeeded, in the face of much difficulty and at times bitter opposition, in upholding its authority, and has always stood before the world as being actuated by no other than proper motives in the enforcement of its rules. It can, therefore, suffer no loss of dignity in extending the hand of welcome to any organization now prepared, if hitherto unwilling, to work on its lines, even though it may have abandoned the hope once entertained of maintaining supreme control of racing affairs throughout the United States.

Assuming, as it seems almost essential we should under existing conditions, that a divided jurisdiction as between East and West should obtain, there must of necessity be at all times a community of interest, which should compel reciprocity, in various directions. The most conspicuous instance of this sort just now is the pressing need for action affecting the whole country uniformly with respect to stud book registration. In this most elementary detail the whole breeding and racing world is at present at sea, and if something be not done soon and finally, it is impossible to say how disastrous the consequences may be. There can be no sectional jealousy or divergence of interests in such a matter, and no question can afford a better excuse for initiating co-operation. The same thing holds good with regard to licenses, suspensions and general regulations affecting owners and their employees.

A movement is on foot to hold a conference at any early date in some center with the object of uniting breeders, owners and all interested in the turf in support of good government, and if united action can be secured between East and West on the points already alluded to, together with a revision of the forfeit list and a settlement of other matters needing general adjustment, the harmonious working of racing affairs throughout the country, if only in these respects, must surely tend to a return of prosperity in all quarters where the turf is or could be made popular. In no part of the States is this condition more desirable than in California, which is isolated and independent enough to be spared antagonism to any section, whatever shape it might otherwise be forced upon us.

The immense importance of the breeding interest and the wonderfully rapid growth of racing here are sufficient to compel the prompt and serious efforts of local authorities in support of any attempt towards establishing reciprocal relations between East and West, or effecting any union having for its object good government in turf affairs.

The season now drawing to a close has shown a distinct advance and an all-round improvement, not only in the character of the sport, but also in the manner in which the current business of the two local tracks has been conducted. The effect of this has been to encourage the patronage and good will of the better elements of society to an extent previously wanting, with the further result that in making their plans for the coming season the jockey clubs will add to the inducements which tend to cultivate this tendency. When the general body of racing men on this continent realize that such events as the recent California Derby (value $5,000) at Ingleside, and the Burns Handicap at Emeryville (value $10,000) are annual events, producing such sport as they have done, to say nothing of the numerous and liberal minor stakes, it is pretty certain that their steps will tend more and more in this direction as the winters come round.

Of course there will always be some who are prejudiced against racing, just as others are against, shall it be said, religion, but that makes neither bad things. It happens that the former, like some of the best things in the world, is very susceptible of abuse, and the way to reduce that to a minimum is by decent methods to render racing a pursuit for those who have and seek to retain the respect of their fellowmen. With the coming two weeks we shall see the end of the winter meeting at Ingleside, and no one who can afford the time should lose the opportunity in this beautiful weather of seeing for themselves how enjoyable a visit to the course can be made, especially if one drives out by the new boulevard, and how vastly improved everything is nowadays as compared with racing as it used to be before the new era.

BENEDICT.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

"SUTRO & CO."—TO WHOM IT MAY concern: Take notice that we, Therese Sutro and Charles Sutro, Jr., have formed a co-partnership for the transaction of business in the State of California and elsewhere, the office and principal place of business of the partnership being located in the City and County of San Francisco. The name, style and designation of the firm is SUTRO & CO. The full names of all the members of the said partnership, and their places of residence, are subscribed hereto.

San Francisco, April 7, 1897.

THERESE SUTRO,
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

CHAS. SUTRO, JR.
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Duly acknowledged before Geo. T. Knox, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, California, April 7, 1897.

Filed April 7, 1897.

C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By Wm. H. C. Johnson, Deputy Clerk.

Argonaut OK WHISKEY

IS FIVE YEARS IN WOOD BEFORE BOTTLING

E. MARTIN —AND— CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

California Hotel

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Hotel Rafael

Open all the year—only 50 minutes from S.F.

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

Two modern, exquisite, home-like, first-class hotels, both under personal supervision of General Warfield

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.

Proprietors

Pacific Congress Springs

HOTEL

SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS

SANTA CLARA COUNTY

Remodeled and under New Management

Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco

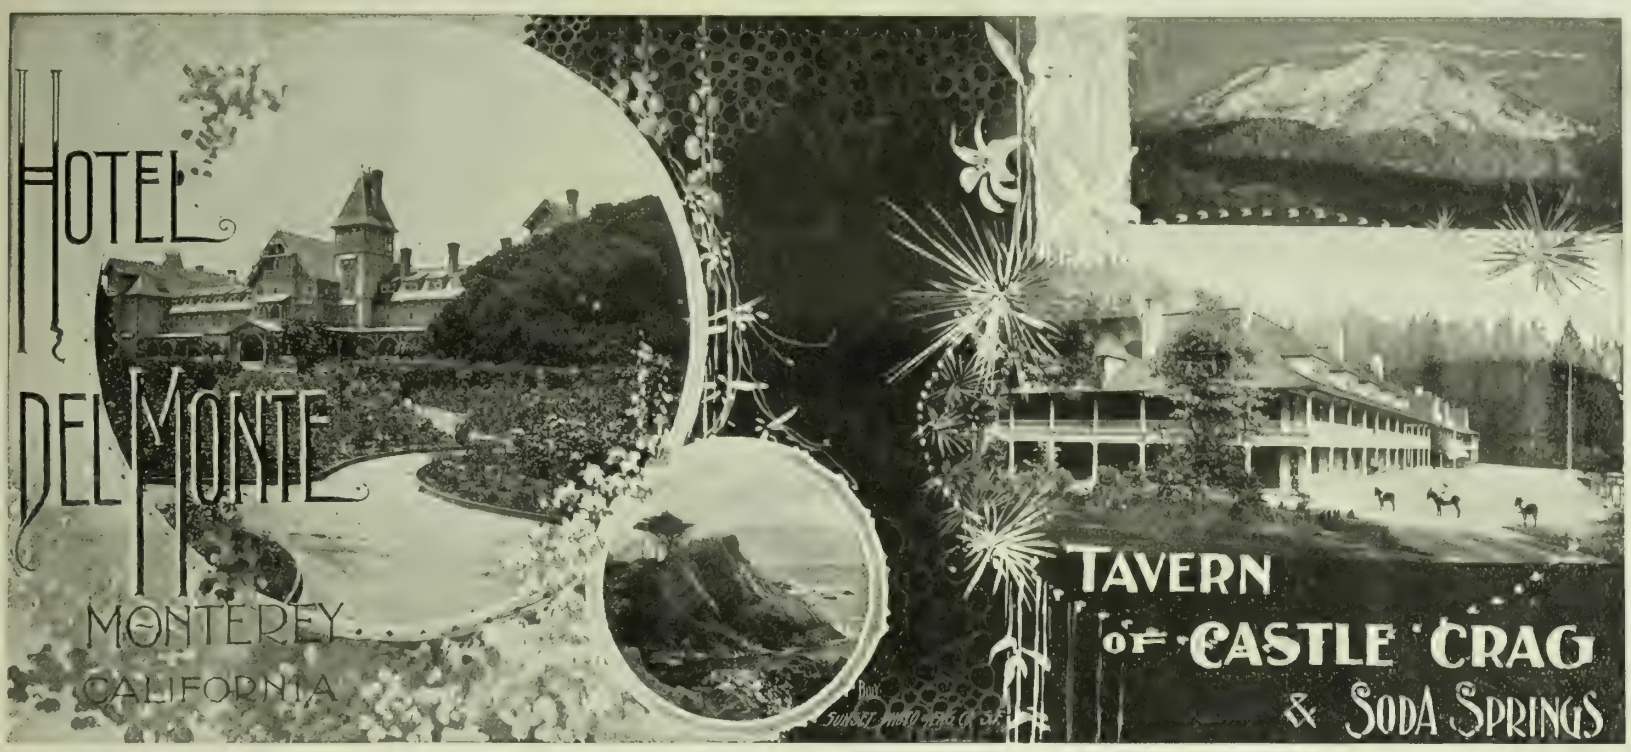
6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara 12 miles from San Jose

Address GEO. O. WATKINS, 523 Market St., S. F.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

In photo-engraving, as in other lines of trade, you sometimes pay superior prices for inferior work. We guarantee superior work, by a new process, at moderate prices.

Send for estimates to

THE WAVE PUBLISHING CO.

24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from April 19 to May 1, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine!

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar.

Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

The Corrigan Stakes, Monday, April 19th
The Spreckels Cup, Saturday, April 24th
The California Hurdle, Wednesday, April 28th
The Ingleside Stakes, Four Miles, Saturday, May 1st

F. H. GREEN, Secy. S. N. ANDROUS, Pres.

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, April 5 to 19, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.

Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, April 20, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Monowai," for Australia, Thursday, April 29, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM O. BERG, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, March 18, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal.; location of works, Storey Co., Nev.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 111) of Ten Cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 23d day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday the 14th day of May, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine st., San Francisco.

OFFICE OF THE HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING COMPANY, room No. 11, San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 311 Pine street, San Francisco.

To the stockholders of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, and to all others concerned: Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the consent, in writing, of the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, duly filed in the office of said company, the principal place of business of said Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company has been changed from room No. 8 of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to room No. 11, in the same building, where the business of said company will be hereafter transacted. This notice is published in accordance with Section 321 of the Civil Code.

Dated March 19, 1897.

By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Fiestas Carnivals and Summer Outings

A grand round of merrymaking throughout the land

La Fiesta de Los Angeles

Will take place in the Southern Metropolis April 20th, and continue five days. Unique day parade of Spanish caballeros, Chinese with their Great Dragon, Mexican vaqueros, etc. Beautiful electric night parade of California flowers. Great Water Carnival, Floral Parade and Battle of Flowers. Novel Street Carnival at night.

Golden Gate Carnival

To be held in San Francisco during the week commencing May 3d, promises to be the most brilliant festival ever witnessed in the west. Unique features never before introduced, and an unbroken succession of surprises and attractions. California's thrilling and romantic history since the days of '49 will be typified, and many novel creations will exemplify her marvelous industrial development. It is proposed to fix this event permanently in the Golden Gate Calendar.

The season for

Summer Outings

Will soon be here. If your plans are not mature, and you desire more information about the many attractive retreats all over the State, send to the General Passenger Agent of the Southern Pacific Company for circulars and folders describing the Camping and other Resorts of the grand Shasta Region, Castle Crags, Lake Tahoe, and neighboring attractions on the Sierra Summits, Yosemite and the Big Trees, the Santa Cruz Mountains, Lake County and Southern California. REDUCED RATES in many directions. Inquire of Southern Pacific Company agents.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. April 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. April 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. April 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. April 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. B. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be [illegible]

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1720

Capital Paid Up, $3,406,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
504 Montgomery Street

The Lion Fire Insurance Co. Limited of London. Total Cash Assets in United States, $885,797.09

The Imperial Insurance Co. Limited of London. Established on Pacific Coast in 1852

WM. J. LANDERS, Resident Manager

PACIFIC COAST BRANCH

205-207 Sansome Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. D. Chesbire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres. W. O. Macdougall, Secretary

California Undertaking Company

Finest Funeral Parlors in the City

Tel. Main 971. S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Shortly before the inauguration a young man called upon President McKinley at Canton to pay his respects. Mr. McKinley was well acquainted with his visitor, and had taken great interest in him, especially in his love affair, and he touched upon the tender topic. The young man was embarassed, but the President persisted in his questioning, and soon discovered that the prospect of love in a cottage was not pleasing to the young lady. "Do you think she would like to live abroad a little while?" asked the President. "I shouldn't wonder," said the young fellow. "Well," said Mr. McKinley, "if you think it will do any good, tell her that I will give you a consular appointment as a wedding present. Pick eight or ten places in Europe that you think would suit her, and when I take up consular matters, I will nominate you for one of them." The young man has since notified the President that he would be married early in June.

Deputy Marshal Hannah of Nebraska sometimes practices law. He was defending a criminal case recently before a Walsh County Justice, and when a legal point came up, undertook to read a little law to the court. "What book is that?" inquired His Honor. "The code," replied Mr. Hannah. "What code?" "The code adopted at the session of 1895, your Honor." "Now look here, young man," said the judge, as he opened a weather-beaten volume of territorial laws; "I've tried cases by this book for the last eighteen years, and I'm going to keep right on a-doing it, and there don't no new fangled laws go in this court. Do you hear? Sit down! You don't need to offer no objections, for I'll overrule 'em. The prisoner is found guilty as charged. Call the next case."

Justice Calvin E. Pratt of the Supreme Court of New York often said that there were too many law books and that over half of them were useless. He asserted that most lawyers read too much by far. Meeting a young law student who had just offered himself for the admission examination, Justice Pratt asked him what he had read in preparation for the ordeal. The youthful limb of the law proceeded to tell. He named about all the elementary treatises from Blackstone's Commentaries to date. Besides these, he had studied the codes, read Woolsey's Political Science, Lieber's Code of Political Ethics, "and," he said, "all the leading cases cited." "My heavens! boy!" exclaimed Justice Pratt, "you've read enough to ruin your chances as a lawyer for life!"

A Chinaman in Calgary, in the Canadian northwest, was charged with having stolen a five-dollar bill. After hearing the evidence, which left no doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the justice looked carefully into the criminal code which had just come into force. After mature deliberation he told the prisoner that although he felt sure of his guilt, he felt he was bound to discharge him. "I find that provision has been made in cases of theft by tenants, lodgers, clerks, servants and others, but there seems to be no provision regarding theft by Chinamen. It is clearly an oversight on the part of the legislature, but you are entitled to the benefit of it. You may go."

A certain venerable and benevolent judge in Paris, who was about to pass judgment on a prisoner, consulted his assessors on each side of him as to the proper penalty to be inflicted. "What ought we to give this rascal, brother?" he said, bending over to the assessor on the right. "I should say three years." "What is your opinion, brother?" "I should give him four years." The judge, with great benevolence: "Prisoner, not desiring to give you a long and severe term of imprisonment, as I should have done if left to myself, I have consulted my learned brethren and shall take their advice—seven years."

When the Duke of Leeds, the next Governor-General of Canada, was in Parliament as the Marquis of Carmarthen, he was the youngest member in the House of Commons, and the youngest-looking until he grew a beard. It is told of him that on the day of his election someone asked him: "Say, boy, does your mother know you're out?" "Yes," promptly replied the youthful politician, "and when the votes are counted to-night, she will know I am in!"

It was related of one of the members of Grant's first Cabinet, a former college professor of the "know-it-all" variety, that he was on one occasion discoursing on the subject of the Druses, when an auditor interrupted him with the remark that the cyclopedia did not agree with him. "Oh!" was the reply, "I know a great deal more about the Druses than I did when I wrote that article in the cyclopedia."

Senator Voorhees once had succeeded in delivering an appeal which had brought tears to the eyes of several jurymen. Then arose the prosecuting attorney, a gruff old man, with a piping voice and nasal twang. "Gentlemen," said he, deliberately, "you might as well understand from the beginning that I am not boring for water." The remark offset the eloquence of Voorhees, for his client was convicted.

James Payn tells the story of an old lord who, in a strange house, where he has gone for hunting, sleeps as usual in the same room with his whipper-in. "Jack," he says, "get up and see what the morning's like." He opens what he thinks is a shutter, but it is the door of a cupboard. "Dark as the devil and smells of cheese!" is his reply.

A witness about to be sworn on behalf of the defense in a liquor case in Calgary, was observed by the justice to kiss his thumb instead of the testament which he held in his hand. "Kiss that book, sir!" thundered the observant magistrate. "You may deceive the Almighty, but you can't deceive me!"

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS

AGENTS
222 Market Street
S. F.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

Thoerner & Roesli

FLORISTS

Choice Cut Flowers and Funeral Designs

Also Artistic Designs made of Imported, Dry, Natural Flowers for Export Purposes a specialty

809 Larkin Street

BETWEEN GEARY AND O'FARRELL, SAN FRANCISCO

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company, Baltimore — Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., San Francisco

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

JOHNSON & CO.

New Spring Goods just arrived
Ladies' Jackets to order

Merchant Tailors

24 Montgomery Street

HENRY ST. GOAR — EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Military Games — Ladies' Gymnastic Class of the Y. M. C. A.

Belles of the Fiesta

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 17 — SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 24, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS

MILITARY ATHLETICS AT THE PRESIDIO

THE "HASTY INTRENCHMENT" RACE: THROWING UP A SAND FORTRESS IN FIVE MINUTES WITH PAN AND BAYONET

THE WAVE

is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 24, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2–3 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 3 |
| Maids With Muscle: by H. L. Dietz, M.D. | 4 |
| "En Route" | 5 |
| Army Athletes | 6 |
| La Fiesta: by Justin Sturgis | 6 |
| Views of the Presidio Athletic Games | 7 |
| Primrose and West in the Greenroom | 8 |
| The Swift "Augusta" | 9 |
| In Society | 9–10 |
| Fiesta Belles | 10 |
| The Turf in California | 11 |
| An Introspective Interview | 12 |
| The Theatres | 13 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

DREAMING OF A DAWN.

Eugene Debs, of the American Railway Union, is a dreamer of dreams. Roseate visions flit across his fancy, and he does not awaken to learn that they are unreal, but in a blissful sleep murmurs to his fellows: "Come and see the beautiful things I see; come and sit at the feast." But there are no beautiful things, save phantoms conjured up of hope, and there is no feast, but a hard-earned loaf, thinly buttered. In these pictures that come to Debs, he beholds the ideal figure of Labor, the radiance of a halo shining upon his perspiring brow, and his honest, calloused hand firmly guiding a troubled universe, while all applaud, and hail him deliverer. In the foreground are piles of shackles struck from the limbs of toil, and on either side a throng of one-time millionaires, scarcely welcome, and yet safe from violence or reproach; for selfishness is dead, and justice holds undisputed sway. None works hard, and the laborer is deemed worthy of his hire. There is no more oppression. The gentle spirit of Labor, ever benign, ever unerring, rules all men.

It is a pleasing picture, and no wonder the dreamer longs to have it more than a picture, and fain would take it from its framework of imagery and foist it upon a practical world as something tangible. Even if in the lineaments of the ideal figure in the center Mr. Debs traces some resemblance to the leader of the American Railway Union, he cannot be blamed. Any man might be proud to bring about a state of affairs that can only exist when the millennium shall come; suppressing all contention, and driving all evil from the human heart. So he joys in a faith based upon a hope that has no groundwork, is happy in a condition that may obtain in Heaven, but not where mortals strive.

The reformation, or, as he calls it, "the Dawn" of which Mr. Debs beholds with ecstacy the first gray inkling, can never appear while labor, to be the dominant, indeed the only force, has in it any element of selfishness. And what has purged labor of this quality since a few months ago it applied the torch, killed innocent men who sought nothing but to earn honest wages, and only sullenly resumed its toils when hunger had driven it to desperation, and the bayonet of law and order was prodding it in the flanks? At that time Debs did not counsel peace. At that time he expected capital to sue for mercy and to dictate to it such terms as might suit him. Capital did not sue. It felt no pang of hunger, and labor began to starve. Bitter rivalries sprang up among the strikers, and they fought each other with revilings.

If all the laboring men of the United States were of one mind; if they had the intelligence to know that the good of one was the good of all; if they had no individual ambitions; if, if—but there is no end to the ifs. As a matter of plainest fact Mr. Debs, outside of his dream, has not material to be wrought into the great economic structure he plans, and material dragged from a dream makes but the frailest of castles in the air. The working men of the country, when they band in unions, have proved themselves to be as pitiless as any corporation, as devoid of soul as any combination that corners oil or robs the consumer by arbitrarily raising the price of coal. Even the unions quarrel within themselves and among each other. One great trouble is that "Americans" are often such only in name. The title covers everything from the ignorant and vicious Hun to the impoverished Jewish exile from Russia. The Cuban, who has become an "American," rushes back to fight for his native land, using his acquired citizenship as a cloak. The ex-Greek does the same when his king calls to arms. Good Cubans, and good Greeks, but bad Americans; poor stuff to rely upon in a great scheme of amalgamation. Laborers are not homogeneous, and for many years cannot approach such a state. Ther are those who long for a Moses who shall lead them out of the wilderness. There are others who do not know they are in a wilderness, and would buffet any Moses who might raise a standard and ask them to follow.

When, in any given instance, labor has acquired the mastery, it has proved itself as hard a master as capital. When by his own efforts a laborer has become a capitalist, he has proved himself more steely hearted than the one born to riches. Thus it is clear that Labor is not yet fit to be elected ruler, even if it could stand together long enough to vote itself into power, which it will not and cannot. So fades the dream.

But Debs is wiser than of yore. No longer does he summon his men to battle; no longer does he advocate strikes and riots. Now he is for peace, and to any peaceful victory that he shall achieve, he will be more than welcome. For any closer relationship he may establish between capital and labor he will be praised. And if he can educate labor into the unselfishness it advocates for others, then will he no longer be a dreamer, idly dreaming, but awake, and great.

IS THE DEPARTMENT STORE A CURSE OR A BENEFIT?

The great department store is coming under the ban of public disfavor, and there is a serious struggle ahead of it which may terminate in its complete extinction—a fate that will scarcely excite a particle of regret among men acquainted with its effects upon the community. Chicago has sounded the alarm of war, and now the Legislature of the State of Illinois has before it a measure which seems to have every prospect of passing, that is intended to forever put an end to the operation of these institutions within the State of Illinois. That this hostile feeling will spread seems inevitable. That it will prevail in the end would seem to be but a question of mathematics. The many are injured by it, and the few benefited.

A few years ago the department store was scarcely known in America. It was in its infancy ten years ago, and excited little comment and no apprehension among retail dealers. To-day it is feared and hated by all classes of trades people, and is graphically termed by the Chicago merchant "the deadly devil-fish of retail trade.' The modern department store is simply an offshoot of the modern trust idea, and like its prototype has grown to immense, unrecognizable, and threatening proportions. It has invaded every line of trade, from the selling of fish to dealing in diamonds. It manicures hands, or pulls teeth. It will sell dress goods and groceries, books or baseballs. It has completely demoralized the retail trade wherever it has set up to do business. It has driven thousands of prosperous retail merchants to ruin and into the courts of bankruptcy. It has deprived an army of clerks and bookkeepers of employment. It has depreciated the value of real estate, and demoralized rents. It has worked such general havoc and such a widespread blight wherever its touch has fallen, that at last the injured and threatened merchants have joined in a serious and determined revolt against its very existence. One or the other must go to the wall; the two cannot survive, and the fight is now on to the death.

In Chicago the opposition to the department store has become most bitter and intense, involving all classes of citizens. Indignation and resentment have grown strong and powerful enough to determine the results of the late municipal political contest in that city in favor of the Democratic candidate. Mayor-elect Harrison, early in the campaign, announced himself as favoring the extermination of the department store evil. The Democratic platform contained a plank which pledged its candidates to the relief of the suffering retail merchant, but the Republican party was slow in reaching a conclusion, and trifled with the subject. This lukewarmness was most unwise, for it resulted in the utter defeat of that party. Republican and Democratic citizens interested in the retail trade dropped every consideration of partisan politics, and commenced an open, aggressive, deperate and victorious fight for Harrison. Not only did they vote for him themselves, but thousands of clerks followed their lead, and they, with an army of unemployed clerks and injured owners of real estate, made a hot and determined canvas among their friends and neighbors. The department store was the issue, and those who opposed it carried the day by a handsome majority.

The measuree now before the Illinois Legislature levelled at the department store is the outgrowth of that movement. The bill is most sweeping and general in its character. In that State, as in California, special legislation is prohibited, but the measure has been carefully drawn by skillful lawyers to avoid this constitutional inhibition. It has been made to affect cities of a particular class, and divides the various branches of the retail trade into seventy-four classe, respectively. To conduct a business in any one of these classes a merchant must take out a license, costing not less than twenty-five dollars per year, and must besides comply with the stringent provisions of the new law, the penalty for violation of which is fine and imprisonment. In his application for a license the dealer must state what class and kind of goods he proposes to handle, and the license is granted only for the line named in his application. The act also prevents an assignment of one license, or the use of more than one license in one building under a general superintendency or management. A violation of the terms or of the spirit of the act is punishable by a revocation of the license and perpetual forfeiture of the right to take out a new permit.

During the late Chicago election it was forcibly pointed out that the downtown department stores had enlarged their operations to such an extent "that every conceivable thing vital to the existence and comfort of human beings could be bought under one roof. There are stores where provisions for the table can be had, and while these are being packed the purchaser may buy furniture or drygoods, have their teeth filled, her boots mended, eat her luncheon, and even consult with a doctor." The results were pointed out as being most disastrous to the material welfare of the city. The smaller retail tradesmen was forced out of business. A large number of empty stores and flats became the rule, where once there was a scarcity of desirable quarters.. The Cook County Business Men instituted an investigation and found twenty-two thousand empty stores and a proportionately large number of vacant flats and residences within the city. Retail tradesmen were driven to and attempted to hold their trade by cleaning the streets, by paying from their own purses for better lighting, and by making their stores and displays more attractive. They worked earnestly and industriously. The very existence of their business was at stake. It was a life and death struggle against large capital. They cut prices almost to starvation figures, but the trade continued to slip away from them until it became apparent that they would soon go down. As a final resort, appeal was made to the ballot and to the legislature for relief, with the success just stated.

Theoretically there may be no excuse for this opposition, but theories count for little in the face of suffering and hardship.

THE TRIUMPH OF FLUNKEYISM.

In this country there are no titles, nor is there need of any, and yet it is probable that there is not another land in which a title is looked upon with such abject and awed respect. This phase of the subject is as old as snobbishness. The fact that rich and handsome American girls sell themselves in open market, a title being the price, is as well known as it is shameful, and that these chattels retain apparent respect and fail to consider themselves disgraced is a matter beyond discussion. It may excite disgust, and in the student of morals, even consternation, but so it is, and so one may expect it to continue. Yet it could be wished that the American girl abroad would not place herself on sale, or selling herself, had sense enough to exact a better bargain.

All this comes from the prevalent disease known as flunkeyinsm, and a new manifestation of it has now appeared to our further distress. The remarks hurled at us by the English press are churlish and vindictive, and makes the blood boil a little; but, alas! they are true. The conduct of Americans in connection with the Queen's diamond jubilee has been termed in London "The Triumph of Flunkeyism." The "triumph" is not exactly clear. For a lot of American victims of flunkeyism to get a chance to show themselves and their malady may be in a sense a triumph in that it deprives sundry Cockneys of a similar privilege, but it is a sorry triumph. The objectionable Americans have in this instance secured the points of vantage along the route of the Queen's procession; secured them at great cost, expending fortunes for a window so as to be able to see Victoria, and inspired by the vague hope that they themselves will be seen. Of course they will not attract any more attention than a gnat in a swarm, but they hope they will, and they want to lay at the fet of royalty a personal tribute. They want it understood that they love a title and a crown, and that even if Americans, they are sorry for it, and wouldn't be if they could help it. It is nothing to them that they are simply constituting themselves a vulgar and annoying display, of which sane people this side the water are heartily ashamed.

There is no particular reason why an American should desire to see the Queen's procession. There will be tinsel and glitter, but this can be seen in a circus parade. The Queen herself is a little, fat woman, who happened to be born into a position which insured an easy living with nothing to do. She has enjoyed the living, and has faithfully done nothing. Her son, the Prince of Wales, will be there, it is true, but there is nothing about him to excite the attention of a healthy mind. His position is a sinecure. He has more debts than a private individual could have acquired. He is much given to gambling, with the understanding that for the opponent to win would be exceedingly bad form. Better looking men and abler men with better characters may be found in any walk of life. Yet Flunkeyism crowds the natives away so as to get a momentary peep. No wonder the native are wroth. They pay for the show, and they support the people in the cast.

If English tourists were to flock to the inauguration of an American president in such numbers as to get a monopoly of reserved seats, they would be voted boors and asses, which indeed, would be an entirely proper vote. As Americans have reversed the proposition, with no good excuse for having done so, the only way to spare their feelings would be to refrain from putting the matter to vote. There is no inclination to spare their feelings. The vote has already been taken.

Hail the Triumph of Flunkeyism! The best seats at the exhibition and the gibes of all who beheld the scramble to get them. This outshines the minor triumphs of appearing half nude at a "drawing-room," or of being purchased by the monocled scion of some tottering family and being permitted to repair his wasting fortunes with gold made by the tanning of hides or the packing of pork.

But there is one mitigating feature about Flunkeyism. It has a pleasing tendency to go abroad and stay there, while its opportunities to become offensive at home are limited. If when abroad it have an unhappy time, it need not look back here for sympathy. Perhaps the abuse now being showered upon it may have a salutary effect, but Heaven grant it have not the effect of driving the diseased rabble back to the native land that is ashamed of it, and can suggest no cure.

AMERICAN AND GERMAN RAILWAYS.

Some time ago the German government sent to the United States an Imperial Commission to examine and report upon the railway systems of America. They were expected to set out the advantages as well as the disadvantages of the American systems, with a view to improving the transportation service of Germany.

Unless memory be sadly at fault, during the government ownership agitation that passed over this State a few years ago, German railways were held up as models for us to pattern after, and the successful governmental control exercised by that Empire was used as an argument in favor of government ownership in America. The Imperial Commission of Germany, however, has been impressed with the superiority of the American railway systems over those at home. They charge that the German railways lack speed, lack comfort, and lack the cheap rates, while speed, comfort and cheap rates prevail in America. Lack of speed in German railways is due to the limited capacity of the continental locomotives, so the Commission says; and the very considerable working capacity of the American locomotive is a matter to which they direct special attention. Lack of comfort, so runs the report, is due to the fact that the cars in Germany, and in fact in all the continental countries, are built upon the English model, which is patterned after the stage-coach of centuries ago. They are practically swinging boxes, which rattle from side to side, and, in addition to being uncomfortable, bring consternation to the American traveler who has been accustomed to move safely along at the rate of fifty miles, or even sixty miles an hour, without the slightest discomfort. The report of this Commission describes our sleeping-car system, as well as the construction and the character of the American day coaches.

The American baggage-system also comes in for many compliments. In America one hundred and fifty pounds go free; in Germany but fifty-five pounds, and then only on certain tickets. The Commissioners point out the advantages of our brass check system as compared with the red tape run off over in Germany before baggage is "checked." They also describe in approving terms our accident insurance arrangements in the stations, our free time tables, bureaus of information, and methods of selling newspapers, fruits, candies and luncheons. A round trip ticket for six hundred kilometers (three hundred and seventy-three miles) all over central Europe costs exactly five pfenigs (one dollar and nineteen cents) per kilometer, second class. Ordinarily fast trains in Prussia cost two dollars and fourteen cents, first class; one dollar and fifty-nine cents, second class; and one dollar and eleven cents, third class. In the United States the rate per kilometer is one dollar and thirty-four cents, which, our Consul-General points out, is astonishingly cheap when one thinks of the standards of value and the supposed standards of living in the respective countries.

The lighting of the trains in Germany is another matter touched upon by the Commissioners. There the lighting is wretched, while it is pointed out that in America nothing is left to be desired. Taken all in all, while the report with judicial fairness points out the shortcomings of the American railways, yet it urges the Empire to copy that which is as good as or better than what Europe offers, which is by far the largest part of the entire American system.

There is a moral here over which some of our friends to socialism might ponder to advantage.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Suppose there rang in the Stanford University "Quad" an alarm of fire, I wonder if there would not have been a better feeling shown in lending a hand to fight the flames and save material than at the fire in the Agricultural Building at Berkeley? There surely would not have been more earnest work on the part of the students, for the U. C. boys fought like demons—but they have a way in the Stanford Faculty of taking off their coats on occasions of danger, and pitching in for the good of the 'Varsity. A spectator at the Berkeley fire tells me that the Professors who did not keep their classes in their lecture rooms while the cow college was to be saved, stood around smoking cigars and criticizing the heroic efforts of the men who were striving to assist. One or two of the younger members of the faculty and Layman in particular who had his clothes all but burned off his back, did labor manfully, but there were certain professors who even refused to remove or to ask anyone else to move a pile of notes of the department that had been thrown out of the window and left lying in imminent danger of destruction from falling walls. The plight of these valuable records did not move their strong souls and the papers were left to perish. Prof. Hilgard's memoranda of five years' labor were lost, burnt or stolen, and a valuable collection destroyed. Dr. Hayne lost a valuable miscroscope, besides the technical books of reference he had bought abroad. His collection of buds were saved from being thrown out of the window almost by force, so excited were the rescuers, but they were lost in the excitement of the event. Prof. Jaffa was equally unfortunate.

***

There were many acts of vandalism committed, that intensified the exasperation the needlessness of the fire caused—desks of private letters were opened and the contents stolen by the crowd. Books were carried away, indeed, a great deal of what was rescued was stolen for want of proper guard. The exposure of the criminal neglect of the superintendent of the grounds is appalling. There was not a hose that would fit couplings with the hydrants, and lengths of tubing were filled with mud so as to be useless. After much difficulty a hosepipe was connected, but proved ten feet too short to reach the skylight above the fire, and the tiny jet sprayed against the ceiling of the laboratory was ineffective in stopping the flames.

***

Among the comedies of the situation was the heroic but misguided youth who threw three fire extinguishers out of the window and then carried carefully down stairs a glass jar of Peruvian fertilizer. The conflagration was caused by the carelessness of a student who, contrary to rules, had removed his sterilizing oven from the fireproof compartment to the woodwork, and then left it with two Bunsen burners lighted under it. To his credit be it said, however, that he came up voluntarily, directly after the fire, and owned up to his responsibility for the accident.

***

An able manipulator, who has in his time had fingers in most contemporary pies, assured me once that in politics nothing ever happens naturally. That is, for every effect you must seek a cause in some one's ambition or advantage. Following this theory I have been speculating on the shifting of the Governor's Secretary, Ed McCabe, who vacates the post next the Executive throne for the office of State Librarian. To the vacancy Budd has appointed a certain P. J. Shields, whose distinction is confined to Sacramento, just as Mr. McCabe's was to Merced. He is a very smart young man, who for several years past, has done politics under the Capitol dome; he is a trustee of the library, and in real cleverness and cuteness it is said he can give points to Sam Leake. During the session that is now history, Shields was constantly with the Governor, suggesting, advising and acting as agent in his negotiations with the Legislature. Now, a man of this caliber has great value to Budd, though that worthy does deny his aspirations—especially so, in view of his approaching departure. As soon as he is over the Sierras on his holiday, Lieutenant Governor Jeter becomes the Executive, and it lies in his power to do all manner of strange things, if the fit should strike him. Though Secretary McCabe was a zealous and self-denying helpmate he is hardly the man to guide the Santa Cruz statesman into the safest byways, and yet protect the prerogative of Governor Jim's fame from invasion. But Secretary Shields is good for the most delicate complications, and we may feel perfectly safe in his hands. By way of letting McCabe down easily, the Governor is reported to have said to him: "Ed, two years more and you are out of this, and then you'll have to get back to the law. Now, Ed, you are a good fellow, but you might become a great lawyer, if you'll only study. I'm going to make you librarian. You won't have a thing to do all day but read, and you cannot fail to be a learned man by the time we have to go home." Seeing the Governor is supreme in such connections, Mr. McCabe has decided to become a great lawyer.

***

The visit of the Chinese Ambassador was an event. No mealy-mouthed, soft-spoken personage, he, incapable of resentment. Vigorous ideas of his own on most subjects he entertains, and as a disciplinarian he is in the first rank, and lines up his subordinates like an autocrat. In his suite is an excellent example of the Celestial exquisite, a son of a wealthy Pekin mandarin. The garments of this young gentleman were of the richest satins and brocades, and as he moved through the corridors of the hotel in his silken robes, he was indeed a thing of beauty. Determined in San Francisco to do as San Franciscans prescribed, he became the pupil of a charming young woman at the Occidental, who essayed to initiate him into the mysteries of dancing. He had his lessons every morning and every night, and was so taken with teacher and instruction that he devoted the other hours of the day to practising. Being a leader of fashion, his example was straightway followed by the others, and there were funny spectacles of waltzing Chinamen every night in the halls. The thing came to the ears of the Ambassador. At once he took action. He commanded the presence of the suite in his parlor, and interrogated the attaches as to the identity of the dancers. What a speech it was he then made them. Never in the history of the nation, he declared, had Chinamen danced. It was undignified, indecent, the reverse of reposeful, opposed to the genius of the race. In strong terms he cautioned his followers to be Chinamen or nothing, and to cling to their tradition as they would to life. Poor Wong, who was of course the butt of all this censure, would have given thousands to have buried himself in his brocades. That night after dinner, when the ladies gathered around him with a pressing invitation that he condescend to waltz for them, he gazed sadly at the expectant audience, and in a voice full of mournful resignation he announced in all the English he knew: "Dance no go to-night."

***

Quite the most fortunate thing which could happen for California would be the appointment of M. H. de Young as Chief Commissioner for the United States to the Paris Exposition. This is a selfish view of the situation, however, for his selection would be as important to the country as to our State. The proprietor of the "Chronicle" is possessed of a really remarkable executive capacity. Few men in the country have a stronger faculty for organization—unless, perhaps, Andrew Carnegie, Phil Armour, or Senator Hanna, whose millions and enterprises have won them national reputation. Mr. de Young can take hold of a project in the face of difficulties that would startle a weaker will, and bringing it to a successful issue. He did so with the Midwinter Fair—surely at its inception the most hopeless and futile of undertakings. An Exposition Manager, like a poet, must be born, he cannot be made. He must be a combination of financier and diplomat; he must be a blending of steel and velvet to make headway against the indifference of his clients and the competition of his rivals. Indeed, he must have a genius for the undertaking, and it is safe to say that Mr. de Young possesses the faculty in a greater degree than any man I have ever known. It is a huge affair, this Paris Exposition, and it behooves the United States to be on the ground early and to make a display commensurate with its importance. I sincerely hope to see Mr. de Young in Paris, and if President McKinley is as enlightened as we are bid to believe, he will nominate him for the place.

***

The future of the Emporium engages the attention of the retail trade in general and in particular of the tenants and capitalists whose business interests have been merged in the institution. The establishment has been partially successful. It was an experiment and a subterfuge. President Feist, who is inventive and ambitious, desired to organize a big department store, and being without the immense capital essential to the enterprise, hit on the device of interesting independent storekeepers in his scheme, persuading them of the benefits and economies of a central management. The Emporium came into being—a species of united retail states—each dealer owning his own stock, but the coin and advertising being handled by the central authority, which subtracted a percentage to cover its expenditures. The result of the idea has not been disaster but conflict. It has been abundantly shown that supreme authority can alone make the concern a success, and I am told that Mr. de Guigne, the representative of the Parrott interest, has now under consideration three propositions, any of which will afford a new regime. The Emporium Company, of which Mr. Feist is president, has made one offer; the Tenants' Association is also willing to handle the institution. The third bid being entertained, is from Weinstock & Lubin, who own an immense department store in Sacramento. Rumors of success or failure such as come out of the Emporium cannot, of course, be authenticated, but I have it on good authority that the successful departments there are those devoted to dry goods, books, groceries and hats. The others have had a less agreeable experience.

***

After the disruption of the Guild of Arts and Crafts (which, however, seems to think itself alive and tries to gather a handful of men every Monday night into its Pine-street rooms) the artists quieted down for a while and there was hope of peace. But their petty rivalries have clashed again and there is a new feud started, originating in the Art Association, as usual. The Hopkins Institute has found the artists so hard to manage in the past and has been so much embarrassed by their hard kicking, in season and out of season, that this year it decided to leave all the arrangements for the Spring Exhibition in the hands of the exhibitors themselves. A meeting was therefore held to select the date of the vernissage and adopt rules for the proceeding. Among the regulations that then became law was one clause excluding pictures that had previously been publicly shown. A clique of painters is now holding this rule over the heads of several members of the Bohemian Club, whose canvases have been exhibited in the Green Room, with the attempt to freeze out the work of Yates, Keith, Strong, Peters and Latimer, on the grounds that the club rooms are "public," since they are open to ladies escorted by members on Wednesdays. The absurdity of excluding such valuable additions to the Spring Exhibition was presented by the action of the directors of the Association, who decided that the rule should not be held retroactive, and so Yates' portraits and Peters' nocturnes were on view Thursday night.

BOSWELL JR.

An old bridge at Loughborough, England, was removed, a new steel bridge of eight arches put in its place, and traffic resumed within thirteen hours. The bridge is peculiar in that the arches are made of one piece of steel, and rest on steel pillars instead of brickwork.

MAIDS WITH MUSCLE

Beauty, Grace and Strength at the Young Men's Christian Association.

Not so very many years ago physical culture for women was regarded as a fad. Indeed, a girl who went in for exercise was called a tomboy, and considered to have masculine tendencies. To-day women, throughout the country, are flocking to the gymnasiums, and it has become fashionable to be strong. When the Young Men's Christian Association was established in its magnificent new home, it entered into the enjoyment of a well-equipped gymnasium and a swimming tank. To reserve these valuable privileges to the exclusive advantage of the men did not seem altogether just to the directors, and in response to the petition of certain prominent ladies, a female physical culture class was formed, and has proved a real success. There were difficulties and misapprehensions at first, of course, but they were to be expected. To-day it is a well organized body of young women that meets every Wednesday and Saturday morning in the gymnasium, and its standard and achievement are the highest of their kind in the country.

The training given is directed at two points—legitimate physical culture for the up-building of the body, and, also, special instruction to meet certain conditions. The membership of the class is recruited from the most respectable families in San Francisco, and the greatest care is exercised in admitting applicants; indeed, it is required that every aspirant must be endorsed by at least three ladies known to the directors before her name is considered. This care has certainly aided the development of the class, for in its ranks are quite a number of the charter members, who are as faithful in attendance as when it was organized three years ago. All are emphatic in testifying to the benefits derived from exercise, and attribute their health and condition to the regular practice in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. An interesting question that is often asked is in reference to the comparative strength of the Eastern and the California girl. My own experience shows that the latter is generally larger and rounder of figure than her Atlantic sister, and, in her proportion, stronger. That I attribute to the climate. The Native daughter takes readily to physical culture, and no one can witness a drill of this class without noting and admiring the grace and fine carriage of the participants.

Precisely at 9:30 Wednesday and Saturday mornings

Dr. Dietz's basket-ball team: Ready to put the ball into play

the girls line up for the regular mass gymnastic drills. The director gives the word, the music begins, and to the strains of a lively march the class executes a series of military evolutions, forming intricate figures at direction. These drills are not prepared for the occasion; the pupils are past that stage. They understand the regular army curriculum, and their marching is done at command, which is varied on each occasion. Thus they form fours—by the right flank—right forward fours right, and all the other maneuvers with expedition and accuracy. This is continued for ten minutes, and serves to bring the blood into circulation, and limbers the muscles for the severer work that follows. Wands are then served out. Without a break in the line members take regular positions for this drill. The initial movements are calculated to bring into play the muscles of the arm, shoulder and neck, and are followed by another series, which include the waist, back, and lower extremities. Deep breathing movements are interspersed, directed at the development of the intercostal muscles. By this time the faces of the girls are all aglow with vitality, and they are ready for the massage movements, which are next in order. For this a circular column of twos is formed, and the members take turns at rubbing one another, following a stipulated formula. The effect is to rest the limbs yet keeping the blood in circulation. An important feature of the curriculum is club swinging, at which considerable proficiency has been attained by the members. From fifteen to twenty-five minutes are devoted at every lesson to learning the various circles and their combinations. This exercise promotes the harmonious development of the entire figure, and strengthens especially the wrists, arms, and trunk muscles. Free and light apparatus work brings the class exercises to an end, and then the basket ball teams line up for a short game.

The tendency of all these exercises is not alone towards the production of muscle. The effect on the vital organs is very important. They strengthen the heart and the lungs, besides promoting the proper carriage of the figure, which is a more positive factor in health than most people realize. Proper erectness of the body in walking and sitting can only be attained by the development of certain muscles. For instance, in most persons the abdominal muscles are weak, and, in consequence, the shoulders droop forward; the abdomen also protruding. This ungraceful stoop may also be caused by the feebleness of the back muscles, which, as a rule, are weaker than those of the chest. As a muscle always pulls or draws together, the shoulders are thus pushed forward. The proper development in each instance is accomplished by light gymnastics, under careful supervision, it being the rule to mingle recreative exercises with the corrective, otherwise the pupil grows tired and loses interest. In this direction important results have been accomplished; spinal curvatures have been strengthened, dyspepsia overcome, and anaemic women converted to strength and vigor.

After the gymnastics are over, the most of the active members of the class avail themselves of the privilege of the salt water swimming tank. This department is in charge of Professor Henry Mero, whose system of instruction is so excellent that it seldom requires more than two lessons to teach the art of swimming. Indeed the majority of his pupils learn the first time, and it is not uncommon to see a young woman who ten minutes earlier had been as helpless in the water as a babe, strike out boldly and swim from one end of the tank to the other. Among the ladies are several expert divers, and the attraction of the chute is thoroughly appreciated.

At the annual gymnastic entertainment in the Physical Department of the Association, recently, evidence was given to the proficiency of the ladies' class. Sixteen young women, in the neat and modest exercising costume prescribed by the director, executed a fancy march and Indian club drill in first-class style. It was the most interesting feature of the performance, and it showed what physical culture really meant in the attainment of grace and style in walking and movement.

H. L. DIETZ, M. D.
Physical Director of the Young Men's Christian Association.

General Horace Porter, the new ambassador to France, is sixty years of age and full six feet in height. He dresses in the very latest fashion, and is a natural linguist, speaking French and Spanish as fluently as English. He is a better after-dinner orator than Chauncey Depew, has a large fortune made in railroads, possess much business ability and was for years manager of the Pullman Palace Car Company. He has an idea that the Paris Exposition in 1900 can be made of great advantage to American trade.

The most aristocratic actor on the stage is Don Fernando Diaz de Mendoza, Count of Lalaing, Grandee of Spain, son of the Count of Balazate, Marquis of Fontenar, brother of the Countess San Luis and brother-in-law of the Duchess de la Torre. Don Fernando is a good-looking young man, and having shown much ability as an amateur actor decided to become a professional. The Council of State has just refused to allow him to use his name and titles in his adopted profession.

CHARACTERISTIC STREET SCENES IN SAN FRANCISCO AS NOTICED BY A FRENCHMAN IN SEARCH OF THE PICTURESQUE

"EN ROUTE"

San Francisco as it Appears to a Gallic Globe-Trotter.

As the "City of Peking," bringing us from Japan, entered the Golden Gate, the rain was falling in torrents. It was about three o'clock in the morning, and as the darkness was dissipated little by little, the ship slowly advanced into the gray and misty bay. An occasional rent in the dark clouds permitted us to receive now and then a furtive flash of sunshine, but the fog continued to envelop us until we had almost reached San Francisco. There was a lively bustle of preparation on board. The crew hurried here and there, clad in oil-skins; several passengers, whom the presence of the horde of Chinamen on the ship annoyed with fears of a possible quarantine, discussed the probabilities of a delay, while the stewards began to line up on the wet and gusty deck, barely sheltered by scanty awnings, the steerage and second-class passengers and the crew and servants. The care with which the Quarantine officers inspected these groups made the examination seem much more thorough than the ordinary practice of foreign officers, and strict enough to merit the praise of the severest executive board. Fifteen Chinese and Japanese were taken out and sent immediately to Angel Island, and the "City of Peking" might not proceed to deliver her mail and steam up to the dock until they were gone.

One of the first details of the American regulations, as soon as the steamer was docked, impressed us disagreeably, for, while the cabin passengers were permitted to disembark freely, an officer barred the gangplank used by those of the steerage, and they were forced to wait for the Immigration Agent, whose duty it is to examine all the humbler arrivals to the United States, to see that each has the $50 that is to-day the emigrant's "Open sesame!" It may be well enough to be obliged to show this amount of money when one arrives economically from Japan or China, but to be obliged to wait three or four hours for the arrival of the agent, to whom one may show one's hoard, seems too bad.

Our treatment by the Customs officers was, however, a most agreeable surprise, and the business to be transacted was made very pleasant by the courtesy and promptness of the inspectors — a very important consideration, for it is by the experiences with the Custom House that the tourist forms his first, and almost always, his truest impressions of the country which he is entering.

The absence of omnibuses and all other vehicles provided with racks for trunks and packages astonishes the European, and particularly the Frenchman, used to the "fiacres" which carry so conveniently the baggage that one does not wish to be separated from. But the Parisian soon forgets his regrets when he understands the baggage-transfer service, which allows him to climb without troubling himself with parcels into the roomy California iandau and roll rapidly toward his hotel.

It is unfortunate that the route taken gives such a bad first impression of the city. Streets horribly paved, plank sidewalks, here and there half destroyed, wooden houses of miserable aspect for the most part, and covered with bills and painted advertisements. What! was this the much-vaunted San Francisco?

"Wait a little!" said our friend, and the landau dashed on over the rough pavements and through the mud. Twenty-five minutes later we swung into Market street, and if the pavement was little improved, the vista became more impressive, and here the carriages, the numerous cars, the lofty "Call" building, the square tower of the "Chronicle," and the crowds on the sidewalks, between which, furrowed with rails, the avenue stretched as far as the eye could reach — here we saw at last something of the American city that we had long tried to imagine. But the carriage did not stop to allow us to admire this first sight, and we whirled into Montgomery street, where dozens of railroad agents displayed their signs, and stopped before the Occidental Hotel, where we alighted.

"We are willing to pay for cigars in Paris"

What a contrast to the little European hotels that we had patronized in China and Japan! There was but the bare formality of registering our names, and we were instantly assigned rooms and carried up to them in the elevator, to be left to the seductions of the comfortable bathrooms with which they were provided.

Pan! Pan! Somebody knocked. It was the first reporter, who came to interview us for the "Chronicle," and as several from other papers were also waiting to see us, down we went again to the parlors of the hotel, moved not so much by the desire to answer their questions as by our own curiosity, for the press is a great free-masonry, and our interviewer, after the first moments of introduction, was a comrade who did not leave us without promising to do his best to publish our portraits the very next day, to help out the possibilities of a sojourn in San Francisco.

Our first visits to the different editorial rooms in town kept us going and coming, and in our journeys we became familiar with the place and able to compare it with Paris. The contrast between the convenience and rapidity of your cars and our own slow tramways and omnibuses struck us at first, and besides the ease with which they are able to climb and descend the many hills of the city, the system which permits one to ride when one will seems, even when one is subject to over-crowding, to have great advantages over the annoyances of the Parisian method of distributing "numeros," and the limit to the number of passengers that may be carried.

Whether governed by electricity or cable, the cars appear to move of their own volition in answer to the needs of the passengers and their numbers seem great compared to the number of other vehicles. At first sight, indeed, one thinks they have killed off all the private carriages. The rails, however, interfere with the paving of the street, and are a serious obstacle to vehicles. One can see at almost any moment wheels skewing dangerously on the track, and the coachmen have a hard time keeping their seats. Why, then, O Californians, have you not adopted the Parisian safety rails?

If we are not mistaken, there are no such frequent blockades of vehicles as are customary in Paris and the European cities, and the majestic policemen who guard the crossings have not the onerous task which compels our athorities to appoint special officers for the regulation of street traffic. The habits of the pedestrians, besides, seem to facilitate the policeman's duties. We have been amused at the care with which Americans take to cross the street only where the stone crossings are laid. It seems to be left for foreigners only to dare to pass from one sidewalk to another wherever he will.

But, oh! these pavements! Our feelings as wheelmen have suffered as much as have the leather soles of our shoes! Poor Californian cyclists, who are obliged in most of the streets to follow the "slot" of the cable-track! Your Parisian brethren could hardly believe the horrors which you suffer in this town!

Besides the cars, many other appliances, already old stories in America, have provoked our admiration by their novelty — the elevators, so much more swift and familiar here than in France, the corps of messenger-boys, and the convenient letter chutes in the large buildings, and especially the white postal cable car, seemed a practical auxillary that might be introduced to advantage in all large cities. But what is most extraordinary to the Frenchman visiting America for the first time by way of San Francisco, are the little sidewalk elevators that lower freight into the basement of the stores. This is impossible in Paris, as the drains, the gas and water pipes, the electric wires and pneumatic tubes, fill up the whole area beneath the sidewalks, and in this we have little to complain of, considering the disagreeable aspects of the primitive drainage system of certain parts of San Francisco.

Typical of San Francisco life, we thought, were the curious groups of men reading the newspaper-bulletins that the large papers display upon the streets, the peddlers' wagons on Pine street and other streets where there are no car lines, and the little flower market at the "Chronicle" corner. We searched the streets for picturesque and characteristic scenes. Here, for example, a zealous Salvationist harrangued the crowd, there the promenaders on Market street, where the stanger gets such pleasant ideas of the glorious health and extreme elegance of the beautiful women of California. Everywhere we went with the curiosity of leisurely globe-trotters, camera in hand, and each new trip brought a shot or so at some unconscious object among the typical sights of which the picture will be a souvenir that will give us

AMERICAN CUSTOMS FROM A PARISIAN POINT OF VIEW: KEEPING ON THE CROSSING, RIDING THE SLOT, AND HANDS IN THE POCKETS

DENIS O'SULLIVAN AS SHAMUS O'BRIEN

A SCENE IN SHAMUS O'BRIEN AT THE TIVOLI material to enable us to write later our more serious reflections upon the usages and customs of the countries we have visited.

The public places of amusement seem abundant and well suited to the cosmopolitan nature of San Francisco's inhabitants. By the theatres, the gamins, the races, and French Opera which was here, it seemed, indeed, that we had all but found Paris again, but this was more than contradicted by the extraordinaay popularity of the nickel-in-the-slot machines, by which the whole of the city seems bound to achieve the right to smoke free cigars. This is no more like Paris than the vaunted sights of your guide-ridden Chinatown are like the China from which we have just come.

Among the things that have appealed most to our imagination was the fortunate sight of a conflagration by daylight. Here was none of the excitement that marks such an event among Parisians, and is such a contrast to the calm and phlegmatic way in which the curious citizens of San Francisco witness a fire. Most of the spectators, indeed, stood with their hands in their pockets, tranquilly admiring the polished brasses of the fire-engines.

Oh, these hands in the pockets! That is what seems most characteristic of the Californian, free, more or less, from the cares of work or business life. Are we mistaken in our judgment?

ARMY ATHLETES

Picturesque Contests of Warriors at the Presidio.

The Military Tournament between the men of the Fourth Cavalry, Third Artillery, and First Infantry Regiments at the Presidio began last Monday afternoon in the presence of a larger assemblage of spectators than has ever been seen on the Parade ground. These field days at the Presidio have, under the impetus given by the recent inauguration of competition, become important features of life at the Barracks, and this week's games being the first of a series of annual tournaments, were of unusual interest. Grand stands for reviewing the exhibition have been erected, and here and around the three sides of the ground were collected fully 7,000 spectators.

The programme for the first day's competitions included most of the well known atheletic events; running, hammer throwing, and shot putting, bicycle and hurdle races, jumping, and tug-of-war. The novel features of the day were the spare-wheel race (which unfortunately for public interest had but one entry), the cartridge race, and hasty entrenchment contest. The gun wheel was rolled 100 yards by Mueller of Co. F, Third Art., in 21 1-5. The cartridge race has been frequently done at the monthly sports at the Presidio, but is always one of the prettiest sights of the day. Five mounted men stood at scratch, placed their unloaded revolvers on the ground, then rode to the farthest of five points, where each end man picked up a cartridge, returned to the starting point, dismounted, placed his cartridge in a chamber of the revolver, and then returned after the fourth cartridge, and so on until the five had been picked up. Each fired one shot on remounting. This was a good display of horsemanship, and required mounting and dismounting, and was won by Millner of Company B, Fourth Cavalry, in 2:24 1-5.

The hasty entrenchment contest was between Burke of Company A, First Infantry, and Lang of Company D, same regiment. The men, equipped for marching, were given five minutes in which to dig a trench and use the earth for protection from the enemy. They dug the trenches in hard ground, using their bayonets for that purpose, and with their tinplates threw up the earth. Both worked hard. Lang, a massively constructed warrior, made a pit that would have been an indifferent refuge for his diminutive adversary, while Burke, who is a small man, removed his burden and dug a pit long enough, deep enough, and wide enough to shield three of his size, and was declared the winner.

Tuesday's events included more of especial military interest. The broadsword contest on horseback was continued, and many company competitions with picked men were decided. The most elaborate and exciting of these was what is known as "wall-scaling in light marching order." The wall was a close-board fence, ten feet high, with a four-inch cap-piece on the top. The men were in campaign dress, equipped with rifle, bayonet and scabbard, woven cartridge belt, and 100 rounds of ball cartridges, blanket rolled in shelter tent and carried slung across the shoulder; a haversack containing knife, fork, spoon, and meat can, a canteen filled with water and a tin cup. This feat is no easy one, for it requires agility and considerable strength. At the shot of a pistol the teams were away. The men swarmed up the slippery face of the high wall like monkeys. They made themselves human ladders and climbed from back to back. Some of them got astride of the wall, and at once they began to shoot. Then they hooked up the bottom of the human ladder and dropped it without ceremony on the other side. Everybody tumbled off the wall, advanced exactly twenty feet and then began to shoot again.

In the tent-pitching race Benicia's Company C succeeded in pitching their canvas, securely driving the pegs, rolling back the walls, and lining themselves in the position of the soldier in 3 minutes and 23 1-5 seconds. The blank cartridge race is the military substitute for the potato race, and a substitute for the three-legged match of the picnic societies was found in the litter-bearer race, in which the contestant is trained in picking up a wounded comrade and rescuing him, under fire.

The other contests included go-as-you-please races in heavy marching gear, gun detachment work, dead body rescues, mounted wrestling and trick riding of all sorts. The crowds increased daily, and the fine weather gave opportunity for seeing one of the most interesting exhibitions of athletics ever held in the city.

Hon. William Peel, the eldest son of Viscount Peel, formerly Speaker of the House of Commons, has gone to Greece as war correspondent of the London Times. Mr. Peel's acceptance of a post of this description exemplifies the difficulty experienced by aristocratic young men in getting employment, as Government billets nowadays are secured not by patronage, but open competition.

THE FIESTA

(They come high, but we must have them.)

Who danced at the Ball?
"I," said the maids all—
Short and stout, slim and tall—
They danced at the Ball.
There was rather a jam, for a crowd was invited,
And Tom, Dick and Hal each was there with his gal.
The men felt like fools, but the girls were delighted;
The reporters were laughing, and the rabble were chaffing,
For doublets and tights made the youths look like frights.
But such things will befall
At a Carnival Ball.

"Who schemed the Fiesta?"
"I," said Miss Hester.
There was none to contest her—
She schemed the Fiesta!
She talked to the Mayor; she cajoled all society;
She went here and there, with a threat and a prayer,
Collecting the funds with an active propriety.
She picked out the city's elect for committees,
But she had her own say, for that is the way
That ladies like Hester
Conduct a Fiesta.

"Who trimmed up the town?"
"I," said Chairman Brown.
He walked up and down
Decorating the town.
He bought bales of flags, and innumerable banners;
He hired old nags and dressed them in rags—
Red, white, blue and yellow—in marvellous manners.
He spent weeks in hunting locations for bunting,
He built a cloth arch where the show was to march—
Oh, the way that that clown
Made a guy of the town!

"Who was the Queen?"
"I," said Miss Jean.
"Clara said I was mean.
But I was the Queen."
I wore a plush gown, and my picture was taken,
And my sceptre and crown were the talk of the town.
Clara thought she'd be in it, but she was mistaken.
I revelled in dances and envious glances,
But I won it by vote, and rode on a float.
That's the way to be seen
As a Carnival Queen!"

JUSTIN STURGIS.

GREICIAN ROYALTIES

The Ways of King George and His Wife and Children.

When Prince George of Schleswig-Holstein was esventeen years of age he was offered the crown of Greece. At that time he was merely a nephew of Frederick VII., the old King of Denmark. The young prince accepted the Grecian crown, and four months later was proclaimed King at Athens, his sponsors being England, France, and Russia. Four years later he was married to the Grand Duchess Olga of Russia, then but fifteen years of age. This marriage caused quite a stir, being looked upon as a clever stroke of policy on the part of Russia. King George became a father at the age of twenty-two, and within eleven months his family was increased by a second son, George, the heir of the present hour. King George never changed his religion, the Lutheran, but his sons were brought up in the Orthodox faith, and were made as thoroughly Grecian as possible. In consideration of this the Greeks have almost forgiven their Sovereign being a foreigner; but it has not prevented them demanding, on more than one occasion, his abdication in favor of his son. This the King would do gladly, but that he fears the results.

The sentiment in the Grecian royal family upon state affairs is somewhat unevenly divided. King George is a true constitutional sovereign, and as such wishes to follow rather than lead his people, but he is unwilling to follow them to destruction. Crown Prince Constantine, who is a far sighted and level headed prince, is even more cautious than his father, and, although realizing that the Greeks would prefer him as their monarch, would not accept the crown under any consideration. Prince George, the sailor Prince, differs altogether from his father and brother. He is full of energy and the desire for action. He would be happier flinging defiance in the face of all Europe, or setting out to conquer new worlds, than remaining at home devising new policies or making movements of conciliation. His younger brothers, Prince Nicolas and Prince Andreas, are very proud of him and are ready to follow him, if allowed, wherever he may venture.

The Crown Princess Sophia is a sister of Emperor William. She is a striking figure, with the soul of a warrior, and most ambitious for her husband. It is said that she is a trifle jealous of Prince George, whom the Crown Prince always places on an equality with himself, instead of giving him a younger brother's rightful place in the background. Emperor William has been at outs with this sister because she joined the Greek faith upon her marriage, and the very fact that he sides with the Turk against her adopted people is sufficient to induce her to exert all her influence in favor of the opposite side.

The remaining member of the family, and in some respects the most important, is Queen Olga herself. Although she has been Queen of Greece ever since she was fifteen, she is a Russian still, too much of a Russian to resign a dream of empire. Athens is the capital of Greece now, but she would have it Byzantium, and for consort or for son, she will be content with no less than an Emperor's throne.

The foundation stone of Barney Barnato's fortune was a prudent purchase of diamonds, which he deposited with a barmaid in Kimberley. After a time he asked for the diamonds, saying that he was off for Europe, and that they would be married when they returned. "I think we'll be married first," she replied, and those were the only terms on which he could recover the stones. This astute person is the present Mrs. Barnato, and her baby was not only born with a golden spoon in its mouth, but takes its daily airings on a silver perambulator.

Another English peer figuring in the bankruptcy court is Lord Norreys, eldest son and heir of the Earl of Abingdon. Lord Norreys is well known in financial circles, and has figured on the directorate of several companies. His insolvency seems to be the result of unprofitable investments rather than extravagant living. Lady Norreys is one of the most beautiful women in England, is a member of the "Marlborough House set," and was the first woman of fashion to take to a bicycle. The Abingdon peerage is old, and the Bertie family one of the most ancient in England.

Horseback cartridge race: Five cartridges to pick up and carry back to the start

The human ladders surmounting and attacking barricades

Pitching and pegging a tent against time

Mounted broadsword contest for points

Tug-of-war teams: Artillery vs. Infantry

PICTURESQUE EVENTS OF THE ANNUAL TOURNAMENT AT THE PRESIDIO

Photos by Charles Weidner

Primrose and his Pickaninny Cake-walkers

Neither white, black nor mulatto

Rehearsing a new gag

West and Master Mowatt, the precocious young juggler

PRIMROSE AND WEST IN THE GREENROOM, JUST BEFORE GOING ON THE STAGE

BONES AND TAMBO

Old-Time Minstrelsy versus Modern Burnt Cork.

There is no such thing as a genuine Negro minstrel show, nowadays, any more than there is a real circus. And what the three and four-ringed Agglomeration of Monster Shows is to the delightful single exhibition with one clown and two elephants, so Primrose and West's Vaudeville specialties are to the shows of our childhood. The early companies carried eight or ten performers, whose entertainment was a side-splitting farce, a string of darkey stories, songs and dances and the good old circle of which only the form has survived. There was an interlocutor who is now a "Master of Ceremonies;" they did double shuffles and danced "Jim Crow," while your buttons flew off with your laughter.

But now the company numbers an hundred men—or at least Primrose and West's does, a complete double organization of whites and colored people, pick-a-ninies, orchestra and specialists of all kinds. They have carloads of scenery and properties, costumes and machinery, and most of the fun is gone out of the thing. The bones and tambos get little use; there is little of the excruciating sideplay of the end men that gave the dash of wit to the olio; there are no longer niggers—only professional entertainers, clad in mediaeval robes and pink tights with lace at the waists.

"We must keep up with the times," said West, as he donned his fineries in the green room; "we have to give a gigantic entertainment, to keep ahead of our competitors who are still trundling a few back-number favorites and bewailing the decadence of minstrelsy. We have to explore new fields and discover new talent to make a better show every season.

"The minstrel of to-day," he added, "is essentially an entertainer, with little regard to realism. But as an entertainer he must be more inventive and possess a readier wit than those who have gone before. It strikes me that the talent of creating and improvising a budget of gags and topical quips is just as rare and just as much of an art in its line as the truthful impersonations of the old school of minstrels. I believe the first minstrel performance in this country dates back to 1843; on February of that year, a company called the "Virginia Serenaders" gave a performance at the Bowery Anphion in New York city. This company was organized and conducted by Dan Emmett, Dick Pelham, Frank Brower, and William Whitlock. Dan Emmett, at the age of 81, is the only survivor of this memorial quartet. Sam Sanford is another survivor, now 70 years old, and Johnny Raynor is still living in England; he was the first to take over a minstrel show, called "Christy's Minstrels," in 1853. But nowadays the minstrels who amuse the British are the most excruciating parody on the genuine negro that it is possible to imagine. They make a bluff at being true reflexes of our plantation negro, which is more than Dockstadter and the rest of us attempt in this country; not because we haven't the talent, but for the simple reason that the Old Jim Crow negro is played out. I was in a concert hall in London several years ago, and heard a full-fledged Cockney, dialect and all, sing a plantation ditty, and in it told how he was picking cotton on the 'Bloomin' 'Udson', in Lowsiana,' as he called it.

Pony Moore, at present proprietor of St. James' Hall in London, was another pioneer burnt-cork artist abroad, and made a fortune in England; one of his daughters married Charley Mitchell, the prizefighter, and another became the wife of Fred Vokes, of the famous Vokes family. Dave Reed was the original singer of "Lally Come Up," and Fred, the brother of George Wilson, was the first clog-dancer in America. Billy Birch, Neil Bryant, Frank Moran, T. D. Rice, or 'Daddy Rice,' as he was familiarly called; old Joe, or 'Fattey Stewart,' and J. W. McAndrews, are among the originals of the black-face entertainers who are still living at a ripe old age. 'Fatty' Stewart started as the fat boy with the Barnum show, at his American Museum, on Broadway in New York. Old McAndrews I always regarded as one of the most realistic impersonators of the plantation darkey that the stage has ever seen. Luke Schoolcraft was another faithful delineator of the son of Ham, as he is seen transplanted to America. The tastes of the public have undergone a radical change during the past twenty years, and the character actors of the caliber of McAndrews have gone out of vogue. All the public now seem to demand of a burnt-cork performer is a string of gags, whether they are appropriate to the character or not. Artists of the merit of McAndrews and Schoolcraft seem to lack the appreciation they found when they were in their prime and flower. "To come on in a grotesque make-up and sing a topical song has got to be the real thing. Take that clever artist, Lew Dockstadter. With all his wit and up-to-dateisms, it cannot be said of him that he reflects any real phases of the negro race. His resemblance to the negro is, after all, but skin deep. But he draws twice as much money for his nondescript performance as Schoolcraft or McAndrews did at their best.

"The minstrel stage has contributed scores of successful actors to the legitimate, and among those who spread the cork in their adolescence were: Joseph Jefferson, Nat. Goodwin, Joseph Murphy, Sol Smith Russell, Billy Barry, Chauncey Olcott, the late Charley Reed, Charles Gardner, the German comedian; Jeff d'Angelis, the late J. K. Emmett, Forrest, the tragedian, Francis Wilson, Billy Scanlan, George S. Knight, Thomas W. Keene, William H. Crane, Harry Dixey, but the wittiest of all was poor Billy Manning, the partner of Billy Emerson, who died of consumption."

And, mingling with the memoirs of these old celebrities, came sailing into the dressing-room from the wings, these strains of "modern" minstrelsy:

"One day while reading a paper
My eyes on a paragraph fell,"

And so forth.

A SOFT ANSWER

By W. J. LAMPTON

"I am very sure, if I had to do over again, I would not marry."

The only person who could possibly find pleasure in those words would be a sour old maid, a crusty old bachelor, or the individual who uttered them.

I was neither the one nor the other.

The one person who could find the least pleasure in them was the individual who was married to the person uttering them.

I was that individual.

My wife was the speaker.

"My love," I said gently, as was my wont on occasions of domestic disturbance, "I think you don't really mean that."

"What you think and what I know are entirely different matters," she responded, as I observed a small hectic spot on the end of her nose, a feminine storm signal to be heeded.

"Granted, my love," I bowed, "but you shouldn't tell everything you know."

"That isn't everything," and there was a knife-edge in the short, hard laugh which followed it.

This was not the first time my wife had sought to kindle the fires of jealousy in her husband's bosom. Nor was it the first time she had failed. One can't exactly explain why, but it is a well-known matrimonial fact that both parties to a marriage cannot be jealous. In this instance my wife's husband was not the jealous one.

"My darling," I smiled, "the comprehensiveness of your knowledge surprises and delights me. At the same time I must still contend that when you say what you said a few moments ago you do not really mean it."

The small hectic spot flashed out and lighted up my wife's face.

"I think I know what I am talking about," she said with a flirt of the handsome silk skirt I had given to her only three days ago.

"What you think and what I know are entirely different matters," I replied, for lowing the original as nearly as I could.

She had evidently heard the words before, and their force compelled her to silence.

"Consider a moment what you have said," I continued, "and you will, as a sensible woman, see that your husband, as usual, is right."

"I don't see why a woman's husband is the only one of them who should always be right," she snapped, and the hectic spot again flashed out across the gulf between us.

I had not come prepared to argue any difficult propositions of that nature, and at once began to sheer off into safer waters.

"That is merely begging the question," I said with an air of superiority which I had acquired from some years of practice as a husband. "What you said was that if you had it to do over again you wouldn't marry."

"And I wouldn't," she replied with renewed vigor; "I tell you I wouln't. A woman doesn't know what she is getting into, and when she has discovered she can't get out of it."

"But you seem to forget one thing, my love," I said soothingly, for I wouldn't have hurt my wife's feelings for all the world.

"Forget? Forget?" she answered in a tone which was of anger rather than of bitterness, I was glad to observe, "How can I forget?"

"I don't really see myself," I smiled, "but you have."

"I have forgotten nothing," and she pinched our large tomcat's tail so maliciously that the old gent arose with hurried dignity and walked out of the room. "But you have, my dear," I insisted. "You have entirely forgotten that you were a widow when I married you."

Whereupon with a toss of her shapely and pretty head my wife arose and went out after the cat, leaving her husband quite alone—and sad.—N. Y. Sun.

---

International marriages come under the bane of Helen Choate Prince, and, in "A Transatlantic Chatelaine" (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) she gives to American girls what reads like an object lesson. A wealthy American widow goes to Europe, falls in love with a gallant French captain, but, instead of marrying him, weds for his title an impoverished French noble, the Count de la Roche. She lives in a grand old chateau with ancient towers and darksome dungeons, with servants galore and a whole village of retainers. She becomes a great lady, a veritable chatelaine; she has wealth, position, a coronet, everything, but love, and, as a result, she is unhappy. The gallant captain goes off to the wars, where he finally succumbs, and the Countess lives on her life in a sort of a dream. When she is not with her child, "a boy from whose honest brown eyes look out the spirits of the men who made the name of La Roche a term of honor," she lies for hours under an old cedar listening to it sing a "sleep song for the dead soldier poet who had so loved it," with times now and then "when the thin veil between her and the unseen world almost sways aside." An interesting and poetical existence, but one hardly comfortable. The best bits of "A Transatlantic Chatelaine" are its old-world touches, the descriptions of the chateau and the customs of the country folk.

THE SWIFT "AUGUSTA"

A Description of Frank J. Moffitt's New Launch.

Considering the opportunities for cruising the bay of San Francisco offers, it is astonishing that yachting finds so little favor with Californians. Of course we have our yacht clubs and our regattas, but, in comparison with the wealth and population of our community, the pursuit has only a slender following. Admitting the coast to be a bit dangerous for extended tours, the bay is veritably a succession of land-locked harbors, in which the water is sufficiently smooth to make easy sailing for even the most sensitive of marineresses. The rivers emptying into its higher reaches are navigable for many miles to vessels of light draught. Indeed, I have often wondered why no enterprising journalist has emulated the exploits of Poultney Bigelow and R. L. Stevenson and given us an inland voyage up the Sacramento or the San Joaquin.

Canoeing has its delights; some men find their happiness in guiding the plunges of a light-winged yacht through the shining reaches of the Golden Gate. Others again demand an easier form of transportation and desire some safer motive power than that which oar or sail afford. These are the individuals who go in for steam launches and trip up and down the bay in puffing little craft which buoyantly ride the waves, conveying their owners hither and thither at the least possible expenditure of exertion. There are innumerable steamers of this variety in private commission, but quite the prettiest and speediest of them all is the Augusta. She is the pleasure boat built for Frank J. Moffitt of Oakland by George W. Kneass, the well-known launch builder. Just how long Mr. Moffitt has wished for precisely such a little steamer as the Augusta he did not specifically state, but, though it has seemed a lengthy period, he is fortunate in having realized his desires in such a thoroughly satisfactory shape. The Augusta is swift, trim and graceful; her lines are finer and her engines quieter than those of any other launch on the bay. She is admirably fitted up, can steam fourteen knots an hour, or, to be more specific, she can make a run from the Third Street wharf to the Oakland mole in eighteen minutes, which is a good deal better time than the ferry boats achieve. So Mr. Moffitt is therefore independent of that service, and, indeed, can save time by traveling across the bay in his own steamer. The general assumption that one gasoline launch is much the same as another does not apply to the Augusta. She embodies the latest of Mr. Kneass' ideas in marine architecture. In laying her lines, he departed from old models and chose a design which has several distinctive features. For instance, the keel is not parallel with the deck line as is usually the case in pleasure craft, but there is a bulge towards the stern which aids the speed and adds steadiness. Indeed, on her trial trip the Augusta showed herself a most seaworthy craft, meeting the seas without a tremor. This experiment will undoubtedly be followed by the builder in all subsequent ventures, as he as well as Mr. Moffitt is thoroughly satisfied with the result.

The writer had the pleasure of boarding the Augusta the other day and found her as admirably fitted up as she is cleverly modeled. The idea of Mr. Kneass seems to have been to accommodate on board as many guests as possible. The saloon is charmingly furnished, the windows hung with pretty curtains, which match in hue the carpet and the artistically upholstered cushioned seats, which are arranged like a divan on either side. The tone is olive green, and it harmonizes with the polished mahogany of the woodwork. At one end is a sideboard fitted with appliances pertaining to the comfort of the inner man, while illumination is supplied by a series of artistic brass lamps, which depend from the ceiling.

Indeed, all the arrangements are admirable and are designed to afford a high degree of comfort and ease. The deck is also furnished with luxurious seats for those who care to travel there. The pilot is housed in a semi-circular pilot-house abaft the forward bulkhead, and adjoining is the engine room, in which is a powerful gasoline engine of a new pattern, built by the Union Gas Engine Co. of which Mr. Casey is president. This concern has made engines for most of the launches afloat on San Francisco bay, and has gradually been perfecting its models through a series of elaborate and costly experiments. The Augusta's machinery embodies the latest ideas, and though the highest speed is achieved is so constructed as to be practically noiseless. This is an important achievement, as among the most serious drawbacks to gasoline launches has been the clamor they made while in action. Indeed this piece of mechanism is so admirably and carefully built that it resembles in its working a watch rather than a marine engine. Mr. Casey claims this model is the best yet invented.

Apropos of launches and engines it is interesting to note the excellent work of Mr. George W. Kneass of 718 Third street, to whose credit are the speediest craft on the bay—the Mascot, built for George Pope, the Arrow, George Knight's boat; the Hattie B., the Belvedere and the Yolo Belle, which traverses the Sacramento river. He also constructed the Robert W. Logan, a sixty ton schooner built for the American Board of Foreign Missions. The resources of his shipyard at Solano and Illinois streets may be guessed from the fact that he built four large coffee launches for Mexico in twelve days. As for the Union Gas Engine Co.—if you want a launch to have the latest machinery this concern commands the order, inasmuch as it has the newest models and owns the rights to all the latest improvements.

UNION GAS ENGINE CO S 20-HORSE-POWER ENGINE ON LAUCH "AUGUSTA"

MAIN CABIN OF THE LAUNCH

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Dearest Diary: I am simply bubbling over with forty days of condensed spirits, and I can hardly sit still long enough to tell you about all the fun I have had during the week. On Sunday I went to early service at St. Luke's, which was simply but charmingly decorated. There was quite a goodly crowd there, but later in the day, when I went to Trinity, I was hardly able to get to our pew, so densely packed were the aisles. I never saw so many pretty hats; the church was a veritable feast of color and flowers, and those dinkey little shoulder capes made of brilliant colored ribbons edged with black. Leila has a beauty of bullock's blood red silk, which matches her hat. I was so absorbed in my admiration that I forgot all about the responses until Aunt Sybil in her nasty way gave me a sharp pinch. I'll be even with that woman yet! The decorations were lovely—palms and ferns in the background made it look like a tropical garden—and such lilies! I went home and found the house redolent with flowers. So many of the boys sent me pots of lilies of the valley and great bunches of American Beauty roses.

On Monday evening I went to the dinner at the 'Varsity Club, given by Mrs. Baldwin in honor of Alick and Jessie Glascock's engagement. We were all seated at a big round table decorated with apple blossoms and pink ribbons. Nearly all of us girls wore pink frocks, which added to the harmonious effect. Amy McKee was in black moire covered in tulle and garlands of pink roses. Bessie Wall in pale blue. I liked Mrs. Tom Magee's gown of corn-color embroidered in purple shades especially well. Jessie Glascock, Belle Wilson, Fanny Baldwin and I wore pink satin. Afterward I went to the Saturday Fortnightly's closing cotillion, which was delightful. All the girls wore new, fresh frocks, and looked exceedingly well. It was held in the Native Sons' Hall, a cosy place, all delicately decorated in white and gold. As the german was a military affair, swords and flags were conspicuous on all sides. The figures were on the marching order, and quite pretty. Laura Bates and Lieutenant Kilburn led. Among the prettiest of the maidens were Gertrude and Edna Van Wyck. Gertrude wore white swiss with blue ribbons, the waist trimmed with ruffles and insertion. Edna's frock was of pale pink dotted swiss with baby waist. Ida Gibbons wore a charming organdie with pink ground and dainty pink flowers. Bertie Drown looked lovely in pale yellow taffeta, the waist trimmed with chiffon. Marie Oge looked sweet in pale blue; Rose Hooper wore a soft white organdie trimmed with lace and insertion with pink roses. She looked exceedingly well, as did Nettie Black in black organdie.

On Wednesday I went to Mrs. Salisbury's reception in honor of Mrs. Will Andrews. It was an immensely jolly affair. Burbank Somers and Will Andrews sang several times, as did Mrs. Bayne. In the evening I went to Mattie Whittier's wedding. It was really one of the prettiest home marriages I have ever seen. In the bay window a bower of flowers was arranged in green and white blossoms. Overhead was a perfect network of snowballs tied with streamers of gauze ribbon. The house resembled a flower garden; lilies, roses and carnations were piled and massed, and on the mantels were baskets of white wisteria. Mattie Whittier looked very sweet in her gown of white satin draped in point lace. She wore orange blossoms on her veil and at her waist, and carried lilies of the valley. Lottie Woods was maid of honor. She is Mattie's cousin and chum. Hattie Jackson, Harriet Grismer and Miss Weir of New York were the bridesmaids, and wore pale pink taffeta frocks covered in tulle. After the ceremony a big reception was held, and the supper was A1. I do enjoy collations, as Leila calls any meal but the three principal ones. Mr. and Mrs. Weir have gone south for their wedding journey, and will return here before going on to New York, where they expect to live.

On Saturday we all expect to go to the Jewett tea given to Mrs. and the Misses Withrow. I hear of no end of Tivoli opera parties next week, as every one is anxious to hear Neely O'Sullivan sing. I wish he would not call himself Dennis. You can't get a seat for love nor money for the first night now, I believe.

By the way, I forgot to tell you the principal thing of all, and that is that I'm in love, madly, with the latest, newest officer at the Presidio, Mr. Boyd. He is tallish, lithe and well built, with a

LAUNCH 'AUGUSTA" AT MOORING, OAKLAND ESTUARY

MISS ALICE KEENAN

MISS ALMA R. BINSON

MRS. JOHN FOSTER

MISS FLORENCE SILENT

MISS ROSE NEWMARK

MISS MAYBELLE RENDALL

MRS. EDWARD SILENT

MRS. OTHEMAR STEVENS

MRS. WILLIAM BISHOP

MISS HELEN BORDEN

THE BELLES OF LOS ANGELES FIESTA

Schumacher, photo, Los Angeles

dear little mustache and eyes. Such eyes! I have many, many rivals, but it is victory or death. And now to bed, for tomorrow I go to the Skull and Keys entertainment at the Macdonough with a number of the Chi Phi boys. So farewell for a week. From your own

MISS CRICKET.

* *

Though so many new houses are in course of erection at Burlingame, there is quite a competition for the villas belonging to the Sharon estate. There are four in all—modern residences, comfortable and commodious, and each year they have been the centers of hospitality in the environment. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tobin have one of them, in which they live throughout the year. A second has been the residence of the Carolans; George Newhall occupied a third last season and talks of purchasing the Carolan place, with which he has become enamored. Negotiations, I am told, are even now under way. The Kruttschnits, who had another, will, of course, go into their own villa in June. In the meantime there are several applicants for the season—Mayo, Newhalls, Russell Wilsons and McBeans among others. It is more than certain, from all indications, that the colony will be active and fashionable this summer. The George Popes have taken the Howard Bowie place. Colonel Crocker and his family install themselves in the George Howard mansion next month. The Larkins' villa is almost ready, and even more interesting is the fact that Joe Grant's charming cottage is at last to have a mistress.

Considerable interest is being manifested in the steeplechase at Burlingame this afternoon. The race is for the Francis Francis cup, and promises to be a brilliant event. The entries are numerous, and the contest should be close. I am inclined to think the run of the foxhounds, which finishes the programme, will prove the most interesting feature. During the season there have been developed a number of bold and capable riders, who have no hesitation whatever in taking San Mateo fences. I hope next week to have some good pictures of the gathering.

Socially the event of the week was the announcement of Joseph D. Grant's engagement. Mr. Grant has so long figured as, next to Colonel Crocker, the matrimonial catch par excellence, that it seemed as though he were wedded to single blessedness. But finally he has succumbed and to a very charming girl—a stranger, Miss Macleay of Portland. Her father was a member of the rich pioneer firm of Corbett and Macleay, and it was at the Corbett place in San Mateo, where Miss Macleay has been as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Moody, that she met Mr. Grant. The prospective bride is a young woman of character, and has had the advantage of an unusually good education. She has been prominent in charitable work in Portland. A second engagement, in which society has more than a passing interest, is that of Miss Addie Mills, the eldest daughter of the late Edgar Mills, and a niece of D. O. Mills, to Mr. Chester Halcomb of the Chinese Legation at Washington. Miss Mills is a distinguished-looking and highly educated girl, who is well known in San Francisco society, though recently she has been somewhat withdrawn from participation in its frivolities, as she has resided with her brother and sister at their home at Menlo.

The wedding of Miss Helen Sutro and Mr. Samuel Schwartz was very quietly celebrated at the home of the bride on Pine street. The immediate family assisted, together with the intimate friends. Dr. Voorsanger performed the ceremony, and the happy pair will go to Costa Rica for the honeymoon. Miss Sutro made a very handsome bride. The wedding presents were both numerous and valuable.

The marriage of Miss Minnie Bradbury and Colonel Isaac Polk is really a Los Angeles event, though the ceremony was celebrated in San Francisco. The bride is very wealthy in her own right—the only daughter of the late S. M. Bradbury, whose mining interests in Mevico netted him a great fortune. Colonel John Bradbury, who married the beautiful Miss Banning, is her brother. Colonel Polk is an immensely tall and decidedly smart Southerner, who has had a successful career in California, has made a great deal of money, and now officiates as general manager of the Bradbury mining properties. They were married at the temporary home of Mrs. Bradbury, 1132 O'Farrell street, by Father McSweeny.

The reign of Fast and of gloomy quietude is over, and we hasten to welcome mirth, pleasure and youthful jollity. With the sound of the church bells on Easter morning the Oakland maids and matrons cast aside the habiliments of penitence and donned their gay spring attire. The dull toque was exchanged for a big picture hat heavy with flowers of every color and hue. The churches in themselves seemed permeated with the spirit of joyousness. The chancels, fragrant with the scent of myriads of lilies, lilacs and delicate apple blossoms, welcomed in the spring sunshine. The First Congregational Church took precedence of all the rest. It would have been difficult even to compete with it. Upon a foreground carpeted with maiden hair ferns, orchids, begonias and other rare exotics were placed. Behind, raising their proud heads, were tall Easter lilies against a background of palms. Mrs. F. M. Smith superintended the decoration, and placed her hothouses and the services of her gardens at the disposal of Dr. McLean. The music was good, but not markedly so.

The event which has swamped all others for the nonce is the Masque Ball, which took place in the Ebell Hall on Tuesday evening. The spirit of carnival seemed to have taken possession of the young people, and all dropped their dignity and had a perfectly glorious time. The girls were most enthusiastic, and spent the days of Lent in designing costumes, dominoes and ruses of all sorts to conceal their identity. The hall was prettily decorated with palms; cosy corners concealed by screens were located in every convenient angle, and the scenic effect heightened with calcium light of different colors. Numbers of the girls wore dominoes of the most brilliant hues; groups of red-clad maidens, yellow masks and brilliant greens intermingled in a perfect glory of color. Among the prettiest of the dominoes were those of Miss Florence Stone, a simple affair of very thin pale blue India silk, by which her white tulle gown was but semi-concealed. Her disguise was excellent, many of the men mistaking her for Miss Kate Clement. Miss Fanny Baldwin wore a white crepon domino with big pink hood and mask of lace and crepe.

The most effective costume was worn by Mrs. George McNear, who represented "The Black Cat." Her gown was of white satin with a deep border of black cats in every conceivable position around the bottom of the skirt. On her head she wore fur cats' ears, and on the front of her waist was a big head of a black cat. Miss Agnes Duff as Mrs. Mephistopheles or queen of the infernal regions, looked stunning. Her dress was short; the material of red silk with forked lightning embroidered over it in gold; her stockings were red, her shoes black with red heels. On her shoulders was a small black velvet cape embroidered in ogld. A cap of red with horns and a pitchfork

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

completed this costume. Miss Juliet Garber as a Dresden shepherdess looked very quaint. Her petticoat was of pink with overdress of flowered blue brocade. Miss Grimes was well disguised as Folly. She wore a pink petticoat covered with roses with baby faces. Her waist was much beruffled, and her blonde wig and big hat had a curious effect. Miss Mary Whitney made a fine Queen of Diamonds in white tulle covered with red diamonds. Of the men the most effectively costumed were Mr. Will Hubbard and Mr. Horace Miller. Mr. Hubbard represented old Father Christmas, with big blanket coat, long beard and snow white hair. Mr. Miller wore the costume of an old-time astrologer. His long black velvet robe, black wig and mustache, with soft black cap, was quite picturesque. A light supper was served at midnight, when the young people unmasked.

Several small but exceedingly smart affairs have been given during the week. Among these the most notable were the reception given on Monday evening by Mrs. F. M. Smith of Arbor Villa, and the married ladies' luncheon on Tuesday by Mrs. Henry Butters of Piedmont. A jolly little card party was given by Mrs. J. C. Hampton on Saturday afternoon, and a large card party on Tuesday evening by Miss Stevenson at the home of her aunt, Mrs. C. C. Clay.

PURE FOOD SYRUPS.

No one with the interest of the community at heart will fail to commend the pure food crusade which the Board of Health has inaugurated. It certainly interests every man, woman and child, but it will also, we are assured, aid in advancing our home industries. It is impossible even in this country of fruit to compete with the artificial productions of Eastern manufacturers, which are put up by cheap labor and are composed of all the ingredients but those which they are supposed to contain. These productions are jobbed here on commission by industrious drummers, and the California concern, to preserve its trade, must meet this competition.

Among the most prominent of our industries is the Pacific Coast Syrup Company, established here by Colonel Welker. This institution has had a hard fight from the start, but by dint of the industry and ability of its management it has forced itself into the front rank of syrup manufacturers. It prepares table syrups of all kinds, and has recently gone into the manufacture of jellies and marmalades. There are various ways of making this commercial jelly, but fault has been found by the Board of Health on the ground that impure ingredients are used. For example, it is claimed that the product called orange jelly is really not an orange jelly at all, but another compound. This is the fact. The ingredients are apple jelly, fruit syrup and glucose, in themselves absolutely pure products. It is well known that oranges will not jell, and the combination is essential. Glucose itself has been thoroughly analyzed by the United States government, and pronounced excellent food.

There is no institution on the coast in which more attention is paid to cleanliness and more care taken in the preparation of its products than in the establishment of the Pacific Coast Syrup Company. It has made a great success of its business, and its factory at 713 Sansome street is open at all times, not only to the Board of Health, but also to the public.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

THE TURF IN CALIFORNIA

Summer Meetings Near San Francisco Condemned—The District Fairs.

With a further three weeks racing the winter meetings will come to a close in the neighborhood of this city. Several of the principal stables have already gone or are on the point of going eastward, to fulfill their engagements for the summer; others will move on to Montana with a like object, and of the strictly local owners many will avail themselves of a quiet interval to rest up and recruit their forces for the campaign opening here next fall. The result will be therefore that no legitimate inducement can be afforded for continuing local racing operations. During the last week or so, however, a proposal has been set on foot to establish a new track across the bay on the Marin county side, with the view of conducting a summer meeting as an attraction to the residents of San Francisco and the other bay cities, the main object of which would be to secure continuous racing in this locality. Such a scheme is entirely opposed to the views and wishes of those who have the best interests of the sport at heart, and it is certain to be met with the strongest opposition by the California Jockey Club and the Pacific Coast Jockey Club. It is beyond question that these two organizations are amply sufficient to handle all the racing that San Francisco and the vicinity can support, and any attempt to force the public appetite will react disadvantageously to the turf in California.

In the first place no new race-track here would be able to obtain the recognition of the Western Turf Congress, and owners, trainers, jockeys, and everybody concerned in its operations would be treated as outlaws and be deprived of all privileges on legitimate courses. The suggestion of Marin county as the scene of action raises the suspicion that the chief object of the promoters is the establishment of a foreign book and pool-room facilities, which the laws of the counties in which the two existing tracks are located expressly forbid. So far as sport is concerned, it is perfectly certain that any such meeting would not be worth consideration, and for that reason alone, if for no other, the sooner the idea is abandoned the better.

But what makes it in the next place the more undesirable that any plan of the kind should be in contemplation, is the known hostility of the State executive to racing in any form whatever. To this may be ascribed the recent veto by Governor Budd of the bill for appropriation of State funds in support of district fairs, a piece of injustice to the long-suffering agricultural interest that seems to have been prompted by a short-sighted pettiness of spirit that renders any man so afflicted wholly unfit for the direction of public business, more especially when his office is supreme. Any one acquainted with the life and needs of the country districts must realize the importance of the annual fairs, and, even if they are not always conducted in the way that might be most beneficial to the districts served, it would certainly have been a more reasonable and enlightened policy to have established some control whereby the contributions of the State could have been utilized for such purposes as would generally be deemed suitable for the employment of public funds. No one would maintain that racing should be subsidized by the State, but if a little sport of the kind is found to be an attractive adjunct to the fairs and at the same time self-supporting, the main function should not be deprived of existence, in order that there may be no excuse for gratifying the tastes of those who are manly and broad-minded enough to think that attendance at races is not necessarily the first step on the high road to perdition.

Seeing then the animus that is directed in high places against racing, it behooves every one interested in its well-being and continuance as a feature of life in California to use every effort to preserve it from attack by fanatical faddists, who are never so happy as when they are destroying the pleasure of others. The only way to do this effectively is to back up any movement for the proper regulation of turf affairs, and to refuse support to any schemes of illegitimate appearance or character. On a previous occasion it has been shown in these columns that there is a well-assured prospect of a better understanding being arrived at on both sides of the country with regard to turf government, and it would be exceedingly unfortunate if at this juncture anything should occur to weaken the adhesion which appeared to be forthcoming on the part of California to any feasible plan for unity or reciprocity of action between sections of the country not at present altogether in touch with one another.

Should it be argued that there is no good cause why people in California should not be able to enjoy race meetings in summer, just as those in other states do, leaving trotting races out of consideration, it may reasonably be urged that at Sacramento and Los Angeles, as well as in some other smaller towns to a less extent, there is plenty of opportunity for them to do so, but San Francisco has chosen to devote itself to winter racing, and under no circumstances and in no part of the world is perennial racing at one point permissible or practicable. No other city on earth indulges in racing to the same extent, as it is, and to extend the programme to every week day from year's end to year's end would be to invite disaster and not improbably demise.

As matters stand the turf is never in want of enemies, although too frequently their strictures lack truth and reason, and therefore the best thing to be done at all times is to avoid cause of offense. That San Francisco is not any more wicked than it was before it became one of the great racing centers of the country is without doubt, and possibly in course of time, if the sport should continue to thrive under its auspices, as it has done in the last four years, it may have the same enviable reputation as is enjoyed by the town of Newmarket in England, which, while being the headquarters of racing in the world, is also as quiet and orderly a place as can be found on the globe. It is safe to say that persons unacquainted with the conditions of racing society, from the highest to the lowest of its strata, and possibly prejudiced against its members, would be greatly surprised if they visited the race-track occasionally and observed how little there is to object to in the way people who take any part in racing conduct themselves, or the manner in which the affairs of the tracks are administered. What is most wanted now is an increase in the support and goodwill of the best elements of the people, and that nothing should be done by any piratical clique to reflect discredit on the general body of legitimate racing men or weaken the cause of good government at the hands of central authority.

The breeding and training of horses is one of the most valuable industries we possess, representing an investment of vast extent and doing much to make California prominent in many important respects, and if anything should arise to injure the hitherto satisfactory progress of the connected business of racing, it is bound to reflect unfavorably on the position of the State in the eyes of the world as well as on its advancement in material well-being.

No tipping of waiters at Johnson's family restaurant, 28 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. Moderate prices.

DRAMATIC NOTES

A genuine Southern cakewalk will be the feature of the second and last week of Primrose and West's minstrels, which begins at the Baldwin Monday evening.

Following the minstrels De Wolf Hopper will come to the Baldwin presenting the great comic opera, "El Capitan," by Charles Klein and John Philip Sousa. The opera had a run of sixteen weeks in New York last year and is altogether one of the most taking compositions of the season.

Miss Pearl Ladd's piano recital at the California, this evening, will be an interesting event. Miss Ladd's playing is unusually good for one so young, and her dancing and elocution are said to be equally clever. The young artiste will be assisted by Nathan Landsberger, and by Mathildita, the Royal Spanish dancer.

Mamie Sheridan Woolford commences her final week at Morosco's Monday night in her own sensational drama, "The Smugglers." The play is full of startling scenic effects, including the burning of a ship at sea. Miss Woolford will give an evidence of her versatility by being the heroine, a character directly opposite to the one she is playing this week. Mollie Thompson will appear in the soubrette role and will give a number of new songs and dances.

Ward and Vokes will be seen at the Columbia for two weeks commencing Monday evening in the farce comedy success, "A Run on the Bank.' The piece is thoroughly up to date, and is said to be brimming over with music and fun. Ward and Vokes are clever comedians, and have few equals in the particular line of work. The supporting company includes Chas. Guyer, Tony Williams, Lucy Daly of Pickaninny fame, Gilbertie Learock, a clever soubrette, and Margaret Daly Vokes.

The new people at the Orpheum next week will be headed by Alexander Taciano, a male soprano, whose imitations of the female voice are said to be marvelous. The Midgleys, Sager and Fanny, juvenile character delineators, will appear, as will also The Andersons, colored singers and dancers, who will be remembered for their great hit of last year. Harris and Walters will present a new sketch. Signor Alberti and Mme. Orlandi, the grand opera singers, give some new selections, and Marzello and Milloy appear in a laughable burlesque bar and wrestling act.

The villainy in "The Brand of Cain" is not as deep dyed as it is in most Morosco plays, but it is deep enough to sustain interest till the fall of the last curtain when virtue is rewarded, and vice punished to the accompaniment of a quarry explosion. Mamie Sheridan Wolford, the star of the production, plays the soubrette role of Nora Logan, with much energy, and her comedy "foil," Nat M. Willis, as Hawkins, was a typical cockney. The double part of John Doe and John Leighton is very similar to that of Dubose and Lesurques, in "The Lyons Mail;" it is played by Fred J. Butler, and is rounded very well. Julia Blanc as Juana, a Spanish maid of an inn, has an effective scene in the first act.

The production of "Shamus O'Brien" will be the most notable the Tivoli has given for a very long time. It will be interesting from the novelty of the work as well as from the appearance of Mr. Dennis O'Sullivan. The opera is a story of Ireland a hundred years ago, the book by George H. Jessop and the music by C. Villiers Stanford. Mr. O'Sullivan will sing the title part of Shamus O'Brien, in which he has been successful in London and New York. Rhys Thomas will be Captain Trevor of the British army, Maurice Darcy Mike Murphy, the villain of the opera, W. H. West Father O'Flynn, the parish priest; Laura Millard Nora O'Brien, wife of Shamus, and Myra Morella, a new member of the company, Kitty O'Toole, Nora's sister. Miss Morella has been prima donna with Emma Abbott, and also with the Conreid company, and has sung with success both in grand and comic opera. The scenery and costumes have been prepared with historic accuracy. "Shamus O'Brien promises to be as great a success here as it has been elsewhere.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

VINTINE

RESTORES WANING
STRENGTH

As a nutrient during convalescence it has no equal. It is a wonderful spring and summer tonic, and is a permanent strengthener. For sale at all drug stores and at

BROOKS'
Homœpathic Pharmacy
119 Powell St., San Francisco

BOARD OF HEALTH'S INVESTIGATION

OF

Condensed Milks and Creams

AN ITEM OF INTEREST TO MOTHERS

It has been disclosed by the investigation of Dr. Wenzell, the chemist of the Board of Health, that the so-called evaporated creams are nothing but pure and simple condensed milk, and in many instances very poor condensed milk at that, and while little or nothing can be said in favor of these evaporated creams by Dr. Wenzell, still less is said in favor of most brands of condensed milk, which suffer equally under his searching analysis.

Amidst all this investigation and hue-and-cry, one prominent fact has been brought out with unusual distinctness, and that is, the

Gail Borden Eagle Brand

of Condensed Milk has passed through the fiery furnace of investigation of a most searching character, with its usual great success.

Every brand except the GAIL BORDEN EAGLE BRAND, that has come under the attention of the chemist, has had more or less criticism bestowed upon it, but the GAIL BORDEN EAGLE BRAND has been found to be without a single flaw, and has been pronounced to be the purest and the richest in quality of any brand on the market—superior to evaporated creams in richness—stronger than any milk now before the public.

The Pure Food investigation bids fair to be a most searching one, and the public have a great interest at stake, and it is with pleasure that we refer now to one brand that seems to have met with the approval of all.

AN INTROSPECTIVE INTERVIEW

How Guster of the "Awakener" Exploited His Imagination and Madamoiselle Chispa.

THE FACTS

"You might try Chispa," said the editor. "Get a story if you can, about 500 words."

Guster got around to the hotel at about 5:30 and sent up a card to No. 354. It was 5:55 before he received an answer. Mlle. Chispa would be pleased to see him in a few moments. Guster waited till 6 o'colck and then sent up another card. Word came down to show Mr. Guster up. He was badly out of sorts by this time, for he had been trying to think of some novel inquiries to make and had failed, miserably. It didn't make any difference, anyway, he thought; actresses never mind what you say, and as long as the stuff is readable the editor wouldn't care, and as for the subscribers—well, they wouldn't know anyway—even if he did it realistically they'u swear it was a fake. Guster knocked several times at room 354 before he received an answer. It was a tall and particularly white door with a keyhole through which he could hear several voices. He knocked again and an unmeaning English maid opened the door and he walked in.

"Oh, is that you?" said an untidy object in a Japanese kimono. "I had forgotten all about you—I had no idea you were waiting."

Her manager and another man were there, and they were much excited over a bunch of legal papers.

"I hope I'm not interrupting you," began Guster.

"Oh, I'm all upset about this injunction business," said Mlle. Chispa, and she turned and began a long conversation with the two men.

Guster interested himself in the Chispa's puppy. How in the world was he to talk in such confusion? If it were only the regular thing he was after—her opinion of the city, how long she had been acting, whether she wheeled or not, and all that, he would have got out his questions and left. But it was a character study he was after—a Sunday supplement story, and he grew desperate.

Finally Mlle. Chispa came over to his sofa and sat down. "I'm awfully worried," she said. "I lost $400 out at the track yesterday and I'm all upset. Just think, if I'd played my system I'd have been $90 winner, and I had a good thing, but I turned over on the last race—you know that 'Hobson's Choice' ought to have come in a block ahead if he hadn't had a fool jockey—if I had only played my system clear through!"

Chispa had plaited golden hair and shoe-button eyes without expression—she looked hard at Guster and waited for him to talk, but before he could think of anything to say the manager had come over and they were deep in the injunction again. The puppy had left, and Guster felt quite alone.

The door opened and another tousled-looking female entered. "Oh, Minie!" cried Mlle. Chispa, "did you hear about yesterday? I played 'Hobson's Choice' for place, and he got anchored at the turn. I'm out $400, and if I'd played my system I'd have been way ahead. And just look at the tiresome papers! It's awful—say, are you ready to go to dinner?"

Mr. Guster rose to leave. "I'm awfully sorry you've got to go," said the actress. "Were you in front last night? It's a shame to have to work for a dead house like that!. Well, I hope you'll say something nice. Wasn't it a shame though?"

She had turned to her manager, and Guster had left, muttering to himself.

GELETT BURGESS.

THE FICTION

If you have seen Mlle. Chispa, the pert and saucy flyaway, doing her balloon-dance, at the Globe Theater, you may have wondered how much of her refreshing cajolery was assumed, and how much was part and parcel of "La vraie Chispa."

I wondered, at any rate, I must confess, and I determined to solve the mystery, and pay my suit to this footlight princess in her own boudoir. Mlle. Chispa's smile was surely her own—of that much I was already convinced. I anticipated some metamorphosis would result at the disappearance of the blonde wig, but I argued that this at least would count a charm of naturalness. Her costume, too, however becoming, was an artificial attribute that might add or detract from her daylight personality.

It was, indeed, her smile that I recognized first. Chispa's smile was an invitation, mysterious and elusive as the south wind in spring, a little promise of joys that might yet be. Chispa's hair was a bit of a surprise—aureate, minted into tiny ringlets of a very mad and naughty coquetry. In a very blue gown was Chispa, a gown that clung to her jealously careless of its insistence.

We got to talking at last, and Mlle. Chispa, the woman, spoke of Cnispa, the soubrette. I saw a faint reflection of her stage audacity as we talked—the same flashing interrogatory quiver of the eyelids, the prim shrug and the whimsical madsome toss of the golden head, all more subtle, and adjusted to the fascinations of a tete-a-tete. Her mood was to her footlight exuberance what her pearly complexion was to the make-up of rouge and hares-foot.

She talked of her week-day pleasures and noon-time fancies. She was fond of animals, of horses especially, and she had one pet of whose naughtiness she made mock sorrow, and elaborated her little disappointments when her favorite nag wouldn't show off when he was expected to, no matter how lavishly she encouraged him.

She would be a modern Portia, too, would Chispa—and she made a fad of law, speaking with a queer earnestness of forms and filings, remandidatures, contracts and injunctions. She seemed almost "new" in this phase of womanhood; who would have suspected a love of learning to be a garment la belle Chispa could wear becomingly? Chispa a lawyer? Never. The very make-up of the room, the picturesque arrangement of bric-a-brac, a certain studied abandon of her Lares and Penates showed her essentially the artist, and she, tremulous, effervescent, of the temperament that flutters Beauty-ward rather than toward the scales of Science and Justice.

There was a little Spaniel there, too, that had caught the trick of Chispa's moods, by which sub-study I completed my theory of her ways and manners.

There was much to say, and little time to say it. She promised to show me her equine favorite and let me judge of his intelligence and powers. She told me many things that I was not to tell, for they were but to help me out in my character of analyst, seeing I was no ordinary reporter. The talk, indeed, was of that film of fancy that breaks in type; it would be like photographing a fairy.

And as I left I carried the picture with me of a charming little family group. A sweet stage sister had entered, and with the patron of the troupe they gathered by the window and chattered of the last night's memoirs.

FRED GUSTER.

$100 Reward $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

☞Sold by Druggists, 75c.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

The Queen's Fiesta Crown

And chatelaine, specially imported from Paris by Mr. S. Strozynski, the famous hairdresser of San Francisco's four hundred, have arrived in Los Angeles. Besides making a feature of head-dresses, Mr. Strozynski has in his beautiful establishment at No. 24 Geary street, a complete line of foreign cosmetics and switches. His yearly trips to Paris keep him in touch with all the late styles in hairdressing, which are to be found on the coast only at his establishment. Only experts employed and prices always reasonable. Prompt attention to mail orders.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

Old Saratoga

THE FINEST PRODUCTION OF PENNSYLVANIA

Rye Whiskey

BOTTLED IN PHILADELPHIA

OLDEST : PUREST SMOOTHEST

Invaluable for . . . Medicinal Purposes

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood & Sherwood

SAN FRANCISCO

PORTLAND .. LOS ANGELES

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

Polished Hardwood Floors

$1.50 per Square Yard

Fine Work—First-class References

INLAID FLOOR CO.

602 Market St., Crocker Building

Telephone Main 5998

European Tours

When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's great-st Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowe-t rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.

THOS. COOK & SON

621 Market Street . San Francisco

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY

E. L. G. STEELE & CO.

208 California St., San Francisco

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO

TELEPHONE GREEN 143

THE THEATRES

Up-to-Date Minstrelsy and Latter-Day Matrimony.

"By special request our next number will consist of the beautiful ballad, 'Take Back Your Gold,' sung by the author, Mr. Louis Pritzkow."

The distinguished personage making this announcement to the Baldwin audience was Mr. W. H. West, master of ceremonies, in "minstrelsy up to date," and a gorgeous spectacle he was. He held a red fan in one hand and a lace handkerchief in the other. With a mincing gait, stooping like a boy with the colic, he affectedly ambled to the front of the stage, delivered this little speech, and wiggled back to his seat. There was a chord from the orchestra, then up rose Mr. Louis Pritzkow, the minstrel-author, clad in pink tights, red paint and a trade smile, and vocalized concerning a very high-minded female person who had evidently been wronged by some not overscrupulous or very loving male person. The lady of the verse was properly insisting that the male individual "give her the love he had promised," but the gentleman in the song had more money than love to spare, and freely proffered her ducats of gold, which the maiden spurned in an indignant and chaste chorus, commencing, "Take back your gold." The gallery seemed pleased over this transaction. And then came Charles Kent, "the wonderful California barytone," whose voice was more acceptable than his song. He essayed the touching ballad, "Don't Tell Her That You Love Her," which, it appeared, was the advice given to a young sailor boy by his more experienced mother, just before her son was departing for the high seas. The maternal ancestor of the young man, with an earnestness that spoke slanderously of his father, implored her son not to confide his great affection to his lady-love before going to sea, because, she said, "Mankind is seldom true." This sentiment also found great favor with the young men in the gallery. And then there was another soul-moving and tear-stained ballad, also "sung by the author," Mr. W. H. Wyndham, entitled, "Father, She's My Sister," just as though the father needed some kind of evidence to establish his daughter's identity. If it was possible, this little ballad was more wonderful than those which preceded it. The programme carefully announced that these songs were to be rendered "by the authors;" this, doubtless, to enable the audience to fix the responsibility just where it belonged and to act accordingly. It is something to know a man who could write such rubbish, but it is something more to know that he is compelled to sing his own songs. Next season, doubtless, the "up to date minstrels" will have "Father's Teeth Are Filled with Zinc, Dear," or "Uncle, She's My Wife's Sister."

Now, honor bright, you don't like this new-fangled minstrelsy. The old-time semi-circle, where everyone "blacked-up" and everyone "did something," except possibly a few "chair-stuffers," was infinitely the better of the two. These "up to date minstrels," with four end-men in black face, and forty other people in silk doublets and lace—forty people smeared with red paint and powder, with heads made abnormally ugly with ill-fitting wigs—they are not minstreis, nor are they to my liking. Give me the old-time minstrels of twenty years ago, and keep these poor, painted, uncomfortable devils out of sight. And what has come over the public that it tolerates songs with such mawkish sentiment as "Take Back Your Gold" and "Father, She's My Sister?" They are the purest rubbish.

The funniest men in the troupe are Jimmie Wall and George Wilson. When this company was here a year ago Jimmie and George carried off the honors, just as they are doing at the Baldwin this week. Jimmie is an all-round clever "nigger singer," one of the type whose advertisements long ago appeared in the New York "Clipper," then the great paper for show people, about as follows:

At Liberty End of Season.
Jimmy Wall.
End Man; Plays Horn; Good Dresser.
Regards to George Wilson.
Address "Clipper."

Those were the palmy days of minstrelsy, and I long for them, long for one more sight of the old-style first part and an "olio" sprinkled with real, simon-pure negro plays, like "Beazley's Dog," "Handy Andy," "Wanted—A Nurse," and the like. I think Mr. West next season might avoid the "up to date minstrelsy" with profit to himself, and give us a little out-of-date minstrelsy.

They have some club-swinging on the programme, and a lad not over ten gives a wonderful exhibition of skill with the Indian clubs. Two little darkeys, as "pickaniny cake-walkers," did a neat little turn, and were well received by the audience. I think the finest voice in the company comes from a simon-pure darkey, who sings bass in the negro quartette. The house was well filled.

***

An engaging little comedy is that of "Mary Pennington, Spinster," presented by Georgia Cayvan at the Columbia this week—not a roaring farce, but a quiet, pleasing, and, what is more, an instructive tale that underscores the sentimental side of woman, even though she be a "woman with a mission." Miss Pennington starts out for a "career." Marriage to her is a frivolous and unnecessary arrangement, designed for the relief of dependent women who are dull of wit. To cling to and depend upon an ordinary man is a proceeding repugnant to this young lady Pennington. Connubial bliss does not enter into her "scheme of life," and she will have none of it. But she soon finds that she has bargained without her host; for nature has planted somewhere under her well-fitting basque a little neglected seed of sentiment that develops into a healthy and womanly love. The sentiment appears in evidence only in a small way at first, but finally overmasters and drives out all else, leaving her simply a woman very much in love.

This Miss Pennington has a little cousin, Prudence, into whose young mind ideas of a "woman's career" have been carefully instilled. But she, too, falls by the wayside, and surrenders herself up to setiment by falling hopelessly in love with Algy Bloomfield, a not altogether agreeable young person. The little love scenes between Algy and Prudence were prettily handled, however, by Miss Jerrold and Mr. Thropp, though the manner of the Thropp young man was scarcely that of one familiar with fetes, balls, and the best London society.

The motive of the little comedy is contained in a line or two delievred by Miss Pennington when Prudence confesses to her cousin her great love for this young Bloomfield, and weeps with shame because she has forsaken the earlier teaching of her elder cousin. Miss Pennington replies:

"Be a true wife. That is the only career for a true woman. All the rest is dust and ashes."

Of course, this is all right upon the stage, and for the world's sake it is a geat deal better to have such doctrines widely preached. But how about Miss Cayvan, herself? I should like to know her individual views upon this subject, for she has adhered pretty closely to the scheme of life originally set out by Miss Pennington, and which she only entirely abandoned in the last act of the comedy. Throughout the play there are bright lines, full of wit and wisdom. They come mostly from the old physician, Dr. Timothy Hale, who is admirably interpreted by Mr. George Woodward. Woodward is a clever actor, and is of the old school of which I am most particularly fond. He is, in "Miss Pennington," an impracticable old busy-body, continually interfering in other people's affairs in a most kindly way, but, of course, scarcely possible in real life. Altogether, he is a very lovable old chap, and is quite as clever as Dr. Hale as he was as Gaffer Kingley in "Squire Kate." Miss Anne Sutherland, as Lady Matland, was not nearly so interesting, nor did she look so attractive as she did in Amanda Jane Thistledown, the farm servant, in the former play.

B.

NEW BOOKS

The opening chapter of Mrs. Hungerford's posthumous novel number one, "The Coming of Chloe" (J. B. Lippincott Co.), finds Mrs. Fitzgerald, a pretty widow, at breakfast with her two charming daughters, one of whom is called Cissy. The table cloth is delicately, but sparsely laid—there are on it four little bowls of sweet May roses and some china and silver that is as old as it is exquisite. There are also on the table, by way of incidentals, some new laid eggs (gathered, probably, by Cissy in a white muslin frock and a hat trimmed with pink roses), a mere suspicion of jam in a little glass dish, some fresh rolls and a few pots of delicious-looking butter. Miss Fitzgerald has just finished reading a letter, and she is too surprised to pour out the tea. The letter is from an old friend, and asks her to receive as a "paying guest" a young woman named Jones—Chloe Jones. Necessity finally overcomes pride in the Fitzgerald household, and Chloe comes. She is "a small, slim, exquisite creature, filled with the gaiety of youth, with eyes like dewy violets, and soft and loose brown hair that lies in dainty ripples on her dainty head," which, by the way, is "delicately poised." Chloe appears—she comes and she conquers, she conquers everyone, even old "Feeney," who has been with the Fitzgeralds for generations. She is a gay, lively young creature, in reality the wife of a disagreeable Marquis from whom she has run away. The aged husband obligingly dies at the end of the book, and Chloe marries an old lover who turns up in the meantime. "The Coming of Chloe" is altogether harmless; it is at least consistent, as it has pretensions to nothing more than what it is. It is light and pleasing,, and infinitely more agreeable than most novels of the more modern and problematical schools.

Stone and Kimball have published a most valuable work on collegiate matter and collegiate athletics in "The College Year-Book and Athletic Record for 1896-97." The book has been compiled and edited by Edw.n Emerson, Jr., and contains an alphabetical catalogue and discription of all American Universities, Colleges and schools of learning qualified to confer collegate degrees, a miscellany embracing degrees, college fraternities, college colors, yells, publications and politics. There is also an index of all professors, instructors and college officers, and a most complete athletic record.

BOOKS RECEIVED

"The Impudent Comedian and Others," by F. Frankfort Moore. H. S. Stone & Co., Chicago.

"A Woman's Courier," by W. J. Yeoman. Stone & Kimball, N. Y.

"The Puppet," by Clinton Ross. Stone & Kimball, N. Y.

"The Wise and the Wayward," by G. S. Street. John Lane, N. Y. William Doxey, S. F.

"The Career of Candida," by George Paston. D. Appleton & Co. William Doxey, S. F.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

No Safer or More Efficacious Remedy can be had for coughs, or any trouble of the throat, than "Brown's Bronchial Troches."

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., Cor. Sutter.

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR
BYRON MAUZY PIANOS
308-314 POST ST.

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., S. F.
Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45
OFFICERS
President, B. A. Becker
First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President, H. Horstmann
Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier, Wm. Herrmann
Secretary, George Tourny
Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller
DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union
532 CALIFORNIA ST.
Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503
ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier
DIRECTORS
George W. Beaver, Robert Watt
Thomas Magee, Geo. C. Boardman
W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin
Albert Miller, Geo. Tasheira
E. B. Pond
Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.
Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.
Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars
Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.
DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco
33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.
Directors—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.
Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.
Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000
A. J. CARMANY : : Manager
OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING
Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE
OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

The Lion Fire Insurance Co. Limited of London. Total Cash Assets in United States, $885,797.09
The Imperial Insurance Co. Limited of London. Established on Pacific Coast in 1852
WM. J. LANDERS, Resident Manager
PACIFIC COAST BRANCH
205-207 Sansome Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. D. Cheshire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres. W. O. Macdougall, Secretary
California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971 S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary
Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

78th Anniversary Picnic I. O. O. F.

Given by Oakland Rebekah Lodges for the benefit of the Orphans Home

San Lorenxo Grove, Monday, April 26th

Round trip ticket on Haywards Electric Cars, including admission to the Grove, 50c. Take Broad Gauge Ferry from foot of Market street for Fruitvale station. The Electric Cars run from there direct to the Grove

BALDWIN THEATRE AL. HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.

To-night, Sunday night, and all next week, last performances of

PRIMROSE & WEST'S GREAT BIG MINSTRELS ! !

Commencing Monday Night, Our famous Auke Walk Carnival will be given every evening in addition to regular performance. Forty couple in the walk !

May 3d, De Wolf Hopper in Sousa's opera, El Capitan

Columbia Theatre.

PRICE, LANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

For Two Weeks, commencing Next Monday, April 26th the Monarchs of Mirth

WARD & VOKES

In the Satirical Farce

"A RUN ON THE BANK"

With thirty comedy authorities as depositors

Jolly Jumble of Jokes Just to Make You Laugh

Highest-salaried, largest, and best-costumed farce comedy organization of them all !

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, April 25th

Alexander Tacianu, the Phenomenal Male Soprano
The Aldeleys, Juvenile Character Delineators
The Andersons, Greatest of all Colored Artists
In conjunction with Sig. Achille Alberti and Mme. Annina Orlandi, Marzelo and Millay, Herr Grais and His Trick Baboon and Donkey, Merrilees Sisters, Harris and Walters, and Ed Latelle

Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Commencing Monday Evening, April 26th
The London Success, the Romantic Comic Opera

Shamus O'Brien

With MR. DENIS O'SULLIVAN, the Eminent Baritone creator of the title role

Superb Cast, Correct Costumes, Appropriate Accesories New Scenery from Original Models

Popular Prices . . 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager

Last performances of The Brand of Cain

Monday, April 26th, last week of the successful Eastern Actress, Mamie Sheridan Wolford, in her original character of Edith Lyndon, in Arnold Wolford's Romantic Drama

The Smugglers

Fire at Sea ! Rescue on the Ocean ! Funny Songs and Odd Situations !

Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S

Original Budweiser Beer

THE FINEST BEER IN AMERICA

THE E. G. LYONS CO., Agents

508-12 Jackson Street.

RACING

The Waterhouse and Palace Hotel Stakes—Ruinart's Further Victory.

By a very unfortunate slip in our last issue, the picture of Mr. W. O'B. Macdonough's good stallion, St. Carlo, was entitled St. Blaise, his sire. Readers, however, will not have failed to detect the error.

On this occasion we are enabled to present a life-like portrait of St. Carlo's distinguished son Ruinart, who has set the California racing world ablaze by winning two first-class events in the course of a week, and capturing no less than $8,600 in prize money thereby. Neither of his victories have determined how good a horse he is, and it is to be hoped that, whatever further opportunity may be afforded of testing the question before racing ends here this season, he may be given a chance of measuring his ability with some of the cracks in the East.

MARTIN BERGEN
NATIVE SON AND JOCKEY

The conclusion of the two weeks' racing at Emeryville was marked by perfect weather and on Saturday last an exceptionally good day's sport was afforded to a full attendance.

One of the leading features of the day was the Candelaria handicap, $1,500, for 2-year-olds, five furlongs, for which nine youngsters sported silk. The Burns and Waterhouse stable again slipped the pair they have been relying on for most of the 2-year-old stake races, namely, Recreation, 122 pounds, and Miss Rowena, 117 pounds. The speedy Sir Modred colt Hermoso, 107 pounds, cut out the work for the first three furlongs, with Rosormonde, 100 pounds, in close attendance, and Miss Rowena at the heels of the latter. Entering the straight the Ormonde filly assumed command and, running very gamely, had sufficient speed to carry her to the end of the journey with a length to spare in advance of Recreation, whom Hennessy brought up with a dash in the last half furlong, landing her in second place, a couple of lengths in front of the useful Deceiver colt, The Cheat, who finished up third, a like distance ahead of Front de Beouf. Time was slow—1:02¼.

The event of the day was the Palace Hotel handicap, $2,000, all ages, one and one-eighth miles, and it resulted in a first-class contest. Of the eight runners half a dozen were well fancied by the public, to-wit: Installator, 112 pounds, The Roman, 103 pounds, (these two representing the Boots stable), Buckwa, 125 pounds, Redskin, 108 pounds, Ruinart, 118 pounds, Wheel of Fortune, 114 pounds, with Schiller, 105 pounds, and Candelaria, 95 pounds, in no great favor. Starter Ferguson got the lot away in perfect style with little loss of time, the heavily-weighted Buckwa going to the front at once, closely followed by Installator, Wheel of Fortune, Redskin, The Roman, and Candelaria; Ruinart and Schiller bringing up the rear. On rounding the first turn, the lot traveling at top speed, Installator improved his position and exerted himself to the utmost to overtake Purser's big gelding, but without avail, and as the back stretch was covered the field closed up together, save Schiller and Redskin, who both began to die away. Entering the straight for home Snider called upon Installator, but failed to get a response, and Piggott next proceeded to bring Wheel of Fortune up to the leader, who commenced to draw away, and for a moment seemed to have victory within his grasp. Bergen, however, on Ruinart, had kept his mount sailing along in easy style for a final effort. Nearing the paddock he brought up the slashing son of St. Carlo hand over hand just in the same fashion he had treated us to a week back, with the result that Buckwa, notwithstanding his speed and thorough gameness, was fairly settled and the 4-year-old secured the verdict by a neck in handsome style. Served by his comparatively light weight Candelaria had made up ground in the home-stretch, and ran into third place half a length behind the second horse, and the same distance in front of The Roman, who, though not disgraced, failed to run up to his best form, Wheel of Fortune finishing close up to his girths. Time, 1:53¾. The race was a fine exhibition, and fully confirmed the running in the Burns handicap, which was undoubtedly a truer-run race than one often sees.

Too much praise cannot be given to Marty Bergen for his well-judged and masterly handling of Ruinart on both occasions. There has been much ignorant comment for some time on his ability as a rider on the part of people wholly incompetent by education and instinct to form an opinion on jockeyship. If some of the other boys and those who employ them would take example from his seat and hands, as well as his cool and patient way of rating his horse and collecting him for a finish, racing on this coast would be a far more interesting spectacle than it is as a rule. The whole secret is that, in addition to being a horseman naturally, Bergen learned to ride from a competent teacher and was not allowed to know it all from the start. BENEDICT.

RUINART BY ST. CARLO-QUEEN ALTA, BY ALTA

J. F. Cutter

EXTRA

Old Bourbon

has been a staple family and medicinal whiskey for a quarter-century

E. MARTIN AND CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS

AGENTS 222 Market Street S. F.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from April 19 to May 1, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine !

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar. Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

The Corrigan Stakes, Monday, April 19th
The Spreckels Cup, Saturday, April 24th
The California Hurdle, Wednesday, April 28th
The Ingleside Stakes, Four Miles, Saturday, May 1st

F. H. GREEN, Secy. S. N. ANDROUS, Pres.

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of

Artificial Stone in all its branches

Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty

Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

La Grande Laundry Telephone Bush 21

23 POWELL STREET

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

In photo-engraving, as in other lines of trade, you sometimes pay superior prices for inferior work. We guarantee superior work, by a new process, at moderate prices.

Send for estimates to

THE WAVE PUBLISHING CO.

24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

JOHNSON & CO.

New Spring Goods just arrived

Ladies' Jackets to order

Merchant Tailors

24 Montgomery Street

HENRY ST. GOAR — EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

Peoples Tel. 195 — Sunset Tel. 573 Black

THE

Dashaway Stables

130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.

E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

THE LATEST STYLES IN

CHOICE WOOLENS

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel
Bicycle and Golf Suits

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses, billiard tables, brewers, book binders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 — 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

"SUTRO & CO."—TO WHOM IT MAY concern: Take notice that we, Therese Sutro and Charles Sutro, Jr., have formed a co-partnership for the transaction of business in the State of California and elsewhere, the office and principal place of business of the partnership being located in the City and County of San Francisco. The name, style and designation of the firm is SUTRO & CO. The full names of all the members of the said partnership, and their places of residence, are subscribed hereto.

San Francisco, April 7, 1897.

THERESE SUTRO,
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

CHAS. SUTRO, JR.
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Duly acknowledged before Geo. T. Knox, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, California, April 7, 1897.

Filed April 7, 1897.

C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By Wm. H. C. Johnson, Deputy Clerk.

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

. . ALSO . .

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore — Murphy, Grant & Co. . . Pacific Coast Sole Agents

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM O. BERG, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased, to all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 75, [illegible] corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, March 18, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal.; location of works, Storey Co., Nev.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 111) of Ten Cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 23d day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday the 14th day of May, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine st., San Francisco.

OFFICE OF THE HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING COMPANY, room No. 11, San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 311 Pine street, San Francisco.

To the stockholders of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, and to all others concerned: Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the consent, in writing, of the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, duly filed in the office of said company, the principal place of business of said Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company has been changed from room No. 3 of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to room No. 11, in the same building, where the business of said company will be hereafter transacted. This notice is published in accordance with Section 321 of the Civil Code.

Dated March 19, 1897.

By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

FRANKLIN K. LANE — G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

NAPA SODA SPRINGS

NATURE'S HEALTH RETREAT!

On the Mountain Side
Six Miles from Napa City

My Friend:

May I speak with you a minute?

Yes—Well, you are going somewhere this summer for an OUTING, are you not?

Yes—Then, of course, you want to combine COMFORT, HEALTH and ENJOYMENT in your visit?

Yes—Well, then, have you ever been to the famous

Napa Soda Springs?

You know that is where the renowned NAPA SODA comes from—the healthiest water in the world. You can see the natural gas bubbling up through the water right before your eyes.

The Springs are not the same in appearance any two years, for improvements are made every season. The buildings are all of stone, insuring coolness in summer and warmth in winter. There is a treat in store for you when you come, whether you have ever been there or not.

These Springs are easy of access and near to San Francisco.

For recreation or rest, this resort is unexcelled.

The service is first-class and terms reasonable.

Among its advantages are:

Hot and cold Napa Soda baths.

A new swimming tank—warm water.

Climate unequalled—invigorating mountain air.

Relief for Asthmatics.

The most healthful mineral water.

Running water and gas in every room.

Bar, billiards and bowling alley.

Lawn tennis, croquet, swings and hammocks, burros to ride.

Napa Soda Springs are the Children's Delight, Mothers' Comfort and Husbands' Rest.

You will love your neighbor better and hate the Devil more heartily after a season spent in the ozone-producing mountain range at Napa Soda Springs.

Will you come?

C. E. SMITH, Lessee.

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Thomas Corwin, the famous lawyer, went one night to listen to Father Collins, the eloquent Methodist preacher, who was then holding a revival meeting in an Ohio town. During the sermon he kept his eyes turned to the floor, and seemed studiously to avoid looking at the preacher. "Did you notice the expression of his face?" asked a friend, after the service. "I did not," Corwin replied; "I did not dare. Soon after he had begun speaking he called to some men behind me, 'Come!' They just marched up to the front whether they wanted to or not." "And you?" "The truth is," answered Corwin, "that I wanted to, but I just clung on to that pillar beside which I stood, and that kept me back. And as it was, you'd better believe the next time he said 'Come!' I didn't dare look up to see whether he meant me or somebody else!"

An inventor recently went to the British War Office with an explosive that he said would destroy any army against which it was directed. "It is the most powerful explosive the world ever saw," said the visitor, "and I propose to send up a baloon over an army that would attack ours, setting the fuse so that it might go off the moment the baloon floated over the army of the enemy." "That is all very good, indeed," said the Secretary of War, interrupting; "but suppose that a current of air should carry your explosive baloon over our army — what then?" "Well," said the inventor, laying his hand on the right honorable gentleman's arm, "I tell you what it is, my friend — our army would have to get up and run like the very dickens!"

A popular baronet had risen to address the House, and left his hat on the seat he had occupied. A waggish reporter made a bet that when the speaker sat down he would sit upon his hat. Just as he was about to resume his seat, an occupant of the seat behind removed the hat, in the very nick of time. Thereupon arose an interesting discussion between the two people who had made the bet. One contended that he earned the wager, inasmuch as the baronet had not sat upon his hat. The other alleged that he would have sat upon it had not somebody removed it. The delicate point was referred to a sporting paper, which declared its inability to decide it, and the highly important bet has not been decided to this day.

Shortly after Henry Irving had returned to London from America, he met Wilson Barrett, who has become very much puffed-up over the great success of his scriptural dramas. After listening to the history of his achievements, Irving said: "After 'The Sign of the Cross,' what will you give us?" "Why, I will produce 'The Daughters of Babylon,' the 'Pool of Bethesda,' and 'Hamlet.'" "Ah, ha! and so you are going to play 'Hamlet,'" remarked Irving. "Yes," said Barrett, "do you think you are the only man who can play 'Hamlet'?" "No—an—but I think—ah—that you are the only man who cannot play 'Hamlet'."

Eli Perkins once asked ex-Senator Evarts how a man should lie to sleep well in a Pullman car—head to the engine or feet to the engine. "You shouldn't come to a lawyer with such a question as that," replied Mr. Evarts; "that isn't a law question—that is an engineering question. You should go to some railroad president—ask Depew." "But Depew is a lawyer, isn't he?" said Eli. "Well, y-e-s! Depew is a lawyer; but," continued Mr. Evarts, slowly and thoughtfully, "all the law Depew knows wouldn't bias him in answering any question."

The Duchess of Devonshire asked a very silly Scotch nobleman how it happened that the Scots who came out of their own country were, generally speaking, men of more abilities than those who remained at home. "Oh, madam," said he, "the reason is obvious. At every outlet there are persons stationed to examine all who pass, and for the honor of their country no one be permitted to leave it who is not a man of understanding." "Then," said she, "I suppose your lordship was smuggled!"

An old admiral, well known for his powers of exaggeration, was describing a voyage at supper one night. "While cruising in the Pacific," said he, "we passed an island which was positively red with lobsters." "But," said one of his guests, smiling, incredulously, "lobsters are not red until boiled." "Of course not," replied the undaunted admiral, "but this was a volcanic island with boiling springs!"

A story is told of a very enterprising Jew who would give himself away and go to any length of self-abnegation in order to effect a sale. He was showing off a cloth on his arm. "Just feel de closch, butiful, soft as shilk, make you a lovely schuit of closch." Customer: "Yes, but (sniffing) it smells so!" Jew: "Thash not the closch—thash me!"

Speaker Reed, who has begun to grow very stout, was asked by a friend recently, "How much do you weigh?" "I weigh two hundred pounds," he replied, smiling. "Oh," said his friend, "you weigh more than that. You must weigh nearly three hundred pounds." "No," said the Speaker, "no gentleman weighs more than two hundred pounds."

Senator Heitfeld, the farmer-statesman from Idaho, was asked the other day if he intended to learn to ride a bicycle while in Washington. "Gosh, no," he replied: "it is all I can do to learn to get on and off these pesky cable-cars."

Charles X., affecting a heroism that was foreign to his nature, once said to Talleyrand, "For a king who is menaced, there is no choice between the throne and the scaffold." "Your Majesty," replied the wit, "forgets the post-chaise!"

HOTELS AND RESORTS

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

The California Hotel

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

The only hotel with dining-room and kitchen on top floor overlooking city and bay
Fitted up with the most modern and improved appliances

Bush Street : : near Kearny

SAN FRANCISCO

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.

Proprietors

Personally supervised by General Warfield of HOTEL RAFAEL, the Society Resort, Winter and Summer, of the Pacific Coast.

Pacific Congress Springs

HOTEL

SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS

SANTA CLARA COUNTY

Remodeled and under New Management

Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco

6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara
12 miles from San Jose

Address GEO. O. WATKINS,
523 Market St., S. F.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Get Out into the Mountains

SCENERY—Charming, picturesque, captivating, imposing, majestic, sublime.
CLIMATE—Genial, bracing, invigorating, rejuvenating, upbuilding.
RECREATION—Rusticating, picnicking, camping, hunting, fishing, horseback riding; boating, mountain-climbing excusions.

Or run down to the Seashore

Magnificent hotels, toning and life-giving salt sea air, surf-bathing, boating, fishing, driving, wheeling, shell-gathering, and all sorts of pastimes.

The season for this sort of thought and action is upon us. All the world, and particularly that portion of it described by California, takes an outing once a year—if it doesn't, it ought to. While making up your mind where you will go, and concoting your itinerary, keep as many as possible of these places before your mind's eye:

Up Shasta Way—Tavern of Castle Crags, Sweet Brier Camp, Upper Soda Springs, Shasta Retreat, Shasta Springs, Sissons, Mt. Shasta Camp, Klamath Hot Springs.

Lake County and Vicinity—Geysers, Ætna Springs, Harbin, Anderson, Adams, Howard, Siegler, Highland and Bartlett Springs, Glenbrook, Soda Bay, Laurel Dell, and Blue Lakes.

On Sierra Summits—Lake Tahoe, Independence, Webber and Donner Lakes, Tallac, Deer Park Inn, Sunnyside, McKinneys, Rubicon Springs, Campbell Hot Springs—a score more.

Yosemite and the Big Trees—

Santa Cruz Mountains—Los Gatos, Pacific Congress Springs, Glenwood, Felton, Ben Lomond, Boulder Creek.

Southward—Gilroy, Paraiso, Paso Robles, and Santa Ysabel Hot Springs.

Along the Shore—Santa Cruz, Capitola, Del Monte, Monterey, Pacific Grove, Santa Barbara, Santa Monica, Long Beach, San Diego.

There will be REDUCED RATES to many of these places. If you haven't all needed information to complete that itinerary, call on the nearest Southern Pacific Company Agent, or send to T. H. GOODMAN for resort folders.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. May 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, May 18, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Monowai," for Australia, Thursday, April 29, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

The Fiesta at Los Angeles

The Woman's Congress

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 18 SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 1, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS.

A SCENE ON BALBOA BOULEVARD

Photo by Charles Weidner

THE WAVE

is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 1, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2-3 |
| Pictures to Burn; by Justin Sturgis | 4 |
| The Cost of War | 4 |
| Alas, Poor Journalist | 5 |
| The Meet at San Mateo | 5 |
| The Woman's Congress | 6 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 7 |
| Views of the Fiesta Parade at Los Angeles | 8-9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| His Name Denis; by Etc. Jr. | 11 |
| The Racing Season | 11 |
| Evolution of a Trappist: a Review | 12 |
| The Theatres | 13 |
| Marriage at a Discount | 13 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

AN AMERICAN HERO.

War brings its curses upon a land—death, misery, desolation and lasting bitterness, but with these come also many glories, and not the least of these has always been the production of the hero. Man must worship, and his most devout worship is given to man. We are such egotists that our natures demand some one of our kind on whose head to rest the wreath of bay. And him we glory in most who has led men into battle and won victory. The world has not yet been Christianized. We still have the blood-thirst. The ideals of the nineteenth century are not so very far from those of the first. The strong man, the bold, the unflinching and the sometimes cruel—if cruelty is necessary to success—still remains hero of the world. From the Ulysses of the Trojan war to the Ulysses of the American Civil War is not the distance history would have us think. From Julius Caesar to Napoleon Bonaparte is no step at all.

The people of the United States have spent much of this week in a revival of interest in and sympathy with the greatest hero of our greatest war. We have built for him a tomb more splendid than any other that stands upon our soil. Our countrymen by hundreds of thousands gathered on the banks of the Hudson to show how great their love for this short, sturdy, stocky fighter of his fellow men. It was not as President that they did him honor, but as the hero of Vicksburg, the victor at Appomattox. The flowers that fell upon that tomb from the hands of that grand army of late followers and foes, who rivaled each other in their evidences of devotion to his memory, were not cast upon the civil officer, not upon President Grant, but on the General. He had been as great to many had death taken him before the politicians. "He won our fight for us," cried the soldier of the North. "He fought us fairly and was magnanimous," exclaimed the soldier of the South. And all the people of the land, of the States of the South and of those in the North, rejoice that America has produced so great a master in the art of war, so grand a chieftian.

But Grant was a bigger man than the people think. We have never had an unworthy hero—be it said to our national honor. The men whom we have placed within the Pantheon of our eternal memory have been not merely brave and skillful fighters, but large men. Once or twice we have slipped, but never fallen. The instinct of the people, more certain guide than the reason of their leaders, has kept the national standard high, so that we may now say what no other nation on earth can say: "Our heroes have lives that our boys may read and follow without danger." And it needed the closing of Grant's life to prove his fitness to stand high up about the place where Washington and Lincoln sit. For it was not on the battlefield Grant showed greatest courage, nor around the council table in his tent that he showed greatest steadfastness, but in the closing years of his calamitous civil career. Ignorant of business he was caught by a schemer, and down both went together. But every cent that Grant owed he paid, and the work took his life as well as his fortune. The mind of the discriminating man who can appreciate the heroic off the battlefield as well as on, prefers to conjure the picture of the dying Grant writing the story of his life to the more brilliant panorama of his war victories. And what a book he did make! It should go into schools as a text book, not, perhaps, for its history of events, but for its simple and virile English. And it should be found in every household, where are boys or those who have been boys or those who may raise boys, for it is the modest record of a man who had two things not too common, purpose and principle. A national hero is Ulysses S. Grant. Not because he won battles, nor even because he loved his country to the point of deepest self-sacrifice, but because he had an admirable character—these words sound modest, but they mean much. And here he differs, as do all American heroes from most of the bay-crowned warriors of other lands. Grant cannot make us love as Lincoln, nor reverentially bow as does Washington, but his place is his own and honored.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The Chamber of Commerce has adopted a resolution calling the attention of the San Francisco merchants to the "advisability of increasing their commerce with the west coast of South America and with South Africa." Such a resolution is infinitely better than listless indifference or complete silence, but it will fall to the ground a meaningless heap of consonants and vowels unless it be followed up by action. All of our merchants are not directly interested in that trade, but such as are should come toegther and discuss ways and means; otherwise, the movement will begin and end with a resolution.

We lack public-spirited men in mercantile life, and have fallen into the very bad and very stupid habit of referring to a half-dozen merchants as being "representative" of mercantile activity. It is an abominable practice and serves to dignify men unworthy of the distinction. Many of these merchant princes are, in point of fact, but mere figureheads, whose horizon is limited and bounded by their own purely personal interests. It is a serious mistake for the smaller but more enterprising merchants to wait upon the action of these gentlemen if they expect to revive our seaward commerce, or broaden or extend our trade. We will never quite awaken to our manufacturing possibilities or our manufacturing shortcomings until this subject has been thoroughly exploited. Deplorable as our condition is with respect to manufacturing, there is still enough to justify a thorough investigation into the possibilities of this trade and an effort to secure it. But it requires something more than words to breathe life under the ribs of death and awaken a thoroughly aggressive mercantile spirit in this community. Since this resolution was adopted by the Chamber of Commerce, the writer has interviewed several merchants of this city as to the best means for securing and maintaining this trade. The most comprehensive suggestion is offered by a gentleman in mercantile life, who requests that his name be withheld for the present. He says:

"My idea would be for the Board of Trade, Manufacturers' Association, Produce Exchange and Chamber of Commerce to jointly form a Bureau of Foreign Commerce, and select some wide-awake, up-to-date man to manage it. Support the Bureau with public subscriptions. Pay the manager a good salary, he to devote his time exclusively to the matter. Let him have a cabinet of advisers, of his own selection, consisting of one member of each of the aforenamed organizations; but his to be the controlling vote, so he can be unhampered in his plans. Let him agree with his cabinet upon certain men to act as agents—say three, to start with; arrange salary to suit. Send one agent to Guayaquil, with instructions about as follows: Report on imports of country, quantity, quality, style of package, prices, duties, warehouse facilities and charges, customs as regards consignments, commissions. Send to the Bureau samples of such class of produce, merchandise, etc., as California can produce (these samples to be placed on exhibition in San Francisco, so that our local merchants may know what they have to compete with). Give particulars of time of transportation, and rates of freight from other countries. Let him confine his investigations not alone to what goods are actually imported, but consider what other productions of California might be salable.

"When the merchants here learn what they have to compete against, and they see an opening for their goods, they can send their commercial travelers to the scene with samples, and solicit business or make consignments. Let the agent communicate with the Bureau frequently, and the Bureau issue monthly bulletins to the merchants for their information. No doubt a sufficient number of subscribers can be obtained, paying from $20 to $100 per annum, to support such a bureau.

"I would suggest agents at Guayaquil, Callao, Valparaiso, to start with. Those agents can be shifted to other countries after they have thoroughly canvassed their first territory. Any merchant may forward samples of his goods, etc., through the Bureau to foreign agent at his own cost, and the agent should be instructed to report on them through the Bureau."

This is a practical idea advanced by a thoroughly practical man, and one who is familiar with foreign commerce and its requirements. It is the basis for a start, and we offer the suggestion to the members of our Chamber of Commerce who take an interest in the subject.

San Francisco has had forty years of commercial history, and yet her mercantile community has not altogether awakened to the possibilities and advantages of foreign commerce, nor become accustomed to the business methods in vogue in other neighboring countries. In 1885 our exports to Mexico amounted to $1,395,400, while in 1895 the total amount was only $1,204,000, showing a decrease instead of an increase. Our commerce with South America has been irregular and almost entirely neglected by San Francisco merchants. Occasionally, cargoes of wheat or lumber have been sent to Peru, Chili or Brazil, but shipments of general merchandise have been insignificant. Our merchandise rarely goes further south than the United States of Colombia. An ex-President of Guatemala informed the writer some time ago that trade with his country might be doubled and quadrupled if properly managed, and that, too, along lines of produce in which we might compete with the East, and with the whole world, for that matter, despite our disadvantages in the way of facilities for cheaper production.

Consul-General Hosmer of Guatemala reports: "Outside of political reasons, even, the preference for American products and manufactures has pre-eminence. A good article from the United States is sought after and a higher price paid therefor than for its European competitor. This is the rule for many things, but does not always apply, on account of the cheap imitations of certain American goods which command a sale for that reason. Cheap goods will always attract attention, while good judgment does not, in every case, commend their purchase. It is the application of good judgment which gives preference to American manufactures and produce. But our people must cultivate the market by acquaintance with its merits through their own commercial agents. They must extend long credits, must furnish the kinds and qualities of goods called for according to representation, must be careful in packing," etc.

Indeed, there is hardly a Consular report from any country bordering on the Pacific ocean that does not contain a stereotyped notice to the American manufacturer and producer, and the California manufacturer in particular, that it is within the possibilities of trade to largely increase our export business. Embodied in almost every Consular report is the suggestion that we lack special agents in those countries, whose duty it should be to familiarize themselves with the people and their customs, advise their principals as to what credit to extend, the condition of the markets, and to push the sale of the products he represents.

The American Consul at Nicaragua says:

"The establishment of trade depots or sample houses would be a long stride in the direction of the extension of American trade in this republic, and in the other Central American republics. These houses should be under the direct supervisions of competent men, capable of appreciating the question of international trade. American merchants must let Central America know that they desire trade by coming here and seeking it, and must be willing to give terms equal to those given here by English and German houses," etc.

Our exports to Nicaragua exceed those of all Europe, and as the State Department advises could be greatly increased if our exporters would follow Consular advice and press their trade as do their European competitors.

In Salvador the United States Consul reports that we lead in wheat-flour and machinery, but that we are behind in wines and liquors, while in beer we exceed France, England and Germany combined. From Japan, from Manilla, from Bangkok in Siam, and, indeed, from almost every other Pacific port, our American Consuls report that our commerce might be increased doubly and trebly if our merchants would simply employ modern methods to secure the trade. With the growth of this export trade would come inevitably the growth of our manufactures. Possibly, in that trade we may look for an incentive that will build us up as a manufacturing community, for, after all, the welfare, the prosperity and the entire future of our State depend largely upon our ability to manufacture.

THE WAR IN GREECE.

Three weeks ago the Athenian mob was clamoring loudly for a war of conquest against the Turks, and the King of the Hellenes was openly threatened with the loss of his crown and the destruction of his dynasty if he failed to comply with the demands of his subjects. The King yielded, and two weeks ago the first clash between the Greek and the Turkish armies occurred on the frontier of Thessaly. The projected invasion of Turkish territory was promptly turned into an invasion of Greece, and in ten days after the first hostile contact the arms of Greece were prostrate before the victorious legions of the Sultan. The supposed lethargic Turk has proved himself a surprisingly active and energetic soldier, and the Commander of the Faithful, long believed to be at the end of his military and financial resources, has demonstrated that he is still master of an army with which the best troops of the Christian powers may have a long and bloody reckoning before they can be in position to administer the estate of the Sick Man of Europe. The Eastern question, always mysterious, seems now more than ever difficult of solution since the collapse of the power of Greece before a mere fraction of the Turkish army. And to-day the King of the Hellenes is in peril of dethronement and exile, even of assassination, at the hands of that Athenian mob which only two weeks ago threatened him and his house with ruin if he failed to do the very things for which his punishment is now demanded.

Undoubtedly the sympathy of the Christian world has been on the side of the Greeks during the whole course of the dispute which has resulted in war, and for no better reason than that the Greeks are a Christian people, and their adversaries are unbelievers. Such sympathy is unwarranted on any but purely sentimental grounds. The conduct of the Sultan's government throughout the crisis has been patient, dignified and forbearing in the face of the greatest provocation. The landing of Greek troops in Crete was an affront such as no government possessed of a battalion under arms or a ship afloat could reasonably be expected to endure, yet the Turks forbore a declaration of war, offered unreasonably good terms for the withdrawal of the invaders, and patiently awaited the result of the efforts at conciliation with which the vacillating, impotent and inharmonious "concert of Europe" regaled the world. Relying, doubtless, on the unreasoning sympathy of the people of Western Europe, and trusting that when once the issue was forced upon them the powers, or some of them, would come to their assistance, the Greeks ostentatiously concentrated their forces on the frontier of Turkey. Still the Turks were patient, and it was not until after Turkish soil had been more than once violated by the armed Greeks that the Sublime Porte issued the declaration that war existed by the act of Greece, and finally launched the legions which in ten days have crushed the military power of the Greeks. To-day the Turks are masters of the plain of Thessaly, the road is open to them to Athens and there is no reason to believe that the army which could not hold the strong military position of the Pass of Milouna can offer any effectual opposition to the further advance of the troops who stormed that Pass.

It is impossible at this writing to make any reasonable forecast of the final outcome. At the very outset the Turks announced that they would wage a war of defense and not of conquest, a generosity of renunciation which may be regarded as superfluous, as any increase of Turkish territory on the continent of Europe in this age may be safely set down as an impossibility. But the unexpected display of energy which the Turks have made, and the demonstration of the quality of the Turkish troops and of the ability of Turkish generals will probably serve to prolong the Sultan's tenure of the remnant that previous wars have left to him of his European dominions.

For the Greeks and for the present reigning family of Greece nothing but disaster is in sight. The realization of the dreams of Pan-Hellenism for the union of all the Hellenic people under one flag is indefinitely postponed if not rendered impossible. The Greeks may violently change their King, as they have done before, but such a proceeding will work no advance in their political capacity to maintain a stable government. They have demonstrated that Hellenic sentimentalism is a peril in their politics, and a worthless substitute for calm courage in war. They may proclaim a republic, but a republic of such a people would probably furnish a spectacle even more deplorable than a monarchy ruled by a mob.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Here is another view of the Nicaragua Canal controversy, contributed by a gentleman who prefers to withhold his identity:

Editor of The Wave: Usually I am able to agree with your editorial attitude, but your stand in reference to the Nicaragua Canal hardly meets with my approval. San Francisco is scarcely in the world under present conditions. You concede that wages, fuel, and the like are all higher here than in other parts of the country, and yet you propose to continue this unnatural and artificial condition, and effect practical isolation by maintaining a protective tariff about us in the shape of transportation charges. We can never enter the lists as a manufacturing community if we insist on keeping up the cost of home production, nor can we by such a plan secure foreign markets for our home manufactures in competition with the manufacturing world, which you admit is able to do its producing cheaper than we can. It is possible there will come trouble, and doubtless some of the evils you prophesy will follow the completion of the Nicaragua Canal, but such as may come will be short lived. In the end we will be placed on an equality with the remainder of the world. Whatever of manufacturing we have will be established upon a firmer foundation and a more permanent basis. There is no reason why labor should be higher in California than in the East. On the contrary, there are several reasons, chiefly climatic and cheap cost of living, that should make wages lower here. The condition prevailing here is unnatural, and we may as well face it.

The writer of the above communication admits, as does Mr. Merry of the Maritime Canal Company, that with the opening of that great waterway, wages in California must come down to the level of wages paid in the East. When Mr. Leeds was struggling in behalf of the Traffic Association to secure lower Transcontinental rates, he took the same position, and the only remedy he offered to the local manufacturer who complained that low rates would ruin his business was, "Cut your wages to meet the conditions."

We dread the day when the inevitable contest will come with labor, and tremble for the consequences. That the future holds a wage struggle is something more than reasonably certain. It is inevitable. That in the end labor will be compelled to submit to the force of a natural and irresistible law is inevitable. But labor is not educated to understand the true condition of affairs, and it is wrong, almost criminal, not to prepare it for what is coming. Whenever labor organizations have given expression to labor's views in the matter of forcing down transcontinental freight, or in the matter of constructing the canal, their attitude has been favorable to both of these movements, yet both are fraught with danger to it, and the accomplishment of either would precipitate labor troubles the magnitude of which could only be measured by the extent of Western America. It is time that a knowledge of cause and effect shoudl be brought home to labor, and discussed in advance, so that there may be the least friction when action becomes imperative.

THE STATE UNIVERSIT

Relations of Faculty and Regents Which Makes for Disorganization and Disloyalty.

In an address before the students at Berkeley last Friday, Hon. W. R. Davis, president of the Alumni Association, made an eloquent plea for loyalty to the whole University, and to the common interests of society. Mere scholarship, he said, is nothing, unless back of it there is moral enthusiasm and the disposition to work together with our fellows. As an offset to the individualism that runs riot at Berkeley, it was a timely and significant appeal. Unfortunately only about 100 of the 1,200 students in attendance, and none of the Faculty heard the address. It could be wished that his words might have been heard, yes and felt, by every friend of the University.

The standard of scholarship and ability at Berkeley, while, of course, not yet up to the wishes of its most enthusiastic friends, is yet high enough, as universities go in America, to justify a reasonable satisfaction in the present, and to offer a fair guarantee for the future. What causes serious alarm to all who have California's welfare at heart is the lack of character manifested everywhere within the institution. Petty department jealousies and a spirit of intrigue have taken the place of that single-minded devotion to a common ideal which ought to characterize a great educational institution. There is only one point on which the Faculty seem to unite. They agree in condemning any one who dares to imply that the University is in any respect lacking, This intolerance of any kind of criticism combined with a slavish pursuit of popularity, or dread of unpopularity, does not constitute a congenial atmosphere for men of ideals nor does it set quite the desirable example for the students.

It is not that the average character of the members of the Faculty, considered individually, is lower than in other institutions. In a body of men there is always a general character, which may be either below or above the average of the individuals in it. Circumstances have combined to make the general spirit at Berkeley far below the individual average. Instead of being guided and inspired by its best men, it has fallen under the leadership of its worst. Of course, these "worst" are not bad in the usual sense of that word. On the whole they are fairly good men. But in a great University we expect more than ordinary men. The people of the State expect, and have a right to expect, that their crowning educational institution shall represent a high moral standard. That it shall be above everything that is mean and small and petty; so eager to attain its ideals that it welcomes any criticism which points out a possible improvement.

The faculty at Berkeley contains men of three kinds. First, there are the men of, comparatively, inferior character, who have no souls above petty intrigue, no enthusiasm, no real loyalty. These men see nothing to regret in the present condition of affairs, and consequently throw themselves into the local "politics" of the University unreservedly. It is they who have given the predominant tone to the institution. Then there is a second, very large group, who would much prefer something better, who in their best moments condemn the spirit which rules, but who have become reconciled to it. Then there is a small body who withdraw from the whole business, who see no way to improve matters, but decline to approve.

The gradual coming into ascendancy of the inferior element at the University is a long story. To understand it we must remember that the ultimate authority at the University, as at other similar institutions, is a body of men knowing little or nothing about its internal affairs and hardly able to judge of its needs, even were they disposed to take the time necessary for informing themselves. Under these circumstances the president naturally becomes the real head of the University, the leader and inspirer of its policy, and the man responsible to the people for its growth and development. But during its brief career the University of California has had so many presidents, none of whom have enjoyed the full confidence of either Regents or Faculty, that this normal condition of affairs has never developed. The result has been anarchy—each professor, especially each head of a department, devoting himself to securing for himself and department as much as possible. Now there is nothing wrong in such action under the circumstances. The professor of physics is the natural guardian of physics in the University; the professor of history is the proper person to see to it that history is not neglected in the growth of the institution. The trouble comes from the fact that the men to whom their appeals are made, and who must decide between the relative claims of different departments and different men, are simply busy men of the world, ignorant, comparatively speaking, both of universities and the special subjects taught therein. As a natural result the man who is the best bluffer, who has the biggest pull, gets the most. Nothing like an ignorant judge to corrupt the morals of counsel. Long years of this sort of government has had cumulative effect at Berkeley. The most successful wire pullers have gradually come to the top. The man who was modest in his demands, loyal to the whole institution, and who had a decent regard for his neighbors, has been at a discount. In self-defense he has been forced to adopt the tactics of his colleagues. There are, as we have said, some few men on the Faculty who approve the present system, who like it. With the majority, however, participation is forced. But each man thinks that his neighbor intrigues from low motives, he from necessity. Result—mutual distrust. The primal necessity for the development of esprit de corps, mutual respect and confidence, is lacking.

Now we do not condemn individuals for this state of affairs. It is an unfortunate growth from a bad system. What the friends of the University do want to see is a healthy recognition of the evil and an earnest effort to nail it. We want to see in the Faculty a truer evidence of loyalty than hysterical outbursts of indignation at honest criticism, and the disposition to indulge in rhapsodical panegyrics of the University, at every opportunity. We want to see an atmosphere of freedom which will break down the barrier of silence, which at present keeps those who have the highest welfare of the University at heart from knowing each other and combining. We want more evidence that the best elements in the University are alive. We want to see the truly high-minded and progressive spirits in the University take the lead, and set the pace for the whole institution.

To make a trust possible the rare combination is required of diplomatic ability and financial knowledge. The fees received by organizers and promoters of trusts are fabulous amounts, some of them exceeding one million dollars. Charles R. Flint, who assisted in forming the Rubber Trust, was paid more than President McKinley will receive for his entire term of office. His fee was $200,000 cash down, and an additional sum in stock of at least $100,000. This amount was exceeded by the honorarium of $250,000 given to Joseph H. Choate by the Tobacco Trust. Mr. Choate also received in additional fees not less than another quarter of a million. At the close of the war John D. Rockefeller kept books in a small produce store in Cleveland. A partner in the concern invented a new plan for refining petroleum. Rockefeller borrowed capital, built a small refinery, and promoted the enterprise, and since then has received for his work not less than $50,000,000, making him one of the richest men in the world. Rockefeller's profits may hardly be termed fees in the same sense as those of Flint and Choate, but he promoted the oil combine in the very beginning, and instead of withdrawing from the enterprise in the general way of organizers, remained with the work, and is now the principal stockholder in the company. J. Pierpont Morgan, of syndicate fame, has organized, aside from his great bond deal, any number of combines, the principal one being the gigantic Coal Trust, which he was able to form through his practical possession of the Erie railroad and his influence with the Philadelphia road. Morgan is the principal promoter of trusts in the financial world. Some of the railroad reorganization schemes have brought him as high as half a million dollars. John R. Dos Passos, a New York lawyer, who organized the Sugar Trust, realized $700,000 for his work, and Lawyer Samuel Untermyer, who promoted the big brewery syndicate some years ago, was given $250,000 in stock and cash by the English capitalists back of the enterprise.

PICTURES TO BURN

A Slim and Dreary Art Exhibition at the Hopkins House.

There are three kinds of visitors at the Hopkins house upon the Art Association's opening night:

Those that come to see the pictures.

Those that come to see the people.

Those that come to eat the supper.

It is pretty much the same crowd every year. One gets to know, after a decade or so, the face and figure of the Patron of Art. But this year all three sets were disappointed. Those that come for the supper are, in fact, always disappointed. It costs a dollar a month to be a member of the Art Association, and in return for the twelve dollars per year one has the blessed privilege of two little feasts per year in the tesselated cellar refectory of the Hopkins castle. One usually must first stand waiting for some bevy to break and scatter, leaving a dark and dreary table, and then jumping the bystander's claim, camp at the ruins of the former festivity, and wofully wait and watch wearily for the wanted waiter. The refreshment seems little enough for these, for they remember that it is practically a six-dollar supper, this being all they get for their money.

Those that came to see the people too, were disappointed, for the attendance was slim, and there were fewer freaks than usual. The only Young Person that goes to the Art Association reception is the female Art Student, or Art School Girl, as she is sometimes called—an unique creation, whose tongue is trained to the terminology of picture-craft. There was a spattering of the more faddish society people—those who would paint if they could, but not being able to, don't. These make a point of fellowship with artists, and learn to prattle of values and all that, in a few lessons.

There are usually a few Berkeley professors present, they being all on the complimentary free list. But even the fascinating opportunity to stand around in evening dress (counting up black and white ties to discover numerically if one is en regle), to wait and wonder what to do next, and pray for one familiar face to fly to, did not exert its charm, and they stayed away, thereby removing one cause of enjoyment. Perhaps they have discovered the loneliness of a crowd of dressed-up strangers in a huge building, and hesitate now to punctuate the dreariness with their visible nostalgia. The vernissage was a depressing contrast to the gay and crowded opening nights in the old rooms on Pine street, where artist and swell rubbed elbows, and everybody was well acquainted, and went, though it rained pitchforks. The few tete-a-tete rendezvous were filled, and up in the gallery there was a smile or two, that tried occasionally to leak into the sullen air of discontent.

Those that came to see the pictures also commented upon the meagre exhibit, and the few interesting paintings and the indifference of both public and artists. Though the important canvases could be numbered on one's fingers, there were not so many as usual that were frankly bad. The jury has been extraordinarily severe this spring and many applicants were refused exhibition. There was much criticism of the work of the hanging committee, which did worse than usual at its thankless task. The house is miserably adapted to the uses of a gallery, but with such a small exhibition there was little

"CYPRESS TREE, MOONLIGHT"
BY CHARLES ROLLO PETERS

enough excuse for the crowding of the pastels and water colors, packed frame to frame in the reception hall, for no use was made of the southern suite of rooms, where the smaller exhibits might have been generously spaced.

The exhibition as a whole was insipid and lifeless. In spite of the conglomeration of subjects, there was a banal monotony. It was on a par with the whilom Mechanics' Fair art—the same old thing, done in the same old way—landscapes with marshes and hillsides, and dingy, colorless interiors, and others that were never meant to be painted.

Matthews and Peters aside, the artists did what they have always done, and did it about as well as usual. Mrs. Chittenden's chrysanthemums reappeared, familiar to the veteran, so well done it is a pity she does not try something else for a change. Latimer had landscapes, petty and pretty. Yelland did the same thing that he has done a hundred times before, It makes one sad to think how few good canvases have been done in the year.

Jouillin's name did not appear on the catalogue, though his effigy in plaster adorned the reception-room, but in his stead Miss McCormick showed a very painty sand dune, not remarkable in color, and Pages took his place in Chinatown genre, for the Chinatown painter we have always with us. Let the bad work go on!

The place of honor, if there is any such location in the rooms that reflect cross-lights and shadows bewilderingly in every direction, was justly given to Matthews' "Adam and Eve," which ambitious subject is easily his best work for a long time, and won the chief interest of the exhibition. It is a painting full of sentiment and of direct impulse, well composed, and though quiet in color, full of light. It is a real angel that holds the uplifted torch, and not a flying man. The foreground seems worked out with surprising detail as compared to the simplicity of the nude figures. His "Girl Reading" is a commoner subject, but happily handled, especially as it is the work of but one afternoon.

Charles Rollo Peters' nocturnes still show a marked Japanese influence, extremely decorative in composition, with nice attendance to line and form, but at some sacrifice of the subtlety of his former coloring. His work is of the freaks, freaky, but honestly and consistently enough pursued as a hobby rather than a fad.

Among the many portraits shown, Fred Yates' easily took the lead in strength, that of General Barnes giving one a most intense sensation of vitality and power. There were other notable portraits, however, which almost saved the exhibition. Mrs. Richardson's work was strikingly contrasted with that of her cousin, Mrs. O'Sullivan, one's canvases being very juicy, the other very dry. Miss Lundborg and Mrs. Sargent each contributed good and consciencious portrait-studies, which, had they been carried a little further, would have been among the best of their class.

Mrs. Wormser's "Elsie" is a warm and attractive presentment—a large russet-brown canvas and a small russet-brown girl, very well done.

A new name among the portrait-painters is Miss Mabel Deming, whose painting in the Conservatory is very pleasantly done, and shows unmistakable merit and more promise, this being the first exhibited work.

Among the students, Aiken has contributed the only sculpture deserving attention, and his woodchopper takes the edge off the horror of the reception-room show. Martinez has not quite come up to his last season's Aztec painting, and Miss Schwamm's and Mrs. Matthews' pastels in the hall, though fresh and charming, are too painfully crowded on the walls to be properly appreciated.

Keith, for some reason, always keeps his best canvases in his studio. His chief effort of the year is now at the Bohemian Club, and he is represented in the exhibition by far less interesting scenes.

Stanton has a trying subject in conflicting colors, not too successful in chromatic adjustment.

Among the nondescripts of the sideshows are a very devilish little portrait bust of Douglass Tilden, a velvety hollow hill, minutely rendered as a colored photograph, by Yard, six lonesome black-and-whites in the reception-room, a toy bronze without the onyx clock attachment, and several explosive, overripe sunsets.

But the band played on!

JUSTIN STURGIS.

---

One of the most extraordinary funerals ever given a public man in France was that accorded two years ago to M. Burdeau, President of the Chamber of Deputies. He was eulogized as a self-made, self-educated statesman and a rugged patriot, who died in Spartan poverty, having served France all his life, and was decreed a national funeral and his widow a noble pension. It has now been discovered that Burdeau was quite the worst and most dangerous villain in the whole Panama conspiracy. Work on his half finished statue, for one of the public squares, has been ordered stopped, and some of the papers are even clamoring for the exhumation of the remains.

---

Influenza is again prevalent in London, and nearly every person of note has either had it, or is in process of acquiring it. The House of Lords has been temporarily depleted by the epidemic, while the Commons daily supplies bulletins of interesting and distinguished patients who are on the sick list. The young Countess of Dudley has been one of the most acute sufferers, and both she and her husband have been invalided for several weeks.

"FORBIDDEN FRUIT"
BY ARTHUR F. MATTHEWS

COST OF WAR

The Combative Spirit a Terrible Source of Expense.

The cost of war is almost incredible, from the standpoint of finance as well as of mortality. The American Civil War involved an outlay of $10,000,000,000, a sum sufficient to have paid the purchase price of every slave in the South. The Cuban conflict has already cost Spain about $150,000,000 in military expenditures, and her expenses are daily amounting to over $300,000. The British expedition to Dongola last year was a small affair, but it cost over $5,000,000, and the march to Comassie during the Matabele war, in which a mere handful of men were employed, used up $800,000. In 1871, during the Franco-German war, France expended $1,580,000,000, apart from the enormous war indemnity of 5,000,000,000 francs.

The loss of life has been proportionate. Since 1850 nearly two million and a half lives have been lost in war. In the Russo-Turkish War of 1877 there were 225,000 victims; in the Franco-Italian of 1859, 45,000; the Austro-Prussian of 1866, 40,000; the Indian Mutiny in 1857 and the Chinese war three years later, killed, 52,000. The series of British wars in Africa, India, and Zululand, from 1878 to 1885, involved the slaughter of 60,000 men, while the recent Chino-Japanese war had 25,000 victims. In addition to the loss of life, and financial outlay, precipitated by a war, the destruction and waste of property is almost beyond calculation. This has been evidenced in Cuba, where the rebels are more active than the Spaniards in destroying plantations. The loss of animals is equally disastrous, hundreds of thousands of horses being slain. This is taken as a mere matter of course. In the Soudan War of 1885 there was a terrible slaughter of camels. Out of 7,000 camels purchased for the British Army during the campaign, 4,000 perished. Indeed, the very prospect of war, without its actually happening, is often disastrous, as was instanced during the Anglo-American crisis over the Venezuela boundary, when there was a drop in the value of American securities of over four million dollars.

So much for the cost of actual war. Yet it pales into insignificance when compared with the yearly expenditure on the armies and navies of Europe. For this purpose the sum of $1,063,738,195 was put forth by the European powers for the year 1896-97. In this expenditure Russia ranks first, with $258,176,350; Great Britain comes next with $191,670,000, which is to be increased by $27,500,000 for the coming financial year; and France a close third with $185,120,420. Germany's outlay was placed at $132,679,500; Austria's at $89,085,210, and Italy's at $65,849,200, while Servia spends the least, her figure for 1896-97 being $2,493,000. In 1874 the six great European Powers spent directly in time of peace, on warlike material and expeditions, the total of $480,000,000; and ten years later the same six States spent $750,000,000, being a total increase of $270,000,000. To-day the aggregate expenditure of the six great Powers stands at $925,000,00, or a further increase during twelve years of $175,000,000.

ALAS, POOR JOURNALIST!

The Newspaper Man as He Now Appears in Fiction.

The new journalist is a dangerous species of indivual, according to the current commentator. The rapidity of thought and judgment which the exigencies of his profession compel in him are recognized as productive of superficiality and moral laxity. Though he may be a power to be reckoned with in the transactions of the world, his own life is apart, and his mode of reasoning is different to that of the doctor, the lawyer and the business man. The reporter has no concern in events that make or mar the fortunes of other men. His metier is merely that of a transcriber—he records the sayings and doings of others, and his virtue, in no small degree, is in his anonymity. Seldom is he allowed to express his own opinions. Opinion is the function of the editorial writer, who places the proprietor's construction on current happenings according to a preconceived policy, which is founded on specific interests and investments. The journalist is asked by his editor to use his eyes and his brain, quickly, not necessarily truly. His virtue is in the graphic presentation of a scene, in the rapid, nervous, clever narrative of a proceeding, in which other men—the men who make life a history—take part. He dares not pretend interest or concern in what they do—it is not his business. That this aloofness breeds a disregard of the system and principles of society is inevitable, and it also makes a definite type of individuality.

The man who is in the world but not of it pays high for his exemption. In a capital criticism, "The Reporter and Literature," in the April "Bookman" Norman Hapgood says:

"But there is a strong social penalty for the individual. The young man in society often meets a coolness because he is a reporter, and his friends do not use that word in introducing him. Often he appears as a 'journalist' in the directory. Naturally, the youth who belongs to a class which gets by shrewd means the facts which the taste of the better part of society thinks should not be made public must be looked upon with a feeling of distrust. However sure his friends may feel that apart from his business, his standards are as high as theirs, the general contempt for the methods of the profession must fail to some extent on him; and usually, whatever his paper, he has, inevitably, breaches of taste to answer for. However strong his social position, he sees that his associates watch him with regret, as a good man walking in dark paths. They laugh at his stories, and are interested in his experiences more than in those of the lawyer or the doctor, but they seem to feel that some of his essential dignity is gone. And even where there is no condemnation there is often aloofness, as among business associates. He is regarded as a creature apart, one who may tell things, and whom events interest only from the point of view of fitness for his use. He cares for the outcome of nothing. "Go on and stir things up,' said a reporter to a politician. 'I do not care what you do, so you do something. It is all good for me.' This is the attitude with which the world has identified him. Two reporters were discussing the Venezuela trouble. 'The doctrine has cost a terrible pile,' said one. 'It has made lots of columns,' the other replied. 'Yes,' said the first, 'I suppose on the whole it has paid.' The world does not like that standard of judgment, but it is only too typical of the characteristic irony of the newspaper man."

Among the journalists both of California and New York Gertrude Atherton has had many subjects of study, having enjoyed intimate acquaintance with managing editors and special writers of the most varied dispensations. In "Patience Sparhawk" there is a new journalist in the role of subsidiary hero, and his condition and mental attitude are abundantly discussed. Here is the portrait of this remarkable person, and, as the context shows, the author considers him typical:

"Morgan Steele was a type of the precocious young United States newspaper man which only this end of the century has evolved: Prematurely wise in the way of the world and the nature of woman; with young blood and cold judgment; wary, deliberate, calculating; full of kind impulses; generous with his money, yet careful of it; ready to make cold-blooded use of a man to-day and offer him a free lodging to-morrow; possessed of more self-control than the club man of forty; without sentimentality, yet with a certain limited power of loving; having a thorough appreciation of the finer as of the coarser shades of woman; incapable of a blind supreme rush of feeling, through the habit of eternal analysis; placidly and philosophically content with the present, and fully expecting to be laid away in the past at forty; blase, yet full of boyish delight in outdoor sport; having faith in no woman, yet treating the lowest with cynical kindness and consideration which was part of his philosophy."

Rather a more sweeping characterization of the modern journalist is that of the veteran newspaper woman, Miss Merrien. Discussing the disillusionment of Patience after her first visit to the office of the "Day," she says:

"Oh, when you get used to newspaper men you'll like them better than any men you've known. What is objectionable is counteracted by their brains and their intimate and wonderfully varied knowledge of life. A newspaper man who is at the same time a gentleman, is charming. It is true they have no respect for anybody nor anything. They believe in no woman's virtue and no man's honesty—under stress. Their kindness, like Morgan Steele's—is half cynical, and they look upon life as a thing to be lived out in twenty years—and then dry rot or suicide. But no men know so well how to enjoy life, know so thoroughly its resources, or have all their senses so keenly developed, particularly the sense of humor, which keeps them from making fools of themselves. No man can feel so strongly for a day, and that after all is the philosophy of life. All this makes them very interesting, although, I must confess, I should hate to marry one. It seems to be a point of honor among them to be unfaithful to their wives; however, I imagine, the real reason is that no one woman has sufficient variety in her to satisfy a man who sees life from so many points of view daily that he becomes a creature of seven heads and seven hearts and seven ideals."

Rather a dangerous style of monster, is it not? Unreliable as a friend, treacherous and unbridled in his enmities, he makes no good use of his great opportunities. Apparently he is cruel in his indifference to the pain and destruction he may precipitate, and, if Mrs. Atherton be right, the ordinary loyalties of life must not be expected of him. He is a creature at once superficial and bloodless, leading a butterfly existence and yet seeing nothing in the flowers but their derivatives and in his fellow butterflies but a chrysalis. However, this is an extreme view. Most of the newspapermen the writer knows are married, and they value high such shreds of domesticity as their labors leave for them. Some, it is true, devote their leisure to poker at the Press Club, and but few even of the best realize the vital problems and solemn obligations of civilized life. That is because they are concerned with the imperfections of human institutions, not with their creation or maintenance. However, most journalists are firm respectors of the conventionalities, go home at night as early as possible and would never dream of betraying a source of information. When bright at all, they make the cleverest talkers imaginable, broad of view even if cynical, and intimate with the inner details of the life of the day.

GROUP OF HOUNDS AND HUNTERS IN THE GROUNDS OF THE ECWIE PLACE AT SAN MATEO

THE MEET

With Hounds and Anise Seed Bag at Burlingame.

Last Saturday there was held at Burlingame one of the functions that keep the public gaze fixed on that center of sport and fashion. The fixture consisted of two events, a handicap steeplechase for polo ponies, two miles, and a three-mile steeplechase for horses that have been ridden with the San Mateo hunt. The prize in each instance was a cup presented by Mr. Francis Francis.

For the first mentioned race there were six entries, as follows: Mr. W. Hobart's Jack, 163 pounds; Mr. Tobin's Galloping Dick, 160 pounds; Mr. Lawson's Gray Gown, 150 pounds; Mr. Breedan's Texas Siftings, 148 pounds; Mr. Hobart's Laddie, 145 pounds; Mr. Howard's Unknown, 140 pounds, the result being a hollow victory for Mr. Lawson on his Gray Gown, Texas Siftings, ridden by Mr. R. M. Tobin, being a distant second. For the longer journey the entries were Mr. McCullough's Franco, Mr. Lawson's Blucher, Mr. Hobart's Jack, Mr. Tobin's Li Hung Chang, Captain A. Wainwright's Jim, F. J. Carolan's Wrestler.

A win was scored by Mr. Hobart's Jack, Blucher landing second, notwithstanding that his rider had a somewhat awkward-looking stumble in the course of the race, but he managed to remount and continue between the flags to the end.

As soon as the proceedings had been brought to a close on the race course, the drag-hounds were brought on the scene, and were at once taken in hand by the master, Mr. W. S. Hobart, who got them on the line laid out towards the Spreckels farm, and thus afforded the assembled horsemen an opportunity for a good gallop. The weather was a trifle warm for hunting, espesion furnished a good deal of enjoyment for everybody cially so late in the afternoon, but altogether the occapresent.

The following gentlemen acted as officials in connection with the races: Committee—J. D. Grant, W. P. A. Brewer, J. Lawson, R. M. Tobin. Judge, Major J. L. Rathbone; starter, W. S. Hobart; clerk of the scale, F. J. Carolan, and their efforts were rewarded by a gay and fashionable assemblage of spectators and an altogether successful little meeting.

The X ray has been put to new uses, aside from surgical diagnosis. It has ascertained the genuineness of jewels, and has also been made use of by French postal officials to investigate the contents of suspicious looking parcels in the mails. The latest story of the ray comes from Germany, and concerns the identification of a painting by Albrecht Durer. The canvas in question was a head of Christ, and was accredited to the famous Nuremberger. It was on wood, and was believed to have been executed in 1821. It was much discolored and dingy with age, and had been retouched by a "restorer." In order to settle all doubts as to the authenticity of the work a photograph was taken by means of the rays, and much was revealed that the eye could not see. The features and the drapery appeared much more distinctly than in the painting, and there also came to light a Latin inscription in quaint Gothic characters, the monogram of some Grand Duke (for whom, perhaps, the picture was painted), the artist's initials, and the date 1524.

Dr. Lueger, chief of the anti-Semites in Austria, has been again elected Mayor of Vienna, and it is scarcely probable that the Emperor will refuse to ratify the election, as on two previous occasions. Lueger is the idol of the anti-Semite agitators, and their fury is strong enough to overwhelm many conflicting political sympathies. Anti-Semite feeling runs high among Austrian voters, and to this is due the recent all round defeat of the Socialists, who made opposition to anti-Semitism a part of their programme.

THE WOMAN'S CONGRESS

A Spirited Symposium on "Education" in Golden Gate Hall.

The fourth annual convention of the Women's Congress was opened, says Mrs. Helen Gardener, in as dignified and impressive a manner as was ever any assembly in the country, whether of men or of women. The State was gracefully represented by Mayor Phelan in an address of welcome, the church gave its encouragement to the work through Dr. Wolk, and Education, whose advancement is the especial study of the Congress, found a delegate in President David Starr Jordan.

The theme of discussion as set forth in the programme of the congress is education: divided under the heads of child psychology, industrial art, mental training, morals and religion; one subject for each day of the week. This programme has been very carefully planned by the ladies of the Executive Board, Mrs. Swift, Mrs. White, Mrs. Van Pelt, Mrs. Dutton and Mme. Sorbier, with the advice tendered by President Jordan.

The annual conferences have taken up in turn, women's influence in the affairs of the world generally, in government and in education, and the interest in these congresses has increased in strength each year. The most important papers read at this week's session were by Mrs. Helen Gardener on "Heredity," and by the Bramacharin Bodhabhikshu on "Religion as a Synonym for Education," and their strongly marked personalities gave flavor to the sessions.

Mrs. Gardener, whilom associate editor of the "Arena," has become famous as an author, having written several books with-a-purpose. The best known of these is "Is This Your Son, My Lord?" a novel whose motive is the social purity question. She has written several other earnest stories, beside a book of essays scientific in character, dealing with sex and heredity and different phases of the woman question. Her "Unofficial Patriot" has recently been dramatized, and will be put on the stage by Herne, after his "Shore Acres" tour is completed.

THE BRAMACHARIN BODHABHIKSHU

Mrs. Gardener is a diminutive, cheerful and curly-haired woman, but nevertheless dead-in-earnest type of congressional delegates, and combative in inverse proportion to her size. Her defense when she was unintentionally misquoted by the Mayor as to her surprise at the quality of Western culture, proved her wit and readiness. She is, indeed, a strong supporter of our claims to intellectual energy, and especially of the activity of California women in the agitation of social problems. The evident reluctance on the part of the managers of the conference to allow discussion to approach the question of socialism did not escape her. Could the little tilt with the Social Democrats on Monday have been conducted in a dignified way and with the proper spirit, it would have been interesting to have heard her answers to the socialistic fanatics, whose manifestations were so cleverly suppressed by the chairman, Mrs. Swift.

The Bramacharin is a fine type of the Oriental mystic of which we have heard so much but seen so little. The recent visit of Dharmapala gave one an admirable opportunity to contrast the Buddhist and the Brahmin.

Bodhabhikshu is as picturesque a character, but a long way the superior, intellectually, of the Anagarikan priest in yellow. His use of English is admirable, and his readiness of comprehension and of reply is a marked contrast to the dreamy-eyed philosopher who was so cruelly outwitted by the sages at the Berkeley Philosophical Union. The Bramacharin's conversation in private, with one well enough versed in Brahminism to appreciate his point of view, is ingenious, absolutely self-reliant and marvelously swift. His lofty conception of life, variant at every point with our Western ideas, do not so much make him appear a foreigner in his intercourse with Americans, as do they seem to enlighten the discussion by a light from an unknown direction. Well trained in science, in philosophy and in our methods, he is a man to meet an argument on any plane, and usually to convince one that he speaks whereof he knows.

To the coldness and soullessness of science he adds a fire, for which his knowledge gives one respect. It will be unfortunate for the Orientalists here, if he is not given an opportunity not only to lecture, but to meet in amicable debate our best thinkers, that Dharmapala's defeat may be wiped out.

Not since Annie Besant was here has there been such a chance for the Theosophists to dignify a cause, which has gained disrepute by the fringe of cranks that have alienated from the movement the most respectable of its fraternity. These freaks, the Hindu calls "howling Theosophists," and considers the reaction is natural.

"Modern science," says he, "is not truly scientific in spirit, despite the great progress that has been made in this century. Its procedure is Aristotelian rather than Platonic—consisting of mere classification. Since its deductions are made from so few out of the overwhelming number of phenomena of nature, its results are doubtable, inferences from insufficient data being illogical. In the perfection of scientific method the Greeks were far ahead of the achievements of modern Europe. The only true scientific procedure is that used by Euclid, which is, first, enumeration of the proposition; second, demonstration of its reasonableness by inference and experience; third, verification by proof. That is the proper way of receiving the truth. As to the origin of the proposition, that is, of course, where the Eastern and Western philosopher differ. We, by rising above material conditions of the sense-world, by emancipating ourselves from the material phases, believe we can experience the nomina rather than phenomena, and as the greater includes the less, the knowledge of the essence of things enables us to understand their phases on lower planes."

Bodhabhikshu's address to the conference included a beautiful tribute to woman—"the heavenly flower stolen from Paradise to adorn the home—but when she abuses her power she is the most dangerous creature in the world."

Mayor Phelan's most vigorous thought was given in the words, "Civilization has ever moved Westward. Its best should be in California, and since it cannot go onward, it should go upward."

Dr. Jordan caught the congress with his phrase "in the past women have been acting under sealed orders. The spirit of Democracy is the breaking of these orders. Now the time has come for them to think and act for themselves."

Mrs. Gardener spoke of the conference as "a social rather than a sex congress," and the unusually large number of men speakers gave the meetings a different character from those of past years. The congress has indeed sobered down to work in quite a different spirit than that manifested during its first years of existence. There was not the enthusiasm, almost fanaticism, of the former suffrage agitations, and there was neither the spice of wit and clever repartee that made Miss Anna Shaw's presence at last year's meetings so enjoyable. This conference is more conservative, more restrained and a little less exciting than those of previous years.

---

With the rumors of Justice Field's retirement, which, it is said, will take place in July next, one hears in Washington much gossip about the succession together with more concerning a probable recasting of the Cabinet. It is understood at the White House, and in the Cabinet circle, that when Justice Field does betake himself to private life Judge McKenna is to be his successor on the Supreme Bench. This change in the Cabinet would make the office of Attorney-General vacant, and there are many aspirants for the position, the most prominent being Colonel John J. McCook of New York, who was talked of as a probable Attorney-General before the appointment of Judge McKenna. There are several legal lights in California who would be willing to accept the portfolio, however, but it is hardly probable that this State will be thus honored twice in succession. If Colonel McCook receives the appointment, it is said that Secretary of the Interior Bliss will resign in order that New York may not have any more than her just share of Cabinet representation. The Interior portfolio Mr. Bliss accepted very unwillingly and would gladly rtire at the first opportunity.

It is on this possible retirement of Secretary Bliss at the same time that Judge McKenna is promoted to the Supreme bench that certain California aspirants count greatly. Principal among them is Judge Waymire, who wants to be Attorney-General, but if that is to go to Colonel McCook then he has no objection to being made Secretary of the Interior. Judge McKenna's old position remains unfilled, and the trouble about this is there are too many applicants and too many interests involved, to dispose of the matter hastily. The President and his advisers have thought that having given California a position in the Cabinet the vacant Circuit judgeship should be filled by a man from some other section of the district, and it is said that the Senators from Washington and Montana have been notified that if they could agree upon a man for the place he would receive the nomination. Montana Senators are supporting Judge Hunt of the Supreme Court of that State, and ex-Senator Sanders has a strong following. Washington presents the names of Judge C. H. Hanford, who is District Judge, and of B. S. Grosscup, a prominent attorney of Tacoma, who is a brother of Judge Grosscup of Chicago. Should California not get a place in the Cabinet again, and should the Circuit judgeship be filled by one of the applicants who are residents of this State, it is on the slate now that Judge Morrow will be promoted to the Circuit judgeship and that Judge Waymire will be appointed to succeed Morrow.

MRS. HELEN GARDENER

---

Sarah Bernhardt gave a matinee performance at the Renaissance Theater a few weeks ago, the entire proceeds of which were handed over to the Greek Government. The play was Racine's "Phedre," one of Sarah's oldest and most brilliant triumphs, and she acted with unusual strength and brilliancy. Mme. Bernhardt is to produce a new play by M. Gustave Guiches entitled "Snobs." She will content herself with being stage manager, the principal role being played by Mme. Jeanne Granier, who has risen from the music hall stage to the boards of the Renaissance.

THE WOMAN'S CONGRESS—A GROUP OF LEADERS

DE WOLF HOPPER

EDNA WALLACE HOPPER

THE STARS OF "EL CAPITAN"

TO BE PRODUCED AT THE BALDWIN THEATRE NEXT WEEK

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The controversy which threatened to make Montagues and Capulets of the Ashes and Mizners has been settled, and the custody of Ruinart is permanently vested in R. P. of the former ilk. I am told that the California Derby winner, among its owner's friends, is known as Will Ashe's Baby. It seems Mr. Ashe has long cherished original ideas about horse rearing, which had grown stronger because of repression. Being in charge of the ranch at the time that Ruinart was born, he proceeded to put these theories into execution, and there being no one to interfere, he had a fair chance. This idea consisted in the assumption that the bigger and stronger a colt could be made, the better horse he would become. This, he calculated, would be achieved by means of milk—not mare's milk alone, but also the lacteal fluid of the cow. So twice a day Ruinart had to consume a bucket of milk, and he certainly throve and grew fat thereon. There is not to-day a stronger animal in the country than Ruinart, whose only difficulty is that he takes rather too long to get up speed. For a two-mile run there is no horse in the country to beat him.

***

Though times are hard and money scarce one hears at intervals of brilliant chances to make one of those big turns that means fortune. We all know that the gap in the Coast division line is soon to be closed by the completion of the railroad between San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara. When the Southern Pacific has a direct road via the Salinas Valley and San Jose to the South, it will make it the main passenger thoroughfare and overland travel will take it in preference to the San Joaquin. The Sunset limited will come north and go south this way, and the fertile valleys of the Southern country will appear to travelers in their best guise. Undoubtedly all this will aid materially the prosperity of Santa Barbara, which will then take on its destined importance as the Mentone of the West. This is apropos of the fact that I am told the Arlington Hotel, the prominent hostelry of that environment, is for sale at a very moderate figure. I cannot but think there is here an excellent opportunity for some one with ability and business intelligence to make a moderate fortune.

***

The patriotic tendency of the Governor to reward with political preferment all his compatriots from Stockton inspired a certain ironical politician to pen to him the following letter immediately after the announcement which appeared in Thursday's paper of the suicide of two Stockton men in a river boat:

Hon. James H. Budd: Will you consider my application for one of the positions which the death of Dr. McCall and Frank Bolen has vacated, or in case they had not yet been placed, I hereby apply for any positions which they had been promised and were to receive.

JOHN JONES.

***

The presumption that training for a prizefight is a costly proceeding is nullified by a story which comes to me from Nevada. Possibly, however, the transaction should not be considered a precedent, for it should be remembered the business management of Mr. James Corbett has proved itself as fine-pointed as a needle in discerning exactly where the interests of Mr. Corbett lie. When his representative went to Carson to establish Jim at suitable quarters he first entered into negotiations with the Steamboat Springs. It is an earnest, modest female who conducts the place, and she listened quietly to the representations of the pugilist. Corbett asked in general only that his party, trainers and all, be housed and boarded free of charge, that quarters be fitted up for exercising purposes, that each morning his first man should go to the butcher's and pick out choice cuts for his consumption, and that the bar be plenteously stocked with liquors of all kinds—all this at the cost of the owner. Now, a fighter preparing to become a world's champion is the devil of a fellow, and crowds come to see his condition and bag-punching from everywhere. Of course, it is proper that they should drink plenteously at the bar, and that the pugilists should assist them. The bar, then, is the source from which the Springs is entitled to recoup itself. Corbett was not satisfied to have board and lodgings free, however; his agent actually demanded 60 per cent of the liquor receipts, leaving but 40 per cent for the landlady. This decidedly one-sided contract was legally formulated, and it would undoubtedly have been executed had not a friend of some discernment pointed out its inequalities to the misguided landlady. The result was that the negotiations were broken off and Corbett entered into an arrangement with Shaw Springs on the same basis. That institution was a generous loser by the transaction, and will never again entertain pugilists in hope of liquor rewards.

***

An amusing example of the inefficacy of expert judgment was recently given in the Proivdence mine. This is a claim located near Hobart and Hayward's "Dead-Horse." For some time it was worked by Captain McMurty of Stockton, whose superintendent was a man named Ogden, an energetic and honest fellow whose intuitions were rather better than his knowledge of mining. Ogden expended several thousands of his principals' money in tunnels and shafts, but in vain. Just at that time an eminent expert representing millions of Boston capital happened to learn of the property and he made an investigation accompanied by Ogden. At the operations he turned up his nose, especially at the location where the superintendent told him he expected to strike the vein. "Why, man," he said, chipping a piece of the rock, "that is diabase, and it is an axiom of geology that where this is found there can be no gold. You are simply wasting your time." Of course, he refused to deal further, but Ogden, angry at the indictment of his intelligence, went to work on his own account with some savings he had in the bank. He started a tunnel just where the expert had declared no gold could exist and some twelve feet further on he struck the vein—a splendid ore body, six feet wide and assaying $15 to the ton. The discovery alone made the Providence a mine, and later developments show better prospects.

***

Apropos of the Bohemian Club's pictures, I am told that the Art Committee of the Directory recntly installed, is earnestly in favor of furthering the opportunities of the members to exhibit their work in the Green Room. Much interest in the many fine canvases recently shown has been evidenced by the members of the club, and it is the desire of the Committee to make this loan collection of benefit both to the institution and the artists. Almost all the available wall space is now taken, but several new easels will be purchased to increase the capacity of the room. A circular has just been addressed by the Art Committee, of which W. S. Stafford, secretary of the Hopkins Art Association, is chairman, to the artist-mebers of the Bohemian Club, inviting their cooperation. Each member is to be allowed to exhibit one framed picture at a time for two weeks in the Green Room, and a Register is to be kept in the office containing a record of date of entry and other information, not the least of which is the price of the painting. This will give the artists an uncommonly good chance of displaying and disposing of their work, and it is hoped that not only will the continuous exhibition mutually benefit the members and the painters, but will draw into the Club other artists not now upon the list. Mr. Stafford deserves no little credit for the encouragement he has given to the artists of San Francisco, not only in his position as Secretary of the Art Institute and in the Bohemian Club, but as a private citizen, for he has one of the most complete collections of local work in the city. Not only is the name of almost every painter in town upon his canvases, but what has much more to do with the case, he has paid hard coin for his acquisition.

***

Meanwhile, Ernest Peixotto and Wilbur Reaser, who have strayed from the fold, are upholding the credit of California in New York. I have just seen the first proofs of Peixotto's drawings of the Congressional Library at Washington, and he has made excellent use of the fine opportunity that the Scribners' gave him. He is undoubtedly at his best in his black and white rendering of architectural subjects, though it is a line he has been forced in to rather than selected. The drawings are even better than his illustrations of the Boston Public Library. He is living in a cosy set of apartments on Washington Square. Mr. Reaser is now receiving the congratulations of his friends for his success in landing the $300 prize of the National Academy. This was awarded him for his portrait of his wife and child, a canvas as successful in color as it is interesting in composition. The painting shows Mrs. Reaser seated on a bench, holding a mirror, into which the child, leaning over her mother's shoulder, is looking. This portrait of his dark-haired wife is as striking as that exhibited here at the last exhibition of the Art Association, and the sunny-haired child is a charming contrast of color. Mr. Reaser is doing well in New York, and besides his studio work has found time and opportunity to give a series of suburban lectures in Dutch and French Art, besides having, I am told, begun the illustration of two books.

***

Since the visit of President Diaz to the Atlanta Exposition, he has evinced for Americans a partiality which must eventually make prosperous our countrymen in the sister republic. Heretofore the Germans have ruled the commercial world in Mexico, and have had all the best opportunities. Americans have been regarded with distrust, for there has lurked a suspicion in the minds of Mexican statesmen that our Government continues to cherish designs upon their nation. Once being convinced of the contrary, however, President Diaz has evinced numerous proofs of his favor. To a prominent Californian who had an audience with him recently, he expressed the belief that the destiny of Mexico is inseparably interwoven with that of the United States, and that the prosperity of the one involves the good fortune of the other. It must be the policy of Mexico to cement this relationship in every way, so that in the course of time the republics might be one people with two governments. It is interesting to learn that among the projects of improvement which Diaz has inaugurated, his latest is a scheme of public education. He has just entered into an arrangemnt with Charles Strange, a young Los Angelan, who has excellent financial relationships, for the erection throughout the republic of school houses. The contract calls for the expenditure of five and one-quarter millions in this direction. The results cannot but be of the greatest importance to the country.

BOSWELL JR.

CARNIVAL TIME

THE CITY OF THE ANGELS IN GALA ATTIRE DOING HONOR

Photos by Gard

THE SOUTHLAND

HE QUEEN OF THE FLOWER FETE WITH PROCESSIONAL PARADE

o Co., Los Angeles

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

My Dear Diary—This week I am going to describe my frolics betwen breaths, so to speak. I am a physical wreck—exhausted but not satiated with pleasure. Time seems all too short for me now. I wish I could borrow some of the hours from Lent, and thus get in some little extras. Mamma talks of going to the country, and suggests Burlingame or San Mateo. Those are to be the really smart places this year; everyone is buying and building. W. H. Mills is one of the latest purchasers, and proposes making San Mateo his summer home. The Jarboe house is so pretty, and the Frank Carolan place, which is fast approaching completion, promises to be a delightful home. Mr. Carolan went East on Tuesday to fetch Mrs. Carolan, who has been purchasing furniture and things in Chicago.

I am not a bit anxious to go to any of the California resorts until later, but am wild to go East. So many of the girls have gone already, and ever so great a number are planning to depart. Mrs. Russell Wilson, Helen Hopkins and Caro Crockett left on Tuesday, and will remain away until the end of June. Mrs. Casey and Miss Katherine Dillon leave for Europe on Sunday next. They will be in London for the Diamond Jubilee. Is not that glorious? How I wish I could go. I tried all my arts to persuade papa, but he said until Leila was married he would not even think of it. So, alas, for my dearest hopes. However, she is still engaged, and Lent is over. I am trying to get her to set the date for her wedding, but thus far have been merely snubbed. It is hard to be a younger sister and have no one to sit upon!

Never mind, I have simply revelled in pleasure this week. There was the closing meeting of the Howard Adams Cotillion Club on Friday evening. I had a fine

MISS DAISY WHITELAW
Who is to be married next week to Mr. Walter Brunt time, but missed my officer friends. Very few of the older crowd were there. Florence Stone and I were the only debutantes, so simply had things all our own way. Florence wore cream and looked well. The german was led by Howard Adams and sweet Edna Van Wyck, who was simply bewitching in pink organdie over pink silk. Marie Oge looked lovely, as usual, in pure white. Clara Carpenter, a very pretty girl from the Southern part of the State, wore white organdie over pink silk. Beulah Stubbs was in pale blue, and Nettie Black was effectively gowned in green-flowered organdie over green silk. I begin to think, however, that Mr. Greenway has a prophetic soul; dances after Easter are not all one's fancy painted. Now on Friday it was too warm, and there seemed a lack of enthusiasm. Lent seems to deprive the girls of that esprit and verve which lends a piquant flavor to pleasure.
Taber, photo

On Saturday afternoon mamma, Leila and I went to Mrs. Jewett's reception given to the Misses Withrow. It was a regular crush, but very enjoyable. Every one one knew was there, and a whole lot of interesting looking people that I had not met heretofore. The Misses Withrow go to London in June, and expect to remain away several years. Then I flew home, packed my grip, and caught the five boat to Berkeley. The Fiji boys gave a dozen of us a dinner at their fraternity house, and we had great fun. Edna Dickens, Edith and Beulah Stubbs, Nettie Black, Ethel Parker, Gertie Bates, and Charlotte Field were there. Afterwards we all went to the play given by the "Skull and Keys" at the McDonough Theater. Phew! I never saw so crowded a house, and as for smartness, the first night at the Opera was not in it. Numberless light waists and dark skirts, but nothing remarkable was observable in the dressing. Mrs. Tom Magee chaperoned a party of young people, including Helen Hopkins, Lawson Adams, Carl Crockett, etc. The McNutts had a box party. I noted Ruth McNutt and Edith Preston, who are among the belles of the future. Then there was Clara Hamilton, and Joe and Jack Sullivan. Sarah Dean, with a party, had another box, and endless other people. The play was dull, flat, and unprofitable—not in it with the last year's show. That was really fun. I don't see why the boys chose "London Assurance." It is all very well in its way, but 'Varsity plays are infinitely better adapted to amateur effort, at least that is Miss Cricket's humble opinion.

On Sunday I was so tired I did not go to church at all, but remained quietly in bed all day. On Monday I paid a number of calls, and in the evening went to see Neely O'Sullivan in "Shamus O'Brien." I never saw San Francisco so enthusiastic, but then Neely is a Native Son, and when the Lord returns to his own! I did not care particularly for the opera; it is not Irish enough. I mean the music is not. It has neither the sad strain of Moore's melodies, in which the spirit of music appears as a captive, nor the light liveliness of the popular songs. I liked "Now Boys, Listen to Shamus," and think it will become popular, but one cannot cling to many of the airs. Of course the whole world and its family were there, and I believe during the rest of the week Neely played to crowded houses.

On Thursday evening I went to the Riding School Exhibition, on Pacific avenue, under Captain Dilhan. The exercises were charming; some of the members ride as well as professionals. Mrs. Webster Jones and Miss Rose Hooper drove tandems, and managed their horses with surprising skill. Miss Komer and Mrs. Lent are among the best riders. Then there was the musical riding, the rosette figure and others. Mr. Burbank Somers and Mr. Webster Jones are splendid horsemen. Every Friday afternoon there is a children's class, and the little ones jump over hurdles and perform other feats.

Well, now, I must be off. I am going to a dance at Stanford to-night. Quite a party of us are going down to stay at the Sigma Nu's house. Jessie Cheever, Florence Stone, Nettie Black, May Crowell and your Miss Cricket. I have a perfect love of a frock. Then I am going to Mrs. Will Myer's tea on Saturday; to the basket ball game and to Mrs. Darling's reception on Tuesday afternoon. So now good bye. Yours till the end,

MISS CRICKET.

Mrs. Clark L. Crocker's commodious house on the corner of Sutter and Octavia streets, is to be the scene of an original entertainment in aid of the Children's Hospital. As formulated, it is to be a gingerbread fete, commencing May 11th and extending through the week, open afternoon and night, with all sorts of attachments and pretty girls in abundance. The house is to be converted into a species of Mid-Winter Fair with all sorts of departments. An Oriental room, an art museum, a room full of Indian baskets and weapons, together with kinetoscopes, animatoscopes, phonographs, musical boxes and other adjuncts will be sources of interest. Besides there will also be dances and concerts. In the art room Toby Ronsenthal's latest canvas will be hung, together with many other new canvases of importance. Each night the grounds will be illuminated with electricity, and altogether much fun may be anticipated. Admission is set at 25 cents in the afternoon, and 50 cents at night.

***

The Easter season in Oakland has never before been so festive. Gaiety succeeds gaiety, and even in the midwinter the list of entertainments has never been so long. There are dinners, lunches, endless receptions and teas to chronicle, and still the invitations pour in. Most Easter-like in its atmosphere was the dinner and reception given on Monday evening in honor of Dr. and Mrs. McLean by Mrs. F. M. Smith The house was decked from garret to cellar with myriads of Easter lilies. During the evening musical selections were given by Miss Carrie Little and Miss Bowes. Another characteristic entertainment was the luncheon given on Tuesday by Mrs. Henry Butters of Piedmont, when even the ice cream was frozen to represent an Easter lily. Among those bidden to the luncheon were Mrs. Bray, Mrs. Hood, Mrs. Joseph Moody, Mrs. Monroe Salisbury.

A pretty dancing party was given to the Friday Fortnightly set by Miss Grace Baldwin at her home on Vernon Heights. The music was particularly good, and the evening passed most pleasantly. Among the prettiest of the girls were Miss Marietta Havens, Miss Jean Hush, Miss Marguerite Cole and Miss Bessie Palmer. A jolly affair was the "Keno" party given by Miss Alice Stephenson and Miss Sinclair in honor of Miss Clay on Tuesday afternoon. The first prize, a silver shoe horn, was won by Miss Bernie Drown. The booby prize, a rabbit's foot, was carried off by Miss Jean Hush. During the afternoon Miss Josephine Chabot sang some pretty ballads and Miss Clay recited.

The Neighborhood Club, 406 Third street, held its usual tea on Monday afternoon between the hours of 3 to 5. This society, which was started in 1893 has been most successful. The officers and workers are Miss Ethel Moore, president; Miss Delaney, vice-president; Miss Potter, treasurer, and Miss McChesney, secretary. Miss Booth, Miss Flint, and Miss Pendleton are among the directors. All the girls are most enthusiastic, devoting much time to the club. Several spend two or three afternoons each week in teaching the children or talking to the mothers about ways and means.

Quite a function was the tea given on Friday by Misses Holt, Simmons and Kittredge. The members of the "13" Club assisted in receiving. All the girls wore light frocks. Miss Simmons was daintily gowned in white organdie over pink silk. The decorations were in palms and La France roses.

The different fraternities of Berkeley have sent out invitations for the various luncheons to take place on Class Day, May 8th. Mrs. Wilkinson is to give a tea on Saturday, May 1st, in Berkeley, and Mrs. Will Magee has invited a number of people to meet Madame Urso on Saturday afternoon from 3 to 5.

A big reception was given by the members of St. Paul's church to Dr. Robert Ritchie on Thursday evening, in the parlors of the church. The decorations were really beautiful. The walls were hung with tapestries and Oriental embroideries and Easter lilies were massed everywhere. Dr. and Mrs. Ritchie were assisted in receiving by Mrs. McElrath, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Taft, Mrs. Bromwell and Mrs. Babcock.

There are many pretty places around Oakland, but I know of no resort to equal Leona Heights. On Wednesday night last there was a formal opening with music and electric illumination, and quite a number of people from Oakland and Alameda made the trip. The grounds are looking charming in their spring lining of bright green, and every one had a good time. This afternoon the May Day picnic of the Alameda Public School will be celebrated at the Heights, and the prize awarded in the poem competition, which has been raging so ardently in Alameda.

MISS KEITH WAKEMAN
A California actress who has made a success in London
Elite, photo

The success in London of Miss Keith Wakeman, a California girl, born and reared in Oakland, where her family still resides, will be good news for her many friends. Her latest laurels have been won in the new Nelson drama, "The Mariners of England." Speaking of Miss Wakeman, the "Land and Water" says: "Graceful and gracious, she acted with distinction; her comedy was natural, and in the more sombre scenes she was convincing without whining." The "Sporting Life" has it that: "Miss Wakeman makes her part a perfect picture of a charming and unaffected girl of the period of the play, and her pathos sounds real and true." The "Topical Times": In Miss Wakeman we have an actress capable of expressing ardor and anguish, tenderness and truth, with well contrasted skill and intensity."

Miss Wakeman made her last appearance in this city some years ago as leading support with Minna Gale. She afterwards went to England with E. S. Willard, and this association with the celebrated English actor gave her a standing in London that it would have been difficult for her to have otherwise obtained. She remained for a time with Mr. Willard and soon attracted general and favorable attention. One of her late appearances has been in Sutton Vane's drama, "In Sight of St. Paul's," in which she made much out of rather dreary surroundings.

A Splendid Showing.

Since assuming the agency at the beginning of the year of Moet & Chandon White Seal (Grande Cuvee), Messrs. William Wolff & Co. have imported twenty-six hundred cases—in view of the dull season, a remarkable sum—of which the agents, as well as the shippers, may well be proud. Californians also know a good thing when they can get it.—Pacific Wine and Spirit Review.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

The Nelson Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Mr. Frederick M. Biggerstaff, the pianist, announces a farewell concert for Tuesday evening, May 13th, at Golden Gate Hall. Mr. Biggerstaff will be assisted by Mrs. Sedgley-Reynolds, Dr. Gilbert F. Graham, and Mr. Arthur Weiss.

The musical evening at the Byron Mauzy piano warerooms last Thursday was one of the most enjoyable of the entire series. The programme was given by Mme. Alice Waltz, the Misses Sherwood, A. Harold Kayton, Dr. Arthur Regensburger, H. Clay Wysham, S. Martinez, and James Hamilton Howe.

Mr. Otto Benedix will give his piano recital at Byron Mauzy Hall on Post street next Thursday evening. Mr. Benedix's programme has been carefully arranged and contains, among other numbers, Liszt's "Will O' Wisp Studie," Brahm's "In Memorial," Schubert's "Margarethe at the Spinning-Wheel," and Chopin's "Sonate, op. 58."

The play at Morosco's next week will be "An American Hero," a spectacular comedy-drama by Con. Murphy. Among the scenic and mechanical effects will be a realistic storm at sea, and a magnificent tropical island. One of the features will be the first appearance in this city of Harry Shock, a boy singer with a remarkable voice.

Shamus O'Brien is proving a tremendous success at the Tivoli. Never has there been such a demand for seats. Each night the house has been crowded to its utmost capacity, and there is no doubt the merits of the opera grow on its hearers. It is excellent work that Mr. O'Sullivan gives, and the cast is quite as good as that which originally produced the opera in London. Shamus will be kept on the boards until further notice, and will be succeeded by "Miss Frisco," the annual Tivoli extravaganza.

The Orpheum offers a capital bill for next week. There are some very pretty girls in Fleurette's quarette of novelty dancers, and there is also a trapeze lady, Mlle. Airi, whose muscular development rivals that of Alcide Capitaine. The great sensation this week has been Tociann, the male soprano, a remarkably clever artist and mimic, who gives a brilliant and at the same time very amusing performance. Though this week's show is first class, the specialty menu for next week is among the best the Orpheum has ever presented. The singing of Senor Alberti and Mlle. Orlandi has also proved a strong feature.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

Faster Time on the Santa Fe Route—3½ Days to Chicago or St. Louis, 4½ to New York.

Leaving San Francisco Mondays and Thursdays at 5 P.M., connection is made at Barstow with the famous Santa Fe limited train. Dining-car, buffet smoking-car, vestibuled Pullman palace drawing-room sleepers. The handsomest train on earth—equipment and appointments faultless. Daily through sleeping-cars, both palace and tourist, Oakland pier to Chicago. Ticket office, 644 Market street, Chronicle Building. Tel. Main 1531.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

HIS NAME DENIS

Tribulations of a Popular Baritone in Philadelphia.

"No, I'm through with helping choristers, if I saw them starving in the gutter," said Dennis O'Sullivan with a grin; "a fellow creature, yes; but no chorus singers—not if I know it, and I want no more experience managing a company. Never in my life have I heard of such black ingratitude—here's the straight story of it:

"After we finished our London tour with 'Shamus O'Brien,' the American rights were sold to a pirate named Cowdrey, and we went on the road. Well, in Cincinnati the town was flooded; the people had to come in boats almost, and drove in from the suburbs in carriages, and we didn't take in much money. We got hung up high and dry in Chicago, where every company in town but one was in the soup. Cowdrey had been blowing in his money on a hare-brained show by J. C. Duff—'La Falotte'—which blew up after two weeks' run.

"Cowdrey, I knew well enough, was worth $150,000, if he was worth a cent, and had it stowed away in a stocking here and a stocking there. He had made over his real estate to his wife and his programme publishing business; you know what that means, having the run of five or six New York theatres,—to his son. But he squealed before he'd dig down into his pockets to square a couple of thousand dollars expenses for 'Shamus.' He owed the company $600 then; the chorus was only a week behind, and the principals had agreed to wait and play the tour out, so we were about two and a half weeks in arrears. Cowdrey came on the stage in Chicago and whined about his losses. 'I'd like to do what I could,' says he, 'but I can't do anything.' 'Can't your son dig up $600 out of his publishing business to save you from everlasting disgrace?' I said. 'O, my son, Eddy is very close, and he's very hard pushed now,' said Cowdrey. 'Couldn't your wife spare a few months' rent?' I asked, and he squirmed out a few miserly apologies. Well, I had talked over the situation with the principals, and had spent night after night going over the accounts. I had paid a man to watch the box-office in front, for the rascal had been actually sending money to Duff in New York to cover 'La Falotte;' I had retained a lawyer, for our show was paying expenses, but it wasn't worth our while to prosecute him, as I had to come West so soon, and, besides, it would have cost too much to prove it on him. Will you believe it, that while I was actually making their fight for them, some of the principals were trying to compromise for their salaries on the outside, but I didn't hear of this till later.

"So when Cowdrey had thrown up everything and whined about his wanting to help them if he could, I said to the chorus: 'See here; you've heard Mr. Cowdrey, and I hope you're properly grateful for his generosity. But the principals have agreed to pay the company to Philadelphia (where we were booked for five weeks),' and that's what we did, out of our own pockets. We forfeited our salaries, too, and came down to a pro rata agreement with the chorus people. There wasn't many that we hadn't already helped out with a dollar lent here and a dollar lent there, and three who got too drunk to perform were sent back to New York at our expense.

"Anyhow, we got to Philadelphia, and when we were ready to ring up the curtain at the Chestnut-street Theater there was a thousand dollars in the house, besides $400 advance sales."

"So when the chorus saw that they struck. They actually wouldn't go on unless their week's back salary was paid, their wages raised $3 a week, and their tickets given them to New York!

"The manager of the theater came back furious. He had $1,100 bulging in his pockets, but he wouldn't pay the sharks with no assurance they would go on after he had settled. 'I'll pay you in full after the show,' says he, 'and I'll re-engage every man and woman for the five weeks, but not a cent now.' There were five ringleaders and they pulled the whole show off and went outside and sent for O'Sullivan. I went out and they yelled for their tickets for New York that I had bought and paid for with my own money. 'I don't know who you are,' I said. 'You were members of the 'Shamus O'Brien' company but now you're a mob in the street, and I don't know you.' 'Give us our tickets!' they yelled, and I walked back into the theater, where there were five persons who hadn't walked out, and I sent them home.

"That crowd went chasing down the street yelling like a Roman mob: 'O'Sullivan has got our tickets! O'Sullivan has got our tickets!' They were half crazy and the people thought there was a mob afoot, and second story windows flew up and the town was humming. They ran down to the police station and tried to charge me with embezzlement. The captain had just heard about the state of affairs from a detective at the theater; he told them they were getting themselevs into trouble, and sent them flocking. They gang looked up a lawyer, and came back next day and sent in three spokesmen to renew the charge backed up by some shysters. 'See here,' said the captain, 'you'll be run in for conspiracy, if you don't take care—get out of here!' They tried to bluster and he arrested the three, and locked them up in the tank for five or ten minutes, and then spilled them down the steps of the station.

"Well, I was $576 out by the transaction, as it stood then. We lost five weeks in Philadelphia where they had held the theater for a roaring success. We were queered in Boston that was waiting for us, and in Brooklyn and Washington it was the same thing, and I had forgone a new contract offered me.

"The news spread all over the East like wildfire. The press took it up and the managers were red-hot indignant at the outrage, and the beastly ingratitude, for the chorus had left the principals in such a hole that they couldn't leave town with their trunks, even. Hoff and Malone and Marcus Meyer, the biggest agencies of choristers, sent to me for the story and the names immediately, and in two days that set of ingrates were blacklisted in fifty-eight New York theaters, and when they began to turn up at Malone's to secure situations they got it in the neck.

"But wait till I tell you about Cowdrey. Just before I came West to open at the Tivoli I went to him for the music. He had a bundle nicely wrapped up in beautiful shape. I said I'd like to look at it, for I had learned to keep thinking pretty hard, when I was with that kind of swine. 'Oh, it's all right,' says he, but I cut open the bundle and there were just two vocal scores and a few for extra string parts, and not an orchestral score; no wood, no brass, no wind instruments, and he actually tried to make me pay for the rest, after I had compromised with him (at Joe Redding's advice) for $75. That's the kind of a man Cowdrey is, and that's the kind of animals chorus singers are. And as for other managers, I could tell you some stories of London experiences with the Carl Rosa people that would accompany the same tune!"

ETC. JR.

---

Up Guerneville way the residents are striving for the favor of campers, and actually offer to aid them in securing comfortable locations amid the redwoods for their summer abodes. Tracts of land appropriate for the purpose have been secured, and whosoever goes up there will be driven around free of charge. The S. F. & N. P. railway affords a double daily train serivce with Guerneville.

Haywards Park is one of the most delightful resorts during the summer season. Concerts are given every Sunday afternoon from 1 to 5. Take the Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railway the ride is a delightful one, and insures a pleasant Sunday outing. The Club House at the Park provides excellent refreshments. Round trip, 50 cents

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Beyond all question of doubt the greatest sale of Japanese goods ever held on the Coast is now being carried on by Ito, Sotomi & Co., at 116 Sutter street.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

THE RACING SEASON

An Extension of Time Cannot Conduce to High-Class Sport.

The question of immediate interest to Turf followers on the Coast is the proposal that has been put forward during the last few days to extend racing at the two local tracks for a further period of one month from May 15th, the date definitely agreed upon early in the season for the close of operations. It will be remembered that formal articles were entered into by the two Jockey Clubs limiting the racing season to the foregoing date and this action met with general approval at the time. It would be hard to discover any reason worth serious consideration for making such an addition to the existing programme. But as it is understood that the suggestion has been prompted by a desire to benefit a large number of owners, who have unfortunately failed to earn expenses during the current meetings, the officials will no doubt be tempted to give the matter as favorable a hearing as possible.

In matters of this kind the larger question of policy, as affecting the public and the general interests of the Turf, has to be kept in view, and it is on this basis that the authorities will undoubtedly be called upon to act. It is perfectly well known that they are opposed to any plans which would permit of racing being carried on in the neighborhood of San Francisco, beyond the season from fall to spring, and we may reasonably assume that they would not venture themselves to take such action as they would condemn if adopted by others. We have had events at Ingleside and Emeryville that are bound to have a marked effect on the future of the Western Turf, and this is likely to be further added to before the season, as already prescribed, has finally closed. In the face of such a success, why not leave well alone? The race-going public have been well treated and have gone away satisfied, likewise the best class of owners. It is true that the proposal to extend the racing term has been supported by some of the latter, but, if inquiry be made, it will be found that this has been because of a feeling of kindliness for their less fortunate brethren, and not from any wish or intention to continue racing here themselves.

It is in the nature of things for some to get left in the great game, and as a rule the longer the route the further the beating. The Turf is not a suitable pursuit for a poor man, and while every one rejoices when such an one meets with the favors of fortune—and there have lately been conspicuous instances of the kind on our local tracks—to turn racing into a benefit institution for the needy, even if possible, would soon produce decay and ultimately death. It is unnecessary to specify the more striking cases where owners known to be of limited means have lately captured rich stakes and at the same time gathered in large winnings at trifling risk from the betting-ring, but readers may have noticed the romantic story which has been told in the daily journals, where Mr. Corrigan's timely generosity contributed towards saving disappointment to a poor owner in a sudden difficulty, just when in reach of success. It may thus be given to a ruler of the Turf to exercise creditable feelings in his private capacity, which duty to the public under other circumstances would compel him to subdue.

The poor, we know, we have always with us, but as on the Turf all men are equal, it is well to regulate its affairs without respect to rich or poor, lucky or unlucky All that anybody should ask for or expect is a fair show and a clear course from the fall of the flag, or to adopt a metaphor more exactly fitting the case, from the rise of the gate, and if defeat has to be met, then wait the next opportunity. Even supposing another month's racing were provided, at the end of the time there would still remain a large class of non-winners, who might argue that they ought then to have a turn and so on ad infinitum.

The fact is that the number of poor horses is everywhere, not only in California, out of all proportion to the number of good ones. This State is in many ways a paradise for man and horse, but it is not desirable that its advantages should be bestowed on animals of either type, if they are bad. The best policy is therefore to discourage both, and this can only be done in the case of the race horse by working on such lines as will make it unprofitable for men to own, train and race inferior animals. Let any one look over the records of the waning season and he will not be long in discovering that, out of the thousand or so horses that have faced the there are only about fifty that have themselves really good property. being the case, is it not better to owners of the residuum a little time for reflection or a chance to seek fresh fields, wherein to try their luck or put in practice whatever may have hitherto been wanting in their system? We have had a good season in every way, and no greater mistake could now be made than to annex to its legitimate existence a term which obviously could produce nothing but sport of an inferior character.

It is not incumbent on us here, even were we able, to make clear to unsuccessful owners how they can best remedy their disappointments, but in a general way it may be suggested that they should look matters squarely in the face and ask themselves whether, if they are not prepared to improve the caliber of their studs, both in respect of original qualifications and training, it would not be well for them to find some other outlet for their energy and resources. Without good supply of ready money—in these days a terribly uncommon quantity—the right sort of experience and skill in its application, a man has no chance whatever at any part of the racing game, and even with all these combined success is no certainty. At the same time the fascinations are so great that no one who will give it a fair trial will go away altogether unrewarded, more especially if by the good management and enterprise of those in power, the best class of sport is provided for, and the true aim and object of the Turf, namely, the improvement of the breed of horses, is kept steadily in view.

In the course of a very few years this State has become the producer of horses that have earned the highest honors on this continent, while some are now trying their mettle across the seas. At the same time, as regards breeding, the outlook for the future is most taking, as there are on our farms stallions and mares of the very highest class. To secure the full benefit of the good work that has been going on and is still being persevered with, it is essential that racing should be maintained on a high level. To inaugurate a benefit for the failures and misfits of the local racing world would be to take a retrograde step that would produce nothing [illegible] now and hereafter, and would give point to the objections which the opponents of racing are ever ready to make. It is therefore sincerely to be hoped that the date originally fixed for the close of the season will be strictly adhered to.

When the work of the season comes to be taken count of the results will attract attention in all parts of the world, and, situated as we are, geographically and climatically, there is nothing to prevent our friends in Australia taking a hand here, as has already been done by them now and again on a small scale, and trying to land some of the good stakes which can be depended upon so long as high-class racing is promoted on our tracks.

No tipping of waiters at Johnson's family restaurant, 28 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. Moderate prices.

VINTINE

The great tonic and spring invigorator. It promotes a healthy appetite and makes good blood. As a nutrient during convalescence it is superior to any other sold. Manufactured by the VINTINE COMPANY and sold by

BROOKS'

Homœpathic Pharmacy

119 Powell Street

WILDER & CO. AND ALL DRUGSTORES

EVOLUTION OF A TRAPPIST

The Strange Story of a Sinner's Conversion — Life in a Monastery.

The horrors of religion has expression both powerful and poignant in "En Route" (Kegan Paul, French, Trubner & Co.) This book is the sequel to "La Bas" and describes the revulsion of feeling in the heart of the hero Durtal, who, having plunged in the depths of sensuality and assisted at all the ceremonies of diabolism, turns Catholic, and finally Trappist. The fact that the two volumes describe the personal experience of their author, Joris Karl Huysman—a leader of the symbolistic cult in Paris, and a writer of a prose that glows with the color of rubies and sapphires, adds to the interest and importance of the narrative. The report is that this supremely gifted writer having exhausted the joys of voluptuousness, joined one of the Devil Worshipping fraternities in Paris, and assisted at the black masses and other mysteries of that strange sect. In "La Bas" he tells of the extravagances of vice, the strange, unnatural enormities practiced by men and women, whose surfeited passions demand new sensations. It is a monstrous, painful and degrading portrayal, the tale of Durtal's progress, and it is easy to realize how a man of poetic genius and brilliant intellect, such as Huysman possesses, would turn from it all with a terrible loathing and fly to the extreme of religious frenzy.

In "En Route" we have a study of a conscience in an agony, and a soul wrung by obscene memories. Durtal feeds on the lines of saints; it is an ecstacy for him to kneel and pray before the altar, but an ecstacy tempered with most poignant regrets, self-contempt, and misgivings. Only D'Annunzio could convey more literally, more vitally, the awful agony of that soul racked by its doubts and fears, and its back-slidings trembling between hell and heaven. Yet the Italian with that strange skill in expressing the shades and colors of corruption could not compass the sustained spirituality and chastely beautiful coloring of these passages—episodic essays on the saints, on church music and architecture, which form part of Durtal's experiences in "En Route." Especially penetrated with this deep and worshipful spirituality are the chapters which describe his retreat in the Trappist Monastery—Notre Dame de L'Atre. Into the life of the white monks of La Trappe we are given an insight beyond the common experience. It is really the conversion of Huysman, his own confession, his own hesitation that are here set forth, for since the publication of this book the author himself joined this stern and austere branch of St. Benedick's order, and his great talent is buried under the cowl of a monk.

Something of the quality of the style may be gathered from the passage which describes the early morning prayers in the Monastery. Durtal, after a night of agony, in which his imagination tortures his conscience with innumerable temptations to forbidden thoughts, comes down stairs to the great hall.

He descended the staircase, whose walls seemed not to keep their place, and danced in the light of his candle, threaded the corridors, blew out his light, placed the candlestick near the auditorium, and rushed out.

It was pitch dark; at the height of the first story a round window in the wall of the chapel cut a hole through the darkness like a red moon.

Durtal took a few whiffs of a cigarette, and then made his way to the chapel. He turned the latch of the door gently; the vestibule into which he entered was dark, but the apse, though it was empty, was lighted by numerous lamps.

He made a step, crossed himself, and fell back, for he had stumbled over a body; and he looked down at his feet.

He had come upon a battle-field.

On the ground human forms were lying, in the attitudes of combatants mowed down by grape shot, some flat on their faces, others on their knees, some leaning their hands on the ground as if stricken from behind, others extended with their fingers clenched on their breast, others again holding their heads or stretching out their arms.

And from this group in their agony rose no groan, no complaint.

Durtal was stupefied as he looked at this massacre of monks, and suddenly stopped with open mouth. A shaft of light fell from a lamp which the Father Sacristan had just placed in the apse, and crossing the porch, it showed a monk on his knees before the altar dedicated to the Virgin.

He was an old man of more than four-score years; motionless as a statue, his eyes fixed, leaning forward in such an access of adoration, that the faces in ecstasy in the early masters seemed, compared with his, forced and cold. Yet his features were vulgar, his shaven skull, without a crown, tanned by many suns and rains, was brick-colored, his eye was dim, covered with a film by age, his face was wrinkled, shrivelled, stained like an old log, hidden in a thicket of white hair, while his somewhat snub nose made the general effect of the face singularly common.

But there went out, not from his eyes, nor his mouth, but from everywhere and nowhere, a kind of angelic look which was diffused over his head, and enveloped all his poor body, bowed in its heap of rags.

* * *

In this old man the soul did not even give herself the trouble to reform and ennoble his features, she contented herself in annihilating them with her rays; it was, as it were, the nimbus of the old saints not now remaining round the head, but extending over all the features, pale and almost invisible, bathing his whole being.

* * *

The dawn whitened the windows, and as the darkness was gradually dissipated, the other brethren were visible in turn to Durtal; all these men, wounded by divine love, prayed ardently, flashed out beyond themselves noiselessly before the altar. Some were quite young, on their knees, with their bodies upright; others, their eyeballs in ecstasy, were leaning back, and seated on their heels; others again were making the way of the cross, and were often placed each opposite another face to face, and they looked without seeing, as with the eyes of the blind.

And among these lay brethren, some fathers buried in their great white cowls lay prostrate and kissed the ground.

"Oh to pray, pray like these monks!" cried Durtal within himself.

He felt his unhappy soul grow slack within him; in this atmosphere of sanctity he unbent himself, and sank down on the pavement, humbly asking pardon from Christ, for having soiled by his presence the purity of this place.

* * *

Then he again realized this chapel, where his animal part had alone remained, and he looked round him with astonishment; the greater part of the brethren had gone, one father remained prostrate before our Lady's altar; he quitted it in his turn, and went back to the apse, as the other fathers entered it.

Durtal looked at them; they were of all sizes and all kinds; one fat and bald, with a long black beard and spectacles, some little fair and puffy men, some very old, bristling with skin like a wild boar, others very young, with a vague air of German dreaminess, with their eyes under their glasses; and almost all except the very young had this feature in common; a large belly, and cheeks with little red streaks.

Suddenly through the open door in the apse itself appeared the tall monk who had conducted the office the evening before. He threw back on his chasuble the woolen hood which covered his head, and assisted by two white monks went up to the high altar to say mass.

And it was not one of those masses served as so many are are cooked in Paris, but a mass slow, meditated, and profound, a mass where the priest takes long to consecrate, overwhelmed before the altar, and when he elevated the Host no little bell tinkled, but the bells of the monastery spread abroad their slow peal, brief dull strokes, almost plaintive, while the Trappists disappeared, crouched on all-fours, their heads hidden below their desks.

When the mass ended it was nearly 6 o'clock.

Balzac wrote once the story of a purchase—to show the possibilities of drama and intrigue in a mere retail bargain sale. The confession of Durtal—his first confession in the Trappist Monastery, is made by the genius of Huysman a veritable tragedy. No one ever portrayed with such burning insight the terrible struggle which may rage within the conscience of an individual—a struggle as intense, as important, as the clash of soldiers in contest, of warships in action. He is finally at the feet of the father who listens to the litany of his offenses.

He tried to collect himself, to compose himself—and he drew himself up quickly; he heard the footsteps of the monk. The door opened, and, for the first time, Durtal dared to look the prior in the face; it seemed to be hardly the same man, nor the face, he had noticed from a distance; the profile was so haughty, and the full face so sweet; the eye dulled the proud energy of the features, an eye familiar and deep, when at the same time there was a quiet joy and a sad pity.

"Come," he said, "do not be disturbed, you are about to speak to our Savior alone, who knows all your faults." And he knelt down and prayed for some time and came, as on the day before, to sit by the pre-Dieu; he bent towards Durtal and listened.

Somewhat reassured, the penitent began without too great anguish. He accused himself of faults common to all men, want of charity towards his neighbor, evil speaking, hate, rash judgment, abuses, lies, vanity, anger, etc.

The monk interrupted him for a moment.

"You said, just now, I think, that in your youth you contracted debts; have you paid them?"

And on an affirmative sign from Durtal, he said, "Good," and went on,

"Have you belonged to any secret society? have you fought a duel?—I am obliged to ask these questions for they are reserved cases."

"No?—Good"—and he was silent.

"Before God, I accuse myself of everything," resumed Durtal; "as I confessed to you, yesterday, since my first communion I have given up everything; prayers, mass, everything; I have denied God, I have blasphemed, I had entirely lost faith."

And Durtal stopped.

He was reaching the sins of the flesh. His voice fell.

"Here I do not know how to explain myself," he said, keeping back his tears.

"Let us see," the monk said gently; "you told men yesterday that you had committed all those acts which are comprised in the sin of lust."

"Yes, father," and trembling, he added, "Must I go into the details?"

"No, it is useless. I will confine myself to asking you, for it alters the nature of the sin, whether in your case there have been any private sins, or any sins committed between persons of the same sex?"

"Not since I left school."

"Have you committed adultery?"

"Yes."

"Am I to understand that in your relations with women, you have committed every possible excess?"

Durtal made an affirmative sign.

"That is sufficient."

And the mnk was silent

Durtal choked with disgust; the avowal of these horrors was a terrible effort to him; yet crushed as he was by shame, he was beginning to breathe, when suddenly he plunged his head again in his hands.

The remembrance of the sacrilege in which Madame Chantelouve had made him share, came back to him.

Hesitatingly he confessed that he had from curiosity assisted at a black mass, and that afterwards, without wishing it, he had defiled a Host which that woman, saturated with Satanism, concealed about her.

The prior listened without moving.

"Did you continue your visits to that woman?"

"No: that had given me a horror of her."

The Trappist reflected and said:

"That is all?"

"I think I have confessed everything," replied Durtal.

The confessor was silent for some minutes, and then in a pensive voice, he murmured:

"I am struck, even more than yesterday, by the astonishing miracle which Heaven has worked in you.

The life of the Trappist is indeed a living death. Apparently the claims of nature are ignored by these ascetics, whose practice it is to deny themselves sleep and food in order that they may subdue the body and exalt the soul. To the unitarian mind it may seem like useless endeavor—this passionate devotion to abstinence, this concentration of life to prayer, when so much of the world is left to subdue and souls are longing for comfort and assistance in every clime. But there must be refuges for tortured souls, there must be asylums where men may glut their regrets with penance and fasts. The following passage gives a vivid idea of the life in such a Monastery as Notre Dame de L'Atre.

"It is a mistake to suppose that most Trappists have lived in the world. The idea, so widespread, that people take refuge in La Trappe after long sorrows or disorderly lives, is absolutely false; besides, to be able to stand the weakening rule of the cloister it is necessary to begin young, and not to come in worn out with every kind of abuse.

"It is also necessary to avoid confounding misanthropy with the monastic vocation; it is not hypochondria, but the divine call, which leads to La Trappe. There is a special grace, which makes all young men who have never lived in the world long to bury themselves in silence and therein suffer the hardest privations; and they are happy as I hope you will be; and yet their life is still more rigorous than you would think; take the lay brothers, for example.

"Think of their giving themselves up to the most painful labor, and that they have not, like the fathers, the consolation of singing and assisting at all the offices; remember that even their reward, the communion, is not very often conceded to them.

"Now think of the winter here. The cold is frightful; in these decayed buildings nothing shuts properly, and the wind sweeps the house from top to bottom; they freeze without fires, they sleep upon pallets, and they cannot help or encourage each other, for they hardly know each other, as all conversation is forbidden.

"Think, also, that these poor people never hear a kindly word, a word which would soothe and comfort them. They work from dayn till night, and the master never thanks them for their zeal, never tells the good workmen that he is pleased.

"Consider, also, that in summer when men are hired from the neighboring villages to reap the harvest, these rest when the sun scorches the fields; they sit in their shirt sleeves under the shade of the ricks, and drink, if they are thirsty, and eat; and the lay brother in his heavy clothes looks at them and goes on with his work, and neither eats nor drinks. Ah! men must have well-tempered souls to stand such a life."

"But surely there must be some off days," said Durtal, "when the rule is relaxed?"

"Never; there is not even, as in some very strict orders—the Carmelites, to take one instance—an hour of recreation, when the religious may talk and laugh. Here, the silence is eternal."

"Even when they are together in the refectory?"

"Then they read the Conferences of Cassien, the 'Holy Ladder' of Climacus, the Lives of the Fathers of the Desert, or some other pious book."

"And on Sunday?"

"On Sunday they rise an hour earlier; but on the whole it is their best day, for they can follow all the offices and pass their whole time in church."

"Humility and self-denial carried to such an extent are superhuman!" cried Durtal. "But they are surely given a sufficient quantity of strong nourishment to enable them to give themselves up from morning till evening to exhausting work in the fields?"

M. Bruno smiled.

"They simply get vegetables which are not even as good as those which are served to us, and, by way of wine, they quench their thirst with a sour and insipid liquid, which leaves half a glass full of sediment. They get a pint each, and if they are thirsty they can add water."

"And how often do they eat?"

"That depends. From the 14th September to Lent they only eat once a day, at half-past two—and during Lent this meal is put off till four o'clock. From Easter to the 14th September, when the Cistercian fast is less strict, dinner is at about half-past eleven, and to this may be added a light meal in the evening.

"It is frightful! to work for months on one meal a day, two hours after noon, after being up since two o'clock in the morning; having had no dinner the evening before."

"It is sometimes necessary to relax the rule a little, and when a monk fails from weakness he is not refused a morsel of bread.

"It would be well," continued M. Bruno, pensively, "to relax still further the grasp of these observances, for this question of food is becoming a veritable stumbling-block in recruiting for La Trappe; souls which delight in these cloisters are forced to fly them, because their bodies cannot stand the rule."

"And the fathers lead the same life as the lay brothers?"

"Absolutely—they set the example; they all swallow the same pittance, and sleep in the same doromitory on similar beds; there is complete equality. Only, the fathers have the advantage of singing the office and obtaining more frequent communions."

The translation by C. Kegan Paul seems excellent. The style with its extreme flexibiliteies, its mystic subtleties, is most difficult of English representation. The effect is attained, however.

(For sale by Wm. Doxey.)

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE
FOR MAY
offers an excellent variety of short stories, including
OCTAVE THANET The Captured Dream. An idyl of domestic life. Illustrated by W. T. SMEDLEY.
REBECCA HARDING DAVIS The Education of Bob. A romance of the South.
HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD A Guardian Angel. A story of Washington life. Illustrated.
HENRY GALLUP PAINE The Lion Tamer. A humorous romance.
'CROSS-COUNTRY RIDING
By CASPAR WHITNEY
Giving the history of Drag-hunting in America. Illustrated by C. DANA GIBSON and others.
A Few Native Orchids and their Insect Sponsors By WILLIAM HAMILTON GIBSON.
English Country-House Life intimately described By GEORGE W. SMALLEY.
Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

E. & J. Burke's "GARNKIRK"
THE WORLD'S STANDARD SCOTCH WHISKEY
A RICH, MELLOW, FINE OLD MALT, MEDICINALLY PURE
PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD
PORTLAND SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES

Polished
Hardwood Floors
$1.50 per Square Yard
Fine Work—First-class References
INLAID FLOOR CO.
602 Market St., Crocker Building
Telephone Main 5998

European Tours
When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's great-st Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowe-t rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.
THOS. COOK & SON
621 Market Street San Francisco

United States Laundry
Office 1004 Market St.
TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable
DIAMOND "L" TEA
IMPORTED BY
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., San Francisco

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S
Original Budweiser Beer
THE FINEST BEER IN AMERICA
THE E. G. LYONS CO., Agents
508-12 Jackson Street.

THE THEATRES

A Nonesense Play at the Columbia—An Impression of "Shamus O'Brien"

Of all the plotless, farcical, theatrical nonsense that ever ventured upon a Western tour, "A Run on the Bank," which was presented at the Columbia this week, is the frothiest of them all. It is a hodgepodge of the most virulent type; nonsensical in the extreme. In fact, the very nonsense of it is what makes it amusing. Imagine six sons of the Emerald Isle, with plug hats and clay pipes, singing and dancing to the click of castanets and the tap of tambourines, like Carmen in the Spanish opera. It is incongruous and ridiculous. Its very incongruity startles you into laughter. The jokes are not all new, and if Ward and Vokes were at all puzzled over the fact that some of their witticisms fell lifeless, they must not attribute our unresponsiveness to a lack of humor, but rather to the age and weakness of the witticisms. We have laughed over many of the Ward and Vokes jokes before those gentlemen had achieved popularity on the vaudeville stage, and it is a little difficult to conjure up the same old smile over the same old jokes every time you hear them.

The beauty of "A Run on the Bank" is its absolute recklessness of plot or effort at continuity of action. The people come on and go off the stage in the most unconventional manner, and if anyone is particularly bad you don't see much of him. Practically the show is a vaudeville entertainment, held together by a very thin and attenuated thread of a plot, that may mean anything or everything, or it may mean nothing. The play simply gives the curtain man a chance to raise and lower the curtain three times for a shifting of scenes, and allows a dozen or so of specialty people, some very clever and some otherwise, to sing and dance and perform acrobatic feats as they may choose. You catch yourself laughing, but you are not alone, for the house is crowded, and merriment rules from first to last.

The Tivoli has also been blessed with crowded houses during the week. "Shamus O'Brien," a romantic comic opera in three acts, with Denis O'Sullivan in the title role, has been the attraction. I think the disappointment was general over the music of the opera. We have associated with Irish music two attributes, rollicking choruses and tender melodies, and one canot justly say that either was present in "Shamus O'Brien." The fault of the piece lies with the composer. The story is interesting, and the people apt. O'Sullivan presents a manly and handsome figure, but there is not a song, nor a strain, that one carries away, or that lingers for a moment in the mind. With this type of opera such an omission is a fault, and the composer should make an effort to introduce a little of the popular in his work; otherwise he cannot hope for success. B.

DRAMATIC NOTES

There is a second week of Ward and Vokes at the Columbia. Some new songs and specialties will be introduced. Rice's "Excelsior, Jr.," follows, with a cast including Sadie Martinot, Joe Cauthorn, Johhny Page, Nelly Strickland, Gerge Olmi, and Neil McNeil. The piece has had a long run at the Olympia in New York and is said to be way ahead of anything of the kind seen in late years.

De Wolf Hopper opens his engagement at the Baldwin Monday evening, with his new opera "El Capitan." The piece has been a great success, is full of dainty, catchy, melodies, and any amount of taking comedy. Mr. Hopper is assisted by Edna Wallace Hopper, and an unusually good company, including Mella Bergen, a beautiful and talented prima donna, and Alfred Klein, a clever comedian. Nat Goodwin follows De Wolf Hopper at the Baldwin, and will present "The Rivals" and "David Garrick" in addition to "An American Citizen."

That Moroscos put on a melodrama more elaborately than any other house in the country has abundant proof every Monday night, in the mounting of the various plays that are presented for the week's run. No scenic effect is too difficult to be represented. The stage manager and his force of assistants are able, apparently, to build anything and will produce any effect asked with fine realisms and little dwelling on the achievement. In "The Smugglers" there are some very remarkable scenes—the heroine is snatched from the jaws of death scores of times, and the sensational interest is heightened by the realism of her surroundings. Mamie Sheridan Wolford does excellent work in the heroine's role, and John J. Pierson as captain of the smugglers gives a clever performance.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

MARRIAGE AT A DISCOUNT

Managers Claim That Hymen Mars the Popularity of Stage Heroes.

The self-consciousness of stage folk is so generally recognized that one feels it the invasion of a blissful privilege to discuss with a great actor or an eminent actress the vulgar subjects of which the outside world is talking. The interest of the player is in himself. He thinks of others only in comparison with his own personality. He becomes autobiographical almost wthout provocation and in spite of your best efforts, and will resent as a serious holdup of privilege any effort on your part to cap his experiences with your own. This exaggerated assumption of importance is due, doubtless, to the newspapers which are devoting their columns to the serious discussion of dramatic affairs. No other branch of human eddeavor, save the law, has half the space accorded to it that the stage has. No wonder that Brown, the tragedian, and Miss De Berry, the far-famed actress, gave themselves airs and are aggrieved if you prefer talking about the Cretan insurrection to conversing about the conception of their latest roles. The way in which "I did this," and "the posture with which I accompanied that," are really more to them than the recommendations of the President's message.

Apropos of the separation of Julia Marlowe and her husband, Robert Taber, who are to head separate companies, the question of marriages between players has been made a subject of controversy in New York. Is it a drawback to the enjoyment of the audience, if it knows the impassioned Robinson who woes so ardently the captivating Miss Green has long ago legalized the fervid embraces and legitimatized the burning kisses which he impresses on her rich, red lips? Would it not prefer to think of them as inimitable suitors—perhaps loving one another under the disguise of their roles—but not authorized and sanctioned to hug and kiss by dell, brook and candle? Some managers object to married or even engaged couples in the same company; others do not, and claim it is beneficial. There is Charles Frohman, for instance, who has no objection to married people in lover's roles, and Daniel Frohman asserts that the presence of a respectable married or engaged couple in a company heightens the tone of the organization. The excellent Frohmans, and as they think, thinks Al Hayman. The ingenious Minnie Madden Fiske cannot see what ground there is for disapproval if husband and wife can only fill the artistic requirements of opposite parts. On the same side is Olga Nethersole, who believes that love-making is a question of art, not personality. You may remember the celebrity which her kisses attained? There is also E. H. Southern, who suggests that it would be a sad thing for the stage should a rule be adopted forbidding people who are married to take any parts for which they are otherwise fitted. Which is cunning of Mr. Southern, as he is on the verge of matrimony with Miss Virginia Harned. But here is the other side:

David Belasco would never cast a husband and wife in lover's roles; Jessie Bartlett Davis says a married couple in a company is a hazard, and Oscar Hammerstein won't even permit wedding rings to be worn on his stage. Among these matrimony is decidedly at a discount—is a detriment indeed. But May Irwin c[illegible] to the rescue. She has an old-fashi[illegible] fondness for matrimony, and believes i[illegible] married actors. She says she wants to go squarely on record in favor of married members of the profession playing together whenever it is possible for them to do so. Bully for May: Is not her commitment to one side or another of any question a weighty argument? Who dares doubt it?

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

CHARLIE HEARD HER.

The recently engaged girl was so blue and disconsolate that all the other club members fell to questioning her excitedly.

"I'll tell you girls about it if you'll promise never to breathe a word of it to any one else," she said miserably, and she hardly waited for the required vow before beginning her story.

"The Gibson family was over at our house yesterday afternoon," she explained, "and when they went away we walked up to the car with them, Charlie and I. I'd asked Charlie to take the girls home, you know; I wanted them to see how nice he was. So he walked with the youngest girl, and I was right behind them with the other. When we got near to the car tracks we heard the car coming, and that silly youngest girl ran for it, and of course Charlie ran with her. So, seeing that he was gone, I thought I'd talk a little for the other girl's benefit. She'd been guying and teasing me a[illegible] afternoon, you know. So I told her that I really didn't love Charlie. That he begged me to marry him until I couldn't stand it any longer, and I only liked him for his flowers and theater tickets, and so on. You all know that sort of thing."

"Yes, yes; go on," exhorted her listeners as she stopped to bury her face in her hands dejectedly. "We know all about it. But what did it matter, so long as he wasn't there?"

The recently engaged girl groaned. "But he was there," she explained, miserably. "You see, they missed the car, after all, and were waiting for us on the corner. And he was right behind me and heard every word I said. So he never said good-by when they did go finally, and he hasn't been near me all day. O[illegible], girls, I don't know what to do about it, I'm so heart-broken, for he thinks I meant every word."

"Get suddenly and dangerously ill and have your mother send for him to bid you a last good-by," suggested the practical member of the club calmly, "and tell him you were speaking of your cousin Charlie. That'll do the business all right."

"You dear thing; you clever darling," cooed the recently engaged girl admiringly. "I'll do it, and right away. If you girls hear of my death being momentarily expected you needn't be scared."

Chicago Times-Herald.

STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, } ss.
LUCAS COUNTY. }

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of One Hundred Dollars for each and every case of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Cattarh Cure.

FRANK J. CHENEY.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 6th day of December, A.D. 1886.

A. W. GLEASON,
[SEAL] Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, 75c.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

REASONS FOR USING
Walter Baker & Co.'s
Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

SOHMER PIANOS ARE THE BEST!
BYRON MAUZY 308 Post St.

Grand Opening of the Club House in Haywards Park at the terminus of the Electric Road on SUNDAY, May 3d. [illegible] The Club House will be presided over by Mrs. Rachael Hayward whose is without an equal as a purveyor and hostess.

Take Oakland Ferry at foot of Market on the hour and half hour for Fruitvale Station. Haywards Electric Cars make connection there for the Park without change. Concert every Sunday during the season.

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

Monday Evening, May 3d. Comic Opera Engagement Extraordinary! Only Matinees Saturdays!

DE WOLF HOPPER

And His Incomparable Company, presenting

John Philip Sousa's Brilliant Opera El Capitan

BOOK BY CHARLES KLEIN

Cast, chorus, costumes and every accessory in keeping with the reputation of this favorite organization

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

May 1st to 9th

Last Week of the Big Hit! The Kingpins of Comedy!

WARD & VOKES

In their Laughable Creation

"A RUN ON THE BANK!"

New songs, dances, specialties, etc., for the farewell week

May 10th. Great Spectacular Production, Excelsior Jr.

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, May 3d

Direct from Paris, FLEURETTE and her Novelty Dancers, The Four Fleurs-de-Lis

Mlle. Ami, the European Aerial Marvel

Unparalleled success of Tacianu, Male Soprano

In conjunction with The Midgleys, Edwin Latelle, The Andersons, Herr Grais and his Trick Baboon and Donkey, Marzello & Millay, and Sig. Alberti and Mlle. Orlandi in new Grand Opera Selections

Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Second Week

The Musical Triumph, the Romantic Comic Opera

Shamus O'Brien

MR. DENNIS O'SULLIVAN, the Eminent Baritone in the title role

Superb cast, correct costumes, etc.

Look out for MISS FRISCO: Our first annual review

Popular Prices . . 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager

Last performances of THE SMUGGLERS

Monday, May 3d, initial production on this Coast of Ford's Spectacular Comedy-Drama

"An American Hero"

A play full of excitement and interesting situations, presented with elaborate scenic pictures

Wonderful Wreck Scene! Realistic Storm at Sea! Daring Leap for Life! New Songs, etc.

Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

BYRON MAUZY HALL

308-312 Post Street

Next Thursday Evening, May 6th, at 8:15

Piano Recital

GIVEN BY

Otto Bendix

Admission, One Dollar

Sohmer Pianos are used at all of Mr. Bendix's Recitals

Hotel Bella Vista

1001 PINE STREET

Elegant Furnishings and Apartments

DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED

MRS. A. F. TRACY.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED

to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant odor. $1.00 a bottle. LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth. $1.00 a bottle. LEE MEDICANT CO. 108 Fulton st., N. Y. Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

RACING

Two-Year-Old Running at Ingleside—The Spreckels Cup.

Monday week the scene shifted to Ingleside, with the Corrigan stakes, $1,300, a handicap for 2-year-olds, five furlongs, as the principal race for the day. Nine youngsters faced the gate including Morellito, 119 pounds, Michael, 116 pounds, The Cheat, 115 pounds, Front de Boeuf, 107 pounds, and Rosormonde, 102 pounds, amongst the lot. As the barrier flew up the last-named filly was quickest on her legs and by the time the three-fourth mile post had been reached was four or five lengths in front of her field. Rounding the turn, however, Clawson took her out from the rail and was soon challenged by Front de Boeuf, while Coady on Michael seized the opportunity to bring his mount up with a well-timed rush and just squeezed home by a head in the good time of 1:01¾, Rosormonde second, half a length in advance of Front de Boeuf. The running of the race left much to be desired, but no useful purpose is served by speculating how different it might have been. The point to notice is that the Islington colt Micheal proved himself somewhat of a clinker, especially when his frequent races of late are taken into account.

HOWARD S.: BY IMP WHISTLE JACKET-ZELICA, BY VIRGIL

On the following day the Torso filly Torsida scored another victory in a four-furlong purse, helped thereto by a slack ride on the part of Thompson on Miss Dividend, who had a ten-pound pull in the weights and finished a neck in her rear.

On the same afternoon Howard S. spread-eagled his field in a seven furlong race, Vinctor and Wheel of Fortune being his most notable competitors, but neither running in their best form.

On Wednesday a big field, fifteen runners, showed up for the four and one-half furlong, 2-year-old race, which Hennessy won on the Morello colt, Elsmore, 110 pounds, by snatching the inside place, to which he was not entitled, and so getting the pull of the Baldwin colt, Rey Salazar, 99 pounds, who would otherwise undoubtedly have landed the money. The Islington colt Flushington stuck to his work well, and put Mr. Corrigan in receipt of the third prize.

On Thursday The Cheat earned another bracket somewhat easily over a five furlong course, his only capable opponent being Outlay. The following day another Deceiver colt rejoicing in the awful name of Dousterswivel broke his maiden and the jaws of all who recognized his claim to be spoken of, while the Emperor of Norfolk colt, Rey Salazar, also scored his first win in a pretty good field and in fair time.

Saturday was the P. C. J. C.'s great day, appointed for the decision of the Spreckels' cup (handicap). Value, cash $7,500, and plate $1,500, one and one-fourth miles, seventy-eight entries, of which eleven came to the post, viz:

E. Ryan's br. c. Howard S. (3 yrs.) imp. Whistle Jacket–Zelica, 122 lbs., Piggott 1
Burns & Waterhouse's b. c. Altamax (3 yrs.) imp. Maxim–Altitude, 118 lbs., Hennessy 2
Boots & Son's b. c. Vincitor (3 yrs.) imp. Brutus–Mollie H., 107 lbs., Shaw 3
Scarf Pin, 119 lbs.; Estaca, 110 lbs.; Reydel Tierra, 110 lbs.; Horatio, 105 lbs.; Lode Star, 110 lbs.; Bernardillo, 120 lbs.; George Palmer, 104 lbs.; Lou Lou R., 92 lbs.

Judged by their appearance in the paddock nothing looked better in point of fitness than Estaca, who was certainly as good a specimen of a thoroughly trained horse as one could wish to see. Howard S. showed improvement on the condition he was in when he ran for the California Derby three weeks back, while Scarf Pin had gone off a bit as compared with her appearance on the same occasion. Altamax presented a taking front, but being a light feeder lacked that well-set look, which one likes to see when a horse has to answer a difficult question. Of the others none was in better trim than Bernardillo. The start was satisfactory, the feather-weight, Lou Lou R., going to the front at once and maintaining her position for the first mile. In the early part of the run Howard S., the favorite, kept behind the body of the field, and not until more than half the journey had been traversed did Piggott begin to stir him up, when he steadily overhauled Vincitor, Estaca and Scarf Pin. Reaching the head of the stretch he proceeded to try conclusions with Rey del Tierra and Altamax. The latter alone hung on, and with Hennessy riding in great form a neck-and-neck tussle ensued from the paddock on, ending in a finish that judges alone could decide. Howard S. was proclaimed the victor after a few moments' delay, in every way regrettable, and every one admitted that it was a gallant victory. Vincitor landed in third place, four lengths away, with Scarf Pin and Estaca following on.

The winner was bred by Mr. Milton Young of Kentucky and purchased by Mr. J. H. Shields as a yearling for $500, he racing him as a 2-and 3-year-old until a few weeks ago, when he was bought by Mr. E. Ryan at the reported price of $6,000. In color Howard S. is a brown with near hind foot white, stands 16.1, and is a remarkably well-proportioned colt, of high quality. Though not by any means a hard-looking type, he is a horse that with care will probably keep sound and pay his way, as he enjoys great health and has an easy, level style of going. His performances have been somewhat variable hitherto, but he has stamped himself as a high-class colt, and rightly placed and ridden will always be hard to beat, even in the best company. His mission is now in the East, the exact quarter remaining to be determined.

Altamax ran really well and answered gamely in the run in.

The result was a fresh tribute to the Hermit blood, so prominent here recently. Of the three first horses the winner and the third horse trace back in the second generation to winners of the Epsom Derby, Hermit and Macaroni respectively, while the second is a grandson of Musket, the imported English horse that made such a mark at the stud in Australasia.

To-day comes the wind-up for the season at Ingleside, and a fine day's sport is looked for. The Ingleside stakes, $4,000, four miles, is expected to attract a big crowd, with a special purse to be competed for by the cracks, Buckwa, 125 pounds; Ruinart, 122 pounds; Altamax, 107 pounds, and The Roman, 104 pounds—distance, one mile.

BENEDICT.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Argonaut OK WHISKEY

IS FIVE YEARS IN WOOD BEFORE BOTTLING

E. MARTIN —AND— CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

ANNUAL SPRING SALE

OF

ROAD, HARNESS, WORK AND DRAFT

HORSES

AND SHETLAND PONIES

From the Ranchos of J. B. HAGGIN, Esq.

TO TAKE PLACE ON

Wednesday, May 12th

AT TEN O'CLOCK A. M.

At SALESYARD, Corner Market Street and Van Ness Ave., S. F.

KILLIP & CO.

Live Stock Auctioneers, 11 Montgomery St.

ANNUAL MEETING

OF

The Yosemite Commission

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Commissioners to Manage Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove will hold its annual meeting in Yosemite Valley, at the Guardian's Office, on Wednesday, June 2d, 1897, at 11 o'clock a.m.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary.

San Francisco, Cal., April 27th, 1897.

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS

AGENTS 222 Market Street S. F.

Retiring from Business!

$75,000 STOCK OF JAPANESE GOODS

Must be sold at Auction at 116 Sutter Street without limit or reserve, commencing Monday, April 26th, and continuing daily at 11 a. m and 2:30 p. m. T. A. McDONALD, Auctioneer.

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

Normann's Cafe

UNDER THE BALDWIN

is the best

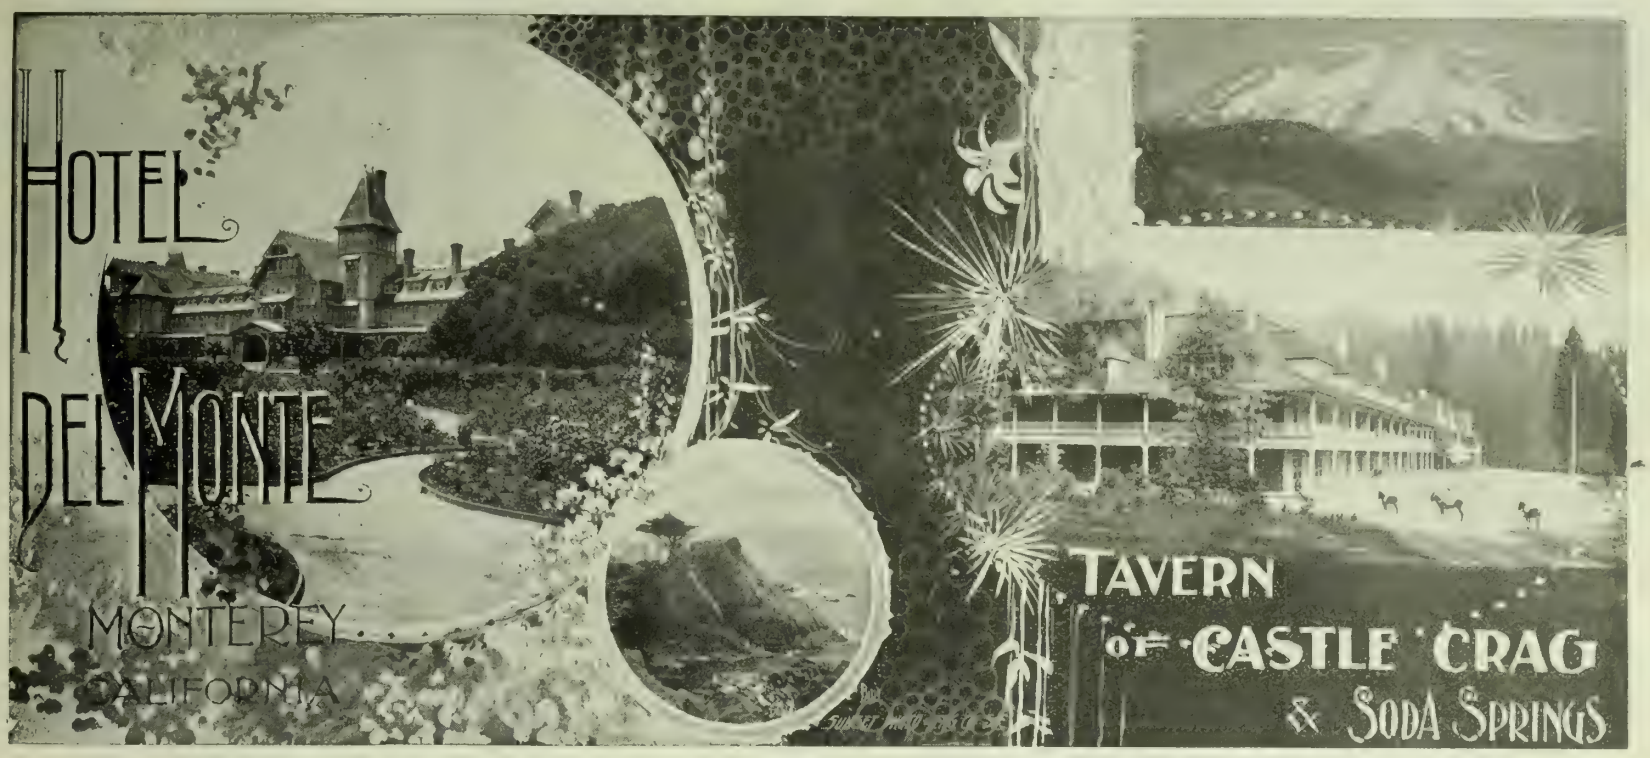
CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

SANTA FE LIMITED

On MONDAYS and THURSDAYS the first-class Pullman sleeping-car leaving at 5 p.m. connects at Barstow with the Santa Fe limited train carrying dining-car, buffet smoking-car and Pullman palace drawing-room sleeping-cars for both Chicago and St. Louis via Kansas City.

3½ days to Chicago or St. Louis, 4½ days to New York

SANTA FE EXPRESS

Leaves daily at 5 p.m. Pullman palace drawing-room, also modern upholstered tourist sleeping-cars through to Chicago via Kansas City. Annex cars for Denver and St. Louis.

Boston excursions via Kansas City, Chicago, Montreal and the White Mountains leave every Tuesday. St. Paul excursions every Sunday.

San Francisco ticket office, 644 Market Street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531. Oakland office, 1118 Broadway.

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, May 3 to 17, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.

Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from April 19 to May 1, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine!

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar.

Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

The Corrigan Stakes, Monday, April 19th
The Spreckels Cup, Saturday, April 24th
The California Hurdle, Wednesday, April 28th
The Ingleside Stakes, Four Miles, Saturday, May 1st

F. H. GREEN, Secy. S. N ANDROUS, Pres.

Its Purity
A Surety
Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

"SUTRO & CO."—TO WHOM IT MAY concern: Take notice that we, Therese Sutro and Charles Sutro, Jr., have formed a co-partnership for the transaction of business in the State of California and elsewhere, the office and principal place of business of the partnership being located in the City and County of San Francisco. The name, style and designation of the firm is SUTRO & CO. The full names of all the members of the said partnership, and their places of residence, are subscribed hereto.

San Francisco, April 7, 1897.

THERESE SUTRO,
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

CHAS. SUTRO, JR.
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Duly acknowledged before Geo. T. Knox, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, California, April 7, 1897.

Filed April 7, 1897.

C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By Wm. H. C. Johnson, Deputy Clerk.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

GEO. GOODMAN

Patentee and Manufacturer of

Artificial Stone in all its branches

Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty

Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

THE LATEST NEW YORK STYLES
IN
Men's Hats
AT
FISHER'S 9 Montgomery Street

La Grande Laundry

Telephone Bush 21

23 POWELL STREET

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM O. BERG, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, March 18, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING CO. — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Cal.; location of works, Storey Co., Nev.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 111) of Ten Cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 23d day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday the 14th day of May, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine st., San Francisco.

OFFICE OF THE HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING COMPANY, room No. 11, San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 311 Pine street, San Francisco.

To the stockholders of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, and to all others concerned: Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the consent, in writing, of the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company, duly filed in the office of said company, the principal place of business of said Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company has been changed from room No. 3 of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to room No. 11, in the same building, where the business of said company will be hereafter transacted. This notice is published in accordance with Section 321 of the Civil Code.

Dated March 19, 1897.

By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; HUNTINGTON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be [illegible] and maintained

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,406,200 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,989,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

The Lion Fire Insurance Co. Limited of London. Total Cash Assets in United States, $885,797.09

The Imperial Insurance Co. Limited of London. Established on Pacific Coast in 1852

WM. J. LANDERS, Resident Manager

PACIFIC COAST BRANCH

205-207 Sansome Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. D. Chesbire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres.
W. O. Macdougall, Secretary

California Undertaking Company

Finest Funeral Parlors in the City

Tel. Main 971 S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

When prohibition was the thing in Saskatchewan, the police made every effort to suppress the illegal possession of liquor, but with little success, as it was noticed that at the close of every large social gathering, some of the male guests betrayed unmistakable evidences of alcohol. As this happened frequently, the officers of the law determined to be extra vigilant, and at a dance given by an old-timer, a constable was detailed to watch the actions of the guests carefully. He noticed that a number of them frequently adjourned to a small stable, and, on making an investigation, found the attraction to consist of a keg of whiskey, surrounded by a number of men, including two justices of the peace. This made the matter serious, and the judges were called upon to sit in council. They did so, and had the constable arrested as "a common night-walker, wandering in a public place, and not giving a satisfactory account of himself," and after a protracted hearing, duly convicted him. In their conviction they set out all the evidence, as well as their own opinion that Mr. Blank, the host, was a most respectable man, and a friend of their own, and should not be interfered with if they could help it. The conviction was quashed on appeal, but the danger had been averted.

One of Her Britannic Majesty's Consuls on the African coast, whose temper is none of the sweetest, chanced to be on board the steam-launch belonging to the Consulate. Wishing to go on shore, he called to his boy to get out the boat. He received no reply, however, and, on making inquiries, found that his sable attendant had taken the boat without leave about an hour before. At that moment he espied the boat returning to the launch. No sooner was it alongside than, having seized a stick, he sprang into it and proceeded to thrash the delinquent. The boy immediately dived overboard, and the irascible old gentleman, being determined not to let him escape punishment, dived after him, and, managing to catch him by the leg, never let go until they were both safely hauled back into the boat, where he finished the castigation. Some naval officers who were present wrote home by the next mail, asking that a Royal Humane Society's medal might be given to their gallant Consul for his bravery in saving a poor native from drowning. The society recognized the claim, and, to the Consul's mortification, the medal arrived.

In Michigan, some years ago, a bill was before the Legislature to restore the death-penalty for the crime of murder. Three of the ablest members of the House made long speeches in favor of the measure — so long as to be found wearisome, especially by those who differed from the opinions expressed. When the third speaker had finished, a young member on the other side of the chamber rose and said, very sarcastically, "Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of our friends on the other side of the House, which they think is preferable—to be hanged, or to be talked to death?" The question was greeted with applause; but the questioner collapsed when suddenly one of the supporters of the bill exclaimed in a loud voice, "Oh, well, if you're going to talk, we prefer to be hanged!"

At one of Lord Westerby's famous dinner-parties, there arose a discussion as to the relative humor of the north and south of England. Illustrative of the wit of the south, Cardinal Manning told an experience which occurred when he was Rector of Lovington, in Sussex. He went to visit a poor old parishioner, a widow of between seventy and eighty years of age, who had had nine or ten children, of whom all but one daughter had gone out into the world and left her. At last this daughter married, and she was alone. The Archbishop said to her, "Dame, you must feel it lonely now, after having had so large a family!" "Yes, sir," she said, "I do feel it lonesome. I have brought up a long family, and now here I am living alone. And I misses 'em and I wants 'em; but I misses 'em more than I wants 'em."

"Do you know this woman?" asked a lawyer of a negro who had been summoned to give evidence. "Yes, sah; I knows her." "Do you know her very intimately?" "No, sah; karn't say as I do." "How long have you known her?" "Wall, I got 'qainted with her short time before I married her." "She's your wife, then?" "Yes, sah — sorter." "Thought you did not know her intimately?" "Dat's what I jackerlated." "I don't understand, then, how she can be your wife." "Well, yer see, sah, she 'longs ter de church, de singin' s'ciety, de Sisters of de Sacred Broom, de Daughters o' Ham, an' two or three little side-shows. Er' 'oman whut is kept so busy, sah, ain't got no time ter fool er roun' home."

An old Peebles worthy and an English lady were recently occupants of a railway-carriage in an Edinburgh-bound train. The train having been waiting long at a certain station, the worthy remarked, "They're a gey taiglesome lot here!" "I beg your pardon," said the lady. "I'm sayin' they're an awfu' dadlin' squad here!" said the old man. "I really beg your pardon, sir," the lady repeated. "I'm remarkin' they're a vera dreich lot here the nicht." "Really, I must again beg your pardon," said the lady, with marked embarrassment, "but I do not comprehend you." "I was just tryin' to say the train was late!" "Indeed, sir, it is very late," the lady agreed. And the conversation collapsed.

When King Cetewayo was sent into exile by Lord Wolseley, he was allowed to take with him only three of his several hundred wives. This broke the King all up, and he pleaded again and again for his wives, but without avail. Finally, hearing of Lord Wolseley's intended departure for England, he sent a last message, asking pathetically, that if he would not send him any more wives, he would at least exchange the three he had for three others.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

The California Hotel

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

The only hotel with dining-room and kitchen on top floor overlooking city and bay
Fitted up with the most modern and improved appliances

Bush Street : : near Kearny

SAN FRANCISCO

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.

Proprietors

Personally supervised by General Warfield of HOTEL RAFAEL, the Society Resort, Winter and Summer, of the Pacific Coast.

Pacific Congress Springs

HOTEL

SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS
SANTA CLARA COUNTY

Remodeled and under New Management

Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco

6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara
12 miles from San Jose

Address GEO. O. WATKINS,
523 Market St., S. F.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

The Hotel Richelieu

N. E. Cor. Van Ness and Myrtle Aves.

PRINCIPAL AND FINEST FAMILY HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO

HOTEL RICHELIEU CO.

Tavern of Castle Crag

Shasta County California

QUEEN OF ALL MOUNTAIN RESORTS

The Tavern of Castle Crag will open for the reception of guests June 15th.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager
Room 59, Union Trust Building, San Francisco, Cal.

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

GET OUT

into the Mountains

SCENERY—Charming, picturesque, captivating, imposing, majestic, sublime.
CLIMATE—Genial, bracing, invigorating, rejuvenating, upbuilding.
RECREATION—Rusticating, picnicking, camping, hunting, fishing, horseback riding, boating, mountain-climbing excusions.

Or run down to the Seashore

Magnificent hotels, toning and life-giving salt sea air, surf-bathing, boating, fishing, driving, wheeling, shell-gathering, and all sorts of pastimes.

The season for this sort of thought and action is upon us. All the world, and particularly that portion of it described by California, takes an outing once a year — if it doesn't, it ought to. While making up your mind where you will go, and concoting your itinerary, keep as many as possible of these places before your mind's eye:

Up Shasta Way — Tavern of Castle Crags, Sweet Brier Camp, Upper Soda Springs, Shasta Retreat, Shasta Springs, Sissons, Mt. Shasta Camp, Klamath Hot Springs.

Lake County and Vicinity — Geysers, Ætna Springs, Harbin, Anderson, Adams, Howard, Siegler, Highland and Bartlett Springs, Glenbrook, Soda Bay, Laurel Dell, and Blue Lakes.

On Sierra Summits — Lake Tahoe, Independence, Webber and Donner Lakes, Tallac, Deer Park Inn, Sunnyside, McKinneys, Rubicon Springs, Campbell Hot Springs—a score more.

Yosemite and the Big Trees —

Santa Cruz Mountains — Los Gatos, Pacific Congress Springs, Glenwood, Felton, Ben Lomond, Boulder Creek.

Southward — Gilroy, Paraiso, Paso Robles, and Santa Ysabel Hot Springs.

Along the Shore — Santa Cruz, Capitola, Del Monte, Monterey, Pacific Grove, Santa Barbara, Santa Monica, Long Beach, San Diego.

There will be REDUCED RATES to many of these places. If you haven't all needed information to complete that itinerary, call on the nearest Southern Pacific Company Agent, or send to T. H. GOODMAN for resort folders.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. May 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. June 2d and 2d of each month thereafter
The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, May 18, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates
S. S. "Monowai," for Australia, Thursday, April 29, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

May Maidens and Mermen at Sutro's — The Happy Hoppers

Wanderings of the "Morning Star"

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Paper may be taken from the Library

VOL XVI. No. 19 — SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 8, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS.

HAULING LOGS IN NORTHERN OREGON

From a photo by W. H. Lowden

THE WAVE

's published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 8, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2-3 |
| The Happy Hoppers; by Gelett Burgess | 4 |
| Without Money | 5 |
| Hawaii's Problem | 6 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 7 |
| May-Day Revels; by Gelett Burgess | 8 |
| From Summer Seas | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| Overtones | 11 |
| Turf Policy | 11 |
| A Literary Duet; by C. | 12 |
| The Theatres | 13 |
| Gowns and Stuffs; by Betty | 13 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

THE DEPARTMENT-STORE CRUSADE.

The crusade against the great department-store has reached as far as Toronto, Canada. The retail merchants of that city have organized "The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada," for the purpose of assailing the unfair privileges and exposing the humbugging practices of the "deadly devil-fish of retail trade." The Toronto "Saturday Night" announces that one hundred newspapers have joined the crusade, and the Canadian Premier, who at first seemed to favor the great trusts, has at last been forced by public opinion to take another view. The tricks of these great institutions are coming in for special mention in the Canadian papers, and they need exposing here as well. One deceitful merchant will corrupt the mercantile life of a whole city. A merchant who will practice smuggling or other fraudulent devices to cheapen the cost of his goods can undersell all of his competitors and bring about their ruin, or compel them to resort to similar practices. A merchant who draws crowds to his counters by swindling practices or misleading advertisements will soon force others to follow his example, and so breed deceit. The mercantile morals of San Francisco are low enough now, God knows, and if encouragement is to be given in any direction, it should be extended in the direction of honesty, decency, and fair-dealing.

One of our department-stores announced last week in a showy advertisement "the greatest sale ever attempted in this State," in which it claimed to have purchased "the entire stock of high-grade merchandise of the retiring firm of Doane & Henshelwood" at "thirty-one cents on the dollar, amounting to seventy-five thousand dollars." If the announcement had read the greatest "sell" ever attempted in this State, it would have been more appropriate. The true story of this great "sell" may be told in these words:

The old-time firm of Doane & Henshelwood, engaged in the retail dry goods trade, decided to retire from business. After conducting a closing-out sale of its own, the firm addressed a short note to the several large retail stores of San Francisco, requesting them to make bids upon the remnant of their stock. In pursuance of that invitation, one of the merchants so addressed informs us that he visited the store and first offered thirty cents on the dollar for the entire stock. Gradually he ran his bid up as high as sixty cents. His offers were refused, because, a member of the retiring firm stated, they had already a much higher bid. They refused even to sell to this gentleman at seventy-five cents on the dollar, because of a previous bid for the same amount. They offered, however, to part with the stock for seventy-seven and one-half cents on the dollar, but not for less. How, then, is it possible for this department-store to claim truthfully to have purchased the same stock for thirty-one cents on the dollar? Upon its face it cannot be a truthful statement.

The great department-store also announced that the stock purchased amounted to seventy-five thousand dollars. In all its history the firm of Doane & Henshelwood never carried a stock of this amount. One of the retiring firm is on record as having stated that the remnant of their stock would only inventory at between fourteen and sixteen thousand dollars. The largest stock ever carried by this firm would not amount to sixty thousand dollars.

Doubtless there will be a rush to secure the wonderful bargains mentioned in this advertisement. There is nothing criminal to such a proceeding in California. It is merely a shrewd piece of business enterprise to misrepresent facts or distort the truth, if it will only serve to crowd the store with deluded customers. It is not legally a crime here, but in Germany such practices are sternly punished. The following extracts from a foreign paper will show how this kind of business is regarded in other countries:

At the Magistrates' Court in Ludemheid, a young merchant was fined three hundred marks, owing to the fact that he advertised a "selling-off," whereas in reality he just took the business over from its previous owner.

Magistrates' Court in Muhlberg: A merchant fined yesterday one hundred marks for advertising that, having bought "for cash" a great quantity of dry goods, he now offers bargains at such low prices, etc. Proved that no goods were bought for cash and prices not lower.

Hamburg: The following judicial decision, in accordance with statute against all swindling and humbugging advertisements, has now been recorded. A firm advertised "selling-off" on account of great alterations to be made on the premises. Proved that the said "great alterations" consists in the intention that in about a year's time the firm will discontinue keeping goods in show-cases, but place them on open tables. Advertisement declared a deception and stopped.

From the Dukedom of Oldenburg and the Board of Trade in Hanover petitions were presented to the Reichstag, asking it to do its utmost to enforce all laws and regulations now enacted against the barefaced swindling of the modern advertising and deception amounting to downright swindling.

There is bound to be a reaction and an organized resistance to the disreputable methods and fraudulent devices that are being resorted to by these great stores. The petty frauds that are daily practiced by them are scarcely believable, and we hope next week to be able to present a series of their humbugging devices that amount almost to fraud itself.

DR. JORDAN ON PURE FOOD.

The stalwart President of the University at Palo Alto has made another of those bold statements for which, when he was not so well known as he has since come to be in this community, the local clergy were wont to haul him over the coals. In an address delivered before the recent Pure Food Congress held in this city the President said: "Coffee contains some poison. Chicory has none. If I prefer chicory to coffee, all right; but if I want coffee, I want to go the full length. It is my right to poison myself if I choose. There should be a clear road open to the grave if a man wants to go that way, just as there should be a clear road open to the other place if he prefers that. If a man wants alum in his baking powder he may have his reasons, and it ought to be his privilege to use it."

Throughout the whole recent movement against the adulteration of foods there has been a tendency on the part of those who have inspired and led the movement to confuse the question of Pure Food with what may be called the question of Poor Food. The two questions raise two separate and distinct issues, and President Jordan will have rendered a valuable service to the advocates of fair dealing in food products if he has succeeded in driving this difference home to them. To insist that men shall eat and drink nothing but what is good for them—that is, what other men think is good for them—is an intolerable invasion of individual liberty; but to insist that men shall know what it is that they eat and drink, that they shall have the means of getting what they desire, is merely an enforcement of a universal right.

There is in this matter a conflict between common truthfulness and what may be called the commercial vocabulary. The manufacturer who produces raspberry jelly out of an infusion of apple paring and cores, with the addition of glucose and coal-tar product, may be dealing honestly enough with the jobber who buys his product. The jobber may in turn be considered as dealing without deceit when he sells the faked product to the retailer. To the producer, the jobber and the retailer raspberry jelly means something into the composition of which raspberries do not enter at all. Their common vocabulary permits them to deal in such a commodity without deceiving each other, by the use of the trade term under which it passes. But when we reach the purchaser, who buys for consumption and not for trade, the vocabulary changes. The terms, indeed, remain the same, but the meaning attached to them is entirely different. To the ordinary consumer raspberry jelly means something made of raspberries, and the dealer who sells the stuff to him invariably omits to explain to him the esoteric meaning of the label. This is the stage of the progression from producer to consumer at which deceit infallibly comes in, if it has not come in sooner. It is at this stage that the consumer finds himself deprived of his right to choose between the pure and the impure, between chicory and coffee, between the good things which he may not like and the bad things which may appeal to his taste. President Jordan has pointed out clearly that the sole leigtimate purpose of the movement for pure food is the preservation of this right and of the opportunity to exercise the choice under it. And it is evident that this can be accomplished only by a reformation of the mercantile dictionary, by which every commercial article of food shall be known by its proper name as that name is understood by the people. Indeed, a vocabulary in which can be found such terms as "pure," "strictly pure" and "extra pure," in close conjunction is in need of reformation as an offense against common sense. It is a contest between plain truth and half-hidden falsehood, and nobody who knows Doctor Jordan, or has watched his course since he came to this coast, can be surprised at the clearness with which he has defined the issue.

With regard to the President's assertion of man's right to poison himself if it pleases him to do so, and to maintain for himself a clear and open road to the grave, on which he may set out whenever he has concluded that to travel that road is easier than to pursue any other, there will probably be a wider difference of opinion. In making that statement the President put himself in peril of being involved in a discussion of the ethics of suicide, and it will be remarkable, indeed, if he shall entirely escape instruction and reproof from some of the more volcanic pulpits of San Francisco and its suburbs. It is not a new subject, and the side on which all clergymen are enlisted is well known in advance of the discussion. The gentlemen of the pulpit have not fared over well in their latest bout with the President of Stanford, and perhaps they may consider their views on the right of self-destruction to be firmly enough established or, at least, well enough known to enable them to refrain from extending another challenge to the fearless and logical President.

MILITARY INSTRUCTION IN COLLEGES.

The Regents of the State University have for some time been struggling with the momentous questions involved in the selection of an officer of the army who shall succeed the present incumbent of the chair of military science. Apparently the principal difficulties encountered by the Regents have been due to the energy with which the claims of various candidates for the vacant chair have been pressed by the candidates themselves and by their friends. Evidently the office, in this case, has not been seeking the man quite so eagerly as the man and his friends have been seeking the office, and as the governing body of the University has no special qualifications for determining the relative merits and abilities of would-be military instructors, it may be considered as a happy accident if the choice of the Regents has fallen on the most suitable officer among the many candidates.

The plan of disseminating military instruction among the people by detailing officers of the army as instructors of the art and science of war at ordinary schools and colleges was devised and first put in practice not many years ago. Starting with the very prevalent idea that nobody in the army had anything to work at in time of peace, it seemed to our legislators a wise and easy thing to utilize some few of the commissioned uniformed idlers in the task of making some sort of possible soldiers for future use out of the young men and boys gathered in some of the larger schools of the country. About twenty officers were at first assigned to this duty, and though the desired improvement of the general military intelligence of the people has not yet been effected, some other results have followed which are interesting and, in a measure, instructive. First of all, the junior officers of the line of the army, who know pretty well that there is plenty of hard work to be done in discharging the ordinary duties of an officer in time of peace, discovered that a "college detail" opened up a new avenue of escape from the routine drudgery of a garrison, from the exactions of cantankerous captains, or from the caprices of antiquated colonels. The presidents of grasshopper colleges and cross-roads universities discovered the fact that good instructors of mathematics and other branches of learning were to be found among the junior officers of the army. To add a more or less fictitious military department to the curriculum of such an institution, and to secure the services of a good teacher of mathematics, who was paid by the Government for teaching something else, was a notable stroke of economy, which relieved the strain on the slender resources of many a struggling seat of learning. And finally the owners and managers of lean academies in country towns, small schools conducted for revenue only, were quick to see that the reluctant school boy of tender years was easily attracted to their institutions by the alluring privilege of wearing soldier clothes and drilling with a real gun, and that the fond parents gave great weight to an advertisement which promised that the discipline of the establishment in which their young darlings were to be developed would be in charge of a regular officer of the army, loaned out by the Government for that purpose.

The inevitable result was soon apparent. Between the pressure of the officers for details on such service, and the pressure of the schools for officers Congress was forced to yield. The number of officers detailed has been increased from time to time until now more than one-tenth of all the lieutenants in the line of the army are engaged in teaching in schools, most of which are of a character positively un-military. In one institution a venerable officer of thirty years' service is engaged in the hopeful effort to make soldiers out of little boys of ten and twelve years. In very few of the favored institutions is there any effort or pretense at military instruction beyond a shambling drill in a school yard or on a college campus. No officers have yet been detailed to supervise the broom-drill and similar exercises of mixed military and calisthenic character which are said to be prevalent at young ladies' seminaries, but the system is young yet, and the attention of the Rev. Anna Shaw and the Venerable Miss Anthony has probably never been called to the omission.

The result of the attempt to teach the art of war along with Latin and Greek, or with the spelling book and the multiplication table, has been in every way disappointing, and in many ways disastrous. It costs the treasury probably not less than $250,000 annually, and it is questionable if for that expenditure there is any return whatever, actual or contingent. It has withdrawn from their places in the army scores of young officers for periods of three years or more at a time, at a stage in their careers when they should be really learning the profession which they profess to teach to others. Their regiments lose their services, and their duties must be performed in their absence by others. In many cases they must be demoralized by the contest which rages for the appointment which is to follow a prospective vacancy, and which begins long in advance and is not closed till the order of appointment is actually issued by the War Department. In these struggles the officer who is a favorite son of the locality to be favored with the appointment, or the equally favorite local son-in-law, have an immense advantage over all other candidates, and probably more details are made for those considerations than for all others together. A young man who has had the foresight to marry a faculty daughter can generally overwhelm all opposition.

The effect of the system on the students themselves—in those institutions in which the students are sufficiently mature to permit it to have any lasting effect—is discouraging. In our own University at Berkeley it appears that the drills and exercises are regarded by the students as a grievous and senseless burden, a mere task in which there are no instructive features. And the students are right. Military instruction cannot be had from the mere repetition of tedious drills, any more than literary skill can be acquired by reciting the alphabet frequently. The art of war is a specialty, and can be taught in special schools only. It is as much out of place in the curriculum of a school of letters as a course in the chemistry of high explosives would be in a theological seminary. If the Government is anxious to teach military science more widely throughout the country let us have more military schools, by all means. But if we cannot have these, let the hundred lieutenants of the favored son and favored son-in-law type be sent back to their proper duties with their regiments. And by all means let the students at our University be relieved from the burden of a lot of useless drills, which are as distasteful to them as they are profitless to all.

THE WOMAN'S CONGRESS.

Another Woman's Congress has met in San Francisco, talked a great deal, listened more or less, and adjourned. A vast number of papers were read and talked over, the titles of which varied in length from such a simple subject as "Heredity," to a portentious "Examination of Matthew Arnold's Criticism of Shelley's Poetry." The subject for the discussion of which the Congress was assembled was supposed to be "Education," but it might as well have been Religion, or Music, or Morals, or Maternity, all of which came in for a general overhauling. To be sure education has some relation near or remote, to all of these subjects as it has to any conceivable subject, for that matter. But it seems to be necessary to have a topic for discussion wherever women are gathered together to discuss, and a good, wide, all-embracing topic is certainly much more serviceable than any narrow little subject about which only definite questions could be raised and on which definite conclusions might possibly be reached. What a mathematician would call indeterminate problems are those which commend themselves most to the feminine heart, and it is not to the interest of feminine congresses that there should ever be an end of discussion. It was a rather surprising feature of this Congress that mere men figured in it so largely, at least on the platform. About one-half of all the papers read and addresses delivered were from men, and were not at all of a nature peculiar to a congress of women. It is not apparent why clergymen and professors and instructors in the universities should be pressed into service to help by their contributions to swell the volume of talk at a gathering whose purpose, if it had any, was to give woman an opportunity to be listened to in public.

From the newspaper accounts of the sessions of the Congress it is apparent that the reporters still regard the fair sex as primarily interesting as vehicles for the display of dry goods and millinery. The costume of every lady lecturer was described, and her personal appearance, color of eyes and hair and sweetness of expression were deemed to be of quite as much interest to the reading public as the matter of her discourse. Some of the more prominent of them were honored by having their portraits published in two column cuts, and it is sincerely to be hoped that in this they met more than the usual measure of injustice at the hands of the newspaper artist. No male talker was honored in this way, nor was the costume of a single clergyman or professor described, nor his personal appearance commented on. In this, we submit, the reporters were unfair.

The managers of the Congress went far afield for some of the imported "attractions" without which, it seems, no such Congress could be relied on to draw good houses. Ancient platitudes and glittering generalities are sure to be listened to with more attention, if not with more profit to the hearer, when delivered from the lips of a little woman of sweet appearance, who comes to us all the way from Boston, who has written real books, who has edited a real magazine, and who is descended from Oliver Cromwell on one side and from Sir Robert Peel on the other. A charming woman with Titian hair, who has a name as long as the titles of some of the papers read at the Congress, who was born in Jerusalem and never escaped from her birthplace till she had reached the age of twenty-two, may say what she pleases, but she cannot fail to be interesting to a Woman's Congress audience. But by importing the Brahmacharin—that is, in securing for the white-robed Hindoo, railroad passes from Los Angeles and return—the managers secured what was probably the star attraction to the public. A dark-skinned man clad in flowing white draperies who can talk, in the vernacular, about the merits of the theory of reincarnation as opposed to that of heredity, can always catch and hold the attention of an audience in which not one in ten may know, or care, what he is talking about. But this star of the orient was not properly disciplined for the purposes of the Congress. He was rude enough to object to having his petticoats pulled from behind, so he raised a truly delightful little row and went out in a huff by the cellar door.

Doubtless many good people in San Francisco are still wondering what the Congress was for, anyway. After all the papers had been read and discussed and the lights had gone out on the final session, was anybody really wiser, and was the cause of education at all advanced as a result of all the talk? To hold a Congress for the oral discussion of a subject so wide as education is in our day an anachronism. For whatever is worth saying on such a subject the press is the proper medium of utterance. For one who can hear the spoken word there are ten thousand who can read the printed page. Perhaps if all that was said at the recent Congress on all the subjects there touched on was put in cold print nobody would be found willing to read it, and nobody would profit by reading it. There are those who are unkind enough to think that one purpose of the Woman's Congress has been to gratify an appetite for publicity, to get people to listen to things which they would not read, and to enable Woman to testify to her abiding faith in the value of Talk for Talk's sake.

---

The power and intelligence of President Diaz' administrative ability is shown in his relations with the church. He takes the stand that politics and religion are poles apart, and he resents with extreme severity any attempt on the part of the clerics to interfere with his prerogative. Quite recently a priest of Chihuahua in a series of lectures and sermons denounced the autocracy of the President, and criticized severely his measures. He continued this for a month or two and suddenly was summoned to the City of Mexico. Diaz received him with the utmost cordiality, and conducted him to a chair in his private office. He looked earnestly at the priest for a moment, and began: "Father, you are an officer of the church, and your sworn duty is the preparing of souls for the hereafter. I am President, and my duty is to the present. There is no reason for conflict between us. Your work begins where mine ends. If you will look after the souls of your parishioners, I will attend to their material welfare, and between us our people will be happy. But I am President, and you are a priest; you will go your way and I mine." He arose. "But," he added, severely, "If you interfere with me, I will take off your head." As the priest had no desire to be among the enemies Diaz had buried, he accepted the hint.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY

How Fossilization is Assisted by Refusing Instructors Leave of Absence.

II.

One of the most distressing times in the life of the average male is that period during boyhood when he is growing so fast that his clothes never fit him, the elderly friends of the family never know him, and people alternate in calling him Mister, Master, and plain Jack. A somewhat similar development has been going on for some time in the State University. That it has outgrown its clothes is a fact that has finally been forced upon the attention of the public, but the other needs incident upon its development have been kept in the background. The guardians of its wellfare have shown lamentable disposition to think their responsibility limited to providing it with, as it were, food and clothing. But a growing boy needs something more than food and clothes if he is to become a good man, and a rapidly growing university needs something more than money and buildings. But, like the mother who never recovers from the shock of seeing her baby grow up to be a man, and, never realizing the situation, is perpetually five years behind in her method of treating him, so the Regents— and the friends of the university generally—seem never to have recovered from the shock of seeing Berkeley College develop into a University; have never grasped the new situation, nor altered their conceptions to suit the new conditions. To some few the institution is known as a university, to some it is a college, and to a few it is simply a school. In a general way the Regents seem to be aware of the fact that it is a university, but they do not seem to have fully taken the fact in, and are still trying to run it like any fresh water college. In nothing is their utter failure to comprehend the University as it is today more apparent than in their attitude on the leave of absence question.

Several years ago a certain man sought a professorship in a small college in Illinois. In discussing with its trustees the work he was to do he explained that he could not teach all day, but must have some time for study. He promptly received his dismissal. That college wanted men who knew what they had to teach already, he was told! The working conceptions of our Regents sometimes seem to us to be about on this level. It has for a long time been their policy—not strictly adhered to always—to give leave of absence to professors only. This policy was practically reasserted at a recent meeting when an instructor who wished to spend a year in study and research in his subject had his request for a leave of absence without pay denied.

We have all heard the story of the man who "killed" the goose that laid the golden egg." But he at least was inspired with the idea—unfortunately erroneous—that there must be a large lump of gold inside the bird. But the Regents—the whole range of fable might be searched from Aesop to Mother Goose without finding a parallel to their suicidal policy. That the welfare of the University depends upon its faculty being progressive, enthusiastic, up-to-date thinkers; that in the higher departments of thought a man never ceases to be a student; that a University should hold out every inducement to its professors to engage actively in study and research; these are ideas that seem never to have dawned upon the over-matured intellects of our worthy board of Regents. To them a leave of absence is a privilege, to be bestowed only upon the elect, viz., the professors. And so the young instructor is allowed to spend all his time in teaching the little he knows, until his youthful enthusiasm has ebbed away and his interest in his subject is dead, and he begins the long process of fossilizing in his place. In the course of time, perhaps, he becomes a professor, and then, when his desire for further study is gone, and his mind has lost its receptivity for new ideas, then he may get a leave of absence!

An enlightened conception of the nature of university work would lead the Regents to guard the intellectual welfare of its Faculty as jealously as that of the students. In an ideal university the faculty is simply a body of more advanced and matured students. The institution should hold out every inducement to its instructors to continue their studies. The more often a man goes away to gather new ideas, the more valuable he is to the university. When a man is willing to go away for a year without pay, to give him a leave of absence is not to confer a favor upon him, but simply to show a proper appreciation of the good he does the University by spending a year in travel and study. The present policy of the University is shortsighted and pedantic. It shows an utter failure to realize the difference between a university and a seminary. Its inevitable effect is the creation of a faculty of fossils, and of a lifeless, unprogressive spirit absolutely fatal to true university life and work.

Who is responsible? Are we to blame the Regents for their failure to comprehend the significance of the last five years' growth, and the new policies it necessitates? The Regents are men of the world unfamiliar with universities and hardly to be expected to show great wisdom in managing internal affairs at Berkeley. Until it is shown that the faculty have made a concerted effort to influence the Regents in this matter the moral responsibility rests on them. If the men at Berkeley are capable of such a thing as concerted effort here is a good chance to show it. The question is one about which there can hardly be any difference of opinion, and one department has as much interest in it as another. We believe that the Regents mean well. If they have not done well it is largely because they have not been properly advised. If the professors have any interest in the University beyond their own personal relation to it, here is a chance to show it.

---

Birmingham has already sent out fifteen million jubilee medals and six million jubilee brooches, but complains of competition from cheaper medals made in Germany.

THE HAPPY HOPPERS

A Clever Giant and His Fairy-Like Wife Who Smiles.

They were as kind as possible to poor me, but they were visibly excited. If their heads were turned by the applause it was nobody's fault but the audience's that was yelling in front like schoolboys. Happy, happy Hoppers!

The piece was making a tremendous hit. The enthusiasm had leaked in through the curtain peep-hole, flooding the stage, and the supernumeraries were wading around in it, knee-deep, spattering each other with congratulations. The whole company was refreshed by the acclamation of the house, for it had toiled across the continent by inches—a loathly journey, punctuated by stupid little one-night stands. It had been breakfasting one morning at six o'clock and the next day at eleven o'clock. It had dined at all hours and had supped when it could, looking forward to God's own country of California, in some doubt as to whether the owner was to be present to care for their reception. The dust of the desert stuck in their tempers, but this shower-bath of cordiality had set their nerves a-tingling.

So there were two hopeful Hoppers; one gigantic and good-natured, smoking a peculiarly fragrant cigar—a very clod-Hopper, in his impossible costume, and a face of which the ears alone seemed to be real.

And one was tiny and fresh as a buttercup, so lively, too, that I must call her a grass-Hopper before my adjectives fail me. Some one opened the door of her dressing room and slid me into the birdcage, and I was alone with the canary. I don't know how she got away from the mirror—I couldn't have done it, had I been Edna Wallace Hopper, but she not only gave me a smile quickly and thus gave it twice, but the looking-glass reflection seconded her, so that I caught four smiles at once, any one of which should have dazed me. Yet these were not so dangerous as her demureness, when her face changed and she held out a hand to welcome me, which I dared not take, being too near already, for my self-control.

But Consul, the $5,000 sixteen-times prize-winner, was there, to look up and growl. I had seen Boston Terriers before, and I knew the brogue.

"You'll have to ask me a lot of questions," said she, "for I'm too nervous to think. I've just danced my foot through my underskirt, and the theater must be on fire or something, by the noise they're making in front."

"You brought down the house with that second act finale, that's what ails them," said I.

"Now go ahead and talk," she continued, "only please don't ask the regular questions. The subject of conversation is bounded on the north by my opinions of California, on the west by the story of how I began to act, on the south by the history of Consul, and on the east by my age."

"It's a very small frontier on that side," I said.

"It's a much disputed territory," said Mrs. Hopper, "but it's continually encroaching, and I'll have to win part of it back soon."

"The principal topic," I said, "is how so many pretty women manage to get along together."

Four more smiles from the happy Hopper.

"You should have seen one that has just left us," said she. "Everybody raved over her, but she got married after a courtship of two days. She was much prettier than I am." She told this fairy story with every aspect of sincerity, making a mischievous moue as she looked at her silk stockings.

"It's queer how differently they act," she went on; "some of them are so ambitious and are so graceful, and others perform like dairymaids, and seem to have no idea of ever working up. But it's easier being a chorus girl, I suppose, at $20 a week, than to stand behind a counter all day long. It's certainly much more exciting."

DE WOLF HOPPER AND ALFRED KLEIN IN THE SECOND ACT OF "EL CAPITAN"

Meanwhile she was standing all the time, for a foolish fear of wrinkling her skirt, a short and silvery affair that went a little below her knees, where the silk stockings began the merry journey down to two toy feet. Her curls had joined the hopeless conspiracy to make her seem more young and delicate, but she would have seemed an infant even in a gray-haired wig. I was looking for her doll, when huge Hopper entered and towered over her.

"It's almost like New York," he said. "These are the only two places where they go much on first nights. At Boston and Washington and Chicago we began with a $750 house and the receipts kept going up all the week to $10,000 or so, but here in San Francisco you get a rousing reception, and see all your friends at the opening."

"It's the most enthusiastic house I've seen since I wore the Pennsylvania sweater in Philadelphia," said Mrs. Hopper. "The whole University was in front, and the football team was in a box, and if they didn't cheer! My! They wouldn't let me do a thing but stand grinning with my arms half through the sleeves, for ten minutes. There was a great big halfback in front, and he said out pretty loud: 'Say, I wouldn't dare to tackle that!' It was the most fun I ever had on the stage!"

There was no doubt now that it was a smile. It had crept out of her eyes at first, and had captured the whole of her face, when a man came up the passage way bawling, "Third act!" and the hurried Hoppers hastened to the stage, preceded by a swarm of chorus singers.

The men had wooden guns and mustaches, otherwise one could hardly tell them from the girls at a glance. Little Klein came puffing down, too, with a grin and a wheeze, and stood at the wings in a queer falsetto attitude.

The whole company seemed like the escapade of sixty-three school children out on a lark. It isn't enough for papa Hopper that the girls are pretty, they must be young, too. One gets to expecting an exhibit of ancient pottery when the supernumeraries appear, but here all are young, most are pretty, and a good many can sing.

There was a sort of reflection of the happy Hopper smile afloat among the girls. I saw them watching her, and practicing it when they were in the wings, but they weren't young enough. And they weren't quite pretty enough to be demure, either, for one must have a mouth made on purpose for that, and eyebrows as well trained as Edna Hopper's, and the dimple is positively, absolutely necessary—otherwise one mixes things, and a mere chorus girl spoils many a good pout in the effort.

I couldn't help wondering about the forbidden question of her age, and when she came off next I asked her if she really wore short dresse all the time, or if it was only her costume, and if she ever did up her hair.

"You know they will hardly believe I'm not Mr. Hopper's daughter," she said. "Half the hotel people call me Miss Hopper, and I get most of my letters addressed that way. I've worn out my voice explaining to bell-boys and porters that I am the truly real and only Mrs. Hopper."

I waited around through the last act, for she was very busy and could give me only a few odd moments while she was off the stage. She said plenty of other things, too, but as she generally said them smiling, I've forgotten what they were, really I have. So I begged for an appointment next day, to have another talk.

"What! A two days' interview," said she. "Really, you're worse than a dentist!" I couldn't exactly explain, because there was an enormous Hopper just coming off the stage.

It certainly was stupid of me, too, to forget the photographs, next day when I called, for she had a Tuesday smile which interested me tremendously. On Wednesday I went back for the photographs, and on Thursday I really had to return them. There were variations innumerable on the expression, and I had to cook up a pretext for calling Friday to see which I liked best.

And she, poor girl, must have thought I was a great bore and knew very little about my business. I wonder if she knows that the interview isn't over yet—and why.

GELETT BURGESS.

EDNA WALLACE HOPPER AND FOUR OF HER MOST DANGEROUSLY INTERESTING EXPRESSIONS

WITHOUT MONEY

How the Labor Exchange Checks are Solving the Industrial Questions.

The millennium is assuredly at hand—for it is possible to live without money in San Francisco. It is possible for a manufacturer to dispose of his goods as fast as produced, and it is possible for a workingman to get steady and well-paid employment. So says the Labor Exchange, and the results of two years' operation of their system affords many proofs of its value and economy.

The scheme, first exploited by de Bernardi in Independence, Missouri, now the central bureau of the organization, is based upon the old method of barter, and is merely a way of facilitating the exchange of commodities. The principal function of each branch exchange that is chartered, is to appraise, store and dispose of the goods produced by its members. To this end, it receives assignments of wares, and issues checks to the amount of their marketable value. These checks serve in the place of money, and are paid back and forth between the members, to be finally redeemed at the headquarters in return for goods. The checks are simply warehouse orders, or certificates of deposit. They bear no interest, they do not fluctuate in value, as they represent a certain amount of value in actual labor. The unit of value is one dollar, and checks are issued of all denominations from ten dollars down to five cents. Their credit is, of course, limited by the number of members of the Labor Exchange, and the number of dealers willing to accept the certificates in payment for goods or labor.

There are one hundred and forty-three stores in San Francisco where this paper is so accepted for debts. These cover almost every branch of trade and include a number of professions. Little by little this phase of the Labor movement has progressed, gaining more and more support from the sober and earnest workers in the industrial army. Strikes have played havoc with their organizations, four having failed to every one that has succeeded, and every strike has hurt the cause of labor and prejudiced the community. Agitations against capital have bred only hate and discord, but the Labor Exchange idea of de Bernardi has begun where these left off. It is a positive rather than a negative movement. It has taken the solution of the problem of hard times into its own hands, and has gained more than one victory and put many a despairing little community on its own feet.

The Labor Exchange system is simple and reasonable in operation. One need not struggle with the agonies of the financial question—one can be ignorant of money, depreciation, unearned increment, double standards, monometallism, specie and all the rest of the jargon, for each exchange is sufficient unto itself, and the principles governing its transactions are merely those of business conduct. There are three Exchanges in San Francisco, each with its own warehouse, issuing each its own checks, countersigned by an accountant of the branch. There are thirty or more such branches in the State, and all are in co-operation with outside organizations, dealing wherever possible with branches of the Association. Members of the league have been enabled to start manufactories and stores where before business was at a standstill for lack of ready money.

The method employed may be illustrated by following the course of one series of transactions. A stable man receives for his week's salary a ten dollar labor check. He goes to his grocer, who takes it in payment for groceries. The grocer goes down to the Exchange, and with other checks buys supplies of corn and oats sent up from Fresno, and uses this feed in his stable. He receives the same ten dollar check from a member who has left shoes at the Exchange, and the stable boy receives the same check next Saturday night. The use of money is unnecessary; the check is practically money, except that it stands all the time for some commodity in the warehouse, either grain, groceries or shoes. The Exchange has in the meantime received a carload of corn from Fresno, and has advanced the grower only a portion of its value until the invoice is sold, to insure against fluctuations. It has sent to Fresno either its own checks, or, if so ordered, the shoes that have come in meanwhile. If the shoes were sent for, they have perhaps been paid for in Fresno checks, and the next assignment from Fresno equalizes the exchange, so that they are cleared in the same way that banks co-operate.

These Labor Exchange checks are coming gradually into a wider circulation, and serving not merely as a substitute, but in some respects as an improvement upon money. They are an improvement to the extent that they serve all the purposes in facilitating exchange without being subject to taxation.

This question of taxation has been raised at Washington, for the institution has reached such proportions as to force the attention of the Executive Department of the Government, and the Attorney-General declared that inasmuch as the checks were not redeemable in legal tender they could not be taxed.

The leaders in the Labor Exchange movement are fond of telling a story that illustrates their theory or plan as well as anything can. The people of the island of Guernsey felt the need of a big market place. They did not have the capital to put up the necessary building, and it was proposed in their Council to issue bonds, send a commission to Paris to sell them and with the capital so raised to do the thing they desired. The Governor of Guernsey, however, was a long-headed fellow, and something of a new-fangled financier himself. He said:

"If you wish to build a market for the French people that is the very thing to do. If you wish to build a market for yourselves it is a very foolish thing." "But how are we to build the market?" said the Councilors. "We have no money." "You have plenty of men to do the work, haven't you?" "Oh, yes; there are plenty of laborers who need employment," they said. "You have the timber necessary and the stone and other material on the island?" "Oh, yes; plenty of it." "Then why not go to work and build it? You have all that is necessary. Instead of issuing interest-bearing notes, which other people will gladly accept, why not issue notes without interest and accept them yourselves? The notes may be made acceptable by the town for rent in the market when it is ready for business, and in this way redeem themselves."

The Governor's advice was taken, the market house was built, the notes circulated at par during the process and afterward, until they all finally found their way into the town treasury. The market house had been built and paid for without the employment of money or without the payment of one cent of interest.

This is the plan upon which the Labor Exchange is working. It has met with great difficulties, chief of which is doubt as to the possibility of getting its scheme on a stable footing. As it grows, this doubt dissolves before the proof furnished. Branches are being established all over the country. There are flourishing branches in this State at Fresno, Ventura, Red Bluff, Visalia, Bakersfield, Tulare, Santa Maria, Eureka, Plato, Carpenteria, Santa Paula, San Diego, Stockton, Oakdale and a dozen other places.

These exchange all manner of goods with each other. There are such things as socks and cigars from as distant a point as Reading, Pa., at the Davis street exchange, broom handles from away at New Whatcom, Wash., fruit extracts from Fresno and as far south as San Diego. A consignment of shirts and overalls is being negotiated for with a branch in Ohio. A lot of dried fruit was recently shipped to Idaho Falls, Idaho, in exchange for pork, and groceries were sent to Armona, in Kings county, in exchange for dried fruit. The branch at Red Bluff is putting up a spice mill, the branch at Los Angeles is putting up a shoe factory, and the branch at Olathe, Kan., is building a grist mill.

These organizations have undertaken to build a railroad on exactly the plan upon which the people of Guernsey built their market house. Subscriptions of $100,000, not in dollars, but in land, material and provender, have been subscribed, and these will be pledged for the rails and rolling stock, things that cannot be secured with the exchange checks. All the labor, the ties, etc., will be paid for with these checks, which will be accepted for traffic charges when the road is completed. The road to be built is a strip twenty-five miles long, extending into the prolific farming country of the Williamette Valley.

The movement will be shortly amplified by the issuance of checks against real estate for what improvements may be made upon it by labor. In other words, a member of the Exchange owning a lot may have a house built upon it by other members, who will accept the real estate checks. The plan is that of the building and loan association carried on without money and without interest. The checks would be issued by the Exchange, and made partly redeemable by it for provender. The house, being built, would be owned by the Exchange—that is, by every member of it. The rent from it (presumably paid by the man having it built) would be paid into the Exchange until it amounted to the sum of its cost. Then a deed would be given to the new owner—exactly the Guernsey transaction over again.

Talk is being revived in Vienna of a proposed change in the law of succession to the throne in favor of the Archduchess Valerie, only daughter of the late Crown Prince Rudolph. The present heir to the throne, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, is in a precarious state of health, and it is said that he could not stand the strain of regal duties. He is, moreover, thoroughly unpopular in both Austria and Hungary, and this dislike is shared by the Emperor himself. In order to secure the succession of the Archduchess Valerie, the old Salic law would have to be abrogated, as was done in Holland after the death of the Prince of Orange, and in Spain in favor of Isabella II. Emperor Francis Joseph is said to be very anxious to secure the crown for his granddaughter, and it is now rumored in Vienna that a decree making a change in the law of succession will be promulgated next year, at the time of the Emperor's golden jubilee.

The late Grand Duchess of Saxe-Weimar was one of the most interesting figures in modern royalty. She was a Dutch Princess, and when she came to Weimar in the forties found the little place seemingly indifferent to its brilliant past. She immediately threw herself into the work of raising monuments to Goethe, Schiller, Wieland and Herder, and by encouraging arts and letters in every possible manner revived the former academic spirit of the town, making it almost in spite of itself live upto its great traditions. The Duchess was a woman of unusual attainments and achieved more fame and admiration throughout Germany than any German-born woman of the century. It is one of her two grandsons who will most probably be the future husband of the girl Queen of Holland.

"Figaro" has organized a symposium on the jury system, and makes great fun of the institution. Among other strange tales its correspondents relate is one of a Frenchman recently tried for murdering his wife, and the questions to the jury to decide were two—did the man wound his wife, and, secondly, did these wounds cause her death? To the first question the jury replied that he had not wounded her, and to the second that the said wounds had caused her death. In other words, the prisoner was acquitted of having wounded his wife, but convicted of having killed her. The Judge called the attention of the honest peasants to this little lacune in their reasoning, and they filed out again to solemnly reconsider the case, finally pronouncing the prisoner guilty in both instances.

A young Chinese entered the Imperial army and, of Brigadier-General, but with him at every promotion through hard fighting and real merit, rose to the rank rose his brother, who had not met him for years, and who was occupied as cook in a distant opium den. The soldier, after each engagement in which he distinguished himself, reported imaginary deeds of valor performed by his brother, and his word was taken. It may be added that he also collected his brother's salary. This continued until one day the cook in the opium den, who had never even seen a battle, read his name in the Gazette and found that he had attained the rank of Colonel in the Imperial forces.

The "Lancet" announces that, notwithstanding reports to the contrary, the hoped-for heir to the crown may see the light this month if it is not a girl. The health of the Czar is also excellent. He has nothing the matter with his brain, and is keeping himself in training by getting up at daylight and running five furlongs, daily, timing himself. He amuses himself by shooting crows while riding a bicycle at high speed.

In order to increase their safety in less civilized parts of the country, Russian doctors are hereafter to wear as a sign that they are legally qualified to practice, a little zuak or badge, a silver oval plate one inch and a half long by an inch wide, on which is a design of two intertwined serpents.

HAWAII'S PROBLEM

Japanese Resent Exclusion and Threaten Trouble.

The question of Japanese immigration in Hawaii, which has long been a cause for uneasiness among the white population of the islands, is approaching a crisis and there is every likelihood of trouble in the near future.

The latest excitement has been the reshipment of 130 pauper immigrants back to Japan, whence they had been brought by the steamer Sakura Maru, and for whose return William G. Irwin & Co. gave bonds for $6000. The Japanese tramp steamer Kinai Maru had previously arrived, bringing 680 Japanese free laborers, or "students," as they are generally called here. There were no contract laborers in the lot, though it turned out afterward that many of them had fictitious contracts. There had been no sickness on the voyage and the vessel had a clean bill of health, but the immigrants were about the dirtiest lot of people ever landed. On the 12th of April two cases of smallpox were discovered among the immigrants. The examination resulted in 139 being allowed to land and the others being ordered to be returned. Many of these people had been deceived with bogus contracts by immigration agents. On the very first day the Board of Health made every provision against an epidemic. The 543 rejected immigrants were returned on board, a considerable show of force having to be made to get them to embark peaceably.

Besides the rejected immigrants the Kinai Maru took away 229 Japanese from Honolulu, making a total of 772 steerage passengers, or 92 more than she brought.

S. Asano, the millionaire steamship man, who passed through Honolulu on the Coptic and saw the rejected immigrants from the Sakura Maru put aboard, grew very much excited over what he was pleased to term the "unlawful treatment" of his fellow countrymen. He claimed that the Hawaiian Government could not compel them to return home on the Coptic, but must permit them to choose their own mode of conveyance. He said he intended to inquire into the matter when he reached home and ascertain if the Japanese Government would permit its people to be handled in a foreign and friendly country like a lot of sheep. The Doric brought, also, the news that the Japanese Government had preemptorily stopped all immigration to Hawaii until it has investigated the causes which have led to the rejection of the last three lots of immigrants.

In Washington, however, Japan's attitude regarding Hawaii has not caused alarm to this Government, although it is admitted matters may become serious through the state of feeling in Japan. No action has been taken by either the Secretary of State or Navy looking to the better protection of American interests in the islands. It is understood by the administration that the Hawaiian Government would like the United States to send more war vessels to Honolulu, and there has been some talk favorable to this among naval officers, but Secretary Long has not given consideration to the subject, though it is said the Hawaiian legation has urged on Secretary Sherman the moral effect the presence of ships would have on the Japanese and the restraining influence they would exert in preventing a spread of dissensions said to exist against the Dole Government.

The Attorney General of the Hawaiian Government has returned from his visit to Washington, having sounded the administration while in this country, and ex-Minister Thurston, who accompanied him, is still in Honolulu as a representative of his Government in the interest of securing the annexation of the islands. The McKinley administration is known to be favorable to annexation, and it is understood it is willing to negotiate an annexation treaty just as soon as the tariff bill is disposed of, but it does not intend to take any step to interfere with the discussion of that measure in the Senate.

Nothing has been heard by the State Department from Japan as to the views and attitude of the United States toward Hawaii, as indicated by sending the cruiser Philadelphia to Honolulu after permission to land had been refused Japanese immigrants.

This Government seems to believe that there is no crisis, and depends on the friendly feelings of the Japanese to bring about a peaceful settlement of the present difficulty. Secretary Long has said, however, that the assignment of the Philadelphia was made because the President recognized that the Hawaiian question was likely to attract the serious attention of the United States in the event of trouble at Honolulu, and in view of the importance of peace in the islands to the American residents and their interests, it was deemed advisable to send a first-class ship there in addition to the Marion, now on that station.

Consul General Shimamura, who represents the Japanese Government in Honolulu and who was only recently promoted to a commissionership, has received a cable dispatch from Japan by way of San Francisco notifying him of his promotion to the post of Minister Resident. The Japanese are enthusiastic over the affair and tendered the new minister a big banquet at the Hawaiian Hotel.

While President Dole is greatly respected by both friends and enemies for his courageous and efficient conduct of the affairs of the Hawaiian Government, being by far the most acceptable man for the position both to natives and whites, the strength of the Monarchial party is still felt in the islands. The fear of the influx of carpet-bag politicians in the event of annexation, however, has been overshadowed by the immigration crisis, and the problem has greatly strengthened the chances of American control. It is only a question of time when the despised Japanese laborers will assert rights to representation, and once the gates of franchise are open, further restrictions to immigration will be out of the question, and will pave the way for a complete possession of the islands by subjects of the Mikado.

A possible solution of the labor question may soon come with the arrival of the German ship H. F. Glade, now on her way to this port from Bremen, bringing about 120 German laborers, with their families, to work on the plantations. The emigrants are to find employment on one of the plantations represented by Hackfeld & Co.; it has not yet been determined which one. As the assertion has often been made that white men cannot do the work on the plantations now performed by the Asiatics, the experiment will attract widespread attention, and its success or failure watched with great interest from both sides of the Pacific.

---

The early Theosophists were bound into an amicable brotherhood by their popular martyrdom of ridicule, and the satirical persecution to which they were subjected, tied together crank and philosopher. But now that the movement has progressed sufficiently to be recognized as a reputable addition to the family of religious denominations, and they have gone so far as to erect colleges in Southern California, internal dissentions have split the society into pieces. The advent of Mrs. Annie Besant, formerly high-priestess of the cult, who with the Countess Wachmeister, is to lecture on Theosophy next week, is absolutely ignored by the American T. S. at whose quarters no information whatever can be obtained as to the meetings or the speakers. There is still a squabble as to which division is entitled to the word "the" in front of its name, but the Aryan Branch represents the parent organization, still loyal to the Besant regime. Mrs. Besant was here in 1891, and did more to dignify the movement than anyone who ever spoke in San Francisco, and the absence of cant and the jargon affected by the more wordy members of the occult faith, made her one of the most interesting woman speakers ever heard on a public platform. The Bramacharin of late lamented fame is also to speak at the Theosophical lectures next week and it is to be hoped that the Countess will refrain from plucking at his robe.

---

A former Anglo-Indian writes: To any one conversant with what Rudyard Kipling styles "the ways of nativedom," the explosive collapse of the Hindoo poseur at the Woman's Congress will have seemed perfectly natural. The attempt to Barnumize the function by the exhibition of this out-of-the-way individual was quite a smart piece of side-show work, well calculated to gratify the voracious appetite of the inhabitants of this beautiful city for anything having a freakish flavor. But it was not difficult to foresee that something was bound to happen, though I rather expected an entirely different sequel, when I learned that the Oriental lecturer was persona gratissima with the ladies of the Congress. Having myself lived among his country-folk for many years, and liked them in their place, which is not as exponents of religious, moral and social matters for the benefit of their white brethren, his personality hardly appealed to my curiosity; and I shall perhaps not be wrong in thinking that this person is about as much real use in the world as most of his kind, who are impelled by a little book-learning, often mistaken for education, to move outside the sphere for which they were intended by nature. Many years ago, when on a visit to the native state of Cochin, on the western coast of India, I was taken through a large college, specially endowed by the Rajah who rules the state under British protection; and, after having seen many of the students and heard of their work and attainments, I ventured to inquire of the learned English gentleman, who had been some fifteen years or so at the head of the institution: "Now, doctor, do you really think that all this high education is doing these people any good?" His reply was: "Well, you ask me so plainly I will answer you in the same spirit, but don't quote me. I think it does them harm. What is really wanted is some method by which we could make them clean in their lives and learn to tell the truth."

The only bond of sympathy I can see between the women of the far West and the men of the far East is that some of the former chew gum and all of the latter chew getel, both practices sadly inelegant, but said to be beneficial to weak or impaired digestions. I trust, however, that the ladies of the Congress have no weakness in this or any other direction. For their future guidance let me warn them to keep the natives of India at a proper distance, and not to touch their garments or let them touch theirs.

INSPECTING JAPANESE IMMIGRANTS LATELY ARRIVED AT HONOLULU

Photo by the Davey Photo Co., Honolulu, H. I.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

It is not extraordinary that the Olympic Club should be compelled to resort to prize-fights to replenish its treasury. The spirit of California seems to have infused its membership with that curious ingratitude and inactivity that characterizes the conduct of most of our institutions. The club made its first great mistake by turning down William Greer Harrison. He was its creator, and he had the ability to maintain it. Like other able and positive men he had his faults, but he could do and achieve and certainly was the right man for the role. Just now things have got from bad to worse. The club owes rather more money than it can pay. It is losing rather than gaining members, and the impression prevails that it is on the down grade. That Mr. Newhall will keep it alive I doubt. Even if he does he will have little thanks for his trouble. Henry Crocker received no gratitude for his interest, and Fred Eaton, who certainly worked hard for the good of the club, resented the manner in which his exertions were accepted. In order to revive the finances, this boxing entertainment at Woodward's Pavilion on the night of the 18th. Surely this is a poor subterfuge for an institution that was once so great. However, I hope the club will get enough money to relieve it of its troubles.

SADIE MARTINOT

Who is to appear in "Excelsior Jr." at the Columbia next week

Thors, photo

***

The arrival of Madame Barrios, wife of the President of Guatemala, will be quite an event. Three of the handsomest suites on the parlor floor of the Occidental Hotel have been engaged for her party. These apartments include dining and drawing rooms, which have been freshly decorated and furnished for the occasion. During his administration as President the fortunes of Barrios have advanced with the development of Guatemala, as they deserved to, and he is certainly a millionaire several times over. Madam Barrios is from New Orleans, is slim, graceful, and delicate, with very soft, fluffy, blonde hair. She comes of a well known Louisiana family, and is fond of society. She knows San Francisco very well, having lived here for many years while Barrios was exiled from his native country. Doubtless she will be extensively entertained by her old friends and by the members of the Spanish-American colony.

***

Multitudes of men and women, whom necessity or choice compels to the Ferry of a day, must have noticed how very slow is the progress of the Ferry Building. To judge by results, it will take as long to finish as the new City Hall. The skeleton is up; the tower in outline is a landmark, but only a few slabs of stone are yet in place. The difficulty seems to be the non-arrival of the rock. Two of the Harbor Commissioners recently visited Sites and reported that the stone is being taken out as quickly as possible. The natural formation of the ground there makes the extraction of the large slabs which the character of the building necessitates, a work of extreme labor, and there is no way of hurrying operations. The contractors are deeply disappointed over the situation, but admit they are powerless. What is worse, the appearance of this Colusa stone is a source of dissatisfaction. It lacks lustre and in every way is inferior to the gray stone of the Parrott and Spreckels Buildings. I am told by an expert that within three years the edifice will look like a checkerboard, in as much as the blocks under the influence of the weather will take different colors. Curious, is it not, that this State in its public enterprises is so unfortunate? Is it not strange that some method cannot be devised by which California would be enabled to erect public structures on something like the basis that private builders do? Another feature of the ferry building that requires looking into is in regard to the specifications. I am told that a number of changes have recently been made which will not aid the strength or harmony of the building, and it may be some unpleasant disclosures are yet in store for us in that direction. However, the National Government does not seem much more fortunate, as I see the dock at Port Orchard on which a million dollars was expended, is about to be abandoned. Evidently dishonesty and wire pulling are not distinctly local attributes.

***

An interesting story might be made about the metamorphosis of Mrs. Li Ching Hsu, wife of the Viceroy's favorite nephew. Li and his bride, who is a decidedly pretty Chinese lady, of high birth, arrived here in the suite of the Chinese Minister, but instead of proceeding to Washington, concluded to remain in San Francisco and learn American ways. Several ladies at the Occidental called on the Celestial bride after European fashion, and were captivated with her quaint and original ways. She, in her turn, was attracted by the manners of her American sisters, and she has taken to western civilization at an astonishing rate. She has cultivated a taste for theater going—not the Chinese variety theater—but patronizes the Baldwin and the Columbia, and in her desire to conform to American ways, she has had herself fitted with a tailormade frock and English shoes. You can imagine high heeled shoes on tiny Chinese feet. That experiment, however, did not satisfy her, and she returned speedily to her Oriental silks. She is learning English very fast, says the quaintest things with a charming accent, and boldly announces: "I like American ways. We woman in China don't know anything. I like see people and to do what other people do. I want to do everything, and I will." The other night she and her husband were calling on some friends, and after dinner she announced: "There is a new play at the Baldwin. I want go, dear husband. Take these, our friends." And the whole party went and occupied a box. Li Ching Hsu is very proud of the intelligence and charm of his pretty bride, and is as much amused as any one else at her qauint English. Li, himself, has a thorough command of our vernacular and converses with ease on most topics.

***

With its recent acquisitions the C. P. Huntington picture gallery must take rank as the best on the Coast. Mr. Huntington brought from the east recently some magnificent canvasses, among them two large Rousseaus, quite the most beautiful landscapes I have ever seen. These paintings were purchased in Europe, and were never exhibited in any of the galleries. They went at private sale straight from the studio of the artist to the gallery of their former owner whose choicest possessions they were. The subjects are "Morning" and "Evening," and they are admirable in feeling and color. A third painting is a Diaz, a sumptuous canvas in that painter's best manner. A very beautiful Grueze has just arrived from the east and will take its place with the others. The collection includes the two Murillos, which were exhibited last year at the Art Association's rooms, two magnificent hunting pieces by Schneider, and several other fine canvasses. Mr. Huntington has hung conspicuously two landscapes from the brush of William Keith, whom he pronounces one of the finest landscape artists now living.

The Huntington banquet was of course a very brilliant affair. The table decorations were magnificent, but the oratory was really, as it should have been, the feature. The ablest and most serious speech of the evening was that of J. C. Stubbs, who, though he does not figure among eminent public speakers, has few superiors as a talker. He is quick-witted and ready, and has the gift of decisive, pungent phraseology, and has the rare gift of being able to convey exactly the shade of meaning he desires in the fewest possible words. He devoted himself to showing the error of the familiar accusation that the railroad charges all the traffic will bear, and demonstrated the superiority of railroad morality over that of the average professional man. Another excellent speech was that of W. B. Stafford, of the State Organization of Conductors, who arose to the occasion and was not only sensible, but eloquent. Mr. Curtis also made a clever talk. I sincerely hope some of our down town obstructionists will read the remarks of Mr. Huntington. They present an able, logical, and broad-minded view of the situation in California, and are full of suggestion for the benefit of the State. That happiness of phrase, which is one of Mr. Huntington's finest gifts, was conspicuous throughout.

***

One cannot but think that the assertion of Dr. McLean at a meeting of ministers recently, that there is a superfluity of churches in San Francisco, had rather more point than his fellows would care to admit. It is remarkable the number of spiritual institutions of one kind or another that we support here, though I notice none of the ministers are particularly happy over the financial results which accrue. If several of the congregations would but unite forces, I am quite sure the result would be to gain us superior church edifices and more eloquent preachers. Just now there are few men in the profession whose oratory commands an audience gathered to their pulpits by aught save a sense of duty.

***

The late Legislature of precious memory raised the salaries of the Chiefs, Assistants and Secretary of the Fire Department, and Boss Rainey has accepted, in return for his service as lobbyist, an emblazoned address and a silver tea-set. There is a deficit of some three hundred thousand dollars in the city's treasury, the community is employing hundreds of men at road making by private subscription, real estate is lower than it has been in twenty years past; business is depressed; and yet the Fire Department has had its salaries raised. For many years our local Fire Department has been rated among the best paid in America. The compensation was ample for the service rendered; there was no imaginable justification for the advance, save the anxiety of a political boss to express his gratification for political services rendered. The Mayor inveighed against the increase, and the tax-payers protested; but Rainey, who controlled the San Francisco delegation, traded every other measure the session through to secure this favor; the Governor, who has been promised assistance in realizing his Senatorial ambitions, signed the bill and the community is paying for his aspirations and Rainey's gratitude. It is decidedly piling on the agony, however, for the Department to fling this burglary in the face of the community. Mr. Rainey has reason to be gratified at the expression of favor which his friends tender, but he should not permit demonstrations which concentrate on him the wrath of a despoiled city. Curious, is it not, the position this man Rainey has attained here? Though he is illiterate, he is actually the ruler through a solid nine of the system of education of San Francisco. He participates, through the Supervisors, in the legislation of the city, has myrmidons in every office in the City Hall, and owns the Fire Department. Some day the community will arise in its wrath against this man and his ilk, but in the meantime let us pray for a new charter.

BOSWELL JR.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT

COUNTESS WACHMEISTER

Prominent leaders of the Theosophical Society, who are to speak upon Reincarnation next week

MAY-DAY REVELS

Liliputian Festivities in the Glass Palace by the Sea.

It was a little toy kingdom in a glass case.

There was the prettiest of sweet little Queens — with five hundred gay and chubby courtiers blossoming in white and pink muslin, wigged and costumed — and a very sturdy and loyal populace of nine thousand subjects to pay homage; and of these, fully half the number were real children, and the other half children for the afternoon, at least.

Nine thousand persons make a very respectable audience, even for the monstrous edifice of the Sutro Baths. They were packed tier on tier, from the balconies down by the stage, up and up and up, to the tip top promenade, and all along the whole length of the building and around the corner and up the end. There was not a seat unfilled, and from below there seemed to be a great hillside of heads gazing down at Miss Pearl Landers on her gorgeous throne, "for she was the Queen of the May, mother — for she was the Queen of the May!"

The five hundred, too, they of the Court, looked as if they had been singing

"If you're waking, call me early, call me early mother dear—
For to-morrow is the happiest day of all the glad new year!"

They were banked up like flowers on each side of the dais that was in front of the May-poles that were on the platform that was over the salt water that was in the bath-house that Sutro built. They were in all epochs of littleness. It was a veritable dimple show, the benches full of unpurchasable exhibits with small feet, anxious for their turn to come to caper on the boards.

Sutro's Baths was a veritable Mecca for a children's pilgrimage that day. They came by rail and by trolley, and the wide doors of the pavilion gulped and swallowed infants all day like any ogre. They came with their brothers and sisters, fathers and mothers, uncles and aunts, but mostly aunts.

And what boys there were amongst the throng made bee lines for the bathing sections and the doors closed on them. But lo! out of every doorway, presently emerged a little semi-naked boy; and for every boy was a pair of little, thin, pink legs, and arms to match; and for every little leg, five scandalously dirty little toes. Presently the tank bred boys like pollywogs—the number increased so that the water wouldn't hold them, and the little frog-men overflowed onto the main floor, and wandered, purple, sleek, and dripping, up into the uttermost parts of the galleries and patronized the soda-water fountains, all semi-naked and unashamed. It was a feast of Mowglis. One could scarce turn about for fear of stepping on a little semi-nude urchin.

But the little girls were demure and very, very proper with their white muslin dresses and pink sashes. The five hundred maids of honor ignored the presence and the gaze of the five hundred semi-naked little mermen, they tip-tilted chin and nose, and shook out ringlets with mock indifference.

Never Queen had more dainty carnival. Ballets and pas-seules, fancy and contra dances, round and square, with scarf, tambourine, and castanet, danced the little coryphees at this Liliputian fairy court. They raised and braided the May-pole, they flung Highland flings and hornpipes. Believe me, there were thirty-five separately beautiful and individually fantastic features to the festival, each dance more of a cunning, delicate, tricksy, whimsical entrancement than the one before.

Tiny maidens, small and round as Pica periods, flung airy toes chin-high, and pirouetted with all the arts and graces of painted premieres.

Curly-headed, brown-eyed, roguish boykins stamped mad little hornpipes, or arms akimbo, tossed through a kermess with sad coquettes of partners, piquant with darling four-year-old prettiness — things of flirts and flourishes and tiptoe delicacies.

Surely, if I have ever a child to spare, I shall send her to Professor O'Brien and have her trained to capture hearts wholesale, instead of one at a time. I shall have her do an elfish caprice, like Ethel Schwaner — spectacle for Titania—and she shall try at "Comin' through the Rye," with a Brownie playmate, like Angela and Alvanisa Sartorious. Should her one name hap to be Veva, she shall trip it as if her other were Anderson, and the May Queen of 19?? shall accord her the white rose wreath of royal favor.

GELETT BURGESS.

MAY MAIDENS AND MERMEN AT THE SUTRO BATHS: ENTRANCE OF THE QUEEN

The story of Gladstone learning to ride the bicycle having been exploded, the lie about President Faure's being a guest at the Queen's jubilee celebration is started, and on this fantastic foundation is reared the even more idiotic report that President McKinley is also to be present.

Count Albert de Mun, the leader of the Catholic party in the French Chamber of Deputies, who has just been elected to fill Jules Simons' seat in the French Academy, is a great grandson of Helvetius, the revolutionary philosopher, and a grandson of Madame de Stael.

Vivian Burnett, the original "Little Lord Fauntleroy," has just come of age. He is a student at Harvard, and is described as an exceedingly sturdy and substantial young man. He has already given evidence of literary ability, having distinguished himself in class studies, and has also written a play entitled "The Fool's Gold." The piece was recently produced with success by the Pi Eta Society of the university, the author assuming the part of the hero. Mrs. Burnett is very proud of her son, and has many amusing stories to tell of him. She says he was always fond of writing, and his letters, in particular were uniquely written. One day when he was about six years old, Mrs. Burnett found him leisurely scribbling on a scrap of paper, and he was questioned as to what he was doing. "I am beginning to write a book," he said. "What is it to be called?" queried his mother. "It is to be called," came the dignified reply, "'My Recollections of Our Late Civil War.'" Young Mr. Burnett is having an excellent training as a man of letters. He has traveled all over Europe, and has had English, French, German and Italian tutors, but for all that, is a very loyal American.

A social sensation of some years ago was recently recalled by the divorce obtained by Colonel Fred Wellesley from his wife, formerly Kate Vaughan, the famous English dancer. It will be remembered that while he was military attache at St. Petersburg ten years ago Colonel Wellesley deserted his wife, who was a very handsome woman, for Miss Vaughan, then the leading burlesque actress in the Gaiety Company. Mrs. Wellesley at once divorced her husband, who promptly married the dancer. They lived together for some years, but financial difficulties overtaking Wellesley, he was deserted by his wife for an obscure actor. A second divorce was obtained, and it now remains to be seen if the Colonel will make up with his former wife.

The much discussed and long postponed production of "Mme. Sans Gene" at Henry Irving's London Lyceum has taken both press and public by storm. The chief interest of the piece centered about Ellen Terry, who had serious misgivings about her part. These misgivings have been wholly unwarranted, as Miss Terry has made the titled blanchisseuse one of the most notable of her creations, and she not only gave the role cleverly, but was also perfect in letter and spirit.

BALLET OF LES BELLES FLEURS

WEAVING THE TWIN MAYPOLES

FROM SUMMER SEAS

Wanderings of the Barkentine of the Missionary Society.

There was less excitement in the port of San Francisco when the Morning Star dropped anchor in the fairway, than she has been wont to create when she slides into the lagoon under the hills of Kusaie. There, she brings the annual mails to the island, and the village has the fete-day of the year. The white-clad missionaries come down from the mission building, the native women array themselves in their finest mats, and the children troop down to the quay and swim out to meet the vessel.

In San Francisco, the barkentine was noted by the water front loungers only as a queer rig, with a black main top mast. At first the vessel seemed to be on fire, but no—she was steaming in, using her hollow steel main mast for a smokestack. Captain Isaiah Bray was rowed ashore by a boat's crew of dusky islanders; a new mate boarded the vessel, and set to work overhauling the sails, spars and rigging preparatory to the refitting that she came up for.

This Morning Star is fourth of the name built, owned and operated by the society with the long name whose business it is to convert the benighted heathen of the south seas. More properly of Micronesia, for few of the islands their missionaries visit lie south of the equator. Their territory is limited to three groups of islands, the Caroline, Gilbert and Marshall archipelagos, lately occupied and held by rights of possession by the governments of Spain, England and Germany, respectively. The barkentine is a dawdler in tropic seas. She makes a yearly cruise amongst the most beautiful islands of the North Pacific, under blue skies and blown by soft winds, bent on a dreamy errand to the most romantic and picturesque spots of Oceanica. Her headquarters are at Honolulu, and from there she floats south with stores and Bibles to the sunny island Edens, and transports the missionaries to and fro among their insular tributaries.

Each group is in charge of a white pastor to the little flock of natives, and when the barkentine is sighted he and his wife pack up and take passage in the vessel, and visit the outlying native teachers—examining schools, receiving into the church, inspecting the growth of the sub-missions, marrying, and giving his benediction to the work. He gathers his assistants to a yearly meeting, and perhaps picks out one or two of the brighter pupils to be sent to Honolulu or the States to be educated by the society. And so on to the next group the Morning Star drifts and brings life to each colony in turn.

Most of the islands are low, of coral formation, raised only a few feet above the blue sea. Here the mangrove trees rise seventy feet high, their boles washed by the higher tides, so that one can paddle a canoe around through the grove. A white or two, traders in copra, live here, and a handful of natives. On the high islands the hills rise out of the sea into a cloudless sky, and everything grows that is necessary to prolong an idle existence. Here are the schools and the churches, and here, too, have come the Catholic priests to divert the credence of the heathen from the Word, as preached by the Congregational Church under the auspices of the A. B. C. F. M. From June to March the Morning Star drifts up and down the mid-Pacific, bringing back cargoes of firewood and converted natives. Stories, too, of Spanish opposition to the crusade in the Carolines, where she has not until recently been allowed by the Governor to hold religious services, or communicate with the people. Captain Garland, ex-commander of the barkentine, succeeded at last in obtaining permission to establish missions, and the vessel is now received with great cordiality. The English Governor of the Gilbert islands has been more indifferent to the work of the Congregationalists, while the Germans in the Marshall group have warmly seconded their efforts.

The Morning Star had a rather rough passage up from Hawaii, and with a rotting foremast had to carry too little sail in the northwest gales to make good time. She is to be thoroughly overhauled, new boilers and new metal for her bottom included, besides the replacement of masts, spars and canvas necessary after a long cruise. Among her passengers was Louis Schriber, a young missionary from Los Angeles, who will return when the vessel returns in a month or so. The crew are all Caroline Islanders, and among them C. E. Bowker came as ship's carpenter, with a native wife and a little family of half-native children. Captain Bray was for a good while General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Oakland, and has just retaken his berth as skipper of the Morning Star after six years ashore, and is now looking forward to more meanderings among the coral islands of the equatorial seas.

MAY DAY FESTIVITIES AT THE LESTER NORRIS MEMORIAL KINDERGARTEN ON PACIFIC STREET

THE MISSIONARY BARKENTINE WITH A SIXTY-FOOT SMOKESTACK

Dr. Nobel's will, turning nearly all his property into a fund to further the advancement of science, is contested by the late inventor's relatives.

When Queen Victoria sets forth from Buckingham Palace to ride through London in her Jubilee procession, she will be attended with all the pomp and circumstance that British royalty can compass. She will sit in the gorgeous state coach of glass and gold, drawn by eight cream-colored horses, with coachmen and footmen in liveries most brilliant to behold. She will be preceded by the Princesses of the royal family in state carriages escorted by a cavalcade of royal Princes on horseback. The procession, which will be a mile long, will include in its route the Surrey side of London inhabited by the poorer classes, who will be given an opportunity, at the Queen's desire, to share in the rejoicings of the day, and also in its profits by renting window room. The objective point of the procession is not Westminster Abbey, but St. Paul's Cathedral, before which services will be held in the open air, the Queen remaining in her carriage. The exercises will not occupy more than fifteen minutes, and at the conclusion Her Majesty will immediately return to Buckingham Palace, bringing to an end one of the most remarkable royal processions on record.

The Jubilee-day programme is arousing much discussion in England. It is said that the Queen objects to several of the arrangements, especially to the service on the steps of St. Paul's, which she has opposed from the very beginning. The reason for this opposition is not yet known, but it is rumored that when it is made public it will be an interesting tale. One of the suggestions anent the great celebration appearing in the press, comes from Lady Douglas Galton, who thinks it would be graceful for every patriotic Englishwoman, on the great day, to wear a small, tight-fitting toque, instead of big hats, so that other people may see something of the proceedings. Fashionable milliners are aghast at this proposition, and patriotic Englishwomen are inclined to rebel, but as a London crowd is no respecter of persons, to say nothing of high hats, it is likely that the toque will be very much in vogue when the great day finally arrives.

Professor Lucien Blake of the Kansas University has a plan for giving white skins to negroes. Professor Blake says that the negro owes his color to a carbon pigment in the tissues of the skin, and believes by the application of an electric current this pigment could be decomposed and the skin would become white.

MATE AND NATIVE CREW OF THE "MORNING STAR" FROM THE CAROLINE ISLANDS

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

I cannot say, truthfully, Diary Dear, that I have been flying on the golden wings of pleasure this week—it really might be Lent over again, as far as we young people are concerned. I have had what I call quiet enjoyments—such as swimming, riding and bicycle trips, but to a maiden who has passed through a successful season these are rather slow. I am eagerly anticipating next Saturday, "Class Day," with double capitals. I am besieged with invitations to luncheons in the various frats, and am evolving in my small cranium how many I can get in. I suppose I shall be horribly ill on Sunday, but that never deters Arthur when he has aspirations in the direction of tears; so why should it me? Apres tout (to quote Aunt Sybil, who thinks it elegant to interpolate French phrases in her conversation, to the tremendous amusement of mamma, who, I am happy to state, is a college-bred woman and not affected), fraternity luncheons are a very mild form of "tear." Speaking of mamma. She has been flirting with pleasure all the week, and now quite outranks me as a social success. Mamma's entertainments are always superb affairs. No mild teas or quiet thimble bees for my mother; nothing but a series of luncheons and dinners will suffice. I must really place them on record, and I confess I am quite envious.

She started out last Tuesday evening by going to a swell dinner followed by a card party at Mrs. Morgan's. The menu was elaborate in the extreme, and everything deliciously cooked. Mamma says Mrs. Morgan has the mind of a Napoleon when the getting up of a dinner is concerned. Then Mrs. H. L. Dodge gave a married ladies' euchre party that was very smart. Indeed, the maternal ma insists she never saw together this season such a profusion of stunning gowns. Mrs. Cutter, who is my favorite of the older set, because she is so bright and lively, gave a card party, and Mrs. Towne a luncheon in honor of Mrs. Huntington, who is very much entertained just now. Mamma said Mrs. Towne's was a smart affair. Mrs. Requa, Mrs. Darling and all the genuine old Californians were there. Then on Saturday Mrs. Huntington gave a swell dinner in their magnificent house, which is my admiration and envy. I wish it was ours—would I not be a wild success then? Mamma had an interesting evening and was quite worn out on Sunday, to my intense amusement. Leila went to a dear little dinner at Mrs. Winsor's or Dolly Brown's last week. It was really an engagement dinner, as Mrs. Brown announced her engagement to Mr. Charley Wood. Leila likes him very much, and he is so handsome. Confidentially, Leila's fiance is hardly beautiful, but then he is rich, which is not skin-deep, is it?

Mrs. Hager is to give a luncheon this week in honor of Mrs. H. L. Dodge, which is to out Herod Herod in smartness, I am told. Mamma has ordered a swell silk grenadine and papa has commenced to talk hard times, so I suppose he is anticipating big bills. Leila went to a house party at the Charley Baldwin ranch on Saturday. Baron and Baroness von Schroder and a few young men were invited. The Baldwin house does not hold a crowd. I wonder Ella does not make some additions, don't you? On Monday afternoon Mamma and I went to Mrs. Darling's tea given to Mrs. Huntington at the Occidental Hotel. It was a smart affair and we spent a very enjoyable afternoon. There were musical selections from the compositions of Major Darling, which added to our pleasure. Afterwards we went to pay a few Monday calls. I went over to the Palace to see Mrs. Dean and Mrs. Coitt. Mrs. Dean is improving, and is busily engaged preparing to go to San Jose. As soon as she is well enough she contemplates a trip to Europe. Mrs. Coitt, I regret to say, is still very ill. Is it not too bad? She has had such a siege of it.

Now for my own quiet pleasures. I had a splendid time at the Stanford dance, and found the "Cardinal" boys almost as fascinating as the "Blue and Gold," but not quite. Then on Sunday we all went to Trocadero and beyond there for a ride; it was a glorious day, and we had much fun. On Monday morning the usual crowd of us went to the Lurline—Gibbons, Emma Butler, Nettie Black, Marie Wells, Charlotte Moulder and a number of men. May Moody seems to be the best swimmer, and is delightfully fearless in the water, but I think Marie Wells looks the prettiest of the set; her complexion is so fresh and her hair seems to caress her face, it curls round so. Then, in the evening, we all went to "El Capitan" and enjoyed it so. There were ever so many theater parties. Every one in town seemed to be there, and yet Arthur, who went with the Bohemian Club fellows to the Tivoli, said there was a very goodly gathering there, too. I got home late, but went for my usual bicycle ride in the morning. You would be surprised to learn how many of the girls ride. I think instead of losing, the wheel is actually gaining in popularity. We girls should have a private contest, and see who is the best, the most graceful or the least easily exhausted rider. Don't you think it would be a good scheme?

We are so disappointed to learn that Mr. and Mrs. Lester are going to eschew society and live a quiet life. Is it not too bad? Every one believed Mrs. Lester would chaperon us young people this summer, and give us a howling good time, but alas for our hopes! Mr. Lester, it seems, does not care for society, and his wife has had all of it she cares for. Ethel Cohen is being entertained a good deal. Leila went to a smart little dinner given by Lieutenant Bent in her honor the other evening. Another Presidio affair which we all enjoyed tremendously was the At Home given on Wednesday by Captain and Mrs. Lockett. About two hundred people called during the afternoon. Oh, mamma has finally decided that we are to go to San Rafael for the summer. I hear it is to be the fasnionable place. The Blandings, Crocketts and Kips are to be there, and the Hagers have taken a cottage. I am rather glad, on the whole, for I suppose the paper chases will recommence, and I love cross country riding.

Quite the most magnificent dinner of season was that given by Mrs. C. P. Huntington to twenty-four of her most intimate friends last Saturday night. There is no mansion in town more admirably adapted for entertaining in than the Huntington house. The interior has been renovated and remodeled under the direction of the hostess, who has displayed her excellent taste in the matter of tints and hangings and furniture. The walls are hung with splendid paintings from Mr. Huntington's collection which ranks as one of the finest in the country. The dinner table was charmingly arranged and beautified with flowers contained in antique silver vases of very fine workmanship. Indeed it was altogether a very elaborate affair and the menu was sumptuous. The guest of honor was Mrs. J. H. Jewett, and among the invited were Mr. and Mrs. Schwerin, Mr. and Mrs. Herrin, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Stubbs, Miss Stubbs, Judge McFarlane, and Miss McFarlane, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Worden, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Huntington, Mr. and Mrs. Requa. The Huntingtons have been very extensively entertained during their stay here. They leave next week for New York.

They tell me there, a new engagement at Burlingame. I heard Mamma tell Leila—but she would not say anything to me about it. I heard something about a prominent young Englishman who is a great country clubman and a girl who lives near Redwood City. I can't think which of the girls does live near Redwood City but maybe I'll tell you next week.

Well, now, Diary Dear, I have more than exhausted the obvious, so I must say adieu to you. I am so sorry for Laura Bates, she has had to take the rest cure. Papa says the rest cure is the result not the cause of popularity. Ta ta. Your own devoted, MISS CRICKET.

The Ginger Bread Fete at the Clark-Crocker house next week promises to be a brilliant event. Society is deeply interested and will certainly attend in force. There is every prospect that the Children's Hospital will net a large sum for its enterprise. Not the least important attraction of the entertainment will be the exhibition of Toby Rosenthal's latest picture,—"The Cardinal's Portrait." It is a small canvas, but the technical treatment has something of the quality of Meissonier's. Defregger, the well-known German artist, has written enthusiastically of it, and I am told it has attracted in Munich the attention of Emperor William. It is certainly a notable painting.

***

At this end of the century, when the unexpected is generally conceded to be the inevitable, the storm of gaiety which has struck Oakland recently remains a phenomenon and is positively staggering. Teas, dinners and luncheons, not to speak of card parties and club entertainments, succeed one another with astonishing rapidity, and the Oakland maids and matrons chase pleasure with the avidity of the over-hungry bee for the flower most filled with honey. Mr. and Mrs. Taft started the running of the gauntlet this week by giving a dinner to Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Smith. It was a sort of farewell to Mr. Smith, who has gone to New York. The table was effectively decorated in yellow. Among those invited were the Goodalls, Browns and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hale. Mrs. Judson and Mrs. Von Helms gave a rose breakfast to the nineteenth century section of the Ebell Society on Wednesday. The table was a pretty sight, covered with masses of red roses, maiden hair fern being scattered carelessly over it.

Mrs. Orestes Pierce, Mrs. Will Magee, Mrs. George McNear and Mrs. Wilkinson gave teas last week. Mrs. Pierce's, which took place on Wednesday, was a very smart affair. There were about four hundred invitations issued. The house was decorated in Easter lilies and American Beauty roses. Mrs. Pierce was assisted in receiving by her sister, Mrs. Norman Lang, Mrs. McKee and Miss Amy McKee, among others. Mrs. Pierce wore a stunning gown of lavender silk with Marie Antoinette fichu of point lace. Mrs. Lang wore pink flowered silk. Miss Watt was daintly gowned in pale gray. Mrs. Magee's tea was given in honor of Madame Camillo Urso. The house was a veritable rose garden—flowers everywhere. In one corner, underneath a bower of flowers, were the members of the Mandolin Club, all in white linen suits, who played during the afternoon. The girls all wore light organdie frocks, which added much to the effect of the scene. Mrs. Magee was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Tom Magee, the Misses Hush, Madame Urso, Miss Chabot, Miss Watt and Mrs. Watkinson. The McNear tea in honor of Mrs. Lang was a delightful affair, the decorations most spring-like in character. Great fragrant branches of hawthorn were placed in every conceivable place, and bunches of carnations massed in bowls. Mrs. Lay, Mrs. Edson Adams, Mrs. Pierce, Miss Watt, Miss Palache, Miss Whitney and Miss Coleman assisted Mrs. George McNear.

The list of card parties and clubs waxeth apace. It is now quite the fashion to entertain the various clubs. Mrs. F. M. Smith entertained the Cosmos Club on Tuesday afternoon at Arbor Villa. Mrs. Taft won the first prize. Mrs. Satber gave a card party to the same club on Friday afternoon. Among the smaller card parties one of the most enjoyable was given by Mrs. Thomas Prather on Tuesday last. Domino whist was played. A girls' card party was given by Miss Katherine Chabot, which proved a most exciting affair. An original card game under the euphonious title of "pig" was played. Miss Margaret Knight won the first prize, Miss Sterrett carried off the booby. During the afternoon several of the girls sang. Miss Hush rendered "Sweetheart" with much feeling. Miss Florence Sharon and Miss Chabot played.

The Orpheum has furnished excellent entertainment, the programme being well varied and the turns mostly well done. Alexander Tacianu, the male soprano, is simply a perfect illusion as a female impersonator. Latell, the comedy musical artist, is a genius, the sort of man who can get harmony out of a piece of broken crockery and a rusty nail, besides being a banjoist of great skill. Mlle. Ani, the gymnast, is really a thrilling performer under the roof-tree, of exceptional quickness and agility. The colored artist Anderson can dance in perfect time on one or both legs without music and keep it up.

Next week at the Tivoli Opera House, in addition to the original score of the successful romantic opera, "Shamus O'Brien," Mr. Dennis O'Sullivan will introduce a couple of Irish songs and ballads. "Twas in this line of work Mr. O'Sullivan first made a hit throughout Great Britain and Ireland, and was selected by Geo. H. Jessop and Dr. C. Villiers, the author and composer, to sing the role of Shamus. Maurice Darcy as the cowardly informer, Mike Murphy, makes the hit of his engagement in this role. After the run of "Shamus O'Brien," Dellinger's waltz and march opera "Captain Francassa." (The Prince of Liars), will be given. "Miss Frisco," the Tivoli's first annual review, will follow for the summer offering.

Fin de Siecle Champagne.

It is very rare that a brand of champagne paved its way more rapidly into favor among the cultured and ultra-fashionable than the Moet & Chandon. The selection of this brand at some of the prominent gatherings held recently in this country, goes to show that Moet & Chandon is now the connoiseur's favorite. It was selected to be served at the last Patriarchs' Ball, the Washington Gridiron Club's banquet, the O. H. P. Belmont party, the Bradley-Martin costume ball, and the New York Reform Club dinner tendered to ex-President Cleveland and his Cabinet. In San Francisco, Moet & Chandon was also in evidence at the Goad-Mackintosh wedding, Whittier-Weir wedding, and the C. P. Huntington banquet, and to judge by this year's importation of twenty-six hundred cases up to May 1 Messrs. William Wolf & Co., agents for Moet & Chandon, White Seal, are bound to bring the brand to the front on the Pacific Coast.—Pacific Wine and Spirit Review.

DRAMATIC NOTES

The coming season of the Frawley Co. promises to be quite the most interesting in its history. It has undergone reorganization, and is composed now of Frank Worthing, J. M. Colville, Theodore Hamilton, Harry Corson Clarke, Wilson Enos, Blanche Bates, Grace Henderson, Phosa McAllister, Gladys Wallace and Georgia Busbey. This is a talented and attractive company of artists, and Mr. Frawley has been fortunate in securing plays which will show off their ability Among others are "The Fatal Card," "Sue," "The Henrietta," "Held by the Enemy," "Rebellious Susan," and "Shenandoah." The season opens May 3rd at the Columbia Theater.

Excelsior Jr. opens next Monday night at the Columbia. It is an extravaganza, has had a run of two hundred nights in New York, and is said to be the best spectacular show that has come to the coast this season. Sadie Martinot is with the company, also Joe Cawthorn, together with any number of pretty girls. The scenery is very clever. Among the features is a performance by David Abrahams, who plays a St. Barnard dog. Altogether, Excelsior Jr. should make a bigger hit than "Chimmie Fadden."

De Wolf Hopper and "El Capitan" have certainly caught on at the Baldwin. There is but one more week and thus far the audiences have exceeded the seating capacity. After "El Capitan" comes Nat Goodwin with Maxine Elliot. They are to play "David Garrick," and the "Silent System" the first week. By the way, Goodwin is now drawing more money on the road than Sol Smith Russel, who has thus far been the most profitable attraction in the country

In the third act of "An American Hero" at Morosco's, there is a really remarkable shipwreck scene in which some novel stage effects are produced with elaborate accessories. It is one of the best scenes of its kind ever produced at Morosco's, which is saying a good deal. Next week is a sensational comedy-drama entitled "The White Rat," in which there are realistic pictures of low life in New York. Mollie Thompson, Nat M. Wills and Johnson & Harvey do specialties during the performance.

The Stanford Choral Society, in connection with the Apollo Society of this city, is to give a grand concert at the gymnasium at Stanford next Saturday evening. It is to be under the direction of Mr. H. B. Pasmore. Subsequently the two societies will give a grand festival concert on the evening of May 15th, at Metropolitan Temple. A special train will leave the side track at Palo Alto Saturday night immediately after the concert, affording those who desire to return to town an opportunity to do so.

The Saturday Morning Orchestra, under the direction of Mrs. W. A. Sabin gives a concert on the evening of May 15th at Golden Gate Hall, for the benefit of the Episcopal Old Ladies' Home. Mr. Denis O'Sullivan is to sing. The Misses Ames and Miss Marie Wilson will play, and there will be many other special features to add additional interest to the performance of the young ladies.

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

OVERTONES

Queer Experiences of a Baritone With Operatic Managers.

Life has not been all beer and skittles with "Nealy" O'Sullivan (a nickname, by the way, he is trying to outgrow). He has queer tales to tell of managers in London, and he has just given me this experience with the Carl Rosa company and its tricky agent. His invitation to sing the "Dichterliebe" at a swell London concert had been as much a surprise as the extravagant praise of the critics, and he was sent for by the Carl Rosa company and asked to accept a position as operatic baritone. Now Nealy had had no stage experience at all in acting, and he offered to wait six months and study at his own expense, so as to be a credit to the troupe. "That's all right," said the manager, "we've a perfect school of acting in the company, and we'll teach you every gesture and stage position!" Terms and a three months' contract were agreed upon, and a few days after Nealy turned up at the office to sign. He began to look over the papers. "Oh, that's all right, laddie!" said the smooth manager, "it's just as we agreed—just take the pen and sign—it's a mere formality!" But Nealy insisted upon reading the agreement, and found, to his surprise, that it was a six years' contract at half the rates promised! The manager was highly indignant, and swore it was a clerical error of his men, who had mistaken some other singer's terms, and after the bluff failed the original contract was signed. Nealy's thorough study in Italy had made him so familiar with operatic work that he became a valuable stop-gap and general utility man. He sung the "Flying Dutchman" at three hours' notice, and had only a day's warning of "Lotario" and "Mignon," and was able to fill their cast as either baritone or bass, working at high pressure, and if not a howling star, he at least made himself very valuable to the company.

When Nealy was asked to take the title role in "Shamus," he applied for a release from the Carl Rosa company. "Go ahead, young man," said Ganz, who does their dirty work; "make your terms with them and we'll release you." Nealy asked for a moderate salary, and was instantly accepted, and he returned to Ganz. "Vat is your salary?" said he; and when the youngster named it, said Ganz, "Vell, give half of it to us!" It finally reached Nealy's brain that the terms for his release was the payment to Ganz of half his wages. "Pray, take them all!" said the Irishman to the Jew; "I'm sure it's nothing to me," and he left, to telegraph to Sir Augustus Harris, of the Covent Garden Theatre, who, besides putting on "Shamus," had the English rights to half the operas in London. Harris telegraphed back to the Carl Rosas, "Release O'Sullivan at once, or I shall retire 'Faust' and 'Meistersinger' from your repertoire." He had the kindness to duplicate the dispatch to his protege, who was soon sent for by Friend, whose great card that year was the two operas mentioned. "Upon thinking it over," said Friend, "we've decided that it's wrong to stand in the way of a young artist—hem!—and we shall be very glad to present you, Mr. O'Sullivan, with your release. Go ahead, my boy, and God bless you!" "I'm very much obliged to you, to be sure," said Nealy, who had this card up his sleeve, "and I'm very glad to be familiar with your methods, for, as it happens, I know precisely the motive for your generosity, which, however, has come a few hours too late!"

Of the great, the unique Augustin Daly, too, Nealy tells amusing stories. The mighty playright and manager sent for the baritone to confer with him regarding employment in the company. But besides having little desire to appear as a "straight" actor and accept the salary of a dramatic star, O'Sullivan had recently heard of Daly's self-important manners and he didn't care to run the risk of having to wait hours for an audience, subject to the whims of the manager who sets nibbling a pen, searching his giant intellect for the the proper translation of "Dummkopf," while his visitors cool their heels in the ante-room. Only the week before Ed Stevens had been sent for, to confer with the theatrical magnate, at nine in the morning, and received a tip from Dorney, the factotum of the manager, to be around a half hour before to get his "cues" for the interview, as the chief was punctillious. Stevens waited till eleven, and when Daly sent word requesting him to wait another hour, as important cogitations could not then be disturbed, Ed told Dorney to reply that he would stay no longer. "But I can't possibly take such a message as that," said Dorney; "it would be as much as my place is worth, you know, to tell that to Mr. Daly." "Take in this, then," said Stevens, and he pulled out a card and inscribed thereon an invitation to the conceited manager to visit an unmentionable resort. In the theatre, notices are posted everywhere, stating that "Actors are requested not to address Mr. Daly on the stage for any reason whatever." Charles Richman keeps his position only by a more or less abject subservience to the great Daly. On one occasion, while playing "The Tempest," the fan that opens and reveals a tableau, closed so slowly that Richman had no time to get around to the front of the stage for his cue without leaving before the wings of the fan had closed on the picture. He was, even then, not quite in time, and the scene was much hurt by his tardiness. He mentioned the failure of the fan to work promptly to Mr. Daly, who was standing in the wings. "Oh, of course, of course, you have to make your complaints," said Daly; "you must always make your complaints. Please have the goodness to state your grievance to the proper authorities. Kindly leave now, and make no complaints to me." Daly has, too, a happy way of standing in the wings and of telling an actor, who is waiting nervously for his cue, of faults in the previous scene, in a critical manner hardly calculated to inspire a comedian waiting to make a rattling, exhuberant entrance with rollicking laughter.

FLEURETTE
THE CHARMING DANCER WHO LEADS THE FLEURS-DE-LIS AT THE ORPHEUM

Along the line of the San Francisco and North Pacific Railway are the most charming summer resorts on the Pacific Coast. A few of the many are Mark West Springs, Skaggs Springs, The Geysers, Highland, Bartlett and Vichy Springs, Blue Lakes, Laurel Dell, Saratoga Springs, Soda Bay, Lytton Springs, Agua Caliente Springs, Orr's Hot Springs, and Duncan Springs. For detailed information apply at ticket office, 650 Market street, Chronicle building, or general office, Mutual Life Building, Sansome and California streets San Francisco.

Faster Time on the Santa Fe Route — 3½ Days to Chicago or St. Louis, 4½ to New York.

Leaving San Francisco Mondays and Thursdays at 5 P.M., connection is made at Barstow with the famous Santa Fe limited train. Dining-car, buffet smoking-car, vestibuled Pullman palace drawing-room sleepers. The handsomest train on earth — equipment and appointments faultless. Daily through sleeping-cars, both palace and tourist, Oakland pier to Chicago. Ticket office, 644 Market street, Chronicle Building. Tel. Main 1531.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

Beyond all question of doubt the greatest sale of Japanese goods ever held on the Coast is now being carried on by Ito, Sotomi & Co., at 116 Sutter street.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Next Sunday at 12:25 p. m. take the Haywards electric motor train from 7th and Washington streets for Haywards Park. Only 25 cents the round trip. The train leaves the Park for Oakland at 3:30 p. m.

No tipping of waiters at Johnson's family restaurant, 28 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. Moderate prices.

TURF POLICY

The Closing Season Suggestive of Future Possibilities.

The talk of summer racing across the bay in Marin county still smoulders, but as has been pointed out in our columns on a previous occasion legitimate recognition is not likely to be forthcoming for the undertaking, if it should happen to materialize. It certainly is not prompted by any desire to benefit the general interests of the Turf in this State, and it is very questionable whether any scheme for a prolonged meeting would be attended by financial success. Owners of horses would therefore have to consider their chances of securing proper settlements and, what is perhaps more important, their prospects of maintaining their standing with the two jockey clubs. These organizations are resolved to discountenance continuous racing in the neighborhood of San Francisco and will not hesitate to use all the power they possess to give effect to their views.

With the opening of the season in the East the better class of turf-men belonging to California as well as to other parts of the county will be fully occupied, and those stables which confine their operations to this section will have opportunity of employment in preparing and racing their horses at the several meetings in country towns in this State and Montana, where there are sufficient inducements to attract animals of fair class. The formation of any plans for further local meetings must therefore depend at this late stage upon the support of elements that are not calculated to benefit the cause of racing on this coast, or raise the sport in the estimation of the public. Seeing how steadily it has progressed during the last two or three years that would be nothing short of a calamity, and it is therefore sincerely to be hoped this may be escaped. If the field be left open and it comes to be realized that racing in San Francisco is to be permanently limited to the winter season, as time goes on measures will undoubtedly be taken to establish meetings at outlaying points, and in that way an attractive summer circuit will be evolved that should ultimately prove a useful feeder to the larger meetings which this city is able to support during its legimate racing term. Impromptu fixtures are not calculate to serve the convenience or requirements of men who keep horses in training more or less throughout the year, and it is therefore necessary that those who concern themselves with the promotion of district meetings should be able to see a clear field ahead of them and be able to announce their plans considerably in advance of the date appointed for running off the events.

In this regard both the California and Pacific Coast Jockey Clubs will no doubt make early announcements of their principal events for next winter, and, seeing how attractive these proved during the season now closing, there can be no question that the racing world will be keenly on the look-out for what is coming. The extent to which the principal stakes were patronized in the way of nominations, and the excellent sport they provided, has led to very favorable comment in other parts of the world, and has earned for California a prestige in sporting circles that is of undoubted benefit to the whole State. Recurring to our allusion of last week to the inducements which valuable prizes such as the $10,000 Burns Handicap, the $7500 Spreckels Cup, the $5000 California Derby, all run off within a month, and other large items afford to owners, it should be no difficult matter, if these be of regular recurrence, to fix the eyes of our sporting friends in the Antipodes on the benefits possibly derivable from a little closer contact with these Western shores. In one or two instances they have already tried their luck and have not been worsted, when the temptation was far less, and if they are assured, and in good time, of what is now open to them, they should not be backward in coming forward with a champion or two that would bring them gain an glory.

This seems to be a field well worth working with the view of increasing public interest in high-class sport and one well within the power of the press in both quarters to stimulate. So far the connection between Australia and California as regards thoroughbred horses has been mainly confined to the breeding side of the question, and so well understood down there are the enterprise and ambition of our breeders that no first-class bit of blood comes into the market in the Colonies without being offered to Mr. Haggin and others, who breed extensively here. The result has been that the pre-eminence of California as a blood-horse country has been richly enhanced by the importation of some of their best sires and a few really good mares. What could be more interesting now than to see some good contests between the product of their expatriated sires crossed upon American blood and their purely native grown and raised productions?

What is now most wanted to give stability to the breeding and racing undertakings of the State, which have done as much as anything of recent years to keep attention fixed upon California, is that the circle of interest should be widened and their general tone elevated. To secure these objects and off-set any attempts to tamper with the welfare of either pursuit, which properly conducted are entirely legitimate and in every way desirable, no effort should be spared to encourage the support of distant communities and the active co-operation of local men of the best standing in the current work of these two inseparable parts of one of our leading industries. The failure of late to sustain racing in other parts of the States has redounded to the advantage of California and it is admitted by everyone capable of forming a competent judgment on the point that, if matters progress here as they have been doing, the Pacific Coast will before long come very near being the best quarter in America for the operations of men who seek pleasure, combined with profit, on the race-course and the many enjoyable associations surrounding it when rightly taken advantage of. For centuries the sport has been patronized by men of the highest ability and position in every country, and while that is the case anywhere there need be no fear of evil results to the general community.

It has now been finally decided by the two local jockey clubs to adhere to the arrangement under which the racing season is to end on the 15th instant, when the current meeting of the California Jockey Club at Emeryville will terminate, the Pacific Coast Jockey Club operations having been brought to a close at Ingleside last Saturday. This is without doubt a wise decision. At each track, however, a couple of extra days' sport will be provided, the proceeds to be set apart for the benefit of deserving public works and institutions. Both tracks will therefore be open for two days the week after next, the receipts at Ingleside being reserved for the Balboa Boulevard, the Woman's Exchange and the Veterinary College, and at Emeryville for the the Eye and Ear Ward of the Children's Hospital.

For those who enjoy a delightful outing El Campo is just the place. A beautiful ride on the bay, good music, dancing, boating and fishing and an excellent cuisine. Take the commodious steamer Ukiah from Tiburon ferry at 10.30 a.m., 12.10, 2.00 and 4.00 p.m. Returning leave El Campo at 11.15 a.m., 1.00, 3.00 and 5 p.m.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

Mme. A. Ruppert

New York London
Paris San Francisco

SOLE ORIGINATOR
OF

World - Renowned Face Bleach

FACE BLEACH has stood the test of 20 years, and is to-day acknowledged to be the best remedy known for Blackheads, Oily Skin, Pimples, Freckels and all Facial Blemishes.

FACE BLEACH sells at $2.00 per bottle, or three bottles (sometimes required) for $5.00, and will be sent to any address on receipt of price, in plain wrapper.

FACE BLEACH is not an "enamel," which merely covers up the defect, but a true skin tonic, its action being to throw off all impurities from the skin. Send for my book, "How to be Beautiful," free.

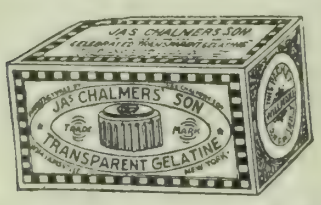
MME. A. RUPPERT begs to announce to the ladies of San Francisco that she has recently removed to rooms 15–16, 131 Post street, where she hopes to receive the same patronage as formerly.

MME. A. RUPPERT,
Rooms 15–16, 131 Post st., San Francisco.
Take Elevator.

PURITY

IS FOUND IN

Chalmers' Gelatine



Endorsed by Professor Doremus as "A Pure Gelatine and Best for Family Use."

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood & Sherwood

SAN FRANCISCO

PORTLAND AND LOS ANGELES

Polished Hardwood Floors

$1.50 per Square Yard

Fine Work—First-class References

INLAID FLOOR CO.

602 Market St., Crocker Building

Telephone Main 5998

Sale of Books

WM. DOXEY is now selling Standard Works and fine Library Editions at greatly reduced prices . . . . . .

Doxey's 631 Market Street San Francisco

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS

AGENTS

222 Market Street S. F.

Retiring from Business!

$75,000 STOCK OF JAPANESE GOODS

Must be sold at Auction at 116 Sutter Street without limit or reserve, commencing Monday, April 26th, and continuing daily at 11 a. m and 2:30 p m. T. A. McDONALD, Auctioneer.

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

The Lion Fire Insurance Co. Limited of London. Total Cash Assets in United States, $885,797.09

The Imperial Insurance Co. Limited of London. Established on Pacific Coast in 1852

WM. J. LANDERS, Resident Manager

PACIFIC COAST BRANCH

205-207 Sansome Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. D. Cheshire, Pres and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres. W. O. Macdougall, Secretary

California Undertaking Company

Finest Funeral Parlors in the City

Tel. Main 971 S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel

200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny

48 Eighth Street, or

St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

A LITERARY DUET

The Editor and His Wife Discuss the Newest Novels.

"Talk of earnestness and conviction," said the Editor to his wife, "just read Olive Schreiner's indictment of Cecil Rhodes."

"Has she not given Christ a speaking part and made Him enunciate her own system of political economy?" asked his spouse ironically. "Writers should be forbidden to interpret the divinity without letters patent or some other authorization."

"I object to the form rather than to the characters of 'Trooper Peter Halkett,'" explained the Editor. "Mrs. Schreiner is undoubtedly moved by the holiest motives, but her Christ delivers diatribes containing more paragraphs than the Sermon on the Mount did words. Besides, He is prosaic and prolix."

"Substitute for Cecil Rhodes and the Chartered Company our own General Miles and the American army—quite as powerful a plea might be made against our own nation on behalf of the Indians as Mrs. Schreiner makes for the Matabeles," added his wife. "The book is a sublimated political tract, my dear, the voice of a partisan, passionate, sincere, but after all only a modified Mrs. Partington—trying to delay the tide of conquest with a pamphlet."

"It is true, one nation of conquerors is not much better than another, though the Spaniards are worse," mused the Editor. "Yet of the millions of Indians who once inhabited America, how many thousands have we left? Rhodes is a hero to half the generation; he will be a historical character twenty years hence. As for Olive Schreiner, she is a woman of one book. There is great literary ability in the descriptive background here and in the characterization of Peter Halkett, but everything is subordinated to enforcing the moral—and it is, that the Chartered Company should be hanged."

"I think the man who wrote 'Flames' should be burnt in effigy," announced his wife, who, it may be noticed, has determined ideas about things.

"Hitchens is a clever fellow," remonstrated the Editor, "why roast him? Did he not write the "Green Carnation," which is really the cleverest satire of the decade? He has a good style and a dramatic sense—excellent qualities, you must admit."

"Admitted," interjected his spouse, "but with all your facts 'Flames' is still unendurable. The man has out-Corellied Marie Corelli. He has made something between a 'Hill top' novel and a 'Family Herald' serial. The heroine is a courtesan, the heroes, two miraculous young gentlemen, one of whom—known as 'The Saint of Victoria Street,' a person of great beauty and supreme purity—acts unconsciously as guardian angel of his friend, Julian Addison. The latter is as intensely human as Valentine Creswell is spiritual, and they live in delightful chambers with the most precious decorations. Both talk a Miss Nancy type of dialogue, and are such preposterous prigs that Cuckoo Bright, the heroine, becomes a human being in comparison."

"Of course she is beautiful and attractive, this Cuckoo, to justify her role as heroine," suggested the Editor. "There must be some excellent excuse for the introduction of persons of that class. Now there is La Gallienne's 'Golden Girl.' He found her on the street, and perversely made her his ideal woman. She made a melodramatic climax, even if she did reflect on her creator."

"Not a bit of it," insisted his wife. "Cuckoo is a vulgar and ugly creature, who paints and powders and wears outrageous clothes. Mr. Hitchens certainly does not make his Thais a belle. Indeed, the book is not immoral, but, rather, stupid, and almost interminable."

"I cannot believe Hitchens guilty of stupidity," interrupted the Editor. "He has a deliberate and mincing manner of phrasing, and does create preposterous people, but the context should be smart."

"It is all about an interchange of souls, insisted his wife, impatiently. "Valentine, the perfect youth, growing tired of his extreme refinement, desires to experience sin. About this time he and Addison begin to experiment with table-turning, and after a few sittings develop strange phenomena. In spite of warnings from Dr. Levillier, who has presentiments of evil, they continue, and the consequence is that Valentine's soul elopes, and its earthly habilament is usurped by one Marr, the villain of the piece. In the guise of friend and to preserve his power, Marr now attempts to ruin Julian, and it is here that Cuckoo comes in. She, though debased, is possessed by the escaped flame, which is Valentine's soul, and assisted by Dr. Levillier rescues Julian, whom she loves with an immaculate love. Oh, but the book is harrowing rubbish—though there are, as you stipulate, some excellent passages of description. It is the waste of a real talent that is most deplorable in the exhibit."

"He'll recover," the Editor reassured her. "Some good physician should prescribe for Hitchens a diet of Swift and Fielding, and then send him off to New Mexico for a course of cowpunching. I fear his particular affectation of style and subject may become stereotyped and spoil permanently a talent from which we have a right to expect more than has yet been given us. But tell me of 'The Ape, the Idiot, etc.,' the book by W. C. Morrow, of which I have heard so much."

"The name," began his wife a bit pompously, "is rather a misnomer, though it does whet one's interest. But there is a virile power of imagination in the stories. The manner often reminds one of Bierce, whom I think one of the greatest of short story writers. The plots are strange, weird, impressive, but often hampered in the telling. One feels the ideas might have been better managed. This does not apply to the 'Permanent Stiletto'—an admirable story, nor to 'Little Wang Tai,' which is better written than its companions. The 'Inmate of the Dungeon,' 'Treacherous Velasco,' 'Two Singular Men' and the 'Amulet' are below the average, which is heightened by 'His Unconquerable Enemy.' The 'Monster Maker' reminds one of 'The Island of Dr. Morceau'—that remarkable story by H. G. Wells. 'An Uncommon View of It' has a suggestion of De Maupassant's 'A Coward,' with none of the depth of that inimitable study. What a pity Morrow never found a Flaubert. Still they are the best set of short stories I have read since 'The King in Yellow,' and the original talent in Mr. Morrow is finer than that of Chamber's."

"Think with what acclaim these tales would be hailed were they written in London," commented the Editor. "There one finds a market for just such strong, stirring stories. Look at the reputation Robert Barr has achieved with half the power."

"Mr. Morrow's defect," returned his wife, "is haste in construction. I judge so, at least. Such an idea as that in the 'Stiletto' is worthy a dozen re-writings. He should subject his style to the discipline which Stevenson underwent. Then he would achieve results which would make him a great reputation."

"Shall I tell you of this flaring tome on 'Devil-Worship in France?' asked the Editor yawning. "It is an argumentative defense of Freemasonry from the imputations of certain churchmen, and others who have accused the order of participating in diabolism—black masses, and all that sort of thing. The author establishes in his preface a premise which he negatives in his conclusions and destroys the effect of his defense. Still there are strange tales of curious practices in the volume, though I'd recommend you to 'The Doctrine and Ritual of Transcendent Magic' if you really desire to practice the black art."

"By way of relief," said his wife, "turn to 'Kakemonos'—more short stories, by a man who knows the East, W. Carleton Dawe. Here you have the real Japanese and the veritable Chinamen, and quite as often their wives and daughters. Each story is a tragedy in brief, told with no circumlocution and little elegance of diction. There is a preface and a climax, and an adventure between, and though this series is not as good as its predecessors, they have both atmosphere and interest—quite a combination, by the way."

"Almost as affecting as being sleepy and tired," said the Editor, as he rose to go to bed. C.

---

STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, } ss.
LUCAS COUNTY. }

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of One Hundred Dollars for each and every case of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

FRANK J. CHENEY.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 6th day of December, A.D. 1886.

A. W. GLEASON,
[SEAL] Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

☞ Sold by druggists, 75c.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL F. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,983,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE THEATRES

De Wolf Hopper's Oratory — A Capital Company.

I had the good fortune to hear "El Capitan" the first night it was produced in New York. It was early in June of last year. The summer hegira had commenced, and the house was not, if I remember, more than comfortably filled. The "profession" was very much in evidence, with Lillian Russell very prominent and self-conscious in a box, but the New York audience that greeted Hopper and his dainty little wife on their return from a long Western tour was not more friendly, not more enthusiastic or appreciative than the Baldwin audience on Monday night. There was a sweet old lady in an upper box at the New York performance, who was so delightfully appreciative that I fell to watching her, for she was a most interesting figure. Ordinarily first-nighters at the Baldwin do not grow demonstrative, and a violently enthusiastic person is looked upon somewhat as an interloper and intruder. But this was not so on Monday night, and had that white-haired and gentle-faced old lady occupied a box at the Baldwin her enthusiasm would have passed unnoticed, so general was the appreciaton of the opera.

Hopper is one of my theatrical idols. He is somewhat more than the best comedian on the comic opera stage—he is the cleverest extempore speaker I know of among stage folk. He has brains and wit of his own, and sometimes I feel sorry to see him prancing about the stage to amuse his audience. Fortunately he does not overdo it, for what would be readily accepted from a man of lesser stature would be almost fatal to his success, despite his abilities.

I fully expected the scenery would show signs of wear and tear, and the tights and costumes signs of age and dirt, for "El Capitan" has now been running almost a twelvemonth, and according to all the rules these signs should be in evidence. I am told, however, that Hopper had all the scenery touched up, and most of the costumes renewed and replaced, for our especial benefit, for he was anxious that we should like "El Capitan." A friend who was behind the scenes Monday night tells me he was "tickled to death" over his reception, and that his dainty little wife was so nervous that she forgot some of her lines.

"El Capitan" is a success, with a strong emphasis on the "is." Musical people, who affect great wisdom in such matters, smiled a little over the idea of Sousa writing an opera. They associated his musical ability and his musical possibilities with "poon-pah, poon-pah," marches, having a popular swing; but he has shown that he can rise to higher things and write sweet, delicate little melodies as well. I have no hesitancy in prophesying that Sousa will become famous as a comic opera composer. He will be our American Sullivan, and I doubt not that before many years have passed we will have a number of Sousa operas, and the boys on the street will be whistling their airs just as they are now whistling his marches.

The company that the Hoppers bring with them is excellent in every detail. Nella Bergen is not the Isabelle of the New York cast, but she sings the part as well as the original, and has a better stage presence. Midigua's wife (Alice Hosmer) rather appeals to me, with such enthusiasm, earnestness and good grace does she enter upon her work. "El Capitan" is "something to be seen," and you do not want to say you missed it, after the company has departed.

B.

THE BIGGEST POKER-GAME

George Albro, a tall and melancholy consumptive, who now lives in Pomona Valley, was in his early days a noted gambler and one of the boldest among the contingent of players who tempted fortune in Nevada. There is little about his face to indicate the profession he followed—a quiet, thin-faced man, who looks at you through a pair of piercing black eyes, and might be a banker or a college professor. Yet in his time George Albro has handled the cards with the quickest men on both sides of the continent, and be the play fast or loose, he was never known to turn a hair or miss a point. The biggest poker game Albro ever saw was in Virginia City, Nev., when the Comstock mines were turning out $60,000 a day to the Bonanza firm. It was in the gambling house of Gentry & Crittenden, who ran the most prodigal institution on the continent. This firm every month set aside $3,000 for table expenses alone, for wine flowed as freely as spring water at Saratoga. A bettor did not ask if there was a limit to the game. A sport who had sand and cash enough might bet $20,000 on a single card. The bank's backers counted their millions as Eastern gamesters counted their thousands.

In October, 1870, a big bluffer of a silver mine owner named Calkins came to Virginia City. He owned the richest silver mine in New Mexico at that time, and could have sold his property any day for a million and a half. He was known as a millionaire in good standing with the San Francisco banks and bankers, and his telegram was good with Mackay, Flood & O'Brien for $500,000. The old fellow, with his corduroy trousers tucked in his boots and his greasy, dirty sombrero and his stogy cigars, was a welcome guest anywhere in Nevada. He chatted an hour with Governor Nye, and after getting two bottles of champagne inside of him he sauntered into the faro room.

"Give me a stack of thousand-dollar fish [chips]," said Calkins.

"Certainly, all you want," replied the suave Crittenden, a nephew of the Kentucky United States Senator of that name.

One thousand went on the jack and was lost. Calkins lost $10,000 without winning a bet. He swore and got outside another bottle of wine. Luck changed, and at 1 A. M. he was $50,000 ahead of the game. Flushed with victory, Calkins ordered a case of wine for the house. But the genius of faro is fickle. The old man made a call with a $1,000 bill and picked up $5,000. Luck failed him from that moment. At break of day the burly fellow, without handling a dollar, had blown in just $41,000. He was as cross as a bear with a sore head, but tried to smile.

"One thousand on the ace." It lost. Old Calkins rose and said slowly, as if each word weighed a pound: "Crittenden, I reckon I've had fun enough for this one jamboree," and ordering a basket of wine for the house he seated himself at Gentry's desk, and, cool as a cucumber, drew a check on Mackay's bank for $42,000. When the wine was opened the dealer, in a matter-of-fact way said: "This game is now closed."

GOWNS AND STUFFS

The Latest Fancies in Organdies and Muslins.

You complain, Barbara dear, that I have been very dilatory in the matter of news for the past month or two, and aver that my letters have simply been filled with my charities, clubs and matters of that sort, which, to the Parisian, is decidedly lacking in vital interest. Well, I am in the wrong as usual, but shall try to make amends by telling you all I know about fashion in distant San Francisco. What we are wearing and how we are wearing it. One thing which will surprise and delight you to learn is that shirt waists and black stuff skirts are no longer considered good form to wear shopping. Instead, pretty, cool-looking lawn frocks are to be adopted by the grande monde. We are tired of being confounded with the working classes, so will leave them the economical shirt waist and wear whole gowns of lawns.

I have seen a number of very smart-looking ones in dainty blue and green plaids and checks. The grass linens made over silk are most stunning, and come in lovely patterns. I particularly admire a suit made over black. The linen had a satin stripe, and belt and stock were of the black satin. We have endless pretty designs for these lawns. A charming suit was of plaid grass linen made over shot silk and trimmed with the lawn lace or embroidery that comes with the dress patterns. Another novelty is the poplinette, which is a cross between a crepe and a poplin, combining the virtues of both. This comes in the loveliest shades, and is to take the place of India silk and foulard. It drapes beautifully, being soft and wiry, besides looking delightfully cool. A gray crepe poplin I admired particularly had three bias folds around the bottom of the skirt, one of white taffeta, the others of the poplinette. The waist had a yoke of white taffeta with bias folds of the crepe across the bust, narrowing into a white taffeta girdle.

A great many of the summer silks have the sun plaited skirts. I saw a stunning one in brown and white checked silk—the waist was of plain brown silk, the sleeves had the upper portion plain, the lower part of the checked silk. The wearer was a very stout woman, but the style of the skirt made her quite Slyph-like in appearance. The sad part is, however, that the sun plaited skirts have all to go East. They can make accordion plaitings here, but not sun plaits, so the dressmakers cut the skirts, then send them to New York to be plaited. Is not that a horrid bore? The organdies were never lovelier, and now that the girls have discovered that they can be cleaned intact they are all wearing them. A particularly pretty one was of blue organdie over pale blue silk. The skirt was corded in points. The baby waist cut low and edged with cream lace. A ceinture of violet ribbon edged with a quilling of taffeta and big bunch of violets on the shoulder completed this effective gown.

A dainty summer toilette was of white foulard, with heliotrope and gray scroll effect, made with shirrings and insertions of lace.

Of the more elaborate gowns the etamines and grenadines take the first rank. A green lace etamine lined with light changeable green silk was very stunning. The waist was tucked horizontally, each tuck being bound with light green silk. A yoke of white tucked bengaline silk had fetching little emerald buttons mounted in gold running down the shoulders. A girdle of broad black satin cut high at the sides crossed in front and was fastened with three large emerald pins.

A dinner gown was in blue Delft silk organdie made over blue silk. It had a yoke of fine Mechlin lace made in puffs and drawn down into a broad sash edged with blue quilling. Round the bottom of the skirt were three fluted ruffles bound with white taffeta. A bewitching gown, which literally caused me to be consumed with envy, was of bright red grenadine made over red plaid silk. The waist had a finely tucked yoke. Below the chest it was puffed and drawn in to an apple green satin sash. The collar was of green and a lace jabot fell on one side. Then there was a stomacher of green velvet jeweled in rhinestones and emeralds. The skirt was plain, save round the bottom, which was trimmed with three little puffs.

A blue lavender foundation, over which was placed a heliotrope silk grenadine, was fetching. The whole gown was bound in lavender, and a white yoke softened the effect near the face.

Cashmere is again being generally worn. A dear little frock was of dark green cashmere trimmed with black baby ribbon. The waist had rows and rows of baby ribbon interlaced. Above was a yoke of white satin tucked and coming down on left side a jabot of melon pink and apple green ribbon. A narrow black belt encircled the waist.

A particularly smart tailor-built frock was of red serge trimmed around the bottom of the skirt with bias folds of black satin forming a crescent. Where they crossed little buckles of bright steel were attached. The jacket was cut Zouave and trimmed with folds of satin. A broad black satin belt and a fancy shirt waist went with this costume. Of the new materials I particularly like the damask silks, the mirror poplins, the art satins and the satin foulards. And now, Barbara dear, I have given you a short account of our doings as regards dress, so must say farewell for another aeon or two. Your loving BETTY.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure rtock, and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

THE CENTURY COMPANY

announces an educational competition. It is on a most interesting and original plan. Thirty-five prizes, amounting to $1000 (first prize $500), will be given for the best answers to one hundred and fifty questions. The topics selected deal with matters of general information; they are not scholastic, but are educational. Your training at school was only mental drill; you have forgotten all you learned there but "reading, writing, and arithmetic." You will never forget the information derived from answering these questions, because every one deals with a living and useful fact. No cube-roots, no parsing, no memorizing of dates; instead, the learning of things that every one ought to know. If you make an honest attempt to win, you will learn to concentrate your mind, sharpen your wits, secure most valuable information, and stand a good chance of making $500 (perhaps $1000; see below). If you gain first prize, the knowledge you have acquired will be worth more to you than the $500 you receive.

$1000 in 35 Prizes

$500 First Prize

To find the answers to these questions you must use the encyclopedic material in The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia, because these, like thousands of others, can best be answered by reference to this great work. If you do not already possess a set, you can easily procure one. A limited number of clubs are now being formed for the purchase of sets at the lowest wholesale price. Each person joining a club (and those who apply at once can join) secures his set at a large reduction, and has the further privilege of paying for it in small monthly payments. A first payment of $5 will bring you the work and enable you to try for the first prize of $500, as well as the supplementary prize of $500 more.

SMALL MONTHLY PAYMENTS

The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia

The one hundred and fifty questions are divided into three sets of fifty each. A month is allowed to answer each set. Try them at home. They will be an intellectual recreation for you and your family; also a good test of your ability to deal with words and facts. Have your children try them—it will be a real education for them. Write to us for sample questions, to see how instructive and useful they are, or for a description of the work.

$500 More! We offer a further prize of $500 to the competitor who, laying aside The Century, succeeds most successfully in answering 90 per cent of these questions from ten other works of reference, no matter in how many volumes each is published. This offer is made for the purpose of showing that The Century is superior not to any other one work of reference, but to any other ten.

The Century Co., New York

(Department H. T.)

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,

201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.

GEO. H. KAHN,

201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-314 POST ST.

Haywards Park Club House

At the terminus of Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railway. Concert every Sunday during the season from 1 to 5 p. m. The Club House will be conducted under the management of Mrs Rachael Hayward, whose reputation as a purveyor and hostess is unequalled.

Take Oakland Ferry at the foot of Market street on the hour or half hour to Fruitvale Station. The Haywards Electric Cars make connections for Park without change

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

Commencing Monday, May 10th, Second and Last Week

DE WOLF HOPPER

PRESENTING

SOUSA'S BRILLIANT OPERA El Capitan

Second and Last Week!

Monday, May 17th, NAT C. GOODWIN in "An American Citizen," "The Rivals," "David Garrick," etc.

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

Commencing Monday, May 10th

RICE'S GORGEOUS $30,000 EXTRAVAGANZA

EXCELSIOR JR.

Seventy people in the ensemble, including SADIE MARTINOT and JOE CAWTHORN

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, May 10th

Direct from the Antipodes, The Eclair Brothers, the Crocodile and Demon

Return of the World's Greatest Tenor, A. L. Guille

Edmund Martin's Educated Dogs

In conjunction with Fleurette and her four Fleurs-de-Lis Mlle. Ani, Tacianu, Edwin Latell, The Midgleys, The Andersons

Concerts in the Annex every afternoon between 4 and 6 and evenings after the regular performance by the Vienna Ladies' Orchestra

Reserved seats 50 and 25c: balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Every Evening

The Triumph of the Season, the Romantic Irish Opera

Shamus O'Brien

With MR. DENIS O'SULLIVAN, the Eminent Baritone, the creator of the title role

Great cast, correct costumes, appropriate accessories

Next, the great Vienna success, Captain Fracassa, the Prince of Liars. A catchy comic opera

Popular Prices . . 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager

Last performances of An American Hero

Commencing Monday, May 10th, Immense New Production of Davis & Keock's Picturesque Comedy-Drama of New York Life

"THE WHITE RAT"

Reproducing Remarkable Phases of City Life! The Sailor Dance Hall! The Salvation Army! The Chinese Opium Joint!

Special engagement of Johnson & Harvey, Musical Chinese Impersonators. New Songs, Specialties, etc.

Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

GRAND CHORAL CONCERTS

BY THE

Stanford University and Apollo Choral

SOCIETIES

Stanford University, May 8th, 8 p. m.

Seats, 50 and 75 cents

Metropolitan Temple, Saturday, May 15th, 8 p.m.

Tickets, including Reserve, 50 cents

Sr tickets at Sherman, Clay & Co. April 14-15

Vocalists: Mrs. Frank L. Wratten, Mrs. Edith Scott Busford, Mr. W. S. Edgerton, Mr. Herbert E. Medley

Instrumentalists: Otto Bendix, Nat Landsberger

Accompanists: H. J. Stewart, Organ; Fred Maurer Jr Piano

THE LATEST NEW YORK STYLES

IN

Men's Hats

AT

FISHER'S 9 Montgomery Street

La Grande Laundry

Telephone Bush 21

23 POWELL STREET

RACING

Close of the Ingleside Meeting — Concluding Days at Emeryville.

The closing week at Ingleside furnished pretty good sport.

Of the two-year-old division Elsmore, Miss Remsen, Little T. G., and Rey Salazar all earned winning brackets, while Front de Boeuf and Torsida, with much the worst of the weights anu the starts, ran bang-up seconds.

One of the best performances of the week was that of Caesarian, carrying 117 lbs. and easily beating Zamar, 100 lbs., Torsina, 109 lbs. and Vinctor, 117 lbs., ¾ mile in 1.13¾. The winner is one of that rare sort that is as good as he looks, combining speed, courage and weight-carrying capacity all in a comparatively small compass, just the type of horse for circular courses.

Another event calling for notice was a seven furlongs purse, $500, in which the following were the runners:—Tea Rose, 90 lbs., Good Times, 108 lbs., Ruinart, 121 lbs., and Wheel of Fortune, 104 lbs, and in this order they finished. The first named made all the running and won at her pleasure, the rest well strung out. Ruinart entirely failed to extend himself or make any attempt at racing and it seems a great pity that a good horse, as he proved himself to be over a fair distance of ground in two sterling races recently, instead of being eased up, should have been kept in hard training for a paltry purse short of his distance and then be found unable to make any show. The result was not at all surprising to those who had considered the matter, and there was evidently a serious lack of racing judgment somewhere.

Saturday, May 1, was the 87th and closing day of the winter meeting at Ingleside. A good programme was set and the P. C. J. C. hospitably entertained many guests at their cosy club-house during the afternoon.

Unfortunately the promising contest between Buckwa, Ruinart, Altamar anu The Roman fell through.

The improving filly Rosormonde, carrying top weight, 115 lbs., easily captured a 4½ furlongs purse, and Towanda, 110 lbs, also top weight, landed another event for two-year-olds. In neither instance were the fields of the best class.

The Ingleside Stakes, $4,000, a handicap, four miles, was the center-piece of the day, and out of an original entry of forty-seven five faced the gate, namely, Schiller, 4 yrs., 112 lbs., Marcel, 6 yrs., 109 lbs., Can't Dance, 4 yrs., 102 lbs., Little Bob, 4 yrs., 100 lbs, and Lucrezia Borgia, 4 yrs., 92 lbs. The first-named, with his win in the 4 miles Thornton Stakes across the bay two months ago to his credit, was the hero of the paddock, while of the others Marcel was perhaps most noticed. The mare with the historical Roman name came in for a good deal of remark on the strength of a 3 miles trial in 5.29½, while Can't Dance, though not in perfect trim, had many admirers, the small chestnut gelding, Little Bob, not attracting much attention from anyone, though he looked fit and full of muscle. On the whole there was an apparent want of class, but we were given a race, notwithstanding, that is not likely to be forgotten in a hurry, and one that was certainly an eye-opener in more ways than one.

To a fair start the five runners set out at a good pace, Lucrezia Borgia taking up the running, with Schiller a couple of lengths in her rear and Little Bob in immediate attendance on the latter, until about the third of the route had been disposed of, when the little gelding ranged up alongside the mare, the rest of the field dropping back several lengths. In the third mile Little Bob made a series of spurts with only partial success, in order to hold his ground with the Boots' mare who was setting a cracking pace. Schiller, Can't Dance and Marcel following on from ten to fifteen lengths in the rear, waiting opportunity. As the last half mile was entered upon Little Bob was seen to be working his way to the front. Soon after securing a bare lead he faltered for a second, but persevering with thorough gameness came into the stretch with a head to the good; Marcel 8 to 10 lengths away and Can't Dance half the same distance in her rear, Schiller out of it. As they traveled along the straight the two leaders were in sore trouble, Little Bob with but three legs to get him home, and Lucrezia Borgia with the little pigmy on her back a helpless passenger. This was Marcel's opportunity, and Hennessy made a push for victory, but too late to catch the chestnut pony whom little Clawson landed with three lengths to spare, Marcel second, beating Lucrezia Borgia half a length, Can't Dance a couple of lengths behind her, Schiller pulled up and out of reckoning. Time: 1st mile 1.54; 2nd, 1.55¼; 3rd, 1.45¼; 4th, 1.50. Total, 7.24½, being the next best performance in California to that of imp. Star Ruby, 7.23¾ in 1896.

The winner is the property of W. Fisher and was bred by the late Senator Hearst in this State, being Surinam, a son of the redoubtable Joe Hooker, dam Daisy S. by Longfield. As he struggled back to the scales it was seen that Little Bob was gone in front and bleeding at the nose, while Marcel and The Roman mare were comparatively fresh. Schiller, in this race was a rank failure. Piggott did not seem to be able to get him steadied and during the first half of the distance was riding like a butcher boy and hauling him from side to side, instead of giving and taking with him in his stride. Without any wish to depreciate a very game performance on the part of the winner, it may be said that it looked in the run in as if Marcel could have landed the stake, had she been called upon for an effort somewhat earlier.

Monday last the final installment of the Emeryville meeting was begun.

In the hands of Marty Bergen and at even weights Torsida got the better of Rey Salazar by three lengths in a ⅝ths-mile purse and the following day Denial, by imp. Deceiver, took the ½-mile sprint his first time out, beating Lord Marmion, a fair St. Carlo colt, pretty easily. Another St. Carlo youngster, Count of Flanders, easily beat Los Prietos, by imp. Clieveden, who just squeezed his head in front of the St. Carlo colt Charles Le Bel, all three at the same weight, 106 lbs.

Being in fine trim the black Fresno colt Ostler Joe, with 107 lbs up, on Monday galloped away from a fair field including Satsuma, 111 lbs., Vinctor, 111 lbs., second and third respectively, 1 1-16 miles in the almost record time in California of 1.46¾. This horse has been coming on well of late and ought to make a name for himself in Montana at the coming summer meeting.

On Wednesday he capped this excellent performance by making a new California record for 1⅛ miles, namely 1:53, carrying 102 lbs., against Buckwa, 118 lbs., the only other runner, making all his own running and winning with ease.

BENEDICT.

---

Entries for the forthcoming Kennel Club show will close on the 10th instant. The prospects are excellent and the event is likely to far surpass any show of the kind held on this coast previously.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG.

The Tavern of Castle Crag was built in the heart of the Sierras, almost at the foot of Mount Shasta, and amid the most picturesque mountain scenery accessible to the tourist. The eligibility of the place selected was due to a rare combination of flowing water, inspiring mountain scenery and inviting forests.

The Tavern of Castle Crag, with its splendid environment, it was believed would appeal chiefly to those who seek a summer resort for health, recreation, outdoor sports, sympathy with nature and informal sociability. To emphasize this intention and signify the kind of invitation extended, the name TAVERN of Castle Crag was chosen.

To avoid all implication of sumptuous accommodations or the tyranny of social formalism, and to realize this original conception, the management has decided to make the Tavern of Castle Crag distinctively a family resort and especially attractive to those to whom health, recreation and sympathy with nature are paramount considerations. To this end rooms on the first and second floors of this splendid tavern with board will be furnished at a monthly rate of $65 a person; and rooms on the third floor with board at a monthly rate of $50 a person.

The accommodations of the Tavern are first class in every particular. Its parlors and halls are elegant and spacious. Its verandas are cool and inviting, placing the guest always in the presence of the most attractive mountain scenery to be enjoyed from the balcony of any tavern in the world.

The opportunity for out door sports embraces hunting, fishing, riding, bicycling, walking on mountain paths and driving on picturesque roads. The Tavern is located immediately on the main trunk line of the California & Oregon Railroad, and is fourteen hours' ride from San Francisco, twelve hours from Stockton, ten hours from Sacramento, thirty hours from Los Angeles and twenty-three hours from Portland. The Tavern of Castle Crag is reached from San Francisco and Sacramento without loss of time. The train leaves San Francisco at 8 o'clock p. m., arriving early the following morning for breakfast, which is always ready upon the arrival of the train. Returning, the train time affords equal accommodation. Thus, both in going and in coming the comfort of the passenger and the economy of his time have been studied. In brief, the Tavern of Castle Crag realizes to its guests the perfect ideal of that spring-time in the high altitudes of the Sierras which never becomes high summer, and is the comfortable home of pleasing recreation and restful repose.

For particulars apply to

GEORGE SCHONEWALD,

Room 59, Union Trust Building, San Francisco.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Are worthless names forged? Or unpopular goods imitated?

No.

Because it isn't worth while.

Therefore the extensive counterfeiting of our labels and capsules is the strongest evidence of the merit of our

"Canadian Club" Whisky.

Beware of these counterfeits, and write us regarding anything which you suspect.

The quality of "CANADIAN CLUB" is always fully maintained.

Imitations are always inferior.

HIRAM WALKER & SONS, Lim'd, Walkerville, Canada.

Highland Springs

ON THE BORDER OF CLEAR LAKE

Lake County : California

The new hotel building, lighted by electricity. Finest dining room north of San Francisco. The greatest variety of Mineral Springs in America. Waters unsurpassed for health or pleasure. Open every day in the year. Boating, bathing, hunting and swimming. Swimming tank, dancing, lawn tennis, croquet, billiards, bowling, etc.

Take Stage at Pieta, shortest and best route to all points in Lake County

Round Trip from San Francisco, $8.00

Rates, $10 to $16 per week.

J. CRAIG, Manager.

San Francisco Office, 316 Montgomery Street.

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, May 3 to 17, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.

Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.

R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

DOG SHOW

Mechanics' Pavilion, May 19-20-21-22

The largest number of Dogs ever on exhibition on the Coast

Admission 50 cts. Children 25 cts.

A. B. SPRECKELS, President.

H. H. CARLTON, Secretary.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of

Artificial Stone in all its branches

Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty

Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

"SUTRO & CO."—TO WHOM IT MAY concern: Take notice that we, Therese Sutro and Charles Sutro, Jr., have formed a co-partnership for the transaction of business in the State of California and elsewhere, the office and principal place of business of the partnership being located in the City and County of San Francisco. The name, style and designation of the firm is SUTRO & CO. The full names of all the members of the said partnership, and their places of residence, are subscribed hereto.

San Francisco, April 7, 1897.

THERESE SUTRO,
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

CHAS. SUTRO, JR.
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Duly acknowledged before Geo. T. Knox, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, California, April 7, 1897.

Filed April 7, 1897.

C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By Wm. H. C. Johnson, Deputy Clerk.

ANNUAL MEETING

OF

The Yosemite Commission

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Commissioners to Manage Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove will hold its annual meeting in Yosemite Valley, at the Guardian's Office, on Wednesday, June 2d, 1897, at 11 o'clock a.m.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary.

San Francisco, Cal., April 27th, 1897.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Gould & Curry Silver Mining Co.

Assessment No. 81
Amount per share, 20 cents
Levied April 29, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 1, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, June 22, 1897

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of John Reidy, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, April 29, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. May 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. June 2d and 2d of each month thereafter

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, May 18, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, May 27, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

THE LATEST STYLES IN

CHOICE WOOLENS

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel

Bicycle and Golf Suits

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Peoples Tel. 195 Sunset Tel. 573 Black

THE

Dashaway Stables

130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.

E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

JOHNSON & CO.

New Spring Goods just arrived

Ladies' Jackets to order

Merchant Tailors

24 Montgomery Street

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

In photo-engraving, as in other lines of trade, you sometimes pay superior prices for inferior work. We guarantee superior work, by a new process, at moderate prices.

Send for estimates to

THE WAVE PUBLISHING CO.

24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

Wedding Presents

Nothing can be more appreciated for a wedding present than an imported odd piece of Furniture for the parlor or a lady's boudoir. If you visit the Art Rooms of the

P. Rossi Co.

117 Sutter Street

You will find the greatest collection of imported Furniture—French Cabinets, Italian Carving, Bric-a-Brac and whatever is necessary to richly decorate a fine residence.

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S
Original Budweiser Beer
THE FINEST BEER IN AMERICA
THE E. G. LYONS CO., Agents
508-12 Jackson Street.

United States Laundry
Office 1004 Market St.
TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable
DIAMOND "L" TEA
IMPORTED BY
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., San Francisco

Normann's Cafe
UNDER THE BALDWIN
is the best

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

One of the ablest of the Irish members in the House of Commons once said that the Irish landlords was so rapacious that "I believe, Mr. Speaker, if one of these fellows owned land in the heart of Africa, he wouldn't be there a week before he would have his hands in the pockets of the naked savages!" A coroner's jury in Wexford found that "the deceased came to his death from excessive drinking, producing apoplexy in the minds of the jury." The listeners were all touched with sympathy, as well they might be, on hearing the old farmer exclaim, as he pointed to the little country churchyard, "There is where my father and his father before him are buried, and where myself and Mary expect to be buried, too, if God spares our lives." Edmund Dwyer Gray, then Lord Mayor of Dublin and proprietor of the Freeman's Journal, said once: "Mr. Speaker, three-fourths of this bill is objectionable, and I cannot bring myself to vote for the other half."

Carlyle was terribly bored by the persistent optimism of his friend Emerson. "I thought," he said, "that I would try to cure him, so I took him to some of the lowest parts of London and showed him all that was going on there. This done, I turned to him saying, 'And noo, man, d'y believe in the deevil noo?' 'Oh, no,' he replied; 'all these people seem to me only parts of the great machine, and, on the whole, I think they are doing their work very satisfactorily!' "Then," continued the sage, "I took him doun to the House o' Commons, where they put us under the gallery. There I showed him 'ae chiel getting up after anither and leeing and leeing.' Then I turned to him and said, 'And noo, man, d'ye believe in the deevil noo?' He made me, however, just the same answer as before, and I then gave him up in despair."

An Irish gentleman was shooting with an English friend, a Mr. B. They had very little sport. So Mr. B. said, "I'll ask this countryman whether there are any birds about here." "No use to ask him," said his companion; "he'll only tell you lies." "I'll ask him at all events," said Mr. B. "My good man, are there any birds about here?" "Lots of birds, yer honor." "Tell me what sort of birds." "Well, now, your honor, there's grouses and woodcocks and snipes and ducks, and all sorts of birds." "Ask him," whispered the Irish gentleman, "whether there are any thermometers." "Tell me," said Mr. B., "do you ever see any thermometers about here?" "Well, now, your honor, if there was a nice frost, the place would be alive with them."

When Governor Sam Houston first visited Washington, he dined in a starched collar, with the President of the United States and the leading politicians. At the dinner he tasted champagne for the first time in his life. "Forty-rod" whiskey was good enough for politicians where he came from. But he enjoyed himself, and drank his share of the wine. Towards the end of the dinner olives were handed round. Houston had never seen olives, but tried one and put it back upon his plate. The President looked down the table. "How are you getting on, Governor Houston?" he asked. "Wal, President," said Sam, "I like your cider, but darn your pickles!"

The recent strike of lamplighters in Newcastle placed the gas company in an awkward position. The lamps in the city were for a time only partially lighted; but some of the clerks in the company's service volunteered their assistance, and were seen to be here and there with ladders, moving rapidly from lamp-post to lamp-post. Two of the helpers, wearing light overcoats, gaiters, high collars, &c., attracted some attention. "Ma word," exclaimed a washerwoman to her neighbor—"the lampleetors mut ha' geeten thor advance! See what mashors they are noo! Hardlees speak tiv a body like me!"

A man who kept a ferret, having to go into the country, left the cage with the ferret in charge of a neighbor till he should return. The neighbor incautiously opened the cage-door, and the ferret escaped. Whereupon the owner brought a claim against him for damages. The following was the decision of the learned Edinburgh magistrate before whom the case was brought. "Na doot," he said to the neighbor—"na doot ye was wrang to open the cage-door; but," he added, turning to the owner, "ye was wrang too. What not did ye no clip the brute's wings?"

The persistent officer-seeker is one of the terrors of official life in Washington. Congressman Shattuc of Cincinnati, whose notions of gentility are rather mixed, was giving a dinner at the Cochran, and on his way to the dining room with one of his guests, a particularly swell society woman, leaning on his arm, a seeker after employment rushed up to him with a paper. "What do you want?" asked Shattuc. "I want to go to Cuba, sir," said the man. "Go to h——l, sir; can't you see I'm with a lady?"

George W. Smalley tells a story of a certain guest at Strathfieldsay, the country home of the Duke of Wellington, who had proved himself a surly and uncommunicative companion. On the verge of leaving, he consulted a veteran diner-out, George Payne, as to how much he should tip the game-keeper. "I'd give him nothing," said his friend. "But will you give him anything?" asked the guest. "Oh, yes, I shall give him a five pound note, but I shall be asked here again and you never will."

General Grant, even at West Point, was noted for his coolness and nerve. One night the boys were having a feast in his room and were roasting a chicken when an officer rapped. There was a lively scattering. But Grant stood there, rigid, at "attention." The officer said sharply that there was a peculiar odor in the room. "I've noticed it," replied Grant, and the officer retired, properly impressed by the innocent look on the cadet's face.

A census officer in Ireland recently stated in his report that in a certain county "more men were married than women!" On being taken to task by his superiors for his "atrocious Irish bull," he denied its existence, and had the laugh on them when he said that in the county in question handsome and well-to-do widows were always in demand, and some of them had buried two or three husbands.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

The Ladies' Grill Room of the Palace

PERFECT SERVICE
FAULTLESS CUISINE
MODERATE PRICES
DIRECT ENTRANCE FROM MARKET STREET
OPEN UNTIL MIDNIGHT
SUPERIOR TO ANY IN AMERICA

EL CAMPO

The Steamer "Ukiah" will leave Tiburon ferry at 10.30 A.M., 12.10, 2.00 and 4.00 P.M. Returning leave El Campo at 11.15 A.M, 1.00, 3.00 and 5 P.M.

Music, Dancing, Bowling, Boating, Fishing and other amusements

REFRESHMENTS AT CITY PRICES!

The Popular Bay Resort!

NOW OPEN EVERY SUNDAY DURING THE SEASON

Fare, Round trip, 25c. Children, 15c.

INCLUDING ADMISSION TO GROUNDS

Hotel Rafael
SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort, Winter and Summer, of the Pacific Coast

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
Climate Unexcelled!
Magnificent Scenery!
The Sanitarium of the Pacific Coast.
Otis Elevators Electric Lights
Headquarters of the San Rafael Hunt-Club and Tennis Tournaments

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors

Pacific Congress Springs
HOTEL
SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS
SANTA CLARA COUNTY
Remodeled and under New Management
Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco
6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara
12 miles from San Jose
Address GEO. O. WATKINS,
523 Market St., S. F.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED
OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

The Hotel Richelieu
N. E. Cor. Van Ness and Myrtle Aves.
PRINCIPAL AND FINEST FAMILY HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
HOTEL RICHELIEU CO.

Hotel Bella Vista
1001 PINE STREET
Elegant Furnishings and Apartments
DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED
MRS. A. F. TRACY.

European Tours
When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's greatest Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowest rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.
THOS. COOK & SON
621 Market Street San Francisco

ANNUAL SPRING SALE
OF
ROAD, HARNESS, WORK AND DRAFT HORSES
AND SHETLAND PONIES
From the Ranchos of J. B. HAGGIN, Esq.
TO TAKE PLACE ON
Wednesday, May 12th
AT TEN O'CLOCK A. M.
At SALESYARD, Corner Market Street and Van Ness Ave., S. F.
KILLIP & CO.
Live Stock Auctioneers, 11 Montgomery St.

An opportunity for a safe investment is not always at hand. I have an exceedingly choice piece of property in Santa Barbara for sale at one hundred thousand dollars. It will pay interest on much more than its selling-price, and must presently increase in value nearly two-fold. You are not familiar with the opportunities here. Perhaps I can advise you.
LOUIS G. DREYFUS
SANTA BARBARA

SANTA FE LIMITED

On MONDAYS and THURSDAYS the first-class Pullman sleeping-car leaving at 5 p.m. connects at Barstow with the Santa Fe limited train carrying dining-car, buffet smoking-car and Pullman palace drawing-room sleeping-cars for both Chicago and St. Louis via Kansas City.
3½ days to Chicago or St. Louis, 4½ days to New York

SANTA FE EXPRESS
Leaves daily at 5 p.m. Pullman palace drawing-room, also modern upholstered tourist sleeping-cars through to Chicago via Kansas City. Annex cars for Denver and St. Louis.
Boston excursions via Kansas City, Chicago, Montreal and the White Mountains leave every Tuesday. St. Paul excursions every Sunday.
San Francisco ticket office, 644 Market Street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531. Oakland office, 1118 Broadway.

Fleurette, by Gelett Burgess The Cliff-Dwellers, by Frank Norris

The Gorgon's Head, by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins

THE WAVE

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

VOL XVI. No. 20 SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 15, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS.

THE EVENING'S NEWS

THE WAVE

's published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 15, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2-3 |
| Things and People: by Boswell Jr. | 7 |
| Cliff Dwellings: photos by Arnold Genthe | 4 |
| The Gorgon's Head; by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins | 5 |
| Retiring Mrs. Craigie | 5 |
| Berkeley Class-Day | 6 |
| Among Cliff-Dwellers; by Frank Norris | 6 |
| Coffee in Guatemala | 6 |
| For Sweet Charity | 7 |
| Fleurette; by Gelett Burgess | 8 |
| Scenes on a Guatemalan Coffee-Plantation | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Racing Prospect | 11 |
| New Books and Magazines | 12 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 13 |
| Ways to Wed | 13 |
| The Theatres | 11 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

ANOTHER PROFESSIONAL LABORER.

For some time now the ears of the public have been unvexed by the shrieks of the paid leaders of "Labor" demanding blood, riot, revolution, dynamite and the other usual items of their professional talk. The illustrious Debs, the ubiquitous Gompers and the voluble Sovereign have favored us with fits of protracted silence, which may have led the unthinking among us to the conclusion that the brains of "Labor" no longer resided in the lungs of its leaders, and that some of the leaders had even gone quietly to work—with their hands. But it is not by such work that such laborers earn their bread and beer, and it was only a question of time when we should be favored again with the old familiar talk of bullets and blood, barons and paupers, Shylocks and slaves. Even the paid leaders of "Labor" must do something for those who pay them, and it seems that a good gory speech discharged the obligation as well and as easily as anything else.

On Monday last the annual convention of the Western Federation of Miners assembled at Salt Lake City. One Edward Boyce, President of this Federation, delivered an address to the delegates, in which he banged the labor drum in a fashion so vigorous that he must have aroused some feeling of jealousy in the breast of the illustrious Eugene V. Debs, who was present, and, presumably, listening. This Boyce is a resident of Wardner, Idaho, a town in which the Miners' Union is wont to celebrate as one of the victories of organized labor the blowing up with dynamite during the Coeur d'Alene strike, of the Frisco Mill and the cowardly murder of a number of non-union workmen. From a distinguished citizen of such a town something bloodthirsty in the way of general recommendations for the improvement of the lot of the men who labor in mines might well be expected, and expectation in this case was not disappointed. Mr. Boyce solemnly disclosed to his delegates the provision of the Constitution of the Unitd Stats which ensures to the people the right to keep and bear arms. He interprets this article as a command, and urged his subjects to fulfill the duty which it imposes on them. He wants every member of his union to provide himself with the "latest improved rifle," and seems to think that the mere possession of these lethal weapons which, he declares, can be had from the makers at nominal prices, will convert the miners into finished soldiers, and he hopes to hear, two years hence, "the inspiring music of the martial tread of 25,000 armed men in the ranks of labor." Mr. Boyce would probably be indignant, supposing that he is a miner at all, with any pride in his craft, at the suggestion that the possession of a pick, a drill and a hammer would be sufficient to turn a common soldier into a skilled miner, qualified for admission to the Miners' Union. The Federation of Miners, if its President can have his way, will proceed soon to start a huge boycott on the National Guard, whose members Mr. Boyce calls "$13-a-month murderers." No soldier in the militia shall be eligible to membership in Boyce's Federation, and the members of the Federation are to withhold all support and patronage from anybody and everybody who is in the remotest degree connected with the State soldiery. After the usual uncomplimentary references to our corrupt judges, our corporate masters, the perfidy of politicians, the gilded dens of Wall street, the hyenas of capital, etc., etc., the broad-minded President urges upon his subjects to "get together, work together, fight together and vote together."

This address, if we are to believe the reporters, created a "profound impression." Why such an impression should be produced on any intelligent person is difficult to understand. If the same empty threats had not been made so many times before, and if the same ominous advice from similar sources had not been repeatedly disregarded by those to whom it has been so often given, there might, indeed, be cause for some apprehension. But Mr. Boyce is probably talking only for his salary, as many others in his position have talked and are still talking for a like consideration. Even if he is in earnest—even if he is honest in his ambition to be a leader of organized assassination—little is to be feared from a man whose shallow ignorance shines in every sentence of his speech. And nothing is to be feared from the criminal designs and desires of a set of men who are foolish enough to follow the lead of such a man as Boyce, and to pay him for his leadership. Such men may shout themselves hoarse in praise of the incendiary mouthings of their foremen talkers, but they cannot work together, fight together, or even vote together. The element of brains is essential to any effective combination, even for nefarious ends, and in that element the Federation of Miners is conspicuously deficient. They may be capable of forming temporary mobs for purposes of riot, arson or promiscuous murder, but they could succeed equally well in their efforts at crime without the necessity of assessing themselves to pay the salaries of Boyce and his kind. But if the Boyces are to be taken seriously the question would arise, are miners' unions organized for the purpose of mining or for fighting? If fighting is their purpose, whom do they intend to fight and what do they intend to fight for? If their ravings mean anything at all they mean that the natural enemies of the miners are those men who own and manage mines, and from this comes the conclusion that the armed legions for which Boyce longs are to be turned against their tyrannical employers. But all experience of the criminal outbreaks by organized labor denies this conclusion. It is not against employers that the little murder-wars of labor have been waged, but against laborers themselves. The tyrant Carnegie was not put in any peril of his life by the Homestead murderers, no railroad magnates were killed by the Debs forces in the petty insurrection three years ago, and no mining capitalists were done to death when the cowardly followers of Boyce blew up the Frisco Mill. It is the capitalists who suffer least in this war which is really a war of laborers against laborers, a war of the man who demands $4 for his day's labor against the man who is willing to take $3.50 for his.

It matters little against whom the federation of fighting miners may conclude to turn their arms, when they get them. Any section of our population which seeks to levy private war on any other section is certain to find arrayed against it the vast majority of the people, who have no private interest at stake, but who know that the only possible government for us is a government of law that shall be supreme over all. It is not the voice of the workingmen of the country that speaks in the ravings of Boyce, and the real laborers would be among the first to resent such utterances if they believed them to be seriously made. In the course of another generation at most the Boyces will be suppressed by the small minority of workingmen who now support and admire them.

WILLIAM B. CARR.

It is not often that the death of an ex political boss calls forth such kindly comment from the press and politicians of all factions and parties as that of William B. Carr. Men of such personal aggressiveness and power usually succeed, by the time death overtakes them, in creating so many enemies and so arousing the animosities of large bodies of people that the charitable maxim, "de mortius nil nisi bonum," affords but little protection to their post-mortem reputations.

But in Mr. Carr's case a happy exception has been made. He now gains from those who, during his life, spoke little good of him, a very gratifying eulogium. The secret of this peculiar condition must be looked for in the personal traits of the man. He was self-made in a very respectable sense. He worked his way by honest labor from the humble station of a journeyman bricklayer to that of a millionaire land-owner and mine-operator. He became not only a master of politics, but a master of industry, and contributed to his State works of physical improvement that will outlast our time and many generations of the future. His record of personal achievement is one of stimulus to the ambitious youth, and contains as little that it would be embarassing to narrate as that of any other of our early men of State mark. He was at all times American in his politics. There was no truckling and no false pretense. He made men his friends by proving his ability to lead, and held them to him by never breaking faith. "Bill" Carr was distinguished in our politics for his loyalty to old friends, and unselfishness. The men whom he fought for in 1860 he fought for in 1890. The party that gained his attachment when the war broke out held it till his death. He loved power, and no man ever held more within our borders, for two Governors, and two Senators, at least, were his, and all the places under many Federal chiefs were his to do with as his impulse moved.

But he made no money out of politics. The basis of his fortune was not the selling of offices or the handling of jobs, but good solid work with hand and brain. He lived a normal life, much like that that would have been his had he remained in his old State of Indiana and followed his early trade. The politics of saloon-bars was not to his taste, and his sympathies were singularly clean for a man of such rough early life and such sudden rise. It is a fact to be remarked that he was one of those political manipulators who believed it possible to gain his ends without going into slums for a following and recruiting his ranks at the gates of penitentiaries. He wanted men who would take orders, but he wanted men whom he could respect. And he wanted men who knew what American life was and what American institutions meant. He never lost the wholesome regard for American birth that his boyhood on the prairies brought him.

While others spent their time in searching after rich pockets in the mountain ledges, hoping to gain enough in one prize package to justify a return to their Eastern homes, Carr soon saw that this State had agricultural possibilities which were of greater consequence than any other. To save the lands of our great valleys from floods, to drive the rivers back into their proper channels and hold them there like wild animals trained to do domestic service—this was his earliest work of great importance. Then came the building of the initial link in the great railroad chain that bound West to East—a work for which he was ridiculed as a dreamer, but for which he was willing to take stock in the road itself, so great was his faith in California being something bigger than a mere mining camp. When he saw that almost one-half of this whole State was barren, raising nothing more useful than the coyote or the jackrabbit, his fertile and most practical mind undertook the turning of this manforsaken desert into a blooming garden. And the greatest irrigation system of our continent was the result. To contribute this much to the advancement of a State is surely a life's work well done. What of it, if he grew rich? What of it, if he owned land by the county, and rivers flowing through? To him who has done such rescue work the prizes ought to come. For him who makes two blades of grass to grow where grew but one before, a special blessing has been decreed.

"Bill" Carr, the political boss, has gone to join Sargent and Stanford and Low—men whose ambitions he helped to realize, and there will come after him many more to whose progress in life he contributed not a little. If his standards were not the highest man can conceive, at least it can be said that his achievement was not tainted by many vulgar practices. He met necessity often with the handiest weapon, but he tried to make it possible for an honest public opinion to be the only weapon needed.

THE OVERTHROW OF GREECE.

Just one month ago the people of Greece started with clamorous enthusiasm a war of aggression against the Ottoman Empire. After four weeks of continuous disaster, unredeemed, apparently, by a single exhibition of military capacity or by a single glorious feat of arms, the Greeks are waiting in humiliation to see on what terms they will be permitted to purchase a peace from the triumphant Turks. The representatives of the six great powers of Europe are the brokers who are engaged in negotiating the purchase, and it is perhaps fortunate for the Greeks that the powers against whose warnings the war was brought on are now willing to stand between the victor and the full fruits of his victory, just as, twenty years ago, the powers of Western Europe intervened between the then vanquished Turks and the victorious Russians.

Perhaps nobody, unless some of the enthusiastic Greeks themselves, anticipated at the beginning of the war an easy conquest for the arms of Greece. It was known that the forces of the Sultan on the frontier of Thessaly were numerically superior to those of King

George, but it was generally believed that this advantage would, in large part at least, be counterbalanced by the traditional lethargy of the Turks, by the deterioration of the quality and morale of the Turkish soldiery since the last war with Russia, by the financial difficulties of the Sultan's treasury, and finally by the superior preparation, intelligence and enthusiasm of the Greek army. Consideration of these points led many to believe that there would be, at the very least, a stubborn and creditable effort on the part of the Greek army to carry the war into Turkish territory, and, failing that, to make a protracted defense of their strong position on the frontier. In every respect the anticipations of the admirers and well wishers of the Greek people have been disappointed. With the exception of a trifling raid into Epirus without military significance and without result, the war has been fought out on Greek soil. From the very beginning of his forward movement against the pass of Milouna, the army of Edhem Pasha has not sustained even a serious check. There has been enough of maneuvering to demonstrate that the Turkish generals are better strategists and better tacticians than their Greek adversaries, and enough of fighting to show that the Turkish soldier in the ranks is a better fighting man than the Greek conscript or volunteer. The military reputation of the Turkish troops was left untarnished by their defeat in the last war with Russia, and the result of this brief campaign against Greece goes to show that they have not degenerated in the twenty years since Plevna.

So much has been written and extensively read recently on the great value of naval power in war that much was looked for from the operations of the Greek navy. It was known that the Sultan was practically destitute of ships of war, and it seemed as if the Greek fleet might by a bold stroke go far to make up for the deficiency of the Greeks in land forces. But the same incompetency that has brought ruin on the Greek army in Thessaly has apparently paralyzed the Greek navy. Beyond a futile bombardment of some Turkish batteries on the Gulf of Arta, in which the advantage, if any, remained with the Turkish gunners, not an effort seems to have been made by the Greek warships. The Turkish base at Salonica was, for a time at least, open to attack, but no demonstration was attempted against it. The reports that the harbor had been protected with submarine mines seem to have been sufficient to keep the Greeks at a distance. They failed to protect even their own sea base at Volo, which was captured by a detachment of the Turkish army operating against Pharsalos. If it be true that the Sultan has demanded as a part of the price of peace the surrender of the entire Greek navy, King George can do no better than to comply with the demand. The warships and torpedo boats are evidently useless in the hands of Greeks. In the possession of the Turks they may prove to be a source of additional expense that may hasten the financial collapse of the Sublime Porte.

The lesson of this short war has been a costly but perhaps, after all, a profitable one to the Greeks, if they have learned that wild enthusiasm is but a poor basis on which to wage war. A people who long for fighting and conquest in these days must be content to make patient preparation for the struggle long in advance. Enthusiasm after careful preparation may be a valuable auxiliary, but it is the poorest substitute for care and forethought. Some of our own noisy jingoes may well take this lesson to heart. The six powers of Europe may be able to rescue the Greeks from the claws of their enemies with no great damage beyond what those foolish people have already sustained. Greece is too poor to pay an extravagant price, even for her own misdeeds, and her conquerors are not popular among their powerful neighbors. The United States stand alone in the world. We are quite as unprepared for a war as the Greeks were, and only less liable to be carried into a conflict on a wave of popular clamor. We should forswear war or begin to get ready for it.

It seems a pity we cannot deport a certain percentage of our architects and substitute for them some of the clever men who are building the business houses and the homes of the southern metropolis. Nothing strikes the visitor to Los Angeles so much as the excellent taste and harmony which is displayed in the big buildings on Main and Spring streets. But little ornamentation is used; the effects are simple, but excellent in style, and the result is harmony in startling contrast to the vulgar competency and overburdened facades of San Francisco. The divergence and advantage is more marked when one gets into the residence section of the southern city. There one is confronted with innumerable beautiful villas, whose designs are marked by originality and grace of style. Among the more popular orders are adaptations of the Mexican or Mission styles, of which there are a few specimens in San Francisco. Undoubtedly, one finds poor houses in Los Angeles, but the worst are excellent in comparison with some of the atrocities on Pacific and Van Ness avenues. The great Stimson castle on Figueroa street is a big brute of a red stone house, but it is surrounded with charming homes, embowered in delicious shrubbery and environed with emerald lawns. Bad as it is, however, it does not compare with certain of the Pullman Palace car effects with which we have become so sadly familiar here. Is it not about time some one called public attention to the horrors of San Francisco architecture? It is true there have been warnings, but they are without result. The time has come to call a halt, and to offer some striking object lessons in the direction of what is bad taste. It is certainly the business of the architect to assist his clients, or at least to protect them against their own ignorance. Yet houses are going up throughout our suburbs that are crimes. The men who are responsible ought to be exposed, and "The Wave" expects to devote some of its space in the early future to exploiting the professional depravity of certain of the architects who practice in this city.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Mr. Caspar Whitney, by his sweeping strictures on the Olympic Club in the last number of "Harpers' Weekly," has, I am inclined to believe, somewhat overreached himself, and exaggerated the case. Perhaps Mr. Whitney has been misinformed; news traveling from the Pacific to the Atlantic has time and opportunity to grow and become distorted from its original form. It is not fair to say, as Mr. Whitney does, that the club's retirement from the A. A. U. is "about the first good turn it has done amateur sport." For many years before the growth of an athletic spirit in the two Pacific coast universities the O. A. C. was the nurse and foster-mother of amateur sport in the State. Indeed, it was for a long time the only really stable association of any kind in the far West which encouraged non-professional matches and meets. In passing judgment upon the club its services in this direction might at least be considered. The O. A. C. has done many a good turn, to legitimate sport other than its retirement from the union. At the same time, however, all lovers of clean amateur contests will admit and deplore the spirit which encourages the bouts of broken-down or immature boxers for a purse or thinly disguised money prize, and turns such matches into a source of revenue. Of course the thing is inexcusable—is rankest professionalism, in fact; and no amount of argument can make it appear in any more favorable light. The importing of talent to strengthen the line of its football elevens is another charge from which the club has never fully succeeded in clearing itself. It is to be borne in mind, however, that there is scarcely a college of prominence between the two oceans that has not been at some time or other called upon to answer a similar accusation. No doubt there is some reason in Mr. Whitney's assertion of professionalism in the club, but the reader is not to forget that were it not for this same O. A. C., amateur sport of California would to-day be some score of years behind the times, instead of quite abreast of them, as it certainly is.

***

It is commonly understood by politicians who have had experience in place hunting under the Budd administration that the last man to get the Governor's ear gets the job. Innumerable instances might be cited to illustrate the curious vacillation of the gubernatorial mind, but it is impossible to substantiate all of them, owing to the lingering hope of the disappointed that they may fare better at the next dispensation. The Governor stated most emphatically not long since that he would appoint Judge A. P. Catlin Code Commissioner, should Senator Bulla of Los Angeles refuse the appointment. He not only announced this to many of Catlin's friends, but caused it to be officially given out to the press. Bulla refused to accept, whereupon Budd suddenly changed his mind about Catlin, and gave Robert T. Devlin to understand that he would receive the appointment if Bulla persisted in his refusal. Bulla gave in at the last moment, and accepted the place. So there is an end to that, but it is understood had Bulla held out, Devlin and not Catlin would have been appointed. When this Code Commissioner matter was pending R. C. Irvine, whose term had expired as Highway Commissioner, requested reappointment, and was told he would be, provided Bulla accepted a place. If Bulla refused, then the position of Code Commissioner would be given to a Sacramento man, and the Highway Commissionership would have to go elsewhere. Bulla having accepted, Irvine was congratulated on every hand, it being understood that having received the promise of the Governor he was safe to be retained in office. A few days ago it leaked out that Budd had selected Engineer Price of the Board of Public Works for Highway Commissioner in place of Irvine. Irvine himself says he has about given up hope, but intends staying in the fight until the commission is signed—this, probably, because he understands Budd so well that he assumes there is a hope of his swinging around if he only stays with him.

***

When Budd was considering what appointments he would make on the State Board of Health he sent for Dr. A. C. Hart of this city, and told him personally that he would be appointed. Hart was congratulated by the friends whom he had informed of this good fortune, but time slipped away, and all the vacancies on the Board were filled without any further mention being made of Dr. A. C. Hart. After the adjournment of the Legislature of 1895, which had passed a law creating a third judgeship for Sacramento county, there was a scramble for the job. The most prominent aspirants were W. H. Devlin, J. W. Hughes, D. E. Alexander and A. C. Hinkson. So close was the contest apparently that up to the day before the appointment each candidate was certain he was going to be the successful one. On the day prior to that on which he announced his choice, Governor Budd said to friends of D. E. Alexander (among them being E. C. Hart, now Superior Judge), that he intended selecting Alexander; that he had his commission all made out and would sign and issue it without further delay. D. E. Alexander was informed of the Governor's promise, and was congratulated on all sides. The next day Budd appointed A. C. Hinkson to the third Superior Judgship.

***

In the Legislature of 1895 one of the most active partisans of the Budd administration was E. C. Seymour, a Republican Senator. Seymour worked with the Democrats to give the administration control of everything in sight. He voted and worked for Budd's pet measures, and in doing so killed himself with his party. As a reward for what he had done he was promised the wardenship of San Quentin. That the promise was not fulfilled every one knows. As a relief measure Budd offered him the temporary position of Superintendent of the building of the rock crusher at Folsom.

***

How completely unforseen conditions may upset the most careful calculations is strangely proved by the failure of the great orchard on the Feather river, which was set out some years ago by the two ablest horticulturists in the State, A. T. Hatch and Mr. Rock, a wealthy nursery man. Both knew better than any one else the conditions under which fruit could best be produced, and when they pooled their experience and purchased a splendid property in Butte County any son of a prophet would have predicted success for the venture. They selected the location because it seemed to have the greatest virtues for their purposes. The soil is of unsurpassed fertility, the air delightfully warm and the location thoroughly sheltered. They set out half the property in apricots—the apricot crop being then profitable; a third in almonds (the almond crop was then worth having), and the remaining section was devoted to figs—the latter because a neighbor had at times great success at fig raising in the vicinity. Three thousand acres in all were thus planted, constituting the largest orchard in the world. The young trees grew rapidly—the rich soil matured them early; the figs flourished like green bay trees. The experiment seemed a tremendous success and a complete demonstration of its projectors' calculations. Since then, however, unforseen forces have declared themselves and set all this foresight at naught. The soil, so warm and nutritious, forces the bloom to the apricot and almond trees so early in the year that the late frosts of winter nip the tender buds. The figs have borne abundantly, but for some unascertained reason, the fruit is sour. Thus far this splendid orchard, the largest in the world, as I have said, has been a complete loss to its owners. They go on hoping for a year in which the frosts will not prevail against the buds, and have tried innumerable devices in pruning to neutralize that property of the soil which turns their figs sour.

***

Apropos of orchardists, I learn that A. T. Hatch, whose failure was a misfortune to the State, has returned to his original occupation, mining. He is at Randsburg trying to wrest a fortune from the desert. No man has done more than he in the cause of fruit culture, and his enterprise has shown the way to many another who has since attained and kept his fortune. At the moment of his downfall Hatch was worth half a million, but his resources being spread over an immense area, were unavailable against a sudden attack. This undoing was in the purchase of a fine mansion in Alameda for $50,000, paying $10,000 down. Coin became scarce, and being unable to meet this engagement he let the mortgage mature, presuming that the owner would take back the property, and that he would forfeit only his initial payment. There was bad blood somewhere. A sale was forced; the owner purchased his house back for $8,000. No one being there to represent Hatch, he obtained a judgment for $42,000, which he recorded in every county in the State. The result: Hatch, who was a large borrower, was cut off in the midst of his borrowings; his mortgages were perforce foreclosed by the country banks, and he beheld the fabric of his fortune collapse before his eyes. Of course the straitened condition of the money market had much to do with his misfortune, but surely it was an unearned climax. However, a man of his type, strong, resolute, sober and resourceful, is liable to rise again, and I sincerely hope that Mr. Hatch will have another throw at fate and will conquer.

***

Here comes news of a really fine girl, a good type, I think, type of America and especially of California, a girl with whom to contrast European daughters and wives and mothers—all women, for the matter of that, whose lives are made up of chocolate and the opera, and lap dogs. Her name is Miss Bates, this type. She is very pretty, and that's a good leaning, because the California type should be that, first, last and always, and this girl—But to commence with the beginning of things. There was once a ranch that did not pay, a fruit ranch on the banks of the Feather river in Butte county. For years this ranch had been a failure; there were 500 acres of it, and the soil was a thing to astonish people with and the location was good, and there was water and there was transportation, but this ranch was a failure. How it came about is not said, but one day the owner of this ranch talked with this Miss Bates about the growing of fruit, and was no little surprised when she gave him cards and spades in the matter. She knew the authorities on peaches and pears and the like, and could quote them by the page with one hand tied behind her—showed this owner, in fact, that she was a wonderfully capable young woman. Well, he gave her charge of that ranch, complete, entire, undisputed charge, and she went to work at it like a man. She analyzed the earths, she found where certain fruits would grow and where others wouldn't; she watched the market and forestalled the demand and anticipated the wants of the consumers; she drove over that failed ranch every morning, and listened to reports of her foremen, and made notes and calculations, and she read everything published on the subject and tested what she read by her experience; she got hold of new appliances for spraying trees, all alone, mind you, and brought down new machinery, and all this time kept on being very pretty and well educated and "refined" and feminine. Now she lives in a ranch house that is a joy forever and ever, because it's a thing of surpassing beauty, and she has made that ranch pay like a nitrate bed. So much for Miss Bates.

BOSWELL JR.

Statistics of suicide show that the number is three times greater in the case of men than in women. In youth this rule is reversed, for the number of suicides under fifteen years of age is greater among girls than it is among boys. In France, according to diagrams drawn up by M. Bertillon, out of 1,000 suicides 266 are committed in the spring, 300 in the summer, 213 in the autumn and 201 in the winter. The greatest number of these occur in June and July, 110 in the former month and 118 in the latter, and the smallest number, that of 63, in December. As to the methods of self-destruction men have a preference for the revolver, the knife and the rope, while women generally resort to drowning, poison and throwing themselves from heights. About twice as many women as men drown themselves in Europe annually.

CLIFF DWELLINGS

SCENES ALONG THE EDGES OF TELEGRAPH HILL PRECIPICES

From photos by Arnold Genthe

The Gorgon's Head.

By JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS

She had told him she could not marry him, and now turned restlessly in her chair, wondering why he made no move to go. He must have known that a popular young author's daylight was too precious to spend over her own love affairs. That story must be finished to-day, and a hundred pages of plate proof gone over, so that she could be free to begin her serial to-morrow. If he had come in the evening, her mind would have been freer, and, perhaps, she could have put it less abruptly. He had taken it quietly, with that terrible self-control of his, looking more like a man whose fears were confirmed than one whose hopes had been suddenly destroyed.

"I wish you would tell me something," he said, looking up from the fire. "A year ago would you have answered in the same way?"

"A year ago," she repeated. "That was before 'His' had come out."

"When you were still merely a literary struggler," he said.

"I might not have said I would marry you," she answered, with some hesitation, "not right away; but I should not have refused."

"You were beginning to care for me," he said. "Whose fault was it that you stopped, mine or—'His'?"

"It was just that my career grew so much more important to me than any one person could be," she said, beginning to forget the unfinished story up-stairs. "I didn't realize it till one morning a letter from you and one with the name of a magazine printed on the corner came at the same time. I opened the magazine one at once, but I put yours in my pocket and forgot all about it until afternoon. Then I knew. It wasn't the fame—honestly, I have never taken much pleasure in that—and it wasn't the money, much as I need it; it was the actual writing itself and the satisfaction of succeeding that crowded everything else out. Marriage seemed utterly unimportant."

"Will it always, do you think?" he asked, as quietly as if he had no personal interest in the question.

"I don't swear never to marry," she answered, drawing closer to the fire, "but I certainly shan't till I can care for some man more than I do for my work."

He replaced a fallen log and brushed back the coals in silence. "Take ten years from now, or twenty," he said, at last; "will your books be company enough?"

She leaned her head on her hand, but made no answer.

"Your work may satisfy you, but it doesn't make you happy, even now," he went on. "What will you be then?"

"I've thought of all that," she broke out impetuously, "and the worst of it is, I don't care! I am utterly cold and indifferent. I'm not sorry for people nor glad for them, and there isn't a soul in the world that I feel the least affection for, except you."

He looked up quickly, but she went on before he could speak.

"Even what I feel for you is a miserable, inadequate sort of a fondness. By some accident, I've caught a glimpse of the Gorgon's Head. I don't know why it is, or when it happened. I haven't led a particularly selfish life, or been crossed in love, or had any great trouble. I just woke up one morning and found I was turned to stone."

"Yes," he said, "I saw it."

"Don't you remember how I used to love children?" she went on, as though talking it out were a relief. "I always wanted to make friends with them, and I never could keep my hands off a baby. I used to be forever dreaming about the time when I'd have some of my own, and what they'd do and say and be. Now I don't take the slightest interest in them; I don't want them near me. If they are restless or silly, or if they cry, I feel bored and impatient. I hate myself, but it's true, and you might as well know it. A woman who doesn't love children! What on God's earth is she good for?"

"You believe it is God's earth?" His tone gave no hint of what his own answer to the question might have been.

"There, again, I don't know and I don't care," she answered sadly. "It doesn't seem to matter to me any more. The minute I enter a church, a horrible feeling of flatness comes over me. I can't make myself join in the responses, but it isn't opinion that keeps me back so much as an untranslatable feeling. When the people around me bow and kneel, I don't believe in one of them, and I hate them. I want to throw stones at them. I never knew a person could be as full of hate as I am for everybody and everything."

She turned to him, not passionately, but with a miserable restlessness in her eyes. "If you knew what a relief it was to say it all out," she said. "I have been pounding over it by myself for so long. I used to be full of little warm impulses and good will towards men and even women. Really, I was very nice once. Do tell me what is the matter."

"You have been on a strain for a year," he said, looking at her with eyes that repressed everything but very friendly interest. "You're overworked, and your life has all turned in. What you need is to go somewhere where it is warm and lie on the ground and have a puppy to play with. You can love a dog when you can't a human being. You need to stop writing and thinking and wondering, and get back to nature, and mix with people whose lives have all turned outwards. See more of the every-day people of the world, the commonplace men and women. They will humanize you."

She shook her head impatiently.

"I don't like them," she protested. They make me worse than ever, especially the women. They talk of nothing but other people, and if they hit on ones I like or admire, I am angry; and otherwise I am bored. Think of spending an afternoon listening to tirades on the foolishness of Mrs. Green in trying to make a lawyer of her son, and violent arguments for and against Mrs. Johnson's attitude towards her husband, and the recklessness of putting so many clean dresses a week on the little Perkinses! And the same thing all over again, in the same words, the next time you see them! No, thank you!"

He laughed a little.

"That isn't the kind I meant," he said. "I only meant people who weren't literary and who took little or no interest in your work apart from you. Natural, healthy, unthinking souls and bodies who don't reflect. Here you are swamped in your fame, you are nothing but the author of 'His,' etc. You need to get away from your authorship. Above all, you need the warm ground and the puppy."

"Then you think it is chiefly physical," she said, doubtfully. "I wish I could believe that."

"I know it," he said earnestly. "The world is just the same, but you are out of focus, and will be till you take a rest—or are forced into one by nervous prostration. Do stop."

"I don't think it is overwork," she said after a pause. "I think it is just that I once had a soul, and that all at once it died. I have to carry the horrid thing around with me, and that is what makes me feel so cold and heavy. It has frozen me all up, except one little lukewarm corner. I used to be so beamingly happy, so expansive towards the whole world. The smell of creek alders used to send little spiral thrills of delight up through me—haven't you felt them?—and the first lilacs would make my heart thump. I had to sing at the top of my lungs to get rid of some of the superfluous joy. Now I don't care whether the lilacs are out or not, and I despise high spirits. I've grown into a mournful Miss Molly, who was:

" '—Limp as a rag
While her sisters play tag,
For it's vulgar, she says, to be jolly.'

"Miss Molly's soul was probably dead, too."

"Suppose it came to life again," he suggested. "Then that corner that had stayed lukewarm through this would turn out a regular fiery furnace, wouldn't it?"

"Perhaps—I don't know. The supposition is too impossible."

"Should you be glad if it did?"

"No," she said, honestly. "I have paid too high a price for my career to like the idea of giving it up; and marriage would mean that."

"Then the man who marries you is a selfish brute," he said, decidedly. "No earthly person has a right to come between you and the career that is before you. If you married me, that would be as important to me as your happiness. There would be no question of giving it up."

She smiled and shook her head.

"You don't understand," she said.

"But I do," he answered, coming over beside her and taking her hands. "I thought it all out a year ago, when I knew you were going to be a great writer, and hoped you were beginning to care for me. I saw that you weren't like other women; that motherhood was not your best fulfillment, and I vowed that I never would put one obstacle between you and your work. Do you believe me?"

She lifted his hands to her face for a minute, then dropped them and rose to her feet.

"Yes, I believe in you, in everything you say and do," she said, with wet eyes. "But my part is only a beautiful myth. My unknown Gorgon is stronger than you."

"But you will try my plan?" he said earnestly. "You will take a rest? Promise me that you won't begin your serial to-morrow."

"Oh, I must," she said.

"Come with me now for a walk and talk it over," he urged. "It will do you good."

She shook her head.

"No, not to-day," she said. "My proof must go back by the next mail, and I want to finish my story."

"Can't you leave it?"

"No, no; I'm too interested to stop. No walk in the world could tempt me from it," she answered with a smile. "Now, good-bye. I've been talking nonsense this afternoon, but you mustn't mind it. Come and see me again some time, when I'm not so busy."

JOHN OLIVER HOBBES
MRS. CRAIGIE
From a drawing by Will Rothenstein in the "Saturday Review"

RETIRING MRS. CRAIGIE

Personal Characteristics of the Author of "A Sinner's Comedy."

The personality of Mrs. Craigie has been more carefully concealed from the public than that of any of her rivals. She has not been subjected to the literary interview with illustrations, nor has she been pictured at the several stages of her career. In fact, so far as personal journalism is concerned, she is quite an obscure character, though the editor of the "Bookman" did make rather a violent attempt to convert her into a society queen. That she is not a light of the frivolous world is due not to Dr. Peck's brilliant effort, but to the fact that she is delicate. In addition, she dislikes society; but even if she loved the world with a Dodo-like devotion the weakness of her constitution would confine her to her rooms.

Mrs. Craigie is the daughter of Mr. Richards, who has made a fortune out of the exploitation of a far famed pill. She resides in a beautiful house at Lancaster Gate, a fashionable London quarter. Like Marie Corelli she would have become prominent as a musician had she not turned her attention to literature. She is a skillful pianist, and is also a composer, but none of her musical compositions have ever been published—a fact which Edward Bok, of the L. H. J. repines with tears. Mrs. Craigie, or, as, he was then, Miss Richards, made her debut in society rather before the usual time, and was married several years before coming of age. This marriage was not a happy one, and she returned to her father's house. It was then she commenced literary work, and plunged, as it may be termed, into a perfect sea of books and thought, away from the world and people in general. Were Mrs. Craigie's work the result of necessity and not of inclination, there might be more of it. As it is there is comparatively little, only the half a dozen novels, which we all know, and the little play "Journeys End in Lovers' Meetings," written in colloboration with Mr. George Moore. This is due somewhat to the critical faculty which Mrs. Craigie possesses to an unusual extent, and which prevents her from publishing anything that has not gone through a thorough course of expurgation and revision. Her "copy" is often revised and rewritten seven times, the entire work done by hand, as the authoress uses neither amanuensis nor typewriter.

Some years ago when her health was more delicate than it is at present, Mrs. Craigie wrote almost entirely in bed. Now she rises early and devotes the morning hours to reading or writing. After lunch she goes for a drive. After the drive she returns to her study and finds time for more work before dinner. It is at the dinner table that she comes most in contact with the world. Then she obtains, as he is fond of saying, all the knowledge of what is going on that she cares for. Her father is a man of affairs; her mother, a woman of the world, and one of her brothers is a Cambridge undergraduate. It is in this limited circle of home that Mrs. Craigie is known and understood as she really is—to the outside world, literary and otherwise, she is an almost undiscovered quality. Her interests are all in literature rather than in life, and in contemplation rather than in action.

This somewhat spiritual existence and aloofness from people and things of earth, has been accentuated by the conversion of Mrs. Craigie to the Roman Catholic faith, of which she has recently become an earnest and enthusiastic devotee. In one sense this change of religion seems strange, as Mrs. Craigie was bred a dissenter under the ministrations of Dr. Joseph Parker, but viewed in the light of her spiritual tendencies, and deep, earnest thought, it seems more in the natural course of consistency.

---

The man of the hour in China is Chang Ta-Jen, the new Director of Railways. He first came to the front under the direction of Li Hung Chang, but now seems safe to reverse the relationship. He has entirely in his own hands the Chinese telegraphs and the great iron works of Hanyang, erected by Chang Chih Tung. He is also director of the Chinese Merchants' Company, which controls all the most powerful commercial and shipping interests in China, and has created the new Imperial Bank of China, which will give him the control of all future financial operations. He proposes to begin his railroad operations by the construction of two hundred miles of road through the rich and populous country connecting the towns of Woo Sung, Shanghai and Soo Chow. Throughout China there is a tremendous effort on the part of European manufacturers to obtain an opportunity to assist in the development of the country. No fewer than forty-two firms recently competed to supply some fifteen hundred dollars worth of tools. Foreigners are allowed to bid only for such rolling stock as is not obtainable in China. Chang Ta-Jen expects to get a certain number of rails from his Hang Yang works, of which the Pittsburg expert, H. Kennedy, has recently been put in charge.

---

Has anybody ever heard of Welsh whisky? If not, the following description may be of interest. "Welsh whisky is the most wonderful whisky that ever drove the skeleton from the feast, or painted landscapes in the brain of man. It is the mingled souls of peat and barley, washed white with the waters of the Treweryn. In it you will find the sunshine and shadow that chased each other over the billowy fields, the breath of June, the carol of the lark, the dew of night, the wealth of summer, and autumn's rich content, all golden with imprisoned light, etc., etc." It is specially recommended for use by the minor poets.

---

A story comes from Berlin of an operation upon the heart of a patient who had received a stab in that organ. The surgeon, we are told, laid bare the man's heart and sewed up the orifice made by the stabber, and then applied general treatment for arresting the hemorrhage. The heart worked violently during the operation, but despite the commotion of the organ, the patient made good progress and soon recovered.

AMONG CLIFF-DWELLERS

A Peculiar Mixture of Races From the Four Corners of the Earth.

Of course one has heard of the strangeness of the neighborhoods upon Telegraph Hill, and of course one has read a good deal in Bret Harte and Stevenson upon the subject, but the curiousness of the place cannot be altogether appreciated at second hand. You are told, for instance, that to enter this locality is to be transported to another country—to Italy, to France, or to Spain, as the case may be. This is quite true, but it is not all. The foreignness of, let us say, Ohio street, is complete, and yet one fancies that one would recognize San Francisco in the place if one should suddenly drop into it out of the blue, as it were. They are a queer, extraordinary mingling of peoples, these Cliff Dwellers, for they are isolated enough to have begun already to lose their national characteristics and to develop into a new race. There are children romping about after hens perilously near that tremendous precipice that overhangs the extension of Sansome street, of an origin so composite that not even the college of heralds could straighten the tangle. Here, for instance, is a child of an Italian woman and a Spanish half-breed. Think of that now! The descendant of a Campagnian peasant, a Pueblo Indian and a water carrier of Andalusia, squattering up and down a San Francisco sidewalk, shrieking after an hysterical chicken. But there are queerer combinations than that. I have seen in a wine shop in this same Ohio street a child who was half Jew, half Chinese, and its hair was red. I have heard of—may I yet live to see him!—a man who washes glasses in a Portuguese wine shop on the other side of the hill, whose father was a negro and whose mother a Chinese slave girl. As I say, I have not yet set eyes on this particular Cliff Dweller. I can form no guess as to what his appearance should be. Can you? Imagine the Mongolian and African types merged into one. He should have the flat nose, and yet the almond eye, the thick lip and yet the high cheek-bone; but how as to his hair? Should it be short and crinkly, or long and straight, or merely wavy? But the ideas of the man, his bias, his prejudices, his conception of things, his thoughts—what a jumble, what an amorphous, formless mist!

But there is still another kind of Cliff Dweller—him I know and have talked with. He was watching a man paint a bunch of grapes upon the sign of a wine shop (there are neither bars, nor saloons, nor "resorts" in the country of the Cliff Dwellers, only wine shops), and on pretense of asking a direction I had some little speech with him. He was a very, very old Spaniard, and rather feeble. Do you know that this man has never—but from a distance—seen the Emporium, nor the Mills building, nor the "Call" building, nor the dome of the City Hall; that he would be lost on Kearny or Market street, that he hears or reads in the papers of plays given at the Baldwin or California or Columbia as we hear or read of a new Massanet opera in Paris or a piece at the Comedie Francaise or a successful ballet at La Scala? For eight years this old man has never been down into the city. Old age has trapped him on the top of that sheer hill, and lays siege to him there. Once up here he must stay, or if possibly he should get down, never could he climb those ladder-like sidewalks. No cable cars run over the hill, and the horses of the market carts pause on a corner one-third of the way up, blowing till the cart rattles, while their drivers make the delivery on foot. This old man will never come down but feet first. The world rolls by beneath him, under his eyes and in reach of his ears; Kearny street, like the dried bed of a canyon overrun with beetles, hums and lives beneath his back windows, and ships from the Horn and the Cape and the Archipelago shift and slide below the sea-ward streets, and he sees it all and hears it all and is yet as out of it, as exiled from it as if marooned on a South Pacific atoll. Perched on that high hill in the heart of the city, he is a hermit, a Simon Stylites on a huge scale.

The houses are as indeterminate as the inhabitants. But while the Cliff Dwellers themselves are busily at the work of race forming, new and vigorous, the buildings are rapidly going to wrack, plaster is crumbling, brick walls disintegrating, wooden rails worn to a rosewood polish, trembling and reeling drunkenly over the steep slopes. You may see them by the score, these collapsing buildings, the frailer and feebler ones invariably clinging to the very edge of the precipitous banks of the hill, like weaker things pushed to the wall. They are patched up indiscriminately, on stilts and beams, as if upon false legs or crutches, and the wind shoulders them grudgingly toward the brink, and their old bones rattle and quake with every blast from the excavations that are going forward half way down the hill. My old man, the hermit, the castaway, told me of an ancient lady who lives in one of the shanties that are clawing and clutching at the verge of the cliff, who, with her house, will some day be quite literally blown over the ledge. At night when the west wind blows (you may imagine for yourselves how strong can be this wind coming in from the Farallones to the Cliffs at a single hungry leap), this ancient lady sits up till dawn quaking with the quaking of the house, ready to make a wild scramble to the door as soon as the stilts begin to go.

The houses of these people are of no particular style. Some are of plaster over brick, with a second story piazza, Mexican fashion; some with flat faces and false fronts, and some with bays that are all glass in little frames somehow suggestive of the sea. There are even some with the blunt gable and green blinds that recall New England, and now and then one comes across a miserable, senile, decrepit, rabbit warren of an old villa, the cupola turned into a bed room, a wretched green fountain sunken into the hard-beaten earth of what was once a lawn, a goat or two looking through the crazy pickets and a litter of kittens on a sunny corner of the porch roof. Thus they have their being, the Cliff Dwellers of this San Francisco of ours; mountaineers, if you will; race formers. The hill is swarming and boiling with the life of them. Here on this wart-like protuberance bulging above the city's roof, a great milling is going on, and a fusing of peoples, and in a few more generations the Celt and the Italian, the Mexican and the Chinaman, the negro and the Portuguese, and the Levantines and the "scatter-mouches" will be merged into one type. And a curious type it will be.

FRANK NORRIS.

---

Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was stricken with paralysis some months ago, has not yet recovered the use of his arm. His articulation is so imperfect that it is difficult to understand what he says. Now he rarely shows himself outside the family except for a drive.

---

The crushings of the Witwatersrand mines in the Transvaal for March last were returned at 232,067 ounces. The largest output on record. The highest previous return was 213,418 ounces, in August last.

COFFEE IN GUATEMALA

Growth and Culture of the "Little Brown Bean."

In choosing his land the coffee planter of Guatemala has an eye for a bit of mountainous country, rather moist, whose temperature will not go above 85 nor below 52 degrees. He either clears this land of all its trees or leaves enough standing to produce a little shade, as there is a difference of opinion among growers relative to sun-grown or shade-grown trees. It is generally conceded, however, that a plantation thinly covered with shade trees will yield the best result. Coffee trees grown in the sun often overbear one year and go barren the next. In Guatemala, however, the plantations are all cleared of timber. After the ground is cleared it is staked out, and holes to receive the young trees dug some three feet apart. The new trees are cultivated in seed beds until such time as they have attained a growth of ten or fifteen inches, when they are transplanted (the earth still clinging about the roots) to the permanent beds. It would seem that there is, relatively speaking, no great difficulty to be experienced in bringing the trees to fruition, as they require very little tending further than a certain amount of care in the matter of weeds and choking grasses.

The first flowering generally occurs when the tree is two years old. At the age of four years each tree will yield, say, a quarter of a pound of bean; at six years, when it is in its prime, it should bear a full pound. These are average figures, though five pounds to a tree is not unusual, and one famous tree in Southern Guatemala has been known to yield twenty pounds. The flower of the coffee tree is very pretty—white, and exhaling a heavy and delicious perfume often noticeable on board home-bound ships long before land is sighted.

To the uninitiated a coffee plantation might easily be mistaken for a cherry orchard, for the fruit of the tree is very like our cherry in size, color and shape. The pickings occur three times in the season, and despite the fact that the berries grow in clusters each one must be picked separately. After picking the berries are removed to the machine house, where the "pulper" frees the berry from its surrounding fruit. The next step is the fermentation of the berries, which lasts for about twenty-four hours, after which they are washed and dried, then once more carried back into the machine house, where they undergo the process which removes from them the thin hull known as the pergamine. The natives accomplish this result by flailing and by treading out the grain with the feet. After the husk has been thoroughly beaten it is separated from the chaff by being poured from a basket held upon the shoulder, the chaff being blown from it as it falls.

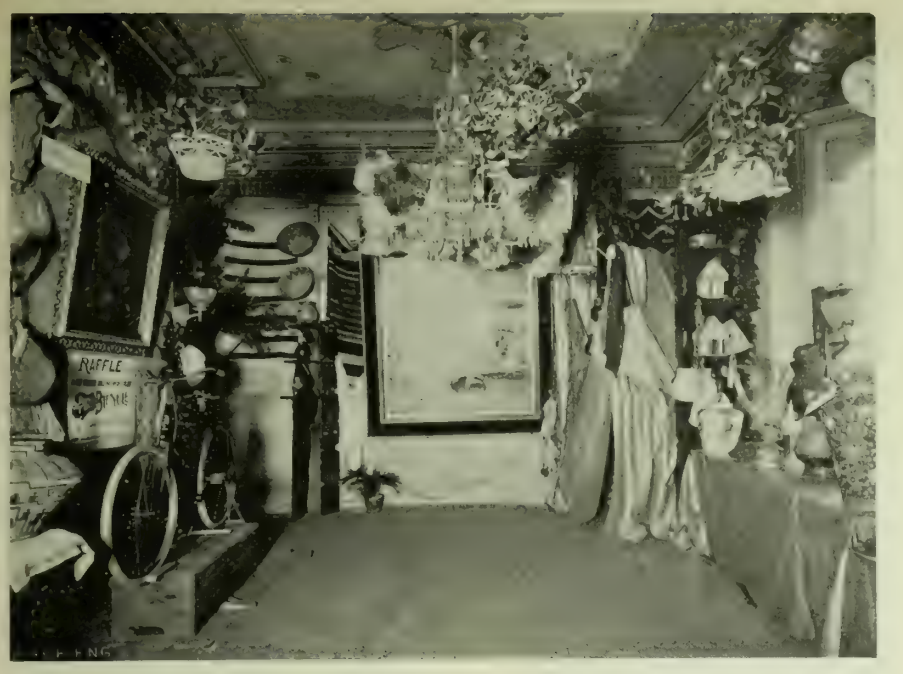
For marketing the coffee the bean is classified into "caracolillo," first and second class, and packed in bags of 150 and 200 pounds, the lighter sacks containing the best grades. However, the good planters store their coffee unhulled (cafe en pergamino) after being perfectly dried.

Coffee growing has this in its favor, that few if any plants are less exposed to the attacks of insects or disease. The coffee tree has certain enemies, but none of these present any great difficulty in overcoming. Such parasites and insects as attack the trunk can easily be driven away by home-made appliances, while the clearing around the trees keeps them clear of rats, field mice and ants.

Hamburg is the greatest coffee market in the world

AN AZTEC FUNERAL

BEING CLASS-DAY EXERCISES AT THE STATE UNIVERSITY AT BERKELEY



THE INDIAN ROOM

UNDER THE BIG TENT

SCENES AT THE GINGERBREAD FAIR IN THE CLARK CROCKER HOUSE

(just why it would be difficult to say), though most of the Guatemala product is shipped to San Francisco and London. Planters will tell you that Americans as a rule are quite satisfied with the lower, poorer grades of coffee, such as are grown in Brazil, though Philadelphia, as a retail market, demands the better quality of bean. You are further informed that much of the coffee that passes for mocha is merely the Guatemala product traveling under an alias. It is said that there are ten bags of "mocha" consumed to one that is grown.

If a coffee grower does not know how to make good coffee nobody should, and the following is a recipe for making black coffee as drank by the planters in Guatemala:

Roast one pound of coffee until the outside of the grain is brown, then mix in a small teaspoonful of butter and the same amount of sugar; sprinkle a little brandy over the whole, and cover with a thick cloth. Leave it for an hour, then grind. Boil one quart of water; when boiling put in coffee and remove from the fire at once. Let it stand a few hours and strain through a flannel bag. Keep the coffee in a stone jar for use, heating whatever quantity is required.

BERKELEY CLASS-DAY

That the high altar with its coffin and appointments went up in a flame and a puff of smoke during the Class Day Exercises at Berkeley last Saturday was perhaps fortunate for the success of the entertainment that marked the dissolution of the class of '97.

From a picturesque standpoint the burlesque Aztec funeral rites were amusing enough, but beyond such of the audience as were immediately in front of the speakers' stand the orators' words could not be heard, and when heard were only intersting to the members of the class, who could understand and appreciate the "hits" and jokes on the professors and student body. For some undiscovered reason the public doings of the students of the State University never fail of attracting an enormous and fashionable crowd, and this in face of the fact that their performances are—or at least for the last college year have been—markedly dull. The Skull and Keys play of this year ("London Assurance") was five long acts of as dreary dialogue as ever curtain rose upon, yet the same audience who yawned and fretted at the Macdonough some ten days previous turned out in full force to sit on the slippery banks of "Ben Weed's Amphitheatre" and listen to the somewhat disappointing ceremony of Class Day. However, it may be unjust to criticise, since fully two-thirds of the rite was untowardly interrupted by the breaking out of the fire, which burned not only the altar and speakers' stand, but even the will of the great "Naintyseven," which was to have been the feature of the day.

The best part of class day is, however, the system adopted by the fraternities of keeping open house upon that occasion. The "big four" (i. e., the fraternities of Chi Phi, Phi Gamma Delta, Delta Kappa Epsilon and Beta Theta Pi) threw open their club house from eleven till six and entertained in all close upon a thousand guests from both sides of the bay.

Marie Corelli is having her portrait painted by Miss Donald-Smith, and the authoress announces that no reproduction of the picture shall appear in any illustrated journal or periodical whatever. The portrait is full length size, and shows the authoress in a plain white satin Empire gown, descending a flight of steps, with a floating lace veil draped over her shoulders. The artist has cleverly emphasized the curious doll-like personality of Miss Corelli, who is rather proud of her distinctly intellectual type of prettiness.

Princess de Chimay has abandoned the idea of appearing at the Folies Bergere, and has instead taken a trip to the Riviera. It seems that M. Lepsine, the Paris Prefect of Police, intimated that her appearance upon the stage would be the signal for an outbreak of public indignation. One of the principal clubs in Paris bought a hundred rabbits, with the intention of throwing them on the stage.

FOR SWEET CHARITY

Glitter and Gayety at the Gingerbread Fete.

The Gingerbread Fete at the Clark-Crocker house on Octavia and Sutter streets opened last Wednesday night, and according to all appearances did a rushing business. The house was given over to the accommodation of the booths and stalls and tables of the "speelers," from garret to cellar, while out on the lawn a huge tent was erected to meet the demands of the overflow meeting. Everything is sold at the fete that nobody wants, but it makes little difference, since nobody wants anything that is sold, and as long as there is an exchange of money the good cause is helped along, and everybody is satisfied. The band failed to materialize on the opening night, likewise the weather, which for two weeks had been the mildest of the mild, took a sudden turn for the worse, but neither of these drawbacks made any apparent difference or produced any noticeable effect upon the gaiety of the occasion. Everybody was there that everybody knew. If the weather was too cold for the tent everybody stayed in doors, and the clamor of conversation would have dominated even the most vigorously conducted brass band. The living pictures were a great success—in fact, quite the feature of the evening, while the animatoscope and the kinetoscope were regular magnets in the matter of attracting the elusive quarter. Toby Rosenthal's "The Cardinal's Portrait" made positively its first appearonce on any stage, and was quite worth all the admiration it received. (For the enlightenment of the misinformed we deny the invidious charge that has been made against Mr. Rosenthal's "Gentleman of France under the Red Robe." He is not drunk, but sleepeth.)

Perhaps it is because of a scrupulous absence of all articles of gingerbread manufacture that the affair has been named a gingerbread fete, but this again is a mere superficiality. It is not the things that you buy, but the amount that you spend that makes the difference at the Crocker house. The query—like that which Bourget attributed to certain citizens of America—is not, what do you want? but how much money have you got? There were two very distinct answers to this question by the guests at the fete. The first was given as they entered the house; the second as they came out of it. The question put to the coming guest was, it is true, how much money have you got? That most appropriate to ask of the parting guest was, how much money have you got left? From all this it will appear that the charity which begins at home did not, however, stay at home last Tuesday night, and the Children's Hospital is so much the gainer thereby.

The University Club is to be congratulated on its selection of C. P. Eels as president for the coming year. Otherwise, the personnel of the directorate is similar to that of the previous term, Professor Bacon and Messrs. Berry and Hasker still being in their familiar roles. Mr. Eels should make an excellent president. He is an agreeable and brilliant man, and a capital administrator. Besides, his partners have all achieved distinction in the same capacity. His predecessor, Frank Michaels, is a member of the firm of Page, Eels & McCutcheon, and the head of that combination, Mr. Page, was president of the Pacific-Union Club some few years ago. Considering the capacity of its members, it is not astonishing this firm has come so vigorously to the front. It is to-day one of the strongest law associations in town. Mr. Page has a large admiralty practice, and is recognized as the leading authority in that branch of the law. This involves commercial connections of value. Mr. Eels' authority is in real estate questions. He is president of the Title & Trust Insurance Company, while Mr. McCutcheon has as his own clients certain of the biggest estates and wealthiest men in California. He handles Lloyd Tevis' business, the affairs of the Hearst estate, of a part of the Hobart estate, of J. B. Haggin and sundry others. Mr. Eels is a son of Dr. Eels of Berkeley and he has married into the Shepherd family of Oakland.

A monster which resembles a hare down to the waist and is a normal baby from the waist down was born alive recently in Leghorn, according to the Lancet. The mother, the wife of a water carrier, was strongly impressed by the sight of a hare cut up on a kitchen table before the birth of her offspring.

A GROUP OF PURCHASERS AT THE GINGERBREAD FAIR

FOUR FROLIC FRISKY FETCHING FLEURS-DE-LYS, WHO FISH OVER THE ORPHEUM FOOTLIGHTS WITH DOLLIES FOR BAIT

FLEURETTE

A French Little Pansy-Eyed Maid, Fair-Faced and Foot-Light.

Send me to interview a butterfly or a squirrel next time, for juvenile actresses are no fair game for my pen. By what mischance men fell to wondering anent the ways and manners of soubrettes off the stage I can't imagine—as if they weren't the same as other pretty girls! I could find a dozen out of any female seminary who would be more facile and mischievous. Talk is not in them—I mean these footlight maids; they know but half their business, and the rest is for the poor journalist to do for them, between whiffs of a pipe and a bitten-ended lead pencil. I would have a school of sauciness equipped and invaded. I would teach them fairy falsehoods and educate the imagination. The scenery of their Fancy is all cardboard and canvas, and is only picturesque by footlight.

But enough flourish; I must be spinning my fabric of dreams, with Fleurette for a pattern. A little poetry would serve, for then one may say much and mean little. There is enough poetry in Fleurette, too, to be consistent, for she is younger and prettier and simpler and more innocent, childlike and helpless off the stage than on. She doesn't stand on her head with a toe in air, behind the scenes—for myself I would rather she wouldn't do it at all, for it is the least interesting of her accomplishments.

I have had the honor of interviewing a white mouse, a human fly and a canary bird—all metamorphosed into painted actresses. I have played with them more gayly on paper, I confess, than in reality. They were all surprised enough at my frivolity when they read of themselves in print—let it be a lesson to them to meet me half way next time and rely less on their eyebrows.

And so to Fleurette—gay, frivolous little moth—shall I tell you what you are? Eyes of pansy-blue—one fleur-de-lys (pronounce the "s") told me, and I saw that for myself. A piquant, ingenious little French face, with a rogueish mouth that will be dangerous when it learns how, but is now as safe as a photograph. A smile that will be growing up soon into a temptation.

Fleurette is but seventeen years old. You may doubt it when you see her from the audience, but behind the curtain—never. She should be in school studying history and English literature, and was, two years ago, in short skirts, and her brown-black hair down her back. Her skirts come to her ankles now—ever since she had to let them down to fool Garry in New York to prevent being arrested for infringing the juvenile actor's law.

Fleurette would be a dancer. Perhaps other ambitions will creep into that little head and look through the pansy-blue eyes, but now dancing is enough. She has begun to sing a little, in a sweet, small, piccolo voice that will come out and fill the house if it gets training. She is to act parts, too, when she grows up, and go on in real plays.

Fleurette is a little doll-girl that is worked by her brother-in-law, Jo Hart. He writes the music and words, he teaches the "business," he manages Fleurette and her saucy quartette, he does everything but go on and dance. He invented the catchy doll-fishing turn, in which the four Fleurs-de-Lys dangle their toy bait over the footlights into the bald-headed row. This was a great success in New Haven, where the boys from Yale came with knives to cut the strings and the girls lost four dolls at every performance.

Fleurette would dance. From her infancy she aspired to fling her heels in the calcium light, and every service she did for her brother-in-law was paid for by a lesson in terpsichorics. An errand down town paid for a pas-seul, and three boot-buttons sewed on meant a lesson in high kicking. Sister Carrie married Mr. Hart, and her success fired little Fleurette. Another sister went into a Philadelphia stock company, and at last Miss F. was promoted to the stage.

Fleurette is well cared for. What would seventeen-year-old Fleurette do, else—with a half dozen notes for her after every performance, and flowers thrice a week? But beware, for Fleurette's mother is on guard, and travels with her. It is really the mother who should be interviewed. No doubt she knows more of Fleurette than Fleurette herself. Next time I shall call in mother and get the fiction, and supply the fact from the fleurette.

Fleurette swims, Fleurette wheels, and Fleurette may paint in water-colors for all I know. After all, does any one really care—save the persons who write the letters and send bouquets? Why not interview them? The most part of the audience regard an actor as they do a Punch or a Judy, and care not a whit whether they are safely put away in the box or not when the show is over. Happy little Fleurette that has a mother to put her away and take care of her after the Orpheum lights go down!

SEVENTEEN-YEAR-OLD FLEURETTE FLYING A FANCY FLOURISH

GELETT BURGESS.

A curious instance of "taking it out in trade" occurred recently in England, when the West Bromwich Town Council rewarded their cemetery superintendent for long service by granting him a plot of ground in the Corporation cemetery for his own private use.

Quite a number of people imagine the "Ladies' Home Journal" is the most widely read of all the periodicals. Great as its attainment is it does not compare with the circulation of "Comfort," a monthly published in Augusta, Me., which prints a million and a quarter copies per month. The "Chap-Book," in some interesting comments on the paradoxes of the publishing trade, gives the circulation figures of several of the big magazines. Munsey's claims half a million; McClure's and the Cosmopolitan, something like 300,000 copies apiece; Harper's 175,000; the Century, 150,000. These we know; they salute us in every book store in the land. But the Hearthstone, New York, has 600,000; the Delineator, half a million; the People's Home Journal, 315,000; the Ladies' World, 379,800; the Home Treasury, 200,000; Hours at Home, 210,000; the American Nation, 160,000; and Good Literature, 191,000. Though it might appear from the immense figures cited that New York is really the literary center of the country, that distinction belongs to Augusta, Me. Besides Comfort, it has Illustrated Good Stories, 479,000; Hearth and Home, 392,000; Illustrated Happy Hours, 351,000; Vickery's Fireside Visitor, 350,000, and Home Treasury, 200,000.

The question of precedence raised by Sir Julian Pauncefote, who claims that at all public functions the four ambassadors are entitled to rank every officer of the government with the single exception of the President, has been indirectly settled by the latter. At the Grant exercises recently Vice-President Hobart not only rode along the line of march with President McKinley, but also sat directly on his left all through the exercises. This means that the President has concluded that the offices of President and Vice-President cannot be separated, because of their intimate and interdependent relations. These unequivocal expressions have already virtually settled the question. The German Ambassador has recognized the situation, and the others must succumb as gracefully as possible.

There are some interesting figures on the average daily production of certain eminent authors in a late issue of Pearson's Magazine. It seems that it is the habit of Mr. Robert Barr, Mr. Frankfort Moore and Mr. W. L. Alden to produce 4,000 words a day. John Strange Winter words off 3,000. Dr. Conan Doyle is good for about a column and a half or two columns of The Wave—say 2,000 words. Mr. Max Pemberton would turn out about a column in the Examiner, or 1,500 words. Sir Walter Besant is not so fertile, being capable of only about 1,000. As for John Oliver Hobbs, all she can write is about 150 words per day. The Rev. Crockett and Hall Caine are irregular, and do their work in bursts. The former has done as many as 5,000, and as few as 800 words a day, and Mr. Hall Caine, when the inspiration seizes him, can indite 6,000 words in four days.

The greatest political force in European politics is the Czarina of Russia. She has neutralized the attempts of the Dowager Czarina to control her son, and has made possible the unchecked advance of the Turks from Larissa, the solidification of the Austro-Russian alliance, and the defeat of the Danish intrigues in behalf of the Greek dynasty. Count Muravieff, the new foreign minister of Russia, remarked recently to a German diplomatist: "She is a better ally than a whole army corps or an embassy." The best evidence of her growing power is the indignation of her Danish mother-in-law. This imperious woman, who has carried into middle life all the physical and mental capacity of youth, has decided to pass the whole summer in Copenhagen, and not return to St. Petersburg.

Over one hundred and thirty thousand dollars have been subscribed for the '98 season of opera at the Metropolitan in New York. The list is headed by John W. Mackay, who subscribed ten thousand dollars.

ON A GUATEMALAN COFFEE-PLANTATION

See page 6

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

My Own Dear Diary: I wonder will you find me shockingly dull this week? If so, it is a case of the calm that follows the storm. I have literally been whirled in a perfect Charybdis of pleasure and am oh so tired. The worst of it is that I am continuing in my foolish way, so anticipate to be several sorts of a nervous wreck before many days.

You know I told you I intended going to a round of lunches at the different fraternity houses on class day. I first went to the Chi Phi, where I found stacks of Oaklanders and a sprinkling of San Franciscans, among them the McNutts, Voorhies, Hoppers, etc. From there I dropped into the Sigma Chis and found Mrs. Salisbury, Kate, Margaret, Colonel and Mrs. Mendell and Mrs. Glascock and Jessie. Then I took in the Phi Gamma Deltas, where I had a jolly time, and finished up at the Deks. A number of us went to the Aztec Funeral given by the boys in the woods behind the university. It was immensely entertaining, but the funeral pyre nearly caused many a funeral. You know it burnt through and set the platform on fire, causing much consternation among the onlookers. At first I feared a panic, but the boys showed so much presence of mind, and extinguished it so rapidly, that we were speedily reassured. Several burnt their fingers rather badly, but were otherwise uninjured. It was an awfully pretty sight. The big eucalyptus trees and the crowds of gaily-dressed people. Afterwards I went to tea at the Zeta House, which was charming in its floral decorations.

On Tuesday we all went to the opening of the Gingerbread fete. It was a tremendously smart affair—one counted the people who were not there rather than those that were. The feature of the evening was the living pictures. I have never seen so many pretty girls nor such artistic grouping. I think Marie Wells was easily the prettiest of the girls. She wore a very quaint bonnet, tied beneath her chin, and a low-necked waist of white silk. Her neck is lovely, so rounded, and white enough to make pearls look dingy. In front of her was banked a mass of pink roses, which added the last touch to the picture. Percy Butler, who posed with her, looked very effective in his black velvet coat, white shirt and stock. Another stunning tableau was that in which Edna Van Wyck posed. She wore a big black velvet hat, and a white decollete waist. Louis Bruguiere also looked very fetching in a white satin coat and Napoleonic hat, and Charley Fernald, in the dress of 1600, might easily have stepped out of a frame. Kathro Burton, too, looked bewitching. She gives promise of great beauty, you know. Then there were endless sideshows, which were well worth seeing—animatoscopes, kinetoscopes, etc. We had so much fun. I have promised to help on Friday night, but should prefer to be a spectator—one has an infinitely better time.

I did not see any particularly gorgeous gowns, which was just as well, as the crowd would have crushed them past recognition. I hate having a new frock crushed; its pristine freshness never returns, you know. We are all much interested in Minnie Burton's wedding, which is to take place on June 1st. Leila and Kathro are to be the only bridesmaids. Their gowns are of pale blue organdie made over pale blue taffeta, with ribbons and insertion galore. It is to be a small home wedding, followed by a reception to which all their friends have been invited. Ethel Cohen's invitations are expected hourly. They are all ready. Hers is to be a very smart affair, you know. There is another new military engagement just announced—that of Miss Myra Noyes of Washington and Mr. Yates Sterling of the navy. I believe he is on the Albatross. Miss Noyes is a daughter of a prominent newspaper man of Washington, and is quite a pretty girl.

Talking of affairs military, they had a big reception at the Presidio on Wednesday night. Only army and navy people were invited. All the regiments stationed at Benicia, Angel Island and Mare Island were in evidence. It was in honor of Colonel Shafter.

We are all going to a big tug party on Saturday. George de Long is giving it. About a hundred invitations have been issued. Leila is going to May Tucker's tug party also on Saturday. Her's is quite a small affair, but Leila says she hates crushes, so decided in favor of May's instead of George de Long's. By the way, I forgot to tell you about the basket ball game between the girls of Miss West's and Miss Head's school. The score was three to two in favor of Miss West's girls. Unfortunately in the first half the captain of Miss Head's team hurt her nose quite severely, and had to have a substitute, who, however, proved one of the best players of the team. Miss West's girls played a very lively game, and from the first appeared to have things their own way. Of Miss Head's girls I especially noted Ethel Yates, who is light, wiry and a level-headed young person. Margaret Collier, the captain of the West team, has much executive ability, and knows the strength and weakness of her subordinates. By the way, mamma has worked up an interest in the Home and Child Study Association. It meets in the Golden Gate Hall on Saturday morning. She says they do excellent work. Mrs. Green, who arranges the child study classes, seems to understand the relation between mothers and children so well. I hope it will improve mamma, for I regret to say she rarely sympathizes with my little affairs, especially of the heart, in the way she should. To tell you the truth, I'd like to give some of the mothers points on my own account. What fun it would be to get up classes, would it not? Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Watson leave for a trip through Oregon, Washington and then on to Alaska on Tuesday next on the steamer Queen. They anticipate remaining away until June 27th. And now, dear Diary, farewell. Your devoted

MISS CRICKET.

MISS LAURA LEIGH GASHWILER
WHOSE ENGAGEMENT TO SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE IS ANNOUNCED
Morse, photo

Quite the most interesting of recent engagements is that of Samuel M. Shortridge and Miss Laura Leigh Gashwiler. Just how pretty a girl Miss Gashwiler is may be realized from her photograph, which appears herewith. The efforts of the dailies in this direction are, of course, libelous. She is tall, graceful, and very bright, is a daughter of the late John W. Gashwiler, was educated at Manhattanville Convent in New York and at Miss Lake's school in San Francisco. Owing to the illness of Mrs. Gashwiler, Miss Gashwiler and her sister have gone but little into society in San Francisco. Mr. Shortridge has been so much before the public that his distinction and biography are as familiar as the multiplication table. Though no fixed date has been set for the wedding, it is understood it will occur before the end of the summer.

Certainly the prettiest bride of the season, thus far, anyway, was Miss Margaret E. Whitelaw, who was married at the First Congregational Church on Wednesday night to Mr. Walter N. Brunt. Some weeks ago her portrait appeared on this page—that of an exceedingly graceful and refined type of girl, a charmingly expressive face and very regular features. She wore a white brocaded satin gown, the jupe made en traine and the corsage trimmed with white chiffon. The ceremony was performed amidst an abundance of floral decorations and in the presence of a large gathering of friends and relatives. Miss Whitelaw was escorted by Miss Agnes Marshall, as maid of honor, Miss Hewitt and Miss Reed, who were prettily gowned, and the effect of the wedding procession was very charming. After the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents, 631 Harrison street, where the happy pair received the congratulations of their friends. The wedding presents were numerous and costly, comprising the usual articles of silverware and crystal, both useful and ornamental.

Pending the open-air Horse Show, affairs are a bit quiet at Burlingame. The summer exodus has not yet set in, though there is much din of preparations heard in the land. Wm. Walter Newhall has completed his purchase of one of the villas, and building operations proceed apace. Thus far polo is being practised rather spasmodically, and the hunting season is almost over. The Walter Hobarts are back again at their ranch, and will entertain quietly during the season. It is probable, also, that regular polo practice will be resumed. I am told that President Grant has the Horse Show project well under way, and promises a gathering of equine phenomena far surpassing that of last year.

***

The burst of gaiety which has animated the spirits of the Oakland young people since Eastertide is over at last, and every one is contemplating the summer exodus. Thus far, no region in particular has been selected by the fashionables. Some are to go to Castle Crag, others to Monterey; but the greater number to their ranches until the middle of July. The last week has been quite lively, especially Saturday, when Oakland turned out en masse to the exercises and luncheons of Class Day at the University. Early in the morning the cars began to be crowded with what might be described as a mass of color. All the girls wore light frocks—ducks, piques and organdies, with an occasional tailor built gown to lend a touch of dignity to the ensemble. The hats were simply radiant—their floral decorations of greens, purples, and reds seeming to vie with one another for supremacy. The fraternity houses were all open. The Zeta Psi house was converted into a floral bower for the time being; myriads of roses hung on the walls and filled bowls and vases. The Chi Phi house was crowded with young people all day. Another crowded fraternity was the Phi Gama Delta. In the afternoon all the young people went to the woods to see the "Aztec Funeral," which was a show all by itself.

One of the jolliest entertainments ever given by the Club of Twenty-One took place on Tuesday evening, when the young people parted until next fall. Miss Mary Barker entertained them with a large whist party. The house was all decked in pale pink La France roses and hawthorn. Miss Marguerite Joliffe and Miss Stephenson carried off the prizes among the maidens, and Mr. Lawson Adams and Mr. Eugene Peck won the laurels among the men. Later supper was served at small tables. Miss Mary Whitney entertained the Club of "13" at their breaking-up party last Thursday afternoon. The programme was a complete surprise to the young people. Miss Whitney had arranged John Kendrick Bangs' farce, "The Bicycles," which was very well given by Miss Whitney, Mrs. Hampton, Miss Bell and others.

A smart little luncheon was given in honor of the Misses Glide by Miss Annie Clay, of Fruitvale, last week. The table looked charming in its decoration of roses. Misses Sinclair, Miss Josie Chabot, Miss Stephenson and the Misses Hush were among the guests. One of the prettiest teas of the season was given by Miss Florence Sharon to the younger set last week. The library was arranged as a Japanese room, while the remainder of the house was decked with roses and sweet peas. Miss Sharon was assisted in receiving by Miss Havens, who was prettily gowned in pink tulle, Miss Pauline Fore in pale blue organdie, Miss Beatrice Vrooman and others. Miss Sharon looked very sweet in a figured pink organdie over pink silk.

Quite a smart affair was the Kitchen Sale at the First Congregational Church on Friday evening, given for the Free Kindergarten. In the center of the hall was the flower booth over which Miss Ella Goodall "presided," assisted by Miss Janet Watt, the Misses Wall, Miss Chabot and Miss Coleman. The lemonade table was in charge of Mrs. George Perkins, and the refreshments were superintended by Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Watkinson. One of the quaintest booths was under the charge of Mrs. H. P. Livermore. It was arranged as a colonial kitchen, and Mrs. Livermore wore the costume of that day. Miss de Fremery, Miss Ritter and Miss Whitney assisted. Some old china was exhibited, and during the evening a musical programme was given. The sale was a great success.

MADAME BARRIOS
Wife of the President of Guatemala, who is visiting San Francisco

Mrs. Charles Webb Howard has returned from her wanderings. She has visited Turkey, Greece, Egypt and the various countries bordering on the Mediterranean, and has collected a great variety of interesting souvenirs.

Moet & Chandon.

The cellars of Messrs. Moet & Chandon, the largest champagne house in the world, contain over eight miles of walks and about twenty-six million bottles of champagne. The different sections of the vast cellars are named after the various countries to which shipments are made. Russia and England occupy the largest place, special provision having been made for the requirements of the Courts. In this country Moet & Chandon has also been received with great favor.—Hotel Gazette.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

MURRAY & LANMAN'S FLORIDA WATER

MATCHLESS FOR THE HANDKERCHIEF, TOILET OR BATH.

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

DRAMATIC NOTES

On Monday night Nat Goodwin begins his engagement in "David Garrick," followed by the charming little comedietta, "The Silent System," in which both Miss Elliot and Mr. Goodwin appear.

The next "Musical Evening" at Byron Mauzy Hall will be given Thursday evening, May 27th. Signor Piccirillo will direct, assisted by his mandolin club, and by Signor S. Martinez, pianist, ans Mme. Letilia Bonfoy-Ripperhan, reader.

The Commencement Exercises of Irving Institute, class of '97, will take place at Golden Gate Hall next Thursday evening at eight o'clock. Bishop Nichols will address the graduates and present the diplomas. Last evening the concert of the Conservatory of Music was given in the school hall of the Institute.

After a successful Eastern season as Rosamond in "Sowing the Wind," Maud Edna Hall returns to Morosco's next week, appearing as Lady Isabel in the great emotional drama, "East Lynne." Miss Hall's support will be the regular stock company reinforced by Syllian Atwood, who will play Joyce, and sweet Baby Lewis as Little Willie.

Bellinger's beautiful opera, "Captain Fracassa," will be sung next week at the Tivoli. The scene is in Venice during one of the picturesque centuries, and introduces a number of prominent characters, including the celebrated Council of Ten. The music is bright and pleasing. The work will be excellently cast, with Laura Millard as the Princess de Coligny, Myra Morella, Scrollina, Rhys Thomas Captain Fracassa, J. J. Raffael Count Montaldo and Ferris Hartman Momo.

The feature of the bill at the Orpheum next week will be the appearance of George Osrani and his Burlesque Pantomime Company in their humorous creation, "Yvette," also the eccentric musical specialty, "Do-Mi-Sol-Do." The Baggesens, "the Juggling Waitress and the Twisting Waiter," also make their first appearance. They are said to be exceptionally clever. Kronemann Brothers, burlesque acrobats, play a return engagement of one week. The balance of the bill is filled by Fleurette, Ed Latell, the musical artist, and Tacianu, the male soprano.

In "The White Rat" at Morosco's, this week, there are two exceptionally good stage settings —an East River pier, and a Chinese opium-den. The play itself is an interesting story of New York life, and contains the usual number of melodramatic types and characters. Two of these characters are good out of the ordinary. Nat M. Willis' tramp, and Mollie Thompson's Bowery "goil." The make-up of both is splendid, and their work is quite clever. Landers Stevens gets a good deal out of a small part, and John J. Pierson makes much of the villain.

"Excelsior, Jr." will open the second week of its career at the Columbia Monday evening. There will be a complete change of songs and dances, and Miss Martinot will appear in several modish new gowns. The Columbia will be closed during the week of May 24th for the purpose of renovation, and with new carpets and new paint the theater will make a pleasing apparance. The Frawley season will commence May 31st, with the entire new company in the great melodrama, "The Fatal Card," by Hadden Chambers and B. S. Stephenson. The play will be given with all the scenery and accessories used in the original production.

Wedding and Fashion.

Who could imagine a more lovely birthday or wedding gift than an odd and historical piece of hand-carved furniture—something really elegant? A gift representing refinement, luxury, style and utility combined, lending an air of refinement to the home and bringing pleasant thoughts of the giver.

The P. Rossi Co., at 117 Sutter street, between Kearny and Montgomery streets, exhibit an infinite variety of pieces and sets that for richness and beauty are unrivaled. You will see chairs in Italian renaissance carving, also the rare and veritable marquetrie lady's desk, cabinet or table of the Louis XV or XVI period. There are genuine French and Italian carved chairs and desks, Vernis Martin cabinets and book cases, Venetian wrought iron lanterns, tapestries, curios and novelties. Such a gift is sure to be appreciated, and one is assured that it will not soon "go out of style" and be relegated to the garret. No stablishment in San Francisco or on the coast carries a class of goods of such high merit. We had the pleasure recently of seeing a completely furnished parlor in Louis XV style from this firm, and the effect was charming and unique.

The much admired furniture in the Clark Crocker mansion on Sutter street, where the famous Tony Rosenthal paintings are exhibited, was kindly loaned by the P. Rossi Co.

THE RACING PROSPECT

The Development of High-Class Sport Under Favoring Conditions.

For the next few months the attention of the American racing world will be mainly devoted to events in the Eastern and Southern States, while Turf affairs in California will resolve themselves into matters of retrospect and prospect. The intermission which will ensue from to-day, save for a couple of days next week set apart by each of the local tracks for charitable objects, will nevertheless be none too long for the accomplishment of the work that has to be done preparatory to the opening of the campaign for next winter. That the programmes of both Jockey Clubs will offer even greater inducements to owners than in previous years, and consequently provide more high-class racing, may undoubtedly be expected, inasmuch as the experience of the 1896-7 season has shown that horsemen in particular and the public in general have had their interest largely stimulated by the increased number of valuable fixed events introduced into current operations.

To admit of the extension of this desirable feature the business of racing must be established and maintained on a thoroughly sound basis, the more especially as California occupies a position isolated from the sporting centers, and is yet dependent upon their resources for the requisite material to render local contests sufficiently interesting to attract a full measure of public patronage. It is not too much to say that the manner in which the meetings are conducted here is systematic and businesslike to a degree that has earned the most favorable comment from visitors, whether expert observers or otherwise, who have attended the races during their stay in the city. It is plainly noticeable, moreover, that one venture on the part of owners and other patrons of the Turf is followed up as soon as the season comes round again, so that the circle of interest gradually widens as time goes on, to the benefit, not only of the Turf locally, but of the general welfare of the State. And yet this is only the beginning of things with us here. Having got a good start then, let us try and keep our place by the exercise of proper judgment, and there need be no fear but that with its unrivaled advantages racing in California can secure a place that will always command attention from the world at large.

What appears to be most needed now is that the management of the two existing tracks should avail themselves of every possible means of making the racing so attractive, not only as regards the sport afforded, but in all its surroundings, that people who can enjoy a pleasant outing will come through their gates in greater numbers than at present. When Ingleside and Emeryville were laid out they were designed on a much more extensive scale so far as public accommodations are concerned, than the old Bay District track, and the step has been fully justified. Still, on both courses matters are more or less in embryo to-day, and as the grounds and general arrangements come to have a finished appearance the public will become more sensible of the pleasures attending a visit to the races, and so be led to an increase of their patronage. Both tracks are beautifully situated, the means of access are convenient and pleasing in their variety, with freedom from discomforts even in disagreeable weather; and a few slight touches added to those already given and in progress by way of embellishment will make them places of pleasant resort at all times and under any circumstances. The style in which things are done goes a long way towards winning public favor, and, all said and done, that is what racing has to depend upon.

As matters stand at present, the revenues of racing organizations are derived to a large extent from sources dependent on the support of the gambling portion of the public, and this element can only be diminished in importance by securing the adhesion of that portion of society which can take pleasure in sport for its own sake, and not merely for the possibilities it affords of making money by risky speculation. The gamblers can be relied on to be always with us, but true sportmen, who love a good horse and can appreciate a contest which exhibits his prowess, are harder to gather together, and therefore best worth considering. Preserve the tone of racing, cater to the right sort of men and horses, and the resources of the gate will prove in the end of more value and greater stability than the support of the purely gambling division. The attendance during the season now closing, whenever there has been any important event, will fully bear out this view; and it is satisfactory to think that the track authorities will have been encouraged thereby to continue in their efforts to improve the standard still further in the immediate future.

An important point to bear in mind when considering the effects produced by offering prizes which will attract good horses, and consequently large crowds of spectators, is the influence upon the market for thoroughbred stock and the benefit thereby conferred upon the great breeding industry in this State. Some purses must of course be small, but an undue proportion of them is absolutely harmful in every way, for it merely leads to needy men picking up animals of no real value and running them off their legs in the endeavor to earn a living which they would do better to strive for in some other fashion. The early season here is not altogether a gain to the interest of breeders, as much of the young stock is pushed into hard work and severe contests before being fairly capable of meeting such demands upon their system and physical strength, with the result that the youngsters are ruined at the outset of their career and their breeders thereby prejudiced. This objection is clearly emphasized where, in the absence of larger stakes, owners are induced to seek the means of keeping the pot boiling by entering for small races at frequent intervals. The effect is therefore exactly contrary to the main object of the Turf, namely, the improvement of the breed of horses.

Breeding and racing are so intimately connected and dependent one upon the other that track authorities are wise when they consider the effect of their plans upon the work of breeders. The latter in this State are well in the van of progress, and of recent years, especially, have been unsparing in their efforts to surpass every other section of the country by introducing the best strains of blood at the present day, the result of which must be that California will occupy the foremost place on this continent, if it does not already, in regard to the breeding of blood stock. It now only remains for those who handle the affairs of the running Turf to show in their sphere of work a like determination to make the rest of the world realize the importance of this Coast in all matters where the thoroughbred is concerned, and thus render the position already achieved safe for all time, so long as the same progressive spirit and businesslike management shall prevail.

The Pacific Coast Jockey Club and the California Jockey Club both stand high in public estimation, are regarded as well understanding their business, and with their resources and opportunities should have no difficulty in pursuing any policy they may see fit to adopt. That such will be in the main beneficial to sport, and the industries dependent thereon, their conduct of affairs during the season now closing should be a sufficient guarantee.

During the last four days of the coming week the Mechanics' Pavilion will be given over to the dogs, and we shall see there the best show that has ever been held on the Coast. Not only will the number of dogs exhibited far exceed previous totals, but the standard will be considerably higher in nearly every class.

A PRESENTATION AT COURT

Embassador Hay Introduces His Countrywomen to the Queen.

The new American Embassador, Colonel John Hay, begins now to realize the glory and certain of the disadvantages of his illustrious role. It is a distinction to be the representative of so great a nation as ours at the court of St. James, but among the disabilities is the task of refusing recognition to people who lack social prominence at home. Thus far the misfortunes of Embassador Hay have not reached the papers, but it is a safe assumption that several dozen of the aspiring matrons and maids who wished to be presented to Her B. M. Victoria were neatly but effectively turned down. Quite a bevy of brilliant young women and their mothers were presented, however. Indeed, the occasion was notable for the distinction and beauty of the young Americans thus formally ushered into society. Not the least interesting of the debutantes was Miss Hay, the Colonel's eldest daughter—a saucy, unconventional, clever girl, decidedly pretty and unusually bright. She has the interesting faculty of originality, and her personality is full of surprises—sometimes even of shocks. She is liable to say the most audaciously clever things, but accompanies her witticisms with a smile that serves as an anodyne for the wound her tongue inflicts.

But besides Miss Hay there were other American maids, most notably Miss Bessie Davis, a veritable Washington belle—a tall, dark-eyed, stylish, striking brunette beauty, who in manner and type takes after her mother, who was the famous Sallie Freylinghuysen, afterwards Mrs. Johnny Davis. She is still as brilliant, as gay and as prominent as of yore, though her daughter is a belle on her own account. The connection is otherwise distinguished, Miss Davis' parent being Judge of the Court of Claims of Washington. Another eminent lady who was made known to Her Majesty was Mrs. Lee Cotton of New York, a cousin of the Brad Martins, and a very beautiful and clever woman who has quite a vogue in both Paris and Gotham. Besides her social significance she is a capable painter, and is ranked as Henner's best pupil. I see that the Misses Harris were also presented by Embassador Hay. They are the daughters of the late Colonel Harris of the army and nieces of Major J. L. Rathbone of San Franisco. Their distinguished ancestor was Senator Ira Harris of New York, and they are very pretty and very wealthy girls.

Apropos of drawing-rooms, I read recently in the New York "Tribune" a capital description by a debutante of her debut at the Court of St. James. As soon as the date of presentation had been arranged, and court dresses for the beauty and her maternal relative had been procured, it was in order to rehearse for the ceremony.

She continues: "A grand personage was recommended to mamma who had coached no end of Lady Marys and Lady Emmas and the Honorable Miss This and That, according to her account, and for a week preceding our presentation we had a lesson every morning. I would be the Queen for mamma and mamma would be the Queen for me, while Elise, our maid, would manage our trains, which were made of calico, for the practice. The hour of reception being at 3 in the afternoon, the morning was spent in waiting—that is, after suffering the manipulation of the fashionable hair-dresser, whose services could only be had at 8 in the morning. However, we put on our court garments and sallied forth for our carriage. There was a terrific crush of carriages, which formed a splendid but slow-moving procession through the park. Finally our equipage reached the stone arch, and for the first time I felt a tremor of nervousness.

"The feeling was momentary and quickly passed away, and as I swept up the great staircase, my train over my arm and my bouquet in my hand, through the file of sentries and guards into the great reception-room full of magnificent ladies and gorgeous diplomats—one or two among the latter coming up immediately to talk to us—I felt as if we, too, were personages. Mrs. ———, the wife of our Minister, who had nodded cordially to us when we entered the room, soon beckoned, and I knew our time had come. We pressed forward. I felt like calling 'Stop!' to Mrs. ——— as she disappeared through the doorway. Then mamma followed and for one trying moment I was alone. Then I, too, passed through the magic portals.

"I saw mamma ahead of me with her train spread out for the first time, keeping me at an awful distance. Then my train was taken from my arm, two officials with golden sticks on either side of the doorway spreading it out as I advanced. I heard mamma's name called, saw her make a deep reverence, and then, as if in a dream, heard my own poor, little, insignificant name announced to the Queen of England and all the royal family, whereupon, courtesying deeply, I touched the gloved finger of the cross-looking little old lady. I felt a wild desire to laugh at mamma going sidewise like a crab. Then I proceeded to do likewise, forgetting happily all about my train, which was tossed from official to official—the lords in waiting who stood in a line facing the royalties—while we ran the gantlet in the alleyway between, the last official in the line throwing our trains over our arms; a couple of backward courtesies, and it was over.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors

No tipping of waiters at Johnson's family restaurant, 28 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. Moderate prices.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure rtock, and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Mme. A. Ruppert

New York London
Paris San Francisco

SOLE ORIGINATOR OF

World - Renowned Face Bleach

FACE BLEACH has stood the test of 20 years, and is to-day acknowledged to be the best remedy known for Blackheads, Oily Skin, Pimples, Freckels and all Facial Blemishes.

FACE BLEACH sells at $2.00 per bottle, or three bottles (sometimes required) for $5.00, and will be sent to any address on receipt of price, in plain wrapper.

FACE BLEACH is not an "enamel," which merely covers up the defect, but a true skin tonic, its action being to throw off all impurities from the skin. Send for my book, "How to be Beautiful," free.

MME. A. RUPPERT begs to announce to the ladies of San Francisco that she has recently removed to rooms 15-16, 131 Post street, where she hopes to receive the same patronage as formerly.

MME. A. RUPPERT,
Rooms 15–16, 131 Post st., San Francisco.
Take Elevator.

1706 1897

NEARLY 200 Years
THE WORLD'S STANDARD
FOR EXCELLENCE
AND PURITY
CROSSE & BLACKWELL'S
LUCCA
OIL
PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
Sherwood & Sherwood
SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS
President, B. A Becker
First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President H. Horstmann
Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier, Wm. Herrmann
Secretary, George Tourny
Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign Steinhart, N Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H B. Russ, D. N Walter and N Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union
532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS
George W. Beaver Robert Watt
Thomas Magee Geo. C. Boardman
W. C. B. de Fremery Daniel E. Martin
Albert Miller Geo. Tasheira
E. B. Pond

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.
Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.
Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. B. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco
33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.
Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.
Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000
A. J. CARMANY : : Manager
OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING
Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE
OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
301 Montgomery Street

A. K. DAGGETT
Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. P.
Telephone 305

NEW BOOKS

A Yarn by Thomas Hardy That Fails to Interest.

"God only knew what she really was, Pierston did not," says Thomas Hardy of "The Well Beloved," the intangible heroine in his last published novel, and he adds, "She was indescribable." If God don't know, and the hero of the book don't know, and if the author admits that he himself cannot know, it is rather hard to expect the less-gifted reader to solve the mystery, even with the help of the map in the appendix to show the country supposed to be her habitat.

It is very difficult to take Mr. Hardy seriously in the pursuit of this well beloved spectre through three hundred and forty closely-printed pages, and it is moreover difficult to believe that he expected it to be taken seriously. That men are faithless is as much of an aphorism as that women are frail, and that any person of masculine persuasion should fall in love with some half-dozen different girls in rapid succession is a matter that one would expect to see treated of in a comic newspaper or a farce-comedy, not in a seriously planned and soberly executed novel—with a map. But this is what Pierston does, and yet occupies the place of hero in the tale, a hero surrounded with at least some of the attributes of dignity. For all this he even proposes to two girls in as many days. It would appear that in the haste of his pursuit the pursuer was something eager. But I am not so sure that Pierston in the end does really find his "well beloved," for by the time he "settles down and marries," we are told, in fact, he himself tells us, that he has no love to give to Marcia. "Such friendship as I have," says he, "is yours till the end." Marcia accepts him because she says she somehow feels that she ought to be his wife before she dies. Mr. Hardy has elected to lay the scene of his novel in an out-of-the-way bit of country, where we are informed extraordinary customs still prevail. Perhaps we are to regard this ultimate union—marriage, it is not—of Marcia and Jocelyn as one of these extraordinary customs, but the thing does not, somehow, ring true, and the reading thereof is dull to madness.

It is to be supposed—at least the supposition would be generous—that Hardy would have it that Pierston was in love with the sex, not the individual, with "subjective phenomena" rather than concrete examples, and this may all be very fine between olive green cloth bindings, but as a working model an "epitomized sex," "an aroma," "a parting of the lips," leaves much to be desired. It is not the kind of thing to tie to, and it is quite impossible even for the author of "Tess" to make the average intelligent reader believe that any sane, healthy-minded person would undertake the hazard. Barring a few descriptions, and a certain charm of atmosphere and spirit of locality that is apparent in all Mr. Hardy's Wessex novels, there is nothing much worth while in the novel. That it is signed with the same autograph as "Tess" and "Jude" is, perhaps, its chiefest and best excuse. (New York. Harper Bros.) For sale by Doxey.

In the May "St. Nicholas" there is an account of General Grant's famous record-breaking ride in the White Mountains, "The Festival of Eggs," a tale of Waihu, and a complete story, "How Cousin Marion Helped," by Alice Balch Abbot. The sixth article on "Historic Dwarfs," by Mary Shears Roberts, is devoted to Casan, the little Mongol Tartar favorite of the great Genghis Khan. Frank H. Spearman tells how the boundary of Iowa has shifted through the changing course of the Missouri, and Anna Chase Davis has a pretty account of the home and habits of the robin.

State of Ohio, City of Toledo, } ss.
Lucas County. }

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of One Hundred Dollars for each and every case of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.
FRANK J. CHENEY.
Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 6th day of December, A.D. 1886.
A. W. GLEASON.
[SEAL] Notary Public.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by druggists, 75c.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

Dr. H. G. Young—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

MAY MAGAZINES

A Bird's-Eye Review of the Latest Monthlies.

The editor, in Harper's "Monthly" has some excellent suggestions to make on the well worn subject of sensational journalism. He laughs out of court the idea that newspapermen make immoral papers because of malice and inherent wickedness, but suggests also that they stop trying to make magazines and revert to their original purpose of printing the news, assuming I presume, that the change will alter the character of the institution and save us the terrible confusion of scare-heads which we are given each Sunday. It is really an excellent editorial, and not the least valuable fraction of the May "Harper's." At least two other of the articles will be generally read: Poultney Bigelow's "White Man's Africa," which is full of lively interest and is admirably illustrated, and George W. Smalley's "Life in an English Country House." After living so long in England Mr. Smalley is presumably an authority on this most charming side of old country life. He insists, at too great length, however, on the virginity of the field inasmuch as his predecessors have failed to cover it to his satisfaction. The article is a capital instance of good newspaper work, for it is informative, intelligent and thoroughly entertaining. Caspar Whitney's "Cross Country Riding" is a bit statistical, and is not nearly as good as the pictures. As for the fiction, Octave Thanet's "Captured Dream" is quite the best story in the number. "The "Guardian Angel" is singularly foolish and sentimental and very poor construction.

I am not alone, I find, in my liking for Colonel Higginson's "Cheerful Yesterdays," which make and have made a bright feature of the "Atlantic" for several months past. He has one of those easy running styles which compass the difficult extremes of being gossipy and yet concise. This month he concerns himself with anti-bellum struggle beyond the Missouri and presents valuable remembrances of John Brown. Colonel Higginson tells also of a meeting with Walt Whitman. The personal impression made upon him by the poet was not so much of manliness as of "Bowerliness," suggesting Sidney Lainer's subsequent vigorous phrase, "a dandy roustabout." This prejudice was rather accentuated by Whitman's action in joining the hospital service during the war, instead of going to the front, as so many distinguished men did. Well worth reading is Lafacadio Hern's "Notes of a Trip to Izumo." One cannot but think this brilliant writer is producing the best of prose of the day. The rural New England articles are both descriptive and economical and are balanced by a study of the colonies at Greeley and at Riverside. Kenyon West tells a story about George Kennan's apprenticeship in courage. It seems the Russian traveler was accustomed when he was about seventeen years of age to wander around Cincinnati at all hours of the night with a view to cultivating courage. He was a weak, nervous boy, but he determined that he would conquer what he called his cowardice, or die; and he did not die.

It is rather an astonishing yarn—that novel in the current "Lippincott's." Virna Woods, a young person who has perpetrated some rather weak stories, is the author and the scene is laid in San Francisco. It has neither the virtues of interest, strength or cleverness of construction. Otherwise the number is up to its average.

"The Cosmopolitan" has a thoroughly interesting story in Wells' "The War of the Worlds," but it is being served out in preposterously brief installments, much in the same way that "McClure's insisted upon doling out "Captain Courageous." Undoubtedly the best article in the magazine is "Modern Education" by President Gilman. It is really important material of its kind, and full of suggestions even to the careless reader. The "Glory of War" pictures are a sensational feature, though one wonders how such clever photos remained undiscovered so long.

In his notes of the literature of the month, Zangwill insists that "Trooper Peter Halket" by Olive Shreiner is the book of the month, and he tells us that Richard Le Gallienne's "Golden Girl" was audaciously published on his wedding day. He trusts the wedding day will not run into a third edition.

The "Century" is not especially strong in fiction, but its contents are full of variety and characterized by a "new journalistic" freshness which is not always characteristic of this magazine. "Bicycling Through the Dolomites," by George E. Waring, and "Scientific Kite Flying" are both timely and clever; the kite pictures being especially good.

The continuation of Horace Porter's "Reminiscences of Grant" and two Mexican articles, "The Withdrawal of the French from Mexico" by General Schofield and "The Fall of the Second Empire" by Matias Romero, work into the history of the month naturally and are the best material of this kind. The Cretan article is rather dragged in, but the family details of the royal house are very gossipy and informative. The single story in this magazine is "Anti-Babel," which is a clever and decidedly amusing piece of work.

Considering the dimensions of the latest issue of the "Chap-Book," I assume this literary bimonthly is a success. Without question, it is the only American publication which approaches in any way the standard of the English literary weeklies. The reviews are bright, smart and intelligent, though somewhat flippant at times, and the editorial notes have other virtues beside their frankness. This number contains an essay by Louise Imogen Guiney and a very readable and gossipy article about John Oliver Hobbs.

"Harper's" and the "Century" undoubtedly achieve beautiful art work, but not one of the monthlies come up in inimitable half-tone effects, to the "International Studio," the pictures of which are really admirable. The editing is also very competent as the articles are both timely and instructive. This magazine has secured a large circulation in this country as well as in England, and deserves it, for certainly it is one of the best art magazines we have.

The "Parisian" is better as an idea than as an achievement. It aims to give monthly a set of stories and articles translated from the French magazines. We all know how smart and clever our Gallic brethren are at turning a tale or rendering a situation, and the harvest is a large one to glean from. Of course the exotic element has to be guarded against, and many of the best things that "Gil Blas" and its contemporaries published are quite unprintable in English. For all that, the editor of the "Parisian" can do better than he does in this May number. In the first place his illustrations are poor—they are reproduced half-tones, the effect of which cannot fail to be weak. If he could obtain the original sketches or photos from headquarters he would make a much more attractive journal. The stories selected are by no means as good as the field affords. It is a dangerous habit, that of being easily satisfied, and I fear that may be a fault of the "Parisian." Some one can make a good magazine on the lines of this journal.

Though it is devoted to literary subects, and to one who reads there is genuine interest in the talk and gossip of authors and publications, yet outside its special appeal the "Bookman" appeals to me as an excellently edited periodical. There is vitality and skill displayed in its choice of subjects, and the best people are engaged writing in it about subjects on which they cannot help being instructive. For instance, take the May number. Arthur Symons writes of Austin Dobson, and accompanying the article is the poet's latest poem, read at the Omar Khayyam dinner. Archer M. Huntington writes very interestingly of Perez Galdos, and Theodore L. de Vinne tells of the adaptability of paper. The gossip of authors includes some interesting details about Max Pemberton, Gertrude Atherton and Colonel John Hay. Besides these special articles there are, of course, the book reviews, which are always safe and often good.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

IF YOU HAVE HEARD of the great popularity of
"Canadian Club" Whisky
and feel disposed to try it, or if you are already one of its admirers,
BEWARE
of the counterfeits of our labels and capsules.
They are very dangerous.
So is the whisky the public are thereby induced to purchase.
You can invariably tell
"CANADIAN CLUB"
by its fine quality.
When you find apparently good labels but undoubtedly bad whisky, please write to us.
HIRAM WALKER & SONS, Lim'd,
Walkerville, Canada.

Polished Hardwood Floors
$1.50 per Square Yard
Fine Work—First-class References
INLAID FLOOR CO.
602 Market St., Crocker Building
Telephone Main 5998

Sale of Books
WM. DOXEY is now selling Standard Works and fine Library Editions at greatly reduced prices . . . . . .
Doxey's 631 Market Street San Francisco

Retiring from Business!
$75,000 STOCK OF JAPANESE GOODS
Must be sold at Auction at 116 Sutter Street without limit or reserve, commencing Monday, April 26th, and continuing daily at 11 a. m and 2:30 p m. T. A. McDONALD, Auctioneer.
ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

The Lion Fire Insurance Co. Limited of London. Total Cash Assets in United States, $885,797.09
The Imperial Insurance Co. Limited of London. Established on Pacific Coast in 1852
WM. J. LANDERS, Resident Manager
PACIFIC COAST BRANCH
205-207 Sansome Street, San Francisco, Cal.

RACING

Winners of Late Events on the Track at Emeryville.

While the fields of horses have shown no diminution in point of numbers during the concluding days of the season, they have fallen off considerably in respect to quality. When, therefore, the bugle sounds for the last race to-day at Emeryville, its notes will not be unwelcomed. Still, let every one remember that at each track there are to be extra days next week in the good cause of charity.

A field of ten, half the number of very fair quality, went to the post on Thursday week for a 2-year-old purse, nine-sixteenths of a mile. The useful, strong-looking Morello colt, Elsmore, 110 pounds, getting the advantage of the start, was never headed, and won cleverly with nearly a length to spare from Salabar, 103 pounds, who finished up full of running. Time, 55 seconds, a good performance.

Old Logan on the same day won his ninety-ninth race and Hennessy rode three winners in succession, the old horse being the last of the three.

On Friday, in a field of fifteen maidens, a very slow-run race was won by Mr. E. Corrigan's Mirth, 102 pounds, by imp. Midlothian, the filly getting a flying start and holding her lead to the end, Erocia, 98 pounds, second, and Los Prietos, 101 pounds, third.

The 2-year-old purse race on Saturday was practically a fiasco, as Michael, who has had to submit to a second change of name and is now styled Michael III, did not make a move until the rest of the party had covered some dozen lengths. Torsida, 113 pounds, and to whom he was giving 3 pounds, won the event, Dick, 99 pounds, a close second. Michael made up a lot of ground and showed himself clearly the best in the race.

On Monday the first six furlongs of the season essay for 2-year-olds appeared on the programme, and brought out nine runners. For the first half-mile Elsmore, 113 pounds, was in command, with Torsida, 110 pounds, and Los Prietos, 98 pounds, lying handy, when Michael III, 110 pounds, began to force the pace and looked a probable winner for a moment. Half way down the straight, however, he showed signs of tiring, and Salabar, whom Bergen had been nursing along, in the ruck, came to the front in the center of the course, and, with a fine burst of speed, landed a winner by three lengths in the fairly good time of 1:15½, Mchael III second, the same interval in advance of Elsmore. The winner is by Salvator out of Bavaria, and was bred at Rancho del Paso.

The most interesting event of Saturday was the mile race, for which a field of five went to the post, namely: Colonel Wheeler, 106 pounds; Argentina, 107 pounds; Torsina, 107 pounds; Satsuma, 116 pounds, and Buckwa, 123 pounds. With the exception of the last named public favorite, who, judged by his appearance and performance, has evidently become stale after the frequent gruelling races he has had, each one of the quintet made a show at some part of the running, but the dicky-legged Satsuma proved to have the most left in him at the run-in, and, judiciously handled by Bergen, secured the verdict in good style from Torsina, who pulled up very lame, two lengths ahead of Colonel Wheeler. Time, 1:42.

On Monday, Wheel of Fortune, 101 pounds, got home in advance of Installator, 111 pounds, in a race of one and one-sixteenth miles, Bernardillo, who had made all the running up to the last turn, finishing a poor third, with imp. Trance beaten off.

Wednesday furnished a two-year-old race at five furlongs that proved very interesting. Out of the dozen that went to the post, Elsmore 118 lbs, Rosormonde 115 lbs, Torsida 115 lbs, and Towanda 107 lbs, were the most fancied. The quartet made a good showing, though Rosormonde failed to run up to her form, the result at the finish being Torsida in front of Elsmore a neck and Towanda a length and a half away. Torsida has proved to be one of the most consistent performers amongst the new crop of youngsters this season, and has won no less than six races in the last six weeks without in the least showing the effects of the work. Rosormonde, though now growing out of the stunted appearance she showed from being starved and badly cared for as a yearling, is unfortunately considerably the worse for wear already as to her fetlock joints, and as she went to the post moved quite sore. It is ticklish work bustling two-year-olds before springtime, as is done in California, and few can stand all they get.

The Two Thousand Guineas was won on the 5th inst. by Mr. Gubbins' Galtee More, a son of Kendal, he by Bend d'Or, the sire of imp. Ormonde. Velasquez, by Donovan, the property of Lord Rosebery and the winter favorite for the Derby, was second. Galtee More had beaten Velasquez last autumn in the Middle Park Plate with odds upon the latter of 1 to 5. This result gives the Derby a more interesting appearance.

The One Thousand Guineas, the fillies' race, was won easily the following Friday by Chelandry, the daughter of imp. Goldfinch and Illuminata, dam of Ladas.

Both of these successes reflect favorably on the breeding resources of California.

BENEDICT.

WAYS TO WED

Literatures Devising Methods of Helping Maids to Marry.

The interests of the emancipated young woman have been receiving attention of late from certain of the great ones of earth, in particular from Sir Walter Besant and Mrs. Lynn Linton. These two lights of letterdom would dispose of the young person in radically different ways. Sir Walter would help her along her enlightened way with a pension. There are so many young women languishing by culture's wayside, young women with yearnings and spheres and all that, who are restrained from entering the higher walks by unkind adversity, and to such as these would Sir Walter extend a helping hand and a gratuity sufficient at least to assist in stifling the cry of grim necessity, and leave the aspiring one to choose her own line of work, to enter the long-desired walks, the much-sought sphere of her emancipated mind. Sir Walter urges parents to look to this; to set aside an allowance of about $150 a year, and let it grow till the maid is twenty-five and then settle it on her, and bid her seek the fields of thought in which her soul would wander.

Mrs. Lynn Linton would also endow the new girl, but with resignation rather than coin of the tribute. This is the day of self-exaltation, thinks Mrs. Linton, and a day as well of declining self-sacrifice, a time when the young woman forgets duties of love and attention to others, and runs in profitless pursuit of lights that gleam elusive on hills of letters and of art. Better for her, thinks the novelist, to attend to love and duay, to unselfishness and devotion, and let "second-rate art," and "second-rated literature" altogether alone.

Happily Mrs. Linton is not the only oracle in Emancipation; there are many others, and to them may the new girl betake herself. And when she is before them gathering grains of wisdom and of salt she may hear of the "Orphan Dowry Society," a sort of marriage made easy, recently established in New York. This organization is for the benefit of young women who would marry were it not for adversity's veto—the same adversity that frowns on the ambition of Sir Walter's pensionaire as well as on their own domestic minds. But there is balm for the bride that would be, in the new "society," a gay wedding and a dower, too. All that is required of her is to be an orphan, respectable and poor, and her young man of the same financial status. All these conditions fulfilled, she will receive a portion of $110 and a most elaborate wedding—surely an inducement to matrimony.

Sir Walter's pension provides for the young woman who yearns for higher things, and the "Orphan's Dower" looks out for those for whom a hearthstone is sufficient, but there is still a class of others, who do not marry from choice or lack of chance, it matters not. The interests of these, whom poverty often may pursue, is being carefully looked to. There is an idea gaining favor in several western States of making every unmarried man over a certain age pay a tax which shall help support the unmarried women of the community. This idea is being discussed by the Government of France. Here is the state stepping in to the relief of the modern woman who would marry not, neither would she cook. But the men of France object to this in the most cold-blooded manner. They are organizing clubs and are holding meetings, where they protest and call the whole thing "an infamous plan." But not so the American of the western wilds; he listens to it calmly—the fact is, he would marry if he could, but cannot find any one to marry him.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Beyond all question of doubt the greatest sale of Japanese goods ever held on the Coast is now being carried on by Ito, Sotomi & Co., at 116 Sutter street.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

REASONS FOR USING

Walter Baker & Co.'s

Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

THE CENTURY COMPANY

announces an educational competition. It is on a most interesting and original plan. Thirty-five prizes, amounting to $1000 (first prize $500), will be given for the best answers to one hundred and fifty questions. The topics selected deal with matters of general information; they are not scholastic, but are educational. Your training at school was only mental drill; you have forgotten all you learned there but "reading, writing, and arithmetic." You will never forget the information derived from answering these questions, because every one deals with a living and useful fact. No cube-roots, no parsing, no memorizing of dates; instead, the learning of things that every one ought to know. If you make an honest attempt to win, you will learn to concentrate your mind, sharpen your wits, secure most valuable information, and stand a good chance of making $500 (perhaps $1000; see below). If you gain first prize, the knowledge you have acquired will be worth more to you than the $500 you receive.

$1000 in 35 Prizes

$500 First Prize

To find the answers to these questions you must use the encyclopedic material in The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia, because these, like thousands of others, can best be answered by reference to this great work. If you do not already possess a set, you can easily procure one. A limited number of clubs are now being formed for the purchase of sets at the lowest wholesale price. Each person joining a club (and those who apply at once can join) secures his set at a large reduction, and has the further privilege of paying for it in small monthly payments. A first payment of $5 will bring you the work and enable you to try for the first prize of $500, as well as the supplementary prize of $500 more.

SMALL MONTHLY PAYMENTS

The one hundred and fifty questions are divided into three sets of fifty each. A month is allowed to answer each set. Try them at home. They will be an intellectual recreation for you and your family; also a good test of your ability to deal with words and facts. Have your children try them—it will be a real education for them. Write to us for sample questions, to see how instructive and useful they are, or for a description of the work.

The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia

$500 More! We offer a further prize of $500 to the competitor who, laying aside The Century, succeeds most successfully in answering 90 per cent of these questions from ten other works of reference, no matter in how many volumes each is published. This offer is made for the purpose of showing that The Century is superior not to any other one work of reference, but to any other ten.

The Century Co., New York

(Department H. T.)

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,

201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.

GEO. H. KAHN,

201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

In photo-engraving, as in other lines of trade, you sometimes pay superior prices for inferior work. We guarantee superior work, by a new process, at moderate prices.

Send for estimates to

THE WAVE PUBLISHING CO.

24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

SOHMER PIANOS ARE THE BEST!

BYRON MAUZY 308 Post St.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE
SAME THIS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND EQ THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Haywards Park Club House
At the terminus of Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railway. Concert every Sunday during the season from 1 to 5 p. m. The Club House will be conducted under the management of Mrs. Rachael Hayward, whose reputation as a purveyor and hostess is unequalled. Take Oakland Ferry at the foot of Market street on the hour or half hour to Fruitvale Station. The Haywards Electric Cars make connections for Park without change.

BALDWIN THEATRE
AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS
Engagement limited to two weeks, commencing Monday Evening, May 17th
MR. N. C. GOODWIN
Supported by MISS MAXINE ELLIOTT and a Superb Comedy Company
Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Evenings and Saturday Matinee, DAVID GARRICK
Thursday, Friday and Saturday, THE RIVALS
Second week, An American Citizen

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
Monday, May 17th, Second and Last Week of Rice's Gorgeous Extravaganza
EXCELSIOR JR.
NOTE: During the week of May 24th the theatre will be closed for renovation, etc.
Monday, May 31st, The Frawley Company

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, May 17th
George Osrani and his Burlesque Pantomime Company in their humorous creation, "Yvette"
The Eccentric Musical Specialty, "Do-Mi-Sol-Do"
The Baggesens, The Juggling Waitress and the Twisting Waiter. Return for one week only of the Kronemann Bros., Acrobats
In conjunction with Fleurette and her four Fleurs-de-Lis, Ed Latell, Tacianu, the Andersons and Mlle. Ani
Venetian Ladies' Orchestra in the Annex after the performance. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
Last nights of Shamus O'Brien
Next week, a Real German Opera, Dellinger's Great Success
CAPTAIN FRACASSA
The Prince of Liars
Beautiful Waltzes! Magnificent Marches!
Great Ensembles! Stirring Finales!
Superb Cast! New Scenery! Correct Costumes!
The Great "Carnival in Venice" Scene
Popular Prices . . 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE
WALTER MOROSCO : : : : Sole Lessee and Manager
Last performances of The White Rat
Commencing Monday, May 17th, Reappearance after a successful season in the Eastern States of MAUD EDNA HALL, our favorite Leading Actress, in East Lynne
A Touching Picture of Real Life!
Beautiful Gowns! Strengthened Cast!
Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

DOG SHOW
Mechanics' Pavilion, May 19-20-21-22
The largest number of Dogs ever on exhibition on the Coast
Admission 50 cts. Children 25 cts.
A. B. SPRECKELS, President.
H. H. CARLTON, Secretary.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 27
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied May 11, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 12, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, July 1, 1897
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

THE THEATRES

"Excelsior Jr." in Need of a Stage Manager.

There are marching maids and peasants, counter-marching tourists and villagers, girls with short dresses and girls with no dresses at all, up at the Columbia this week. "Excelsior Jr." is the attraction, and it comes to us as did Cissy Fitzgerald, backed up and certified to by a long run in New York, two hundred nights some one has said. It must have involved a very heavy outlay of money to have set this combination on the road. Indeed, it would not surprise me at all to learn that in the matter of salary lists it was quite as expensive as De Wolf Hopper's company at the Baldwin. Apparently there has been no stinting in the matter of expenditures; even an indifferent observer would not fail to recognize this fact. Besides a large army of performers, the executive staff that travels with the company presents a lengthy and most formidable list, and the same indifferent observer must also discover that the stage managing power which Mr. Starr, the proprietor, has put over his combination, is hardly equal to the occasion.

Joe Cawthorn is undoubtedly a funny man, but I am decidedly of the opinion that he is also a lazy, shiftless and indifferent man. His stock of wit, a thing that should be easily renewed from the world's warehouse of that commodity, is the very same that he worked off upon us when he was here with Corinne. I thought it amusing enough at that time, and probably it will amuse you if you have not heard it before, but one is forced to the conclusion that Joe was born tired and indifferent, and lacks true professional pride besides, notwithstanding his ability. Otherwise he would not be satisfied to wear on our patience with nonsense which he or others before him had already worn quite threadbare. The Columbia people cannot be blamed for this condition of affairs, nor can they, I imagine, rectify it. He is imposing on his managers, is Joe, and should be brought up with a sharp turn and compelled to venture out into the field of wit on an exploration expedition after some fresh material for his jokes. Perhaps variety and versatility are not in him, but I am inclined to believe otherwise.

Nellie and Ethel Strickland, of the Corinne Company, are also with "Excelsior Jr." These two young ladies are capable fun-makers, and the former is particularly graceful and pleasing in manner, but you would scarcely know that either of the sisters had ability above the ordinary from anything they were called upon to do last week. I saw the pair of them in a negro turn once that was far and away the best piece of work of its kind I had ever seen from womankind on the stage. The "Excelsior" management is not satisfied with one comedian; they have two besides Cawthorn; namely, Johnny Page and Neil McNeil. Johnny, you will remember, is the nimble, acrobatic little chap, with a not unpleasing voice for interpreting the ballads of the day. Johnny, too, needs to venture out into the field for novelties.

Some of the critics of the daily papers do not like Sadie Martinot, who is the leading lady of the company, in her imitations of Yvette Guilbert, but she captures the house with them, nevertheless, and they are to my liking. Of course, one could not institute comparisons between Miss Martinot and the original, for Yvette has never ventured as far west as San Francisco. True, we have had other imitations of Yvette, but none that were more pleasing, or more graceful, or more taking than those of Miss Martinot. The audience recognized it as a clever piece of work and demanded several recalls.

"Excelsior Jr." is an echo of bygone extravaganzas. It is a piece of quilt-work patched together by R. A. Barnet, the author of "1492," "Jack and the Beanstalk," and a lot of other extravaganzas. Henderson's companies once monopolized this branch of the theatrical business, but we hear no more of him now. The Barnet style of work has been somewhat overdone, and "Excelsior Jr." labors under the disadvantage of lacking freshness of thought. The impression you have concerning the performance is that some one has ventured a large sum of money in its mountings and its costumes, and that the same some one has not been niggardly in the matter of hiring people of accepted ability. You get the further impression that Mr. Cawthorn and the others have been unwisely permitted to use their own judgment in injecting into the performance such "gags" and "business" as they have certified to the management were bound to take with the public. The success of such a performance depends very largely upon the character of this specialty work. In "Excelsior Jr." it all depends upon it, for the book is very thin of interest. They have plenty of music, some quite attractive scenery, a curtain of their own, and a chorus good as such things go. The leading people, as I have said, are clever enough, but they have got into a rut and need a very lively shaking up to get them out of it, and I would respectfully suggest to Mr. Starr's stage manager that he lay a strong hand upon these people and pull them into some sort of shape.

B.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Saturday and Sunday excursions to Hayzards Park have been inaugurated by the Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railway, with round trip tickets reduced to twenty-five cents.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER, Dentist, 22 Geary st.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Sea Beach Hotel
SANTA CRUZ, CAL.
CALIFORNIA'S FAVORITE RESORT!
Located on a flowering slope rrom the beach. Magnificent view of beach, bay and mountains. Salmon fishing, tennis court, croquet grounds and music. Rates reasonable. For terms,
ADDRESS
JOHN T. SULLIVAN, MANAGER

GRAND CHORAL CONCERT
BY THE
Stanford University and Apollo Choral
SOCIETIES
Metropolitan Temple, Saturday, May 15th, 8 p.m.
Tickets, including Reserve, 50 cents
$1 tickets at Sherman, Clay & Co. May 14-15
Vocalists: Mrs. Frank L. Wratten, Mrs. Edith Scott Busford, Mr. W. S. Edgerton, Mr. Herbert E. Medley
Instrumentalists: Otto Bendix, Nat Landsberger
Accompanists: H. J. Stewart, Organ; Fred Maurer Jr. Piano

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB
Two Days' Extra Racing
May 18th and 19th
For the benefit of the Woman's Exchange, Balboa Boulevard and Veterinary Department of the University of California.
Five or more running races each day. First race at 2 p.m.

Two Special Days Racing
TO BE GIVEN BY THE
California Jockey Club
AT OAKLAND TRACK
FIRST DAY—Thursday, May 20th
For benefit of the Eye and Ear Ward of the Little Jim Hospital of San Francisco
SECOND DAY—Saturday, May 22d
For benefit of the Fabiola Hospital of Oakland

RACING! RACING!
California Jockey Club
Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, May 3 to 17, at OAKLAND RACETRACK
Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine
Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp
Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.
Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.
THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence
Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure
Vina Brandy
Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

An opportunity for a safe investment is not always at hand. I have an exceedingly choice piece of property in Santa Barbara for sale at one hundred thousand dollars. It will pay interest on much more than its selling-price, and must presently increase in value nearly two-fold. You are not familiar with the opportunities here. Perhaps I can advise you.
LOUIS G. DREYFUS
SANTA BARBARA

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
. . ALSO . .
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company . . Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

JOHNSON & CO.
New Spring Goods just arrived
Ladies' Jackets to order
Merchant Tailors
24 Montgomery Street

THE LATEST NEW YORK STYLES
IN
Men's Hats
AT
FISHER'S 9 Montgomery Street

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of
Artificial Stone in all its branches
Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty
Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

Electrical Supplies
BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.
523 Mission St., San Francisco

A. D. Cheshire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres.
W. O. Macdougall, Secretary
California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971. S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary
Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

SANTA FE LIMITED

On MONDAYS and THURSDAYS the first-class Pullman sleeping-car leaving at 5 p.m. connects at Barstow with the Santa Fe limited train carrying dining-car, buffet smoking-car and Pullman palace drawing-room sleeping-cars for both Chicago and St. Louis via Kansas City.

3½ days to Chicago or St. Louis, 4½ days to New York

SANTA FE EXPRESS

Leaves daily at 5 p.m. Pullman palace drawing-room, also modern upholstered tourist sleeping-cars through to Chicago via Kansas City. Annex cars for Denver and St. Louis.

Boston excursions via Kansas City, Chicago, Montreal and the White Mountains leave every Tuesday. St. Paul excursions every Sunday.

San Francisco ticket office, 644 Market Street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531. Oakland office, 1118 Broadway.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. May 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. June 2d and 2d of each month thereafter.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, May 18, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, May 27, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

"SUTRO & CO."—TO WHOM IT MAY concern: Take notice that we, Therese Sutro and Charles Sutro, Jr., have formed a co-partnership for the transaction of business in the State of California and elsewhere, the office and principal place of business of the partnership being located in the City and County of San Francisco. The name, style and designation of the firm is SUTRO & CO. The full names of all the members of the said partnership, and their places of residence, are subscribed hereto.

San Francisco, April 7, 1897.

THERESE SUTRO,
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

CHAS. SUTRO, JR.
Residing in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Duly acknowledged before Geo. T. Knox, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, California, April 7, 1897.

Filed April 7, 1897.

C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By Wm. H. C. Johnson, Deputy Clerk.

BULLION MINING COMPANY. — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 4th day of May, 1897, an assessment (No. 50) of ten cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of June, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 28th day of June, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of John Reidy, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, April 29, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

ANNUAL MEETING
OF
The Yosemite Commission

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Commissioners to Manage Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove will hold its annual meeting in Yosemite Valley, at the Guardian's Office, on Wednesday, June 2d, 1897, at 11 o'clock a.m.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary.

San Francisco, Cal., April 27th, 1897.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Gould & Curry Silver Mining Co.

Assessment No. 81
Amount per share, 20 cents
Levied April 29, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 1, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, June 22, 1897
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

THE LATEST STYLES IN
CHOICE WOOLENS
H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel
Bicycle and Golf Suits

BOARDMAN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

Peoples Tel. 195 Sunset Tel. 573 Black
THE
Dashaway Stables
130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.
E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS

AGENTS 222 Market Street S. F.

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S
Original Budweiser Beer
THE FINEST BEER IN AMERICA
THE E. G. LYONS CO., Agents
508-12 Jackson Street.

United States Laundry
Office 1004 Market St.
TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Normann's Cafe
UNDER THE BALDWIN
is the best

The Forum JOSE C. CASTRO Proprietor
141 Montgomery Street
An elegant place, where only the best of refreshments and liquors are served. Mid-day, afternoon and night lunch, consisting of fine American, French and Spanish dishes. Private rooms.

La Grande Laundry Telephone Bush 21
23 POWELL STREET

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange
EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.
Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

A certain British army officer who is an enthusiastic breeder of bulldogs, was much troubled in mind respecting the arrival of some puppies, the mother of which, "Aunt Sarah" by name, was anything but kindly disposed towards her progeny. Having held council with his wife on the subject, he betook himself to the adjoining town, and wrote out the following advertisement, to appear in the local paper: "Wanted, by the 8th of January, a foster-mother, on hire or purchase. Apply to Captain H., B. Lodge, S." A few days afterwards the postman delivered a budget of letters to him, but, alas, none of them were about a dog, but came from foster-mothers of the human race, all more or less eager for the post. Later on a cab drove up to the door, and a lady alighted. "Some one in answer to your advertisement," announced the servant. "You go and see her, my dear," said the Captain to his wife; "I daren't face it." "I have seen your advertisement," said the lady, "and I want one thing explained. (The Captain, listening outside the door, groaned audibly.) "Pray, what do you mean by hire or purchase?" "It is for bull pups," said Mrs. H., and, through the open door, in walked "Aunt Sarah" and some of her kennel companions. "Bull pups? Me?" screamed the lady. "Let me go! I shall complain to the police." She went, and now the Captain dreads the sound of the front-door bell, and only walks out after dark.

A certain man in Leeds, who was a very busy man, and whose opportunities of escaping for a day's fishing were very few, arrived at the Midland Railway Station, Leeds, on a June evening, last year, and spoke thus to the guard of the Carlisle train: "Now, look here, guard—I am completely tired out after a heavy day's work, and I know that I shall fall asleep in the train. I must get out at Appelby, and sometimes, when suddenly awakened, I cut up a bit rough; but never mind—pull me out." The guard touched his hat, pocketed his tip, and the train started. When the man awoke the train was slowing down into Carlisle Station, eighteen miles beyond his destination, and then the vials of his wrath were let loose, and he swore at the guard for five minutes without repeating himself. And then that guard smiled upon him with a seraphic smile, and spoke thus: "Well, sir, I must say that you can swear better than nine men out of ten that I have ever heard; but, bless you, sir, you ain't a patch on the gentleman that I pulled out at Appleby, and left swearing on the platform."

Dean Swift was walking on the Phoenix Road, Dublin, when a thunderstorm suddenly came on, and he took shelter under a tree where a party were sheltering also—two young women and two young men. One of the grils looked very sad, till as the rain fell her tears began to flow. The Dean inquired the cause, and learned that it was their wedding-day. They were on their way to the church, and now her white clothes were wet, and she could not go. "Never mind—I'll marry you," said the Dean; and he took out his prayer-book and then and there married them, their witnesses being present; and, to make the thing complete, he tore a leaf from his pocket-book, and with his pencil wrote and signed a certificate, which he handed to the bride. The certificate was worded as follows: "Under a tree in stormy weather I married this man and woman together; let none but Him who rules the thunder sever this man and woman asunder.—Jonathan Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's."

A bishop of St. Asph's determined to test properly the fitness of certain candidates for parochial work, and announced that he would feign to be ill, and that each of them should pay him a visit as though he were a peasant parishioner. Then entered a trembling young deacon, who, after a nervous pause, began: "Well, Tom, what's the matter?" "Very ill," said the patient; "I am afraid I am in a bad way." The poor curate looked nonplussed and hopeless, but a bright idea struck him. He felt the patient's pulse. The patient submitted. Silence again. Curate again nonplussed, but again inspired. "Put out your tongue," was his direction. And again the soi-disant sick man obeyed. "Go along and get to your work!" said the curate briskly. "There's nothing the matter with you; you are only shamming!" The bishop was much delighted, and soon after gave the young man a living.

George J. Romanes, the scientist, left a volume of reminiscences, containing stories of celebrities. One entry reads: "Dinner at the Spottiswoodes'. Mr. Browning was there, and talked much about Victor Hugo. He mentioned that, when Wordsworth was told that Miss Barrett had married Mr. Browning, he replied, "It's a good thing these two understand each other, for no one else understands them.'" "A rector was asked to take the chair at a prayer meeting. One of his parishioners prayed as follows: "O Lord, we had a sermon from our vicar yesterday, and we thank Thee for it because it was an able discourse; but we pray Thee to give him some idea of what the Gospel is!'"

After his return to Paris, M. Barrere, the French journalist, who had previously been under sentence of death, was one night at Madame Adam's, when General Gallifet was announced. The hostess hastened to present M. Barrere, saying to the Marquis, "Allow me, General, to introduce to you M. Camille Barrere, whom seven years ago you forgot to shoot." "I am sure I beg the gentleman's pardon!" replied the General, in his well-known chivalrous manner. "I had no intention of slighting him, and I hope he will excuse what was purely an oversight."

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles', in Cheyne Walk, was much struck with the sound-proof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no sight or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine!" cried the old friend, with unconscious sarcasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life, and no human being be one bit the wiser."

HOTELS AND RESORTS

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE
THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING
The Ladies' Grill-Room
..OF..
The Palace
Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight.

EL CAMPO
The Steamer "Ukiah" will leave Tiburon ferry at 10.30 A.M., 12.10, 2.00 and 4.00 P.M. Returning leave El Campo at 11.15 A.M, 1.00, 3.00 and 5 P.M.
Music, Dancing, Bowling, Boating, Fishing and other amusements
REFRESHMENTS AT CITY PRICES!
The Popular Bay Resort!
NOW OPEN EVERY SUNDAY DURING THE SEASON
Fare, Round trip, 25c. Children, 15c.
INCLUDING ADMISSION TO GROUNDS

TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG.
The Tavern of Castle Crag was built in the heart of the Sierras, almost at the foot of Mount Shasta, and amid the most picturesque mountain scenery accessible to the tourist. The eligibility of the place selected was due to a rare combination of flowing water, inspiring mountain scenery and inviting forests.
The Tavern of Castle Crag, with its splendid environment, it was believed would appeal chiefly to those who seek a summer resort for health, recreation, outdoor sports, sympathy with nature and informal sociability. To emphasize this intention and signify the kind of invitation extended, the name TAVERN of Castle Crag was chosen.
To avoid all implication of sumptuous accommodations or the tyranny of social formalism, and to realize this original conception, the management has decided to make the Tavern of Castle Crag distinctively a family resort and especially attractive to those to whom health, recreation and sympathy with nature are paramount considerations. To this end rooms on the first and second floors of this splendid tavern with board will be furnished at a monthly rate of $65 a person; and rooms on the third floor with board at a monthly rate of $50 a person.
The accommodations of the Tavern are first class in every particular. Its parlors and halls are elegant and spacious. Its verandas are cool and inviting, placing the guest always in the presence of the most attractive mountain scenery to be enjoyed from the balcony of any tavern in the world.
The opportunity for out door sports embraces hunting, fishing, riding, bicycling, walking on mountain paths and driving on picturesque roads. The Tavern is located immediately on the main trunk line of the California & Oregon Railroad, and is fourteen hours' ride from San Francisco, twelve hours from Stockton, ten hours from Sacramento, thirty hours from Los Angeles and twenty-three hours from Portland. The Tavern of Castle Crag is reached from San Francisco and Sacramento without loss of time. The train leaves San Francisco at 8 o'clock p. m., arriving early the following morning for breakfast, which is always ready upon the arrival of the train. Returning, the train time affords equal accommodation. Thus, both in going and in coming the comfort of the passenger and the economy of his time have been studied. In brief, the Tavern of Castle Crag realizes to its guests the perfect ideal of that spring-time in the high altitudes of the Sierras which never becomes high summer, and is the comfortable home of pleasing recreation and restful repose.
For particulars apply to
GEORGE SCHONEWALD,
Room 59, Union Trust Building, San Francisco.

The Hotel Richelieu
N. E. Cor. Van Ness and Myrtle Aves.
PRINCIPAL AND FINEST FAMILY HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
HOTEL RICHELIEU CO.

Hotel Bella Vista
1001 PINE STREET
Elegant Furnishings and Apartments
DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED
MRS. A. F. TRACY.

European Tours
When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's greatest Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowest rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.
THOS. COOK & SON
621 Market Street San Francisco

Highland Springs
ON THE BORDER OF CLEAR LAKE
Lake County : California
The new hotel building, lighted by electricity. Finest dining room north of San Francisco. The greatest variety of Mineral Springs in America. Waters unsurpassed for health or pleasure. Open every day in the year. Boating, bathing, hunting and swimming. Swimming tank, dancing, lawn tennis, croquet, billiards, bowling, etc.
Take Stage at Pieta, shortest and best route to all points in Lake County
Round Trip from San Francisco, $8.00
Rates, $10 to $16 per week.
J. CRAIG, Manager.
San Francisco Office, 316 Montgomery Street.

Hotel Rafael
SAN RAFAEL, CAL.
The Society Resort, Winter and Summer, of the Pacific Coast
FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
Climate Unexcelled!
Magnificent Scenery!
The Sanitarium of the Pacific Coast
Otis Elevators Electric Lights
Headquarters of the San Rafael Hunt-Club and Tennis Tournaments
R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors

Pacific Congress Springs
HOTEL
SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS
SANTA CLARA COUNTY
Remodeled and under New Management
Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco
6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara
12 miles from San Jose
Address GEO. O. WATKINS,
523 Market St., S. F.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED
OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

A Chinese Drama

Bench-Show Beauties

Racing Season Reviewed by Benedict

THE WAVE

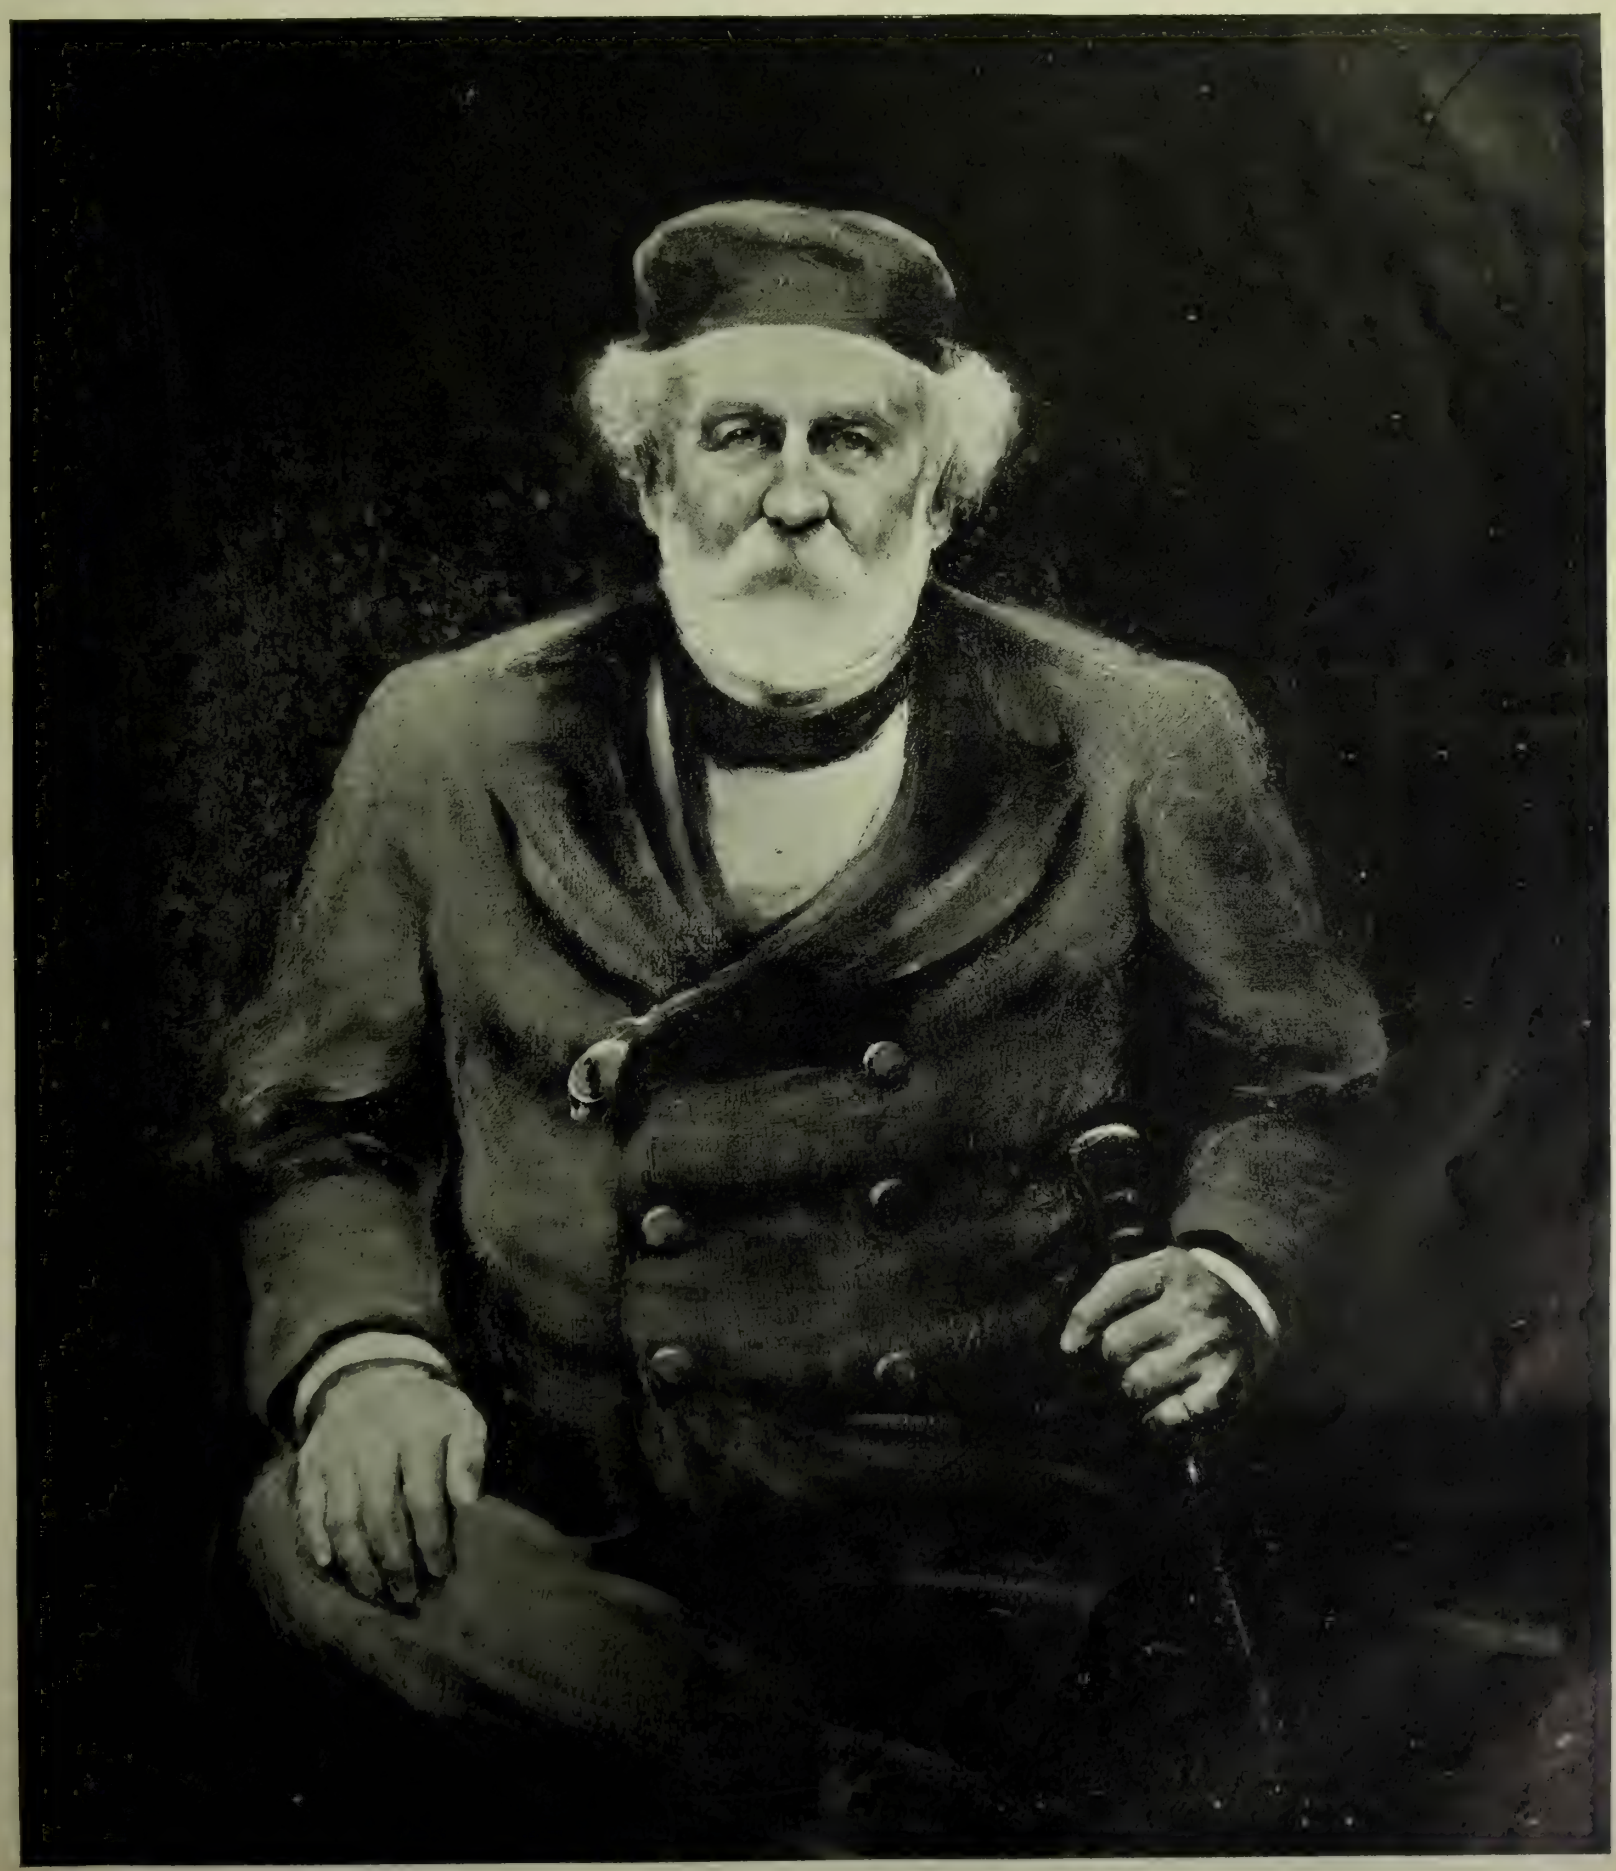
VOL XVI. No. 21 SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 22, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS



C. P. HUNTINGTON

REPRODUCED FROM THE PORTRAIT RECENTLY PAINTED BY FRED YATES

THE WAVE

's published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 22, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2–3 |
| "The First Born" | 4 |
| The Puppets and the Puppy; by Frank Norris | 5 |
| The War in Greece | 5 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 6 |
| Gossip of Europe | 7 |
| The Dog Show | 7 |
| San Francisco's Kennel-Club Show | 8 |
| Metropolitan Noises | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| A Terpsichorean Revolt | 11 |
| Mrs. Atherton Again; by C. | 12 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 13 |
| Goodwin's Garrick | 13 |
| A Turf Review; by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

The character of the message which was delivered to Congress by President McKinley on last Monday, relating to the existing conditions in Cuba, was distinctly disappointing. Since President Cleveland's message at the opening of the regular session of Congress in December there has been no statement made by the Executive or by the State Department from which the Congress or the public could learn anything of the real condition of the war-swept island, or form any conclusion as to what was our own duty toward the struggling Cubans. The message of President Cleveland disclosed a condition of affairs in the island which the President himself acknowledged could not be permitted to continue indefinitely. Since that time no apparent progress has been made toward a settlement of the strife and a pacification of the island. The unanimous testimony of the correspondents of the most conservative and reputable newspapers, American and European, shows that the rebellion against the power of Spain is as vigorous as ever, and more hopeful as the ability of the Spaniards to continue the struggle is visibly diminished. The peaceable inhabitants of the country districts have been driven from their homes, by an administrative decree of the Spanish commander, to be herded in garrisoned towns, where they live or die as they may, in extreme misery and destitution, unrelieved by the power which has torn them from their only means of providing for their own subsistence. Production of supplies has almost ceased under such government, and trade has been killed by the stupid attempts of the Captain General to maintain at par a paper currency that is hopelessly irredeemable, by the threat of applying the penalty prescribed for treason and rebellion to any one who declines to take such currency for what the Captain General declares it to be worth.

The military situation is not more encouraging for the arms of Spain. The season of heat and rain is at hand, when it is practically impossible to carry on operations in the field, but this should make no great difference to the Spaniards, who seem to have abandoned all efforts to find their enemies and conquer them in the field, preferring to limit their attempts to maintaining their garrisons in the fortified positions which are their only remaining foothold on the island. In these garrisons smallpox and yellow fever are reported to be epidemic. Within a week Gomez, the Cuban General-in-Chief, has been reported with a strong force within thirty miles of Havana, and one of his subordinates has marched a strong column of insurgents from the middle of the island to the "pacified" province of Pinar del Rio, at its western extremity, without any troublesome opposition. All this, to be sure, rests only on the statements of newspaper correspondents; but, on the other hand, there is nothing to contradict these statements except vain-glorious proclamations from General Weyler, announcing the complete pacification of provinces, from which, however, continue to come daily reports of raids and skirmishes, with an occasional battle.

When it was reported, a week ago, that the President would soon send a message to Congress dealing with the Cuban question, there was a very general hope and anticipation that at last there would be made public some definite information as to the progress of the revolution, and some definite recommendation as to the course proper to be pursued by our own government. Many of our people sympathize strongly with the efforts of the Cubans to throw off what they believe to be the tyrannical and obsolete government of Spain, and a few of these would be glad to see an armed intervention by the United States for the purpose of putting an end to Spanish rule on this side of the world and adding Cuba to our own possessions. At the other extreme of opinion is a small group of Spanish sympathizers, reinforced by that other group of our citizens who refuse to believe that our government has any duties to discharge outside of our own territories, and who think that no violation of the rights of our citizens in foreign lands is sufficient provocation for so much as the mere mention of war as a means of enforcing redress. Between these extremes of opinion stands the great majority of our people. They are not jingoes; they would not countenance such a thing as a war of aggression; they do not desire the annexation of Cuba, and they are willing to be patient and forbearing, to any reasonable degree, with a people who are in such manifold difficulties as those which now beset the Spaniards. On the other hand they are indignant at reports, which are allowed to go without contradiction, that their fellow citizens, native or naturalized, or of any color or condition, are suffered to be victims of a power which can persecute bitterly and brutally, but which is powerless to defend them. They are unwilling that a territory which so closely adjoins our own coasts should be ruined by a war waged by an alien power, in defense of an unrighteous government, with such want of military ability and such disregard of the laws of civilized warfare, that murder takes the place of manful fighting, and the sufferings inseparable from war at its best fall most grievously on those who are not combatants in the strife.

It was to the President that the great majority of citizens looked for guidance in this question. Our Consul General at Havana must, in the ordinary course of his duty, have reported, from time to time, to his superiors at Washington his observations on the progress and character of the war, and on the character of the civil government of Cuba as administered by the Spaniards in the few places which they still control, and by the insurgent authorities over the greater part of the island. During the administration of Mr. Cleveland evident pains were taken to keep from the public all knowledge of the nature of General Lee's reports. This policy was continued by President McKinley, but the announcement of an impending message from him to Congress in relation to Cuba was hailed with satisfaction. The House and the Senate had been allowed to go on debating in the dark the question of recognition of the belligerent status of the Cubans, but now light was to be shed on their course by the executive message, and the chief of the nation was about to recommend the proper action for them to take. Well, the message was delivered, and it amounts to a recommendation that Congress shall furnish means of relief to certain necessitous American citizens in Cuba, who by force of circumstances have been deprived of their means of support. The message is a ridiculous disappointment.

It is time for the question of Cuban belligerency to be settled. It is a question of fact alone, and as such is to be decided on the evidence alone. The evidence for a decision, one way or the other, is undoubtedly in the possession of the State Department in the reports of our Consul General at Havana and of our other consular representatives in Cuba. It is the duty of the Executive to impart this information, if not to the public at least to the representatives of the people, and not for the gratification of mere curiosity, but for the guidance of the government in dealing with a very serious problem.

Our government has dealt with Spain on the diplomatic hypothesis that during the last two years no state of public war has existed in Cuba. If there is no war in Cuba, what has brought about a state of affairs which has made it necessary for the President of the United States to ask alms from Congress for the relief of American citizens resident in Cuba who are no longer able to live there and unable to get away? If it is war that has brought us to this pass, let it be known and let us abandon our diplomatic hypothesis and acknowledge the belligerent rights of the Cubans. It is openly stated that Consul General Lee's reports are of such a character that their publication would precipitate a riot in Havana, and a possible massacre of Americans there. But it is not becoming that our policy in a matter of international right and wrong should be dominated by fear of a Spanish mob. We have spent several millions on a navy in order to be provided with a reliance in such emergencies. Let us know the truth, let us do what seems right and honest, and, if necessary, let us send a fleet to Havana to carry the alms of Congress.

DISCOMFORT IN THE STREETS.

If anybody lives in San Francisco simply because it is a pleasant place to live in it must be for the reason that nature has done more to make the place agreeable than men—and women—have been able to do to make it uncomfortable. The most active malevolence or the most persistent neglect on the part of those in authority cannot deprive us of the advantages, conferred on us by nature, in the way of situation, scenery and climate, but of the small comforts, which in the aggregate are great, and in which lies, for most persons, the superiority of urban over suburban and rustic life, we are deplorably deficient and deplorably contented with our deficiencies.

One of the considerations which lead men to gather themselves together in cities is the facility and celerity of movement which are provided for by numerous and well kept public ways. A stranger among us might very well conclude after a few days' observation that there are no real public ways in San Francisco. There are sidewalks along the streets, to be sure, but the right to occupy these to any extent that may seem desirable seems to be vested in the owners of the adjoining property, who are, however, kind enough to permit the wayfaring man to pass along the walk if he can. Of course, there exists a sort of traditional legal fiction that the sidewalk is for the use of the wayfaring man rather than a place of deposit for the boxes, bales and barrels of the wholesaler, the showcases of the retailer, and the signboards of evening papers, and occasionally this ancient fiction takes on the appearance of truth and life. Very recently the Mayor of San Francisco by an official veto refused to allow an enterprising merchant of Market street to build out his show windows a foot or two over the sidewalk of that thoroughfare. Considerable surprise at the Mayor's action was expressed by those who had forgotten the existence of the legal fiction, or had never been aware of its existence, and the surprise is aggravated by a consideration of the obstructions which are maintained permanently on the sidewalk of O'Farrell street which adjoins his Honor's property. The permanent hatchways which occur so frequently in that long stretch of so-called public way contribute, doubtless, to enhance the rents which his Honor derives from the subterranean parts of the structure which bears his name, and are, so far, highly commendable. But they undoubtedly reduce by at least a half the width of the navigable channel, and furnish a much greater obstruction than would have resulted if the prayer of the Market street man had not been so ruthlessly denied—whose landlord would probably have raised the rental of the place if the desired advantage in the way of protruding show windows had been acquired. And nobody in San Francisco complains of the Mayor's appropriation of the sidewalk; indeed we are profoundly grateful to him, and to other landlords, for refraining from taking the sidewalk altogether. Passing from the sidewalk to the street—which, by the way, the pedestrian in San Francisco finds himself frequently required to do—the same rule of occupancy for private convenience is found prevailing. In villages, where the line of demarkation between footpath and roadway is vague and uncertain, it is the custom for the villagers to maintain their wood-piles somewhere in the public way in front of their habitations. The villagers on foot beat out a trail around the obstacle, which thereby ceases to be an obstruction, and gives no annoyance. We have no street wood-piles in San Francisco, but we have in full vigor the ambulatory habits of villagers, and it is well that we have. It would otherwise be a serious discomfort to have to take to the roadway and dodge street cars and wagons so frequently. For whenever any property owner is minded to build a new structure or repair an old one in this town his first step is to take possession of the entire sidewalk and so much of the street as may suit his convenience. The area appropriated he covers with building materials, except so much of it as may be needed for the operation of mixing mortar. Commonly, too, he fences the public out by a tall fence, the surface of which he covers with beautiful advertisements, from which he derives a handsome revenue so long as he cares to let them remain. Of course, this does not tend to abridge the period during which the public is fenced out, but we, the public, have our village habits, and we never complain.

The advance of civilization in any community is generally attended by a suppression of unnecessary noises. The savage, in his hours of ease and relaxation, enjoys hugely such shrieks and howls as we, who are civilized, are wont to describe as fiendish. We make humorous remarks about the quality of music furnished by the orchestras of Chinatown, and refer to the barbarian taste of those who can find pleasure in listening to such noises, but our own noises we are used to and we rather like them. Anybody here may rig up a fire bell on a dray and put in his whole day and a great part of the night in the production of a noise which he may devote to any public purpose he may choose, from the sale of fish or strawberries to urging the citizens to vote for Doctor O'Donnell or to attend a prize fight. If he can't afford a bell he can lift up his own voice, with all the power of his lungs, to any similar end. And if he cannot make noise enough by himself he can train a dog to sit beside him in his wagon and bark unceasingly. Nobody will object to him, and the police will never notice him. We enjoy noises, though we are highly civilized. The citizen of San Francisco, who, after his day of toil is done, finds a seat in a cable car and unfolds his evening paper to read on the way home, finds a real enjoyment in having a dozen or twenty newsboys enter the car, step on his feet, and shout "A-a-axtry" into his face in the hope of inducing him to buy another paper. If the citizen happens to be sitting next to an acquaintance, with whom he is conversing, the conversation is politely suspended till the boy gets through shouting. The newsboy is a delight, not a nuisance. If he were objectionable he would be complained of and promptly suppressed by the police or by the street car people.

These are but samples of many things which San Franciscans seem to enjoy. To be sure, the stranger within our gates finds fault with them, and wonders that we so patiently submit to what he calls an enormous aggregate of imposition and oppression. If we tell him to go back to his own place if he wants a free sidewalk to walk on, and if he objects to being turned out on the cobbles every time he comes to a new building, and if he suggests that continuous noise is destructive of the pleasure of life, he, in turn, is sometimes unkind enough to suggest that we need the services of a few municipal missionaries. It is useless to tempt the stranger with the prospect of another park with a menagerie attachment in the Mission. If we really want him to come here and to stay here we shall have to abandon some of our cherished village practices, and rouse up the police to suppress noise and dirt and street obstructions.

SPURIOUS BARGAINS OF THE DEPARTMENT-STORES.

The department store crusade is waxing warm throughout the several States. In California, Sacramento is far ahead of this city in the campaign. The capital city merchants are actively at work exposing the bogus character of the department store bargains, and have organized for the purpose of self-defense. One Sacramento merchant, writing in the "Record-Union," states that the department store cannot serve the people better, nor make the poor man's money buy more than it has ever been able to buy before. He declares that department stores cannot buy in the open market at a lower figure than any other dealer, except in the purchase of inferior goods, which are made up by manufacturers expressly for the department store trade, and which the single line merchant cannot afford to handle. This is one of the vices that grow out of the department store business. Manufacturers have come to making a line of goods expressly for the department store trade. It may be a spool of silk, a package of seeds, a bolt of ribbon, or any other article of common use which has a standard of weight or measurement that has become fixed in the public mind. These goods are put up so that they appear upon their face to be of the same weight, or the same quantity and quality, as the ordinary article of trade, when in point of fact they are light in weight and short in length. Even in the sale of these inferior goods, the department stores are careful to sell but small quantities at a time, and they do not attempt to hold these inferior articles at low figures except upon special occasions. Should the department store decide to drive a certain dealer out of business, then low prices will rule until the unfortunate victim is forced to close his doors. A Toronto paper publishes a list of "bargains" that have been exposed, which deserves reproducing here:

Tables were thrown together to be sold as bargains.

Garden and flower seeds, advertised as bargains, were shown to be fakes. While a purchaser apparently secured $2.10 worth of seeds for 25c. at a department store, it was found that the seeds had been specially packed to sell at the price, and one package from the Steele, Briggs Seed Co., Ltd., contained as many seeds as 19½ packages from the department store. Instead of a bargain the buyer only got 12c. worth of seed at the highest retail price for 25c.

That another lady who bought flower seeds at another Toronto department store—six packages for 10c.—got fewer seeds in all six packages than were contained in one 5c. package afterwards purchased at a grocery store across the street from her own house.

That the spool on which crochet-silk is wound in department stores has swelling sides, is shaped like a barrel, and deceives the eye.

That spools of common sewing-thread run to wood instead of thread, and that there may be bargains in spools, but none in thread.

That Seidlitz powders bought in the drug branch of a department store are reported to us as being found by a doctor to be made of alum, and other ingredients not used in real Seidlitz powders.

That citrate of magnesia, advertised as a bargain at 40 cents per pound, would not fizz when used, and was found to be composed almost entirely of white sugar, pulverized, and worth perhaps five cents a pound.

That a blood purifier described as worth a dollar per bottle is bargained at 35c. a bottle, but is said to be manufactured specially for bargaining, and, on the report of a chemist, is said to contain only water, some coloring matter and some unknown, bitter ingredient (not even quinine), and the whole stuff worth only about 5 cents a gallon.

That Berlin wool, supposed to weigh an ounce per skein, only weighs ¾ of an ounce; and that sixteen of them, instead of weighing a pound, only weighed 12 ounces.

That gold watches advertised as baragins at "our very special price, $39.40, much lower than sold by jewelers," were found to be the very same line as are sold by all the leading jewelers at $31.50.

That wall-paper represented to be worth $1 the piece and sold at 50c., was found to be old-style wall-paper that never had been sold at a dollar, but sold three years ago at 50 cents per roll.

That baking-powder, supposed to be sold at a bargain, was found, on the examination of a chemist, to be made of alum, phosphates and ground starch, and therefore is not baking-powder at all, for the real thing is made of pure cream of tartar and carbonate of soda.

That tea sold for 25c. a pound and advertised as worth 40c. (and quoted by many as evidence of the good that departmental stores confer upon the poor) is shown, on examination, to be made by blending the very cheapest of teas with tea-dust, and the resulting mixture, instead of being worth 40c. as claimed, or worth the 25c. for which it is sold, is worth only from 10 to 12c. per pound, and could be sold at that price by any retail dealer who could find customers for it.

That there was advertised as a Friday bargain, "42-inch diagonal twill serge, regular price 25c., Friday 15c." The very same line of goods was found in a straight dry-goods store selling at 10c. per yard, the regular price every day in the week.

A few days ago a resident of this municipality noticed a certain make of pill advertised at 10 cents per box in a Toronto store. As the usual price per box is 25 cents, he thought he would make 60 cents by buying four boxes. In the usual box he counted 100 pills, but in the departmental store boxes there were only 25 pills. In other words he paid 40 cents for what he could have purchased at home for 25 cents. That is but a sample of the bargains people think they get.

We are making up a list of local swindles of the same character which we hope in a short while to be able to present to our readers as illustrating the methods of the department stores and the evil influences they work upon the honest retail dealer.

---

There is no better business than mining, when mining is conducted on proper business principles. To mine costs money, and compels economy. But the returns, when there are returns, are magnificent and compensate for the preliminary uncertainty and the secondary worries. Twenty-three months ago that which was called the Gwin mine was an abandoned shaft in the Sierras, out of which a fortune had been taken. It had exploited the political fortunes of Dr. Gwin, and enabled the execution of those daring if illusive schemes which in the latter period of his career he undertook. The property was worked—with such knowledge as the time boasted—to the thousand-foot level, and then the mechanical appliances available were not powerful enough to pump out the water which invaded the shafts. Besides, there was an impression that deep mining was not profitable, and that the ore body, which had pinched, must soon be exhausted. Since then it has been demonstrated that veins located in the Mother Lode may be worked to a great depth, and the experience of the Kennedy and the Utica must hold good for the Gwin. Superintendent Thomas of the Kennedy, who had a thorough familiarity with mining at deep levels, organized a strong company, bonded the shaft for $150,000, raised $200,000 with which to commence operations, made himself master of the situation and equipped with the best appliances money could command, he set about sinking a new shaft, proceeding with a determination to achieve a depth of fifteen hundred feet before commencing operations. At the thousand-foot level a huge deposit of rich ore was encountered, and a twenty-stamp mill was at once erected. The other five hundred feet are nearly accomplished, and it is estimated that there is in sight rock rich enough to yield three million dollars. Some thirty days hence the purchase money is due, and the mill, which is the best in California, is working day and night extracting gold to pay for the property. Ere the time is up the required $150,000 will be ready, out of the bowels of the mine, together with a generous dividend for the investors. This is good fortune, of course, but consider the auspices under which the enterprise was accomplished—plenteous capital, a plan of operation never deviated from and a thorough administration.

---

The supply of water to London is furnished by eight companies, incorporated under Acts of Parliament and having a total paid up capital of £15,739,476, or $78,677,380. Five of the companies draw their water from the river Thames, two from the sea, supplemented by springs and wells, and one from deep chalk wells in the county of Kent.

---

The New York "Sun" claims that the lengthy telegrams from the seat of war, which certain of the dailies are publishing, are concocted in the head office of the Associated Press in New York. It claims that most of the stuff is created for the purpose of being denied the next day. It may be added that the "Sun" is not in the A. P.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY

Self-Satisfaction at Berkeley Fatal to the Growth of the Institution.

III.

Our recent strictures on the University seem to have fallen on ears not prepared to take our criticism in the spirit in which it is given. The root of the misunderstanding lies in the profound difference between our conceptions of the possible future of the University and the standard which it ought to attain, and theirs. Among people who know, there is no very marked difference of opinion as to the present condition and needs of the University. But many, perhaps the majority, even, of the earnest friends of the University, stop here. They are satisfied to see California jog contentedly along, trusting to providence to keep her in her place among American Universities, and sufficiently pleased if she does that. This easy going temperament is a very pleasant sort of thing and adds somewhat to the general comfort of the moment. But it is not the stuff that great States, or great institutions of any kind, are made of.

For ourselves we emphatically repudiate the attitude. We realize too fully the possibilities that this future holds for California, and for California's University, to accept such a standard. There is nowhere in the world to-day a spot so well adapted to the development of a high intellectual civilization as the vicinity of San Francisco. The contact of different races has notoriously always been an incentive to intellectual activity of every kind. The clash of conflicting ideas is an essential stimulus to art and philosophy. No civilization has ever maintained itself without it; national seclusion means national degeneration. The great intellectual development of the Graeco-Roman world was the result of the meeting of Hellenic and Semitic civilizations on the shores of the Aegean and in Alexandria. In the middle Ages the center of intellectual activity in Europe was where Arab culture met Christian in Southern Spain. Look at India, China, Japan, where the contact with Western thought is producing a great revival of ancient oriental culture. This is why seaports have always been centers of learning and refinement and it is why San Francisco and vicinity, with its highly cosmopolitan population, its natural heritage of all that is best in Western civilization, its opportunity to acquire new thought and new enthusiasm by contact with the widely differing ideals and modes of thought of the Orient, can and should become one of the world's centers for every form of intellectual activity.

The merchants of San Francisco are beginning to realize that the future of the city is bound up with the commerce of the Pacific, not merely with the trade of California. It is time our State University began to realize that, if it will, it can have an international sphere of action; that it can be the intellectual center of the Pacific, and play a part in the history of the coming centuries.

Yet, with this opportunity before it, California is drifting peacefully along, thoroughly satisfied if it can compare favorably with other State universities; drawing its inspiration from the fresh water colleges of the Mississippi valley, and pointing with conscious pride to the rapid increase in the number of its students—an increase it shares with most of the larger universities of the West. It is needless to say that such a spirit of sleepy self-satisfaction will never enable California to realize the future which is possible for it.

Berkeley is a pretty good place to get an education. It compares well with the best institutions of its kind in the West. It will probably continue to drift along with the current of American education and keep its place in the line, without any very violent prodding. But that is all it will do. If we are to have a State University in keeping with the industrial and political importance which California is assuming; if we are to have one worthy of the future great seaport of San Francisco, the ruling spirits at Berkeley must wake up.

They must not be satisfied with maintaining their position; they must forge ahead, and rapidly, far more rapidly than in the past. For the great growth Berkeley has recently experienced is only the tail end of a wave which has swept over American colleges from the Atlantic to the Pacific. California's University must not be controlled by the methods, or animated by the ideas, of fresh water colleges; not satisfied with their ratio of progress, nor with the degree of success which they attain. We should be content with nothing but the best, looking toward Berlin, Paris, and Vienna for inspiration, to all the shores of the Pacific for Student and Faculty, and to the highest and best that we know for our guiding ideals.

---

Tomasso Salvini has been touring lately in Hungary, according to the Pall Mall Gazette. At the town of Kecskemet he applied to the Town Council for permission to act, but they replied that the town was tired of dramatic shows and that their local talent was enough and must be protected.

"THE FIRST BORN"

A Bit of Chinese Life Portrayed on the Alcazar Stage.

Good things are coming out of Galilee nowadays, and by that I mean that there are a number of writers—they are all young—in San Francisco, who are writing fiction about San Francisco and San Francisco people and the strange, mixed life that is at ferment at our very horse blocks. The novelist is not yet, but the short story writer is abroad, kodaking and observing, and now the dramatist has made an appearance.

I am very enthusiastic in the matter of Mr. Powers' little play at the Alcazar. It is a new note, and if it does not ring absolutely true, it does at least sound an alarm. Consider now, you who have seen "The First Born." Ask yourself why it was you were charmed with the thing. What was it that held you there from curtain to curtain, breathless, very intent? As far as plot and situation and character go there is nothing extraordinary about it. We have seen deserted husbands and stolen children and assasinations and the like on the stage before. But take Loey Tsing, for instance—have you ever in all your experience as a theatre-goer, whether in New York, London, or Paris, no matter where, the world round, seen her before—a Chinese slave girl, created simply and with some attempt at realism? You will say, of course, "The Mikado" and "The Geisha Girl." But the "Mikado" and the "Geisha" are merely Caucasians in Chinese clothes. Loey Tsing and Man Lo Yek and Doctor Pau Len and all the rest of them are the real, true Chinese of San Francisco, treated seriously and from the Chinese point of view, and the mounting—the scene before the Ming Yen temple, and the little alley of the second act—is as true to life as a photograph. The play is thoroughly, purely Chinese in conception and in execution, and the characters are live Chinamen, who look, and talk, and act,—yes, and think—like Chinamen. Never, so far as I know, has the subject been thus treated on the stage hitherto. It is new, new, new. One cannot insist too much upon its newness—its originality. "The First Born," from this point of view, is perhaps the most important play that has ever been produced in San Francisco.

Death of Man Lo Yek

Briefly, this is the story of the play: Man Lo Yek, an old-clothes dealer, living in San Francisco's Chinatown, has for wife Loey Tsing. But in course of time, tiring of her, he wins over the affections of the woman Chan Lu, wife of Chan Wong. Loey Tsing he sells into a life of shame. Chan Wong is left alone with his little boy, Chan Toy. The whole point of the play is here, in the affection that the deserted husband has for his little son. It would appear that the paternal affection for the first born son is the predominant passion of the Chinaman, taking precedence over that which he bears for his wife. Marriage with him is a mere matter of course, but the birth of his first son is the event round which his life is centered. You see that Mr. Powers is writing from the Chinese point of view. To have caused the play to turn upon the wife's desertion of the husband would have been to distort and warp the Chinese character to suit European-Caucasian ideas. Chan Wong has no great affection for his faithless wife—it is the boy for whom he cares. One day his son is stolen. The distracted father searches Chinatown for him in vain. Loey Tsing, the slave girl, at length informs him that Man Lo Yek and Chan Lu (who are supposed to have fled to Oregon) have returned in secret to Chinatown: had been there that day — the day of the disappearance of the child. Chan Wong discovers the house in which they live, dashes in and up the narrow stairs, knife in hand, only to reappear an instant later bearing in his arms the dead body of his little son, Chan Toy. This is the end of the first act. The second and last act is merely the story of Chan Wong's revenge. There is a very pretty scene between him and Loey Tsing—she at her window, he at his doorway underneath. Enter to them Man Lo Yek, and then, on the impulse of the moment, Chan Wong becomes a hatchet-man, leaps upon him as he passes, cuts him down with his cleaver, drags the body into the house, and a second later resumes his position in his doorway, calm and impassive, smoking his pipe, which has not even had time to go out.

Wo Me Ah Bac Lam: "Won't you buy olives?"

"Oh, buy me, dear Chan, and take me to my home in beautiful Shan-Tung"

That is the whole play—on paper. You must see it to appreciate it, and you must see it with understanding eyes. It has all the value of a discovery, a really great discovery—the discovery of a new field. Mr. Powers is not Kipling, but he has done for Chinatown what the "chee-chee" did for the native of India, and he has gone about it in precisely the right spirit—the spirit of realism, portraying his people precisely as they are, making an attempt to honestly understand them, to appreciate their loves and their hatreds, their prejudices and superstitions and limitations. This thing — this strange, transplanted Mongolian life—has been teeming under our very eyes for nearly half a century, and has been overlooked—by dramatists, at least. "The man with the muck-rake" does find gold after all, sometimes. Mr. Powers might have tried his hand at the old style of drama, which we all know by heart—the familiar types, the hackneyed dialogue, the threadbare situations, ideas taken second- and third-hand from other men's plays—and we would never have given him another thought. He wrote instead "The First Born," and all San Francisco is agog over it.

"Chan Les!" Finale of First Act

An electric railroad, largely underground, has been surveyed and partially completed to the highest peak of the Jungfrau. The railway is modeled after the road constructed on Mount Salene Genneva, which was the first electrical mountain road of considerable size ever built. The projector of the Jungfrau road is Herr Guyer-Zeller of Zurich. He plans to build his line on the surface for a considerable distance, winding in and out through tunnels and over convenient ledges, and approaching the great mountain by a serpentine course. At the terminus of the road there is a ledge of rock that shoots up sixty-six meters high, with a crown so narrow that the railroad cannot reach it, and within this he proposes to pierce a tunnel through whose interior an elevator will take the passenger to the summit. The elevator will be worked by a dynamo whose power comes from a hydraulic motor utilizing the waters of Lake Luchinen in the Lauterbrunnen. Within the tube is a winding staircase for those not caring to use the elevator.

Professor Carl Lumholtz, the explorer, who was sent to Mexico for the American Museum of Natural History, has returned from his trip, and brings news of a strange tribe of people called the Hincholes—hitherto unnamed by science. They live in the southern part of Mexico, and are practically isolated from the rest of the world. The men are handsome and well developed, and the girls are beautiful. Their religion is a strange mixture of Christianity and Paganism, one of their peculiar observances being a pilgrimage of forty days to San Luis Potosi for the purpose of gathering an herb known as peyote, which has the effect when eaten of destroying hunger and thirst.

The late Marquis of Hertford, who formed the Wallace collection, visited Ragley, the family place in Warwickshire, only once in his life, on the day of his father's funeral, in March, 1842. The dead Marquis lay in state in the great drawing-room of Ragley, with candles burning about him, with his coronet and the star and ribbon of the garter upon the coffin. At the hour appointed for the funeral a carriage dashed up to the Hall and a traveler got out, entered the house, and, when the services were over and the body of his father laid away in the family vault, re-entered his carriage and drove away. And from that day to the time of his death he was never seen at Ragley Hall again.

---

Advanced vegetarians in England have formed an association, binding themselves to eschew not only animal food, but also all articles composed in any degree of substances involving the death of animals. This includes the leather for shoes and gloves, fat for soap, ivory, skins, and feathers.

THE PUPPETS AND THE PUPPY

DISRESPECTFULLY DEDICATED TO ANNIE BESANT

BY FRANK NORRIS

"There are more things in your philosophy than are dreamed of in Heaven and Earth."

CHARACTERS:

A LEAD SOLDIER. A DOLL. A MECHANICAL RABBIT.
A QUEEN'S BISHOP (from the chessboard).
JAPHET (a wooden Mannekin from the Noah's Ark).
SOBBY (the Foxterrier puppy).

SCENE—A corner of the play-room carpet.
TIME—The night after Christmas.

The Lead Soldier: Well, here we are, put into this Room, for something, we don't know what; for a certain time, we don't know how long; by somebody, we don't know who. It's awful!

The Doll: And yet we know—I think I can speak for all of us—we know that there is a Boy.

The Mechanical Rabbit (reflectively): The Boy—the Boy—it's a glimpse into the infinite.

The Queen's Bishop: Boy, forsooth! There is no Boy, except that which exists in your own imaginations. You have created a figment—a vast terrible, empty nothing, to complement your own imperfections. I have given great thought to the matter. There is, perhaps, a certain Force that moves us from time to time—a certain vague power, not ourselves, that shifts us here and there. All of us chessmen believe in that. We are the oldest and highest cult of you all. But even this—what shall I call it?—this Force, is not omnipotent. It can move us only along certain lines. I still retain my individuality—still have my own will. My lines are not those of the knight, or the pawn, or the castle, and no power in the Room can make them so. I am a free agent—that's what is so terrible.

The Doll: Ah, you think you've solved it all—you, with your science and learning. There is a Boy, and I am made in his image.

The Lead Soldier: And I.

Japhet: And I.

The Mechanical Rabbit: Yes, yes, the Doll must be right. Who else could have implanted within me this strange power of playing upon these cymbals? Somebody must have wound me up. I say it was the Boy.

Japhet: But, come now; let us consider a moment. One thing we can all agree upon. Some day, sooner or later, we shall be Thrown-away. It is the inevitable end of all toys. We shall be Thrown-away and go to the Garret. Then what?

The Doll: Dreadful question.

Japhet: This is what I believe: Some day I shall be Thrown-away and go on that last voyage to the Garret, but not forever. I look forward to a time when I shall be made of rosewood instead of common pine, and shall have a white shellac finish instead of this base coating of non-poisonous paint, and I shall live forever in a Noah's Ark of silver.

The Lead Soldier: What childish fallacy! It is against all reason to regard our lot as such infantile trickery. I, too, some day shall be Thrown-away, but my conception of immortality is no such child's play as this. No; in course of time I shall be re-melted and cast again to form another lead soldier, who in his turn shall be re-melted and re-cast, and so on and on, forever and ever.

The Queen's Bishop: Dreams! dreams! dreams! What butterflies you chase! What phantoms you hug! After I have been Thrown-away, I shall gradually rot and decay, and fall to dust, and be finally absorbed by the elements——

The Doll: And lose your identity? Never! Listen to me. I feel that in me there are three individualities, each of them me, and a fourth which is of Me, yet not in Me—the Not-me. There is the sawdust, the kid, and the china—a trinity. Then there is that mysterious something which cries "Papa! Mama!" when the Boy presses on my chest. This is the Not-me. This is the part of me that shall last after I'm Thrown-away. That is my conception of immortality.

The Lead Soldier (soliloquizing): And each time I am re-melted and re-cast I become a finer soldier—larger, firmer on my base, more life-like. Thus the race is improved. Immortality is but the betterment of the race.

The Mechanical Rabbit (decisively): When I am Thrown-away that's the end of me—it's annihilation.

The Lead Soldier (after a pause): Tell me this: Why was Falling-down brought into the Room? Here is another thing we are all at one upon—that it is wrong to Fall-down. It displeases the Boy.

The Queen's Bishop (sotto voice): The Force that moves us, you mean.

The Mechanical Rabbit: That's all very well. I can see how it is wrong, horribly and fearfully wrong, for the Lead Soldier to Fall-down, when the Boy sets him in his ranks and he Falls-down, he drags with him the whole line of other soldiers. The wrongdoing does not stop with himself—it communicates itself to others. It is a taint that progresses to infinity. But why should it be wrong for me to Fall-down? I hurt no one but myself.

The Queen's Bishop: It is wrong for you as well as for the Lead Soldier and myself. You can know nothing of the vast, grand scheme of the Room. Suppose I should Fall-down whenever I chose, and knock over, say, the king, or the castles—what a calamity it would be! It would disarrange the vast, grand plan of events. No, no; in keeping upright we are only helping on the magnificent, incomprehensible aim of the Room. The same moral law applies to us all. What's wrong for one is wrong for us all.

The Lead Soldier: But what shall we say in a case like this: The other day the Boy took hold of the drummer of my squad, and twisted and bent his standard so that he could no longer stand. He put him in the line, and naturally he Fell-down. Then the Boy threw him away. Was it the drummer's fault, I ask? Why should he be punished for falling down, when the Boy himself twisted his standard? And again, I have heard of lead soldiers who never could stand because of some fault in the casting. Were they to blame? They were doomed before they were cast, and were Thrown-away afterward.

Japhet: Dreadful problem! Any day the Boy may pull off my standard and Throw me away.

The Queen's Bishop: We cannot understand these things, but there must be reason in them. But if you come to that, why are we here anyhow? I owe my existence to the turning lathe. Did I ask to be turned?

The Mechanical Rabbit: Or I to be made?

Japhet: Or I to be whittled?

The Doll: Or I to be stuffed?

The Lead Soldier: Or I to be moulded? If I had been given choice in the matter I would have chosen to be the general of my box, who sits on a horse that is rearing up, and points with his sword. Accident alone put him there. His lead is no better than mine, and his uniform is only paint-deep. In the re-melting, perhaps, he may be cast as a private and I as the general.

[Sobby, the Foxterrier puppy, pushes open the door of the room with his nose. His eye falls upon the mechanical rabbit. He rushes at it, shakes it between his teeth, and in a few minutes has worried it to an unrecognizable mass of skin and springs. Then he turns upon the doll, whom he likewise destroys. He chews the head from Japhet, and, with a movement of his paw, knocks the lead soldier down the register. Then he growls and scrabbles over the Queen's Bishop till it, as well, tumbles down the register. The Queen's Bishop disappears, muttering, vaguely, something about the "vast, resistless forces of nature."]

THE WAR IN GREECE

A Near View of Edhem Pasha and His Soldiers.

Every now and then the course of human events brings us to prominence a man who for a time occupies the center of the world's stage. A little while ago it was Nansen, and before him McKinley, and before him Rhodes and Kruger. Just now the man who holds the boards and gets the applause and the flowers and the columns of copy in the newspapers is Edhem Pasha, whom Europe and America have all at once come to regard as a brilliant soldier and a great commander, who has so successfully conducted the war against the Greeks that his troops have been complaining because the campaign does not seem like war, but like a military review, and this after he has driven the Greeks to earth, or, more correctly, treed them at Domakas, without sustaining a single reverse. It is on the cards that the advance from Milouna Pass to Domakas may go into history as another "Atlanta to the sea." Here is a picture of the great Pasha by a man who saw—Stevens, of the London "Mail," most readable of all the war correspondence whose copy has thus far been printed:

"In any other friendly country a three days' unshaved, two days' unclothed, twelve hours' unwashed, sweat-and-dust-caked special correspondent would have sought out the military secretary, and asked when the Commander-in-Chief would allow him to pay his respects. But as this was only backward, happy-go-lucky, generous, gentlemanly Turkey, I rode straight up to the headquarters gate, stumbled across the walled court yard, over the mountainous cobbles, which are the staple pavement of Turkey, and asked where was his Excellency. Edhem Pasha, Commander-in-Chief of a hundred thousand odd soldiers, sat on the druggeted cushions of a little divan which ran along one side of a little room, sparsely furnished with a chair or two, a couple of smaller divans, a table and a map. From his broad forehead, his sharp, fine-cut nose, his lively, watchful gray eyes, his bushy, grizzling beard, you might guess him English, French, German, Russian, Turk or what you will. But you could never guess him other than a man of quick intelligence and a gentleman.

"He talks French as they talk it on the boulevards; he laughs with a jolly explosion, like a child at a pantomime; he despises the Greeks; he is never tired of talking of Alabanians; he has been wounded by Servians, Montenegrins and Russians, though he says he never distinguished himself in battle, and he shouts 'A la bonne heure' at every mention of war."

Stevens' impression of the Turkish soldiers is of men no longer young, patient, solid, stolid fathers of families, standing to arms indomitably in threshing rains and whipping winds, but worn and shabby in the matter of uniforms, not at all of the smart jauntiness of the Greeks; out at knee and elbow—even the officers—but sturdy, steady, lean, and active as goats; good travelers, good fighters; doing their twelve hours a day under knapsack and accoutrement, and thriving on a mess of lentels, beans and rice, eked out with a little lamb.

The "unspeakable Turk" changes color, it would seem, on closer inspection. He is, it appears, a born soldier, who came into Europe scimitar in hand, and who still remembers his traditions, who is more at home under a tent than under a roof—a man made for persistence rather than for dash, for endurance rather than for brilliancy; just the kind of soldier needed in the black, bare planes of Northern Thessaly. The Greek is more suggestive of the boulevardier. Stevens, who had the good fortune to be present at a frontier meeting of a Grecian and a Turkish officer, thus contrasts them:

"There was the Greek, a dumpy young man, with forage cap, waxed mustache, trim dark blue tunic, sky-blue trousers, boots to the knee, and the strut of the Continental officer. And there was the Turk—old, lean, long-armed and long-legged, big-nosed and hollow-eyed, with a week's beard on his face, with fez and shabby dark blue uniform torn at the knees, with sandals, and dirty cloth gaiters wound round his legs. But the Turk strode over the rocks like a he goat, and in this weather and this country I shall put my money on the Turk.

"We rode home in single file and in dead silence. Albanian pickets do not hesitate to shoot if they hear a strange tongue, and a chance shot just now might mean the lives of a million of men. On our side, at least, they are doing nothing to provoke it."

The Turkish army does not present a smart appearance. On the march one may see gun carriages almost covered under a pile of ragged bundles, like any truck, while at parade a frontranker may wear a blue-faced uniform and his neighbor one entirely of red. At drill men move heavily, perhaps, but when we remember are mostly past the age of 35 it is not to be wonder At the double quick their running is stiff, but their endurance in forced marches has already proven their hardihood. The Turk has shown the world that he can fight.

"It must not be thought that any great lessons of war will be learned either by sea or land from the present conflict. The Greek army can hardly number a soldier or an officer who has seen any serious warfare, and there has been an air throughout of guerrilla work about the Athenian plan of campaign. We hear nothing of Maxim guns or of war balloons, or of many another modern contrivance for the divorcement of souls and bodies, so earnestly studied and so eagerly employed by Christendom. 'Hammer and tongs' may best describe the general system by which the Ottoman Turk has thus far so largely redeemed his character and that of his master, and made the world respect men who can die like brave old Hafiz Pasha."

What is a battle—a battle conducted according to the modern systems of warfare? Here are Stevens' impressions of the initial battle. Not so very different really from a sham fight, save that lead rather than paper follows the popple of the guns:

"The road to Karya—which the Turks call Koshui—is like the road to everywhere else in this country. Now up, now down, here a precipice on the right, there a torrent on the left, stones everywhere, prickles everywhere, baggage animals everywhere. But as we struggled on the Karya road there came a new experience. Pop, pop; pop, pop, pop; pop, pop, pop, pop, pop; pop. It was not very different from the sound of shooting pheasants, but I knew they were shooting men. My heart began to try to beat in time with the pops. When four or five came together I wondered how many were down that time, and I hurried on lest both sides should be killed out before I got there. So I turned a corner, and came on the village of Karya—small and ramshackle and dirty, wedged into a recess under hills like cataracts suddenly turned to stone, above these the solemn whiteness of Olympus. Olympus is the backscene of Karya; its foreground was the battle. There was a broad valley, perhaps a mile to a couple of miles across.

"Across the valley came the pops—sometimes rare and distinct, sometimes a rapid popple, when all the separate reports ran into each other. It sounded like a machine that was now going round slowly, now quickly. Every now and then the pops were varied by a boom. Here and there a tiny patch of dirty smoke curled languidly off the broad hillside. That was the battle. Through a glass I watched it for a long time from the Pasha's headquarters, and made out some black dots on a tongue about one-third of the way up. That was a battery of artillery. At the very top was a line rather like the leg of a beetle under a microscope; that was a battalion of infantry. Pop, popple, boom, little black dots, and little black streaks; that was all."

Though the story of Rudyard Kipling's commission as war correspondent by the "Times" turns out a canard, Stephen Crane has gone to the front. His cable in the "Examiner" descriptive of a battle between Greeks and Turks strikes me as poor stuff, but there is no discounting the superb ability evinced in the letter from Suda Bay sent the New York "Sun." We all know that the fleet of the Powers is anchored in Suda Bay, in Crete, but the intelligence carries no particular message. But Crane makes one see the harbor. He is on the French packet Gadiana steaming in the bay: "It was the fleet of the Powers; the concert—this most terrible creature which the world has known, constructed out of the air, and perhaps in a night. This fleet was the living arm and the mailed hand of the concert. It was a limb of Europe displayed, actual, animate. At first the vessels in the distance were blended into a sort of prickly hedge. It was very unlike the pictures in the illustrated papers, which appear always to have been sketched from balloons. These great steel animals sat in a little bay menacing with their terrible glances a village of three rows of houses and a dock and vast stretches of hillsides whereon there was not even a tree to shoot at for fun. A group of vicious little torpedo boats also waited impatiently. To one who did not care to feel that there was something in this affair which weighed as much as a planet it would be a joke. But it was the concert of Europe. Colossi never smile.

"It was hard to decide which of these national exhibits was the most interesting. The French flagship was imposing in the weird and solemn complexity of her appearance. Her deck and sides were a wilderness of dull gray appliances. She looked like a factory, this monster, whereas the Camperdown, and more particularly the great Revenge, were so well proportioned and trim that one had to refer to a memory of their tonnage before they became as impressive. Italy's squadron, to the novice, looked as well as any of them. Her two battleships were large and powerful, and the Etna was obviously the best cruiser in the harbor. The Russian flagship lay near the French ships; the Italians were rather close to the English. The Kaiserin Augusta was aloof and alone."

There are 50,000 Greeks in the United States, a number exceeding the combined Norwegian and Swedish population. They are scattered all over the country, principally in Boston, Denver and St. Louis. Their occupations are principally raising and selling flowers and making candy. These occupations are hereditary, a son generally succeeding his father. Greek women rarely work.. When they do they engage in some very pretty occupation, selling the longest stemmed flowers and the prettiest potted plants.

President McKinley is the owner of a farm—a fact not generally known. When the Wilson bill went into effect, he was forced to sell his large flock of sheep, as there was no money in their fleeces. He swallowed the medicine with the rest of the farmers of the country, but told his manager he believed prices would be better under the next administration.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The portrait of C. P. Huntington, which Fred Yates completed a few hours previous to the departure of the magnate for New York, is one of the very best pictures this artist has ever done. Certainly he had in the president of the Southern Pacific Company an admirable subject. It is seldom an artist has an opportunity at such an individuality. Of the great railroad builders of America Mr. Huntington is the survivor. His is an interesting, a bold and very conspicuous figure in the history of the last quarter of a century. It must be confessed, however, that the photograph does the canvas an injustice. The modeling of the face, which, in the original, is full of character, is not expressed in the reproduction, for in photographing we lose the effect of color gradations. The camera expresses lines and shadows inimitably, but it fails to record distinctions between tones. However, the picture is not only an excellent likeness, but it also gives the beholder an impression of the forceful personality of the subject. Mr. Huntington's enemies do not deny his genius. He is a big man—mentally and physically—strong, self-confident, decisive, but yet a philosopher, of alert mind and studious inclination, who, had he not been a great trader, might have been a great artist, writer or aught else he had turned his hand to.

***

The silver lining of the dark cloud which hangs over the real estate world, is the certainty that the decline of values in this direction must force men of means into looking after more remunerative investments for their surplus coin. For many years the San Francisco capitalist who had accumulated earnings has either divided it between the savings banks and drawn the interest, or made himself happy by putting it into flats. Now that the town is built up, and there are not enough people to occupy all the houses, one hears a moaning and groaning as if the condition was not a consequence but an undeserved misfortune. There will always be surplus capital in San Francisco, and when its owners are compelled by necessity to utilize brains and intelligence in devising investments, there will at once be a change for the better. Then will the era of manufacturing set in. Men will start small establishments for the making of things which we are now purchasing in the East. Enterprises of various characters will be begun, and the population will soon be adequate to the accommodations.

***

Apropos of Savings Banks and investments, the Savings Union has always followed a policy of dealing in agricultural lands, whereas the Hibernia Bank has confined its operations to San Francisco real estate. Many times in latter years the Hibernia has had to congratulate itself on its conservatism, but latterly through foreclosed mortgages, its own real estate holdings threaten to equal the possessions of its rivals in the agricultural field. James R. Kelly and ex-Mayor Pond, who are prominently identified with the two institutions, met one day, and fell to discussing the advantages of their respective policies. Kelly, alluding to the decline in country lands, prophesied they would fall still lower. Mayor Pond replied that if the time ever came when loans on agricultural property at one-third of the assessed valuation should not be worth their face value, then brick buildings in San Francisco would be worth nothing. Of course, the point of the statement is that San Francisco having but little in the way of manufacturing and less in the direction of export trade, is really dependent for its prosperity on the prosperity of the country. However, when all things are considered it should be remembered we are here in the process of readjustment, and the future will settle up all our disabilities.

***

Very creditable, indeed, is the showing made by the pupils of the School of Design in their annual exhibit of work at the Mark Hopkins house on California street. The average excellence of this exhibit has increased enormously since the early days, when the school was located on Pine street, under the supervision of Virgil Williams. There is a very strong French influence at work among the students of the present school, as is at once proven by a glance at their charcoal drawings from the figure and more especially by their composition sketches. Some of the figure studies are very pleasing, more particularly those of male models. There is an evident attempt to avoid trivial detail, and a preference instead for broad masses and long lines, twice as difficult, but a dozen times more effective and artistic. The oil studies shown—those of the figure as well as those of still life subjects—are a poor lot, but one or two of the sketch compositons are notably attractive. Especially pleasing is the long, narrow compositon in flat tones, represnting a group of Grecian youths and maidens congregated about a circular temple. It, as well as its companion pieces, are very markedly reminiscent of Julian's and the Paris ateliers. Below in the modeling rooms some very fair work has been done. Some of the portrait busts are not at all bad, while the three studies of the recumbent boy give evidence of an excellent feeling for form and a thorough knowledge of anatomy.

***

The collapse of Sam Rainey accords with my predictions. No man who takes advantage of all his privileges when they are at the expense of the community and his associates can hope for permanent success. Had the new Democratic boss been content to divide his patronage on some fairer basis than that of satisfying the appetites of his own immediate followers, he might have enjoyed a long lease of power. In spite of the shrewdness and foresight with which the enthusiasm of his friends has endowed him, Rainey has proved himself singularly lacking in discretion. In the meantime it is illuminating to note the manner in which certain political families monopolize the rate-payers' money. There is the Mann family, which has eight hundred and fifty per month from the public treasury. One of the sons is drawing two salaries from the city—$125 monthly as warrant clerk at the City Hall, and fifty dollars more which comes to him as a teacher at the Lincoln Night School. Again there is the Maxwell family, which has six hundred per month from the treasury. Five members of Dr. Ragan's clan are already in place, and as the physician seems to own the School Board he has hopes for certain other Ragans who are still at large. This conditon of affairs is necessarily temporary, as the uprising among the Supervisors has just exhibited.

***

Supervisor Smith, whose fierce opposition to Rainey was a considerable factor in precipitating his downfall, expressed an old grudge, which he has cherished against the portly boss for many a long year. He is a druggist by profession, and a son of Officer Smith, one of the best known policemen of the southern station. Smith pere was an independent and vigorous-minded guardian of the peace, who was inaccessible to most forms of cajollery and quite above the ordinary temptations of his calling. Some years ago, in the execution of his duty, he made a big opium seizure, and there being a reward for achievements of that kind, he fully expected to reap a substantial profit by his smartness. But Buckley and Rainey, who were then running politics, contrived to divert the policeman's share to their own pockets, and for this piece of sharp business Smith blamed the Fire Department boss. So, in assisting the fight against Rainey Smith discharged a family obligation.

***

Even without his participation, however, the downfall of Rainey would have been accomplished. The rebellion against the greedy rule of the Fire Brigade's boss has been maturing for some months, though it has but recently been brought to an issue. One of the causes that precipitated the cataclysm, it seems, was a controversy between Lanigan, who is now a potent factor in city politics, and one Maxwell, a brother of the secretary of the Fire Department. It seems Maxwell was told that Lanigan had stated that Rainey's friends were "hogs." Being a big, sturdy person, he called Lanigan to task for this insult, and was very promptly told to mind his own business. The result was a fight, but the attack so enraged Lanigan's supervisorial friends that they immediately joined issue with the independents in the Board, and Rainey men were dismissed right and left. There are but few of his followers in the municipal service, save those in the Street Department. Superintendent Ambrose, however, cannot withstand the pressure that will be brought to bear on him to deprive the Raineyites even of this pasturage. Some one saw the portly boss setting out for his Warm Springs ranch the other day, attended by two burly firemen, who had been charged with the heavy task of holding up his face.

***

What a spectacle the Governor has made of himself. Imagining, I suppose, that he can counteract the denunciations heaped upon him by the men who helped him into office, by pretending a devotion to the public service, he takes the opportunity of posing before the world as a species of sleuth in the Durrant case, and obtrudes himself as a mountebank of the first water. After a trial of many months and a most careful sifting of the evidence by the Supreme Court, it is preposterous to imagine that Budd could throw any additional light on the guilt or innocence of Durrant. He knows this as well as any one else, but the love of posing, of figuring in the newspaper, in large type, is so ingrained in his cheap soul, that the temptation was irresistible, and we have had a performance that Governor Altgeld never equaled and that might arouse the envy of ex-Governor Waite.

***

My paragraphs of last week stigmatizing the Governor's extraordinary faithlessness and ingratitude received a startling confirmation from ex-Senator Gesford in the "Chronicle." The Senator, who had been one of the sufferers, was more emphatic than I cared to be, and did not hesitate to employ the most vigorous expressions in speaking of our Executive. Is it not a sad, even a scandalous condition of affairs, that the Governor of this great State, who has so many opportunities of making himself useful and valuable to his constituents, is content to be a mere mountebank?

***

It is almost an axiom that the entry of women into a profession decreases the revenues therein. Certain ladies have recently been entered in the ranks of notaries public, and now the value of affidavits has fallen enormously. The feminine mind does not seem to grasp the advantage of keeping up rates, and the work of a notary to them is nothing more than the mere stamping of paper—a simple and inexpensive process, involving no exertion, and to be compensated in proportion. There is now considerable competition among the notaries, but thus far the practitioners of the seal have sedulously adhered to their tariff. Indeed, it was not possible until recently, to obtain a formal affidavit under a dollar. With the entrance of the ladies, however, the price fell at once to fifty cents, then declined to twenty-five cents, and I am now told there is one enterprising young person who goes around the mining offices with a seal under her arm, and will stamp any paper you want for ten cents. The condition of affairs is so unprofitable that there has been called a meeting of the male members of the profession to take measures against further inroads into their revenues. Part of the proceedings will be the preparation of a petition to the Governor begging him not to appoint any more female notaries.

***

In our bold, unthinking California way, we imagine that big mining ideas are indeginous to the Coast, and don't happen out of our longitude. I was recently told of the Italian operations of two engineers, Rapp and Schaffer, who have organized a company to dredge certain of our mountain streams for gold. It seems that prior to coming here these two men executed a big undertaking in the kingdom of Humbert. In the low-lying country through which the river Po and its tributaries flow there are extensive gravel beds similar in substance to the auriferous deposits of California. They conceived the idea of dredging the channels of these streams and working the lands on either side by the hydraulic process. Analysis of the soil proved the practicability of the idea, and they organized two companies, one to purchase the riparian lands, the other to dredge and wash the gravel. The two concerns agreed not to proceed until property sufficient for five years' operations had been acquired. Rapp was told this had been arranged, and they went ahead, and the results surpassed their expectations. For two years they went ahead, and then discovered their associates had broken faith. The land company had failed to keep its agreement, and property around where they were working had advanced from five dollars per acre to something like one hundred—more than they could afford to pay. They retired, but are ready to start a similar enterprise in California, and are looking for a suitable location to begin operations, having ready for use excellent machinery which Schaffer invented for the purpose. Already they have enlisted certain prominent capitalists in the enterprise, among them C. R. Bishop, Vice-President of the Bank of California.

***

The Barillas scandal, which has held possession of the dailies this week, is the most unsavory mess this community has been treated to in moons. So far as I can gather Dentist Cranz, Dr. Perrault and Lawyer Dimond entered into their defense of the Blair family in good faith, tempered by a sense of possible profit. If the condition of affairs represented by mother and daughter was really such as they originally pictured, then the course was one honorable to undertake and proper to prosecute. Mr. Dimond bears an excellent reputation at the bar, and has never been mixed up in a nefarious transaction. I know of no previous conditions reflecting on the reputation of either Dr. Perrault or Dentist Cranz. Animated by a strongly mistaken zeal, however, the attorney for Barrillas, not content with inducing the Blairs to withdraw the contemplated suit of breach of promise against his client, and procuring the signature of the mother to a statement that she connived at and had profited by the ruin of her daughter, proceeded then to have both women swear the scheme had been concocted by Cranz, Perrault and Dimond. Affidavits setting forth their criminal complicity and accusing them of the vulgarest blackmail were embodied and signed, and it was these charges that precipitated the action. The attorney in question showed the affidavits to the accused, but refrained from serving them with copies, and now refuses to produce the documents. In self-defense Mr. Dimond commenced these proceedings as the only method available of vindicating himself and his associates. Leaving the merits of the controversy sub judice, what may be said of a mother who wittingly signs such an affidavit as Mrs. Blair did—absolutely selling her daughter's body for gold? What method of persuasion must have been used to so blind a woman to all sense of human feeling? Admitting it to be the fact, it is impossible to think it was made without consideration—and one may ask, is an attorney justified, even by his duty to his client, in procuring such a document? His object was achieved without it, it was not a necessary adjunct of his case. Yet here it is common property. Would not the community shudder if such an instance of depravity were telegraphed it from the old world?

BOSWELL JR.

THE VAMPIRE.

(Verses written by Rudyard Kipling for the picture by Philip Burne-Jones in the New Gallery.)

A fool there was and he made his prayer
(Even as you and I!)
To a rag and a bone and a hank of hair
(We called her the woman who did not care)
But the fool he called her his lady fair
(Even as you and I!)

Oh, the years we waste and the tears we waste
And the work of our head and hand,
Belong to the woman who did not know
(And now we know that she never could know)
And did not understand.

A fool there was and his goods he spent
(Even as you and I!)
Honor and faith and a sure intent
(And it wasn't the least what the lady meant)
But a fool must follow his natural bent
(Even as you and I!)

Oh, the toil we lost and the spoil we lost
And the excellent things we planned,
Belong to the woman who didn't know why
(And now we know that she never knew why)
And did not understand.

SONNET TO PAIN.

Now if this ink were blood, this pen a quill,
  Torn from some fierce and flesh-fed vulture's wing,
This sheet a shroud, and mine such matchless skill,
  As his, who o'er the deathless damned did fling
A glory that the ages cannot pale;
  Yea, were these mine, it might not then be vain
To 'prison on this page an anguished wail—
  A torture-telling threnody of pain.
But my sore songless heart doth only groan
  Low grief-ground curses through my gnashing teeth;
Familiar fiend of hell! wherein have I
  Sinned more than others, that thou dost bequeath
To me an agony that could atone
  For half a world, and its salvation buy.

—Louis A. Robertson.

AN OPENING FOR NOVELISTS

Great Opportunities for Fiction Writers in San Francisco.

There are certain cities in the world which are adaptable to the uses of the writer of fiction, and there are others which are not. Things can happen in some cities and the tale of them will be interesting; the same story laid in another city would be ridiculous. It is hard to say, why this is so, but a moment's review of the world's centers with this thought in mind will prove the truth of the statement beyond any shadow of doubt. Paris, London and Rome are "good material." Berlin, Vienna and Hamburg are not. Stories of New Orleans or of Constantinople could easily be made interesting, but no romancer has yet had the hardihood to attempt to write of Chicago or Buffalo. Imagine a novel of Chicago. The fact is very curious and the choice very arbitrary. There seems to be no rule applicable. A city need not necessarily be old, nor a seaport, nor "cosmopolitan," nor picturesque, nor beautifully built, nor large nor small. Any one who has the instinct for fiction can tell on the instant whether or not it is suitable as a background for a novel, a short story or a drama.

But consider San Francisco. It is not necessary to hesitate a moment. "Things can happen" in San Francisco. Kearny street, Montgomery street, Nob Hill, Telegraph Hill, of course Chinatown, Lone Mountain, the Poodle Dog, the Palace Hotel and the What Cheer House, the Barbara Coast, the Crow's Nest, the Mission, the Bay, the Bohemian Club, the Presidio, Spanish town, Fisherman's wharf.

There is an indefinable air about all these places that is suggestive of stories at once. You fancy the names would look well on a book's page. The people who frequent them could walk right into a novel or short story and be at home.

It occurs to me that there is perhaps one feature of the city that conduces to this effect, that is its isolation. Perhaps no great city of the world is so isolated as we are. Did you ever think of that? There is no great city to the north of us, to the south none nearer than Mexico, to the west is the waste of the Pacific, to the East the waste of the deserts. Here we are set down as a pin point in a vast circle of solitude. Isolation produces individuality, originality. The place has grown up independently. Other cities grow by accretion from without. San Francisco must grow by expansion from within; and so we have time and opportunity to develop certain unhampered types and characters and habits unbiased by outside influence, types that are admirably adapted to fictitious treatment.

It is a significant fact that the little that has been done in the way of gripping hold upon and impressing this life of ours between the covers of works of fiction has been done in the way of short stories. London had her Dickens, New Orleans her Cable, New York her Davis, Boston her Howells, Paris her Zola, but San Francisco still waits for her novelist. She will wait long, we believe. The conditions of our life are suited finely to the short story, but not as yet to the novel. We are growing and living, as it were, in spots, here a little and there a little, scattered bits of life and movement, quite independent of each other—short stories that are happening every day. But we are not settled enough yet for the novelist, who demands large, co-ordinated, broad and simple lines upon which to work, something far more unified than we can yet give him. But the short stories. There's the chance. Who shall be our Kipling? Where is the man that shall get at the heart of us, the blood and bones and fiber of us, that shall go a-gunning for stories up and down our streets and into our houses and parlors and lodging houses and saloons and dives and along our wharves and into our theaters; yes, and into the secretest chambers of our homes as well as our hearts?

Les Jeunes. Yes, there are Les Jeunnes, and "The Lark" was delightful—delightful, fooling, but there's a graver note and a more virile to be sounded. Les Jeunes can do better than "The Lark." Give us stories now, give us men, strong, brutal men, with red-hot blood in 'em, with unleashed passions rampant in 'em, blood and bones and viscera in 'em, and women, too, that move and have their being, people that love and hate something better now than Vivettes and Perilles and Goups. They are here, these living men and women. Think of the short stories that are happening every hour of the time. Get hold of them, some of you younger writers, grip fast upon the life of them. It's the Life that we want, the vigorous, real thing, not the curious weaving of words and the polish of literary finish. Damn the "style" of a story, so long as we get the swing and rush and trample of the things that live. While you are rounding a phrase a sailor has been shanghaied down there along the water front; while you are sustaining a metaphor, another See Yup had been hatcheted yonder in Gambler's Alley; a man has time to be stabbed while you are composing a villanelle; the crisis of a life has come and gone while you have been niggling with your couplet. "Murder and sudden death," say you? Yes, but it's the life that lives; it's reality, it's the thing that counts. We don't want literature, we want life. We don't want fine writing, we want short stories. Kipling saw it here and Stevenson as they passed through—read the unwritten tales of us as they ran.

The tales are here. The public is here. A hundred clashing presses are hungry for you, future young story-writer of San Francisco, whoever you may be. Strike but the right note, and strike it with all your might, strike it with iron instead of velvet, and the clang of it shall go the round of the nations.

A qui le tour, who shall be our Kipling?

FRANK NORRIS.

THE BENCH SHOW

During the week a large share of public attention has been devoted to the Dog Show at the Mechanics' Pavilion, under the auspices of the San Francisco Kennel Club. Considering that the Club has only recently been organized, and has occupied a field left vacant by a defunct society, without the assumption of its mantle, the members and executive officers are certainly to be congratulated on their efforts.

The arrangements at the Pavilion are good, and evidence a desire to bring the West in line with other parts of the world where the benching and exhibiting of dogs has been made a study for very many years. Two rings, or to be accurate, squares, side by side, are railed off at the east end of the hall, and the judging of different classes proceeds in both simultaneously in systematic fashion. At the time of writing the work is in progress, and, although dog-men are proverbially difficult to please, the results are generally acceptable.

Nominally there are 140 classes, but fully half of these are without a sufficient complement to be of any interest. English Setters, Great Danes, Collies, Cocker Spaniels and Fox Terriers are the strongest, considering both numbers and merit, while Pointers and Greyhounds also make a good show. The weakness in the Terrier classes is striking.

Taking a general view of the exhibition and comparing it with similar undertakings elsewhere, one is immediately struck by the varying types shown in the different classes, suggesting the necessity of more attention being paid by local fanciers to the points representative of the individual breeds. As the local shows come to be carefully followed this should be remedied.

On a future occasion we shall have something to say as to the worth of some of the prize-winners. In the meantime it may be remarked that the best in most of the classes are head and tail in front of the general body of their competitors.

Mr. Walter S. Hobart has placed 20 couple of hounds on exhibition, not for competition, and they are described as "English foxhounds." They are not entitled to the designation, however, as they have neither the size nor quality, but of course they attract a great deal of attention. The American foxhounds, so called, are of all kinds. Amongst them are a few that would not be out of place in a pack of harriers of some pretentions.

The judges have no enviable task, the three gentlemen appointed, Major J. M. Taylor, Mr. E. M. Oldham, and Mr. J. Otis Fellows, all Eastern experts, dividing the entire work between them.

The show will close this evening, and it is to be h[oped] the Club will find its efforts rewarded sufficiently t[o] induce them to persevere with its good work as the year come round.

A stage in the process of transporting a big gun from the dock in San Francisco to its destination at Lime Point

GOSSIP OF EUROPE

The Latest On Dits in the Continental Capitals.

Le tout Paris is greatly excited of late over the rumor of an approaching duel between M. Brunetiere and M. Zola. Brunetiere has but just returned to Paris, after a series of lectures delivered in New York and elsewhere along the Atlantic seaboard of this country. The author of "La Terre"—so it is said—will at once call out the editor for certain strictures which the editor passed upon his novels.

The probabilities are, however, that Zola, long since hardened and seasoned to abuse and unfair vilification, will face the music stoically, and will not so far forget his dignity as to fight a critic whose worst offense is that he does not admire the Rougon-Macquart. Brunetiere claims that Zola has not shown courage in putting immorality before the public, but merely bad taste; but bad taste is a personal matter, after all, and in the language of his own people is a thing qui'l ne faut pas disarter. The affair will probably settle down to a war of words and pens, and the two literary lights will no doubt exchange compliments in the "Figaro." But Brunetiere is bound to have the worst of it, and if he is wise will avoid any encounter with the "man with the iron pen."

And now comes the information—and startling enough it is—that King George is preparing to abandon his capital, his country and his people, and retire from the world in general and Greece in particular. His agent, so runs the rumor, has of late been negotiating for the purchase of an estate in upper Austria, where the beaten king and his un-royal son and heir, together with the queen and royal family, may hide their diminished head and be out of all danger, either of the Turk or of the war correspondent. The estate is situated in one of the northern provinces of Austria, in quite a wild bit of country. It is called the Villa Kluseman, and is at Muhlwang, near Gmunden.

A rather interesting discovery has just been made in the Jarden des Plantes in Paris. One of the directors of the garden was recently walking about among the hothouses of the enclosure, when he discovered under a pile of old flower pots the opening of what seemed to be an abandoned well. To satisfy his curiosity the director had himself lowered into the opening, and found to his surprise that it suddenly turned at right angles and led off into a subterranean passage. The director followed this passage for nearly half an hour, and made out that it was but one of a vast labyrinth of passageways built—for some unknown reason—by the Romans during the time when Paris was "Mud Town." These passageways are to be devoted to a curious use. Milne Edwards, the scientist, is to keep therein—in total darkness—a number of rabbits and guinea pigs in order to determine the effect of perpetual night upon their eyes. In course of time Mr. Edwards hopes to reconstitute types of a kind of animal intermediate between those who lived in caves and those on the surface of the earth.

A few more years and the salon of the famous old Palais de l'Industrie will have ceased to exist. The committee having the matter in charge are at this moment laboring to effect a change of base to the Palais Royal. The reason for the change is that the old Palais has become too small to accommodate the increasing number of pictures that are accepted every year. All but four of the thirty-seven proprietors of the Palais Royal have consented to waive their claims in favor of the state. It is proposed to roof over the garden with glass, and to partition off the space into appropriate galleries and rooms. Four, however, of the property holders insist upon holding their ground, basing their objections to removal on a clause in the original deeds, which insures them an unobstructed view of the garden. Their objections will avail nothing, however, as the state could easily evade them by condemning the entire property en bloc.

Two more huge guns destined for Lime Point are in process of removal from the foot of Townsend street. The guns have been brought down on flat-cars to the water's edge, and throughout all of last week a small army of workmen have been at work moving one of the monsters from the car to the barge that is to convey it to the Point.

The means employed to budge the leviathan are rather suggestive of the launching of a ship. The gun rests on sliding ways and in a greased cradle, but instead of being propelled by its own weight down an incline is hauled aboard the barge by means of a donkey engine and a system of cables. The cables are attached to the cradle itself, and not to the gun, the gun being moved from the cradle only at the last moment. The barge itself is quite an affair. It is an enormous flat boat specially constructed, having a carrying capacity of 380 tons, and strengthened with 12x12 timbering at every five feet. Once arrived at Lime Point, the gun will not be immediately unloaded, but the barge instead dragged part of the way up the bank. The cables will then be attached to the cradle of the gun, which, with the gun still resting upon it, will be hauled off upon a set of greased ways.

There is an amount of work going on in the American Embassy in London unusual in that establishment. During the last two years little has been done there, all important negotiations between the two Governments having been conducted in Washington. It is expected that Colonel Hay will take up the Behring Sea question, as papers relating to the regulation of seal fishing have been presented at the Foreign Office through Secretary White of the Embassy.

Setters

Great Danes

Collies

St. Bernard

Bloodhound

Bulldog

Bull Terrier

SAN FRANCISCO KENNEL-CLUB SHOW

SPECIMENS OF THE DOGS ON EXHIBITION AT THE MECHANICS PAVILION

Photos by Charles Weidner

METROPOLITAN NOISES

The Gamut of Sounds Which Harass the Ears of San Franciscans.

Perhaps it is because of the irregular cobbling of the streets, or perhaps because of the clearness of the atmosphere, or of the absence of certain anti-nuisance regulations, but for some reason or other this San Francisco of ours is one of the noisest cities between the oceans. Put your head from the office window some day about 11 o'clock, or, failing that, pause for an instant as you read these words and listen to the sound the city makes in its living. You will notice there are two parts to this sound, two registers as one might say. First there is the multifarious stacatto notes, brief, incisive, a world of little sharp, high-keyed ear-jars, but under these, below these (you would hear it at first, and it takes some little application to catch it), comes a low pitch fourdon, a portrayed baser hum, arising, God knows where. You may hear this diapason from the city better at night, and it is much the same sound as that thrown off by the sea or by the wind in a forest or by a distant multitude.

It is a vast, huge, soothing murmur, rather agreeable than otherwise—a sort of music. The other register is the one that harries you. Listen to it long enough and it will "get in your nerves." A physician told me once, that in all the range of science there was nothing more irritating to a nervous patient than noise.

That's why you will now and then see tan bark before some of the city's houses, where some nervous patient is lying sick. It will not do, it seems, to stop this patient's ears with wax or cotton. It is surprising to know that your ears are not your only sound transmitters. You can picture sound waves striking against the teeth and against the "mastoid process," the round bone behind the ear.

Did you ever notice how plainly you can hear the ringing of the bell of a cable car? As you sit in your office window, for instance, you can distinguish the shrieking of that little saucer of metal as plainly as you can catch the hideous rattling of that load of iron rails or the roll of that huge truck. It appears that the reason for this lies in the fact that the vibrations of the bell are rhythmic and will carry farther than those of the rails or the wheels of the truck, which are not. But it is great gamut for you, the noises of this city's thoroughfares. I suppose there is a part of us, after all, a certain savage, primitive, uncouth part, that rejoices in noise, for noise's sake. Else would we all live in the country, beyond ear-shot of the load of rails, the jangling of cable-car bells, the chanting of newsboys, the demoniac yells of the "fresh-strawberry" hucksters, or the incantation of the "rags-bottles-sacks" man, where we would never be obliged to hear a brake yelp against a dusty tire, or dodge the scissors-grinder at his awful trade.

The Cable-Car Bell

Perhaps you will never quite appreciate the importance of the noises of the city's streets until you shall fall ill—especially of a nervous complaint. Then you will realize the weight of my physician's words when he said that nothing could be more harrowing and more hurtful to a nervous patient than noise. In some highly organised subjects it will produce hysteria, mild insanity, becoming, in fact, a positive physical torture. The lower the type, however, the less irritating is effect produced. With the savage, noise is music and music

Fresh Strawberries

The Organ Grinder

Coasters

noise, but delicate and highly specialized organisms can be influenced by sound as mercury is influenced by temperature. Ears such as this can find music where you and I would only find noise. That is, in scientific tones, can distinguish the rhythmic quality of the vibration, for in this lies the only difference between music and mere noise, noise being only a series of vibrations which have no rhythm.

Drays on Third Street

The distress and terror in Paris over the recent fire were of a nature almost beyond imagination. The disaster affected the minds of men to a remarkable extent. It spread consternation through all classes and conditions of society. Upon the aristocracy it was a visitation—a veritable descent of the Angel Death. Not since the Reign of Terror had there been such wholesale destruction. The fire fiend played havoc with the first families of the nation, as the guillotine did in the bloody era of Robespierre. Nearly every French family of note suffered by death directly or indirectly in the awful conflagration, and the number of royal and noble houses of Italy, Spain and Austria thrown into mourning over the affair is almost incredible.

The death of the Duchesse D'Alencon and incidentally that of the Duc D'Aumale affects nearly every Catholic royal family in Europe. The Duchesse was a daughter of Archduke Maximilian of Zweibrucken-Birkenfeld, a branch of the royal house of Bavaria, and was a sister of the Empress of Austria and of the Archduke Carl Theodor of Bavaria, the great oculist and philanthropist. The Duc D'Aumale was a son of Louis Philippe, a brother of the Compte de Paris, and uncle to the Queen of Portugal. The catastrophe and its consequences recalls the romantic love affair of the Duchesse D'Alencon with mad King Ludwig of Bavaria. Like her sister, the Empress of Austria, the Duchesse, then called the Archduchesse Sophie, was brought up in a most unconventional manner. She lived in the romantic Bavarian Tyrol, with its beautiful lakes and mountains and valleys, and grew up a child of nature, with horses and dogs for companions and the chase for enjoyment. She had a magnificent figure, dark eyes and black hair, and at the age of nineteen was considered the most beautiful woman at the Bavarian court. At this time Ludwig II. was King of Bavaria, being then twenty-one years of age. He was romantic, ambitious, and idealistic, a great lover of art and one of Wagner's most enthusiastic admirers and protectors. Princess Sophie shared the King's passion for Wagner's music, and this taste brought the two together. They became engaged, and the period of their betrothal was the happiest time of King Ludwig's life. The poetry and passion of his romantic nature were aroused and were given expression to. Elaborate preparations were made for the nuptials, the ambition of the King being to make it the greatest royal wedding of modern times. In the midst of the preparations the King suddenly left Munich without a word of warning and went to his castle on Starenberg Lake. Soon afterward it was announced that he had broken the engagement.

The reasons suggested for this extraordinary course were as numerous as they were varied. Some said it was due to the attentions the Princess paid to a young officer; others affirmed, and it may easily be believed, that the Prussian Government, for reasons of State, interfered and prevented the match. Three years afterwards Sophie married the Duc D'Aumale and became the head of the musical and artistic set of Munich. Soon after the mind of King Ludwig gave way, and in 1886 he succeeded in committing suicide in Starenberg Lake. The shock of his death deeply affected Sophie and she became for a time mentally unbalanced, being obliged to retire to an asylum at Gratz, in Austria.

The European situation is illuminated by an article in the Paris "Matin," generally ascribed to the French Minister M. Hanotaux. He says: "The great danger in the Balkans was the possibility of a collision between Austria and Russia. That is now over. Emperor Francis Joseph and the Czar have realized the great idea of Catherine I. and Nicholas I.—an understanding between Austria and Russia in the presence of the Turk. But this understanding has taken place within the European concert, and does not affect the respective alliances of the two countries. Of course, if there were an alliance of the three Emperors this would mean the end of the Franco-Russian union. But the understanding between the Republic and the Muscovite empire is more cordial than ever. It is not an exclusive nor a jealous arrangement. The two countries are absolutely pacific and wish to establish general confidence and solidarity in Europe."

Elixirs of life, and the frequently discovered "fountains of youth," have been all outdistanced by an alleged discovery recently announced by Dr. Augusta Brown-Girard of New York. Dr. Brown declares that she has found a way to transmit vitality to a patient not only from a healthy man or woman but from animals as well. She calls the discovery the "Transfusion of Vital Energy Through Electric Impulse,"and has made many experiments which the "Journal"' declares are satisfactory results. Dr. Brown graduated from the Women's Medical College of Chicago in 1873, and has devoted her life to the study of the nervous system, which is really the foundation of her discovery. She has spent many years of her life abroad, and has studied under such men as Dr. Beal of London and Pasteur, Dr. Rechaud and Dr. Pajano of Paris.

The Dog Hospital

Fish Peddler

Knives Sharpened

Dray on the Cobbles

MAY BUCKLEY AND J. H. BENRIMO
Thors, photo

FRANCIS POWERS
Who wrote the play
Elite, photo

CHINESE CHILDREN WHO APPEAR IN "THE FIRST BORN"
Elite, photo

MEMBERS OF THE ALCAZAR COMPANY PRODUCING "THE FIRST BORN"

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

My dear Diary, it is with a feeling of perfect self-satisfaction that I confide my daily doings to your sympathetic pages. I have been acting a noble part this week—that of a peacemaker. You know of old how dreadfully exacting Leila is! Well, at the reception given by the Presidio people last week her darling Harry spoke a few words to the prettiest girl in the garrison, and Leila was madly jealous. She rose in her wrath, and, on the way home, poor Harry had a wretched time. I hope Providence will not treasure up the fibs the wretched fellow was obliged to tell against him on the judgment day. He was in an awful state, and begged me to intercede for him with the irate Leila. I told him he was an utter fool to pay any attention, but when a man is in love, whew! I acted as mediator, and now listen to their billings and cooings with all the pride of a motherly hen who has successfully raised a brood of ducklings.

I must now tell you about the George De Long tug party. I had a blissful day. We left the Mission street wharf, and steamed to McNear's Landing, where we had lunch. Mrs. Will Gwin chaperoned us, and as Mrs. Cavalier Jouett was the only other matron on board you can fancy the pleasurable nature of the outing. I looked like a peach—so the boys told me. I wore my new blue linen duck outing suit with pique front and revers, and on my head a white sailor with blue band. Even Leila said I looked fetching, which means a great deal. George De Long made a perfect host, and not for an instant did the least popular member of the party feel neglected. There were numberless lads, among them a lot of the University chaps, who are full of life and fun. About the lunch; it would be adding another line unto the feasts of Autolycus were I to paint it for you. We were all vulgarly hungry, which added yet another fillip to the spread.

In the evening I first went into Mrs. Charlotte Brown's tea—a very jolly affair, with endless men and maids in their satin and orange blossoms, or, if you prefer it, their war paint. Mrs. Brown looked exceedingly handsome. I wish mamma's hair was white; it lends such an air of distinction. Dr. Adelaide Brown assisted her mother. Afterwards we went to the closing of the Gingerbread Fete. Truly the patronesses have cause to be grateful! Never before has a charity affair been so popular. Numbers of the girls won drawings of Jimmie Swinerton, among them Leontine Blakeman, who, by the way, has become very pretty since her sojourn in the East. Frances Currey won a hat, Sallie Maynard a cut-glass dish, Bernie Drown a picture. Really the things were worth going for. I won several bets, and anticipate reveling in white gloves during the summer. Every one was there, and yet half the world seems to be in the country. Mrs. L. L. Baker, Mrs. Stone, Miss Florence Stone and the Baker small fry left on Tuesday for their ranch at Gilroy. I hear there is scarcely a room vacant in the Hotel Rafael. Mme. Barrios is over there in the Von Schroder quarters, and Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels has taken a house there. The usual habitues are to go to Monterey. On Sunday we went to baby Spreckels' christening. It was a very select affair. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs was godmother by proxy, Laura McKinstry serving as her representative. Mr. Gus Spreckels was godfather. The baby received his father's name, Rudolph. He is a bonny little chap. Mr. Oelrichs was there, and Father Prendergast baptized the youngster. Mr. Rudolph Spreckels left on Tuesday for Honolulu, where he anticipates remaining for four months.

The Huntingtons went East on Monday, and are to be in London for the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. How I wish I could go. Would you believe it, some of the rooms in the hotels have been engaged for over a year. The Huntingtons expect to stay with Princess Hatzfeldt, who has a pretty place in the suburbs. I am at present busily engaged in preparing a costume for Ethel Cohen's wedding. She has chosen her bridesmaids for their beauty, I think. Emma Butler is to be maid of honor. Bernie Drown, Ida Gibbons, Julia Crocker and Helen Wagner are the bridesmaids. Their gowns are thus far unknown to all outside their own sweet selves. I begged Julia to tell me, but she refused. I believe the girls are to wear white, and Emma is to be in blue.

On Monday Leila went to Mrs. Dickman's concert, which was very good, she said, and the house was well filled. Several of the patronesses had parties. Mrs. Wm. B. Hooper had a crowd of young people, among them Ethel Keeney, Leontine Blakeman, Gertie Foreman, George De Long, etc. Afterwards they went to supper at the Occidental. I went to the Baldwin with Uncle Horace and Aunt Sybil. I did not care for the play much. Maxine Elliot travels altogether on her beauty, and does not seem to take her art seriously at all. Goodwin is always good, but he, even, did not play in a spirited fashion. There was not sufficient incident or dramatic action to please me, but Uncle Horace suggested that my tastes were vitiated and that perhaps I should prefer the Alcazar or Morosco's. Snubbed, as usual, poor Miss Cricket! On Tuesday I went out to Ingleside to the society races in aid of the Woman's Exchange, and had a fine time. I hardly dare breathe it even to your silent pages, Diary dear, but I won twenty dollars—shades of Aunt Sybil, but I am wicked.

There was quite a smart gathering, and some very pretty gowns were aired. On Wednesday I went to Field Day at the Presidio, and to tea at Harry's quarters afterwards. In the evening mamma, papa, Leila, Arthur, Harry and I went to the Dog Show. It was what the dailies would term a function. Nearly all those who had any sort of a decent canine, exhibited. Uncle Horace entered a collie, whose pedigree is almost as long as those of the Mayflower claimants. Mrs. De Wolf Hopper had her dog in, and attracted a tremendous amount of attention. And now, Diary dear, farewell for another week. From your own devoted,

MISS CRICKET.

***

Oakland in May resembles the house tops in September, when the swallows are trying their wings preparatory to their fall peregrinations. Every one is animated with a desire to accomplish as much sewing as possible. The dressmakers are pursued with an avidity which characterizes hungry hounds in their pursuit of the fox. Social duties are allowed to lapse for the nonce. Few matrons even dream of giving aught but the most informal of entertainments, and the sole light upon this scene of "stitch, stitch, stitch," is furnished by a few of the young men. Two very jolly dinners were given during the past week. One, on Thursday evening, to a large number of the Deux Temps set by Mr. Horace Miller, was especially pretty. It was a pink party, the table being a study in this shade. It was lighted by candles and covered with roses. The affair was conceded to have been easily the prettiest meal of the season. On Tuesday evening Mr. Fred Magee entertained the same set of young people at a dinner at the Haywards Hotel. The decorations were arranged to suit the quaint old-fashioned room, which presented an interesting picture, filled with the girls in their delicate, fluffy muslin frocks, their bright ribbons and joyous faces. Afterwards the young people danced to the strains of a brass band, and were then driven through the village. The night was moonlight, warm and beautiful. Mr. and Mrs. Will Magee chaperoned the party.

A garden party is to be given by Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Smith on Saturday, May 29th, for the benefit of the Central Kindergarten. The Presidio band is to furnish the music. During the afternoon there is to be an informal musicale. Mrs. P. D. Brown, Mrs. Webster, Mrs. Ralston and Mrs. Smith are among the patronesses.

Quite the largest entertainment given by the Ebell Society was the luncheon on Tuesday last in honor of Mrs. Helen Gardner of Boston. Mrs. Wheaton, assisted by Mrs. Pedar Sather and Mrs. Smith, were the hostesses of the day. The decorations were in smilax and La France roses. After lunch Mrs. Gardner gave an amusing account of her experiences. Mrs. Oscar Fitzalan Long gave a luncheon at Highlands in honor of Mrs. Moore, who has recently arrived from New York. The decorations were in yellow. Mrs. Requa also entertained Mrs. Huntington, the Mills and the Kruttschnitts at a breakfast last week.

Miss Jessie Coleman is busily engaged preparing for her wedding, which is to take place on June 24th. It is to be a quiet home affair, owing to the Knowles family being still in mourning. Miss Donaldson of Philadelphia, who is to be maid of honor to Miss Coleman, arrived last week, and is being widely entertained. Miss Kate Clement gave a tea in her honor on Thursday afternoon, as also did Mrs. Watkinson on Monday from 4 to 6 o'clock. In both instances the houses were massed with roses and sweet peas. On Friday evening a farewell concert was given by Miss Sofia Newland and Miss Esther Needham, assisted by Miss Bessie Wall, Mr. Rickard and others. Miss Newland and Miss Needham are both contemplating matrimony, and expect to leave Oakland before the end of the summer. Miss Newland is to settle in Edinburgh, Scotland, Miss Needham in Woodland.

Among the first of the summer wanderers are Mrs. Charles Haven and Miss Carrie Haven, who leave for Mexico on June 1st.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER, Dentist, 22 Geary st.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

DRAMATIC NOTES

Nat Goodwin will be seen at the Baldwin next week in "An American Citizen."

The Lilliputians follow Nat Goodwin at the Baldwin in their new spectacle, "The Merry Tramps."

Mr. Andrew Younger Wood announces a concert under the auspices of the Van Ness Fraternity at the Second Unitarian Church Wednesday evening, May 26th.

"Excelsior, Jr." will be presented for the last times to-night and to-morrow night. Next week the theater will be closed to permit of alterations and improvements, and on Monday evening, May 31st, will be reopened by the Frawley Company.

"The Dark Secret" will be the play at Morosco's next week. Among the stage effects is a boat race on the River Thames. This scene will be a representation of the great Henley Regatta —real boats being rowed, and real naphtha launches being used on a river of real water. Maud Edna Hall, who has been so well received this week as Lady Isabel in "East Lynn," will assume the principal part. There will be a number of specialties introduced in the play.

On Friday evening, the 8th of this month, a concert will be given in aid of the San Francisco Boys' Club. The concert will take place at Sherman & Clay's Music Hall. Mrs. Carmichael Carr, Donald Graham and Miss Hulda Anderson have volunteered their services. The tickets are 50 cents each. Thre is no worthier or more beneficial institution in the city than the Boys' Club, and the concert should, and no doubt will be, largely attended.

T. Daniel Frawley, accompanied by Blanche Bates, Frank Worhting, Eleanor Moretti, J. M. Colville, Gladys Wallis, Theodore Hamilton, Georgia Busbey, Thomas Ross and Wm. Lewers, arived from New York on Friday and at once commenced rehearsals of "The Fatal Card," which will be the opening play of the new Frawley Company at the Columbia Theater on Monday evening, May 31st. An entire carload of scenery was also brought along for their new productions.

Omene, the world's only female prestidigitateur, assisted by La Belle Madini, will make her appearance at the Orpheum next week. If memory faileth not, this is the lady who was the first to give San Francisco the Danse du Ventre; now she has turned her attention to magic and slight of hand. Jules and Ella Garrison, travesty artists, are also among the new people. Eclair Brothers, the "Demon and the Crocodile," are on for another week, in conjunction with the Baggenses and the Osrani Pantomime Company. Mlle. Ani and Tacianu, the male soprano, make their last appearance.

The Tivoli announces "Martha" for next week—pretty, pleasing "Martha," with its rythm and its romances, its romance, its Richmond Fair and its immortal melody of Moore. Rhys Thomas will be Lionel; John J. Raffael, Plunkett; W. H. West, Lord Tristan; Maurice Darcy, the Sheriff; Laura Millard, Lady Harriett; and Myra Morella, Nancy. A ballet and several specialties will be introduced in the fair scene. "Captain Fracassa," the opera at the Tivoli this week, is thorougly Viennese in tone and treatment. It is full of bright and pretty music, and the Tivoli gives it a very good production, the arrangement of the carnival and the ballet in the second act being particularly pleasing. As Captain Fracassa, Rhys Thomas sings effectively, but his comedy is not good; it would be well for him to avoid such work altogether. Laura Millard, the Princess de Coligny, has a remarkably pretty waltz songs in the third act, which she gives unusually well, receiving a sort of mild ovation. Myra Morella, as Scrollina, has a fortunate portion of bright music and taking comedy, through which she manages creditably. The rest of the cast get along quite well, but it is rather odd to see Elvia Crox Seabrook "standing around;" she would do so cleverly in the soubrette role.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

Dr. H. G. Young—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

A TERPSICHOREAN REVOLT

Paris Protests Against Americanizing the Dance.

Word comes from over the water that the French capital is up in revolt, in open, seething rebellion against what it unkindly terms the Americanizing of the dance. M. Pierre de Land is the apostle of the reaction, and in an album entitled "Nos Parisiennes Celles Qui Dansent" gives relief to his feelings in an enraptured and thoroughly Parisian manner. M. de Land starts in on the ballet; he says that of all theatrical performances it is the one that has advanced the least. It is the same to-day as it was one hundred years ago—the same thing of multi-colored fleshings, galvanic smiles, and tarletan skirts. It is all a tradition transmitted faithfully from maitre de ballet pere, to maitre de ballet fils. M. de Land's artistic soul is wrung at the condition of the ballet, but the wring is a mild twist when compared to the wrenching it receives when he comes to deal with the dance of society. M. de Land considers it a lost art, and thoroughly unworthy of discussion, nevertheless he gives it much of his important attention. Fashionable dances have become a series of vulgar gymnastics — the quadrille has actually ceased to exist, and all because it has become Americanized.

MAXINE ELLIOTT
Leading Lady of the Nat Goodwin Company

Just how this evolution has occurred M. de Land does not explain, neither does he afford us an insight into the method of his madness, he simply states and goes ahead. The fashionable dance has become a folly—a grievance, like to a deception, it has fallen in the slough of desuetude, and there it flaps and flounders in a most unhappy manner. Surely a sad condition for the graceful art. But M. de Land sees hope ahead; he scents the dawn afar of a new regime, and he accordingly calls upon his countrymen to rise to the dance as it should be, as it was before the invasion of sistern from over the water. He urges them to leave to the American his goat jumps, his brutality of the hunted buffalo, his taste for the jig, and to return to the radiant divertissements of their gallant grandfathers and graceful grandmothers.

Such is the doctrine of the new prophet who has appeared upon the heights of Paris. Like some ancient seer, he stands upon the steps of the temple of art, and, holding aloft his album de la danse, calls on his compatriots to follow him, or rather, glide with him in graceful measure to the fane of Terpsichore.

M. de Land means well; he must be given the benefit of his intentions, but he is a trifle unkind in his disposition of his American brethren. It is our misfortune to be given to the jump of the festive billy, to the amblings of the buffalo, but, after all, why should he leave us in our misfortune? Why should he not call us, too, with those of his own chosen people to follow him to the classic haunts of the muse of dance?

* *

A new thing has come upon New York, and the swagger set has been quick in taking it up. It is a dinner party, the different courses of which are given at different restaurants. The idea originated with Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Stewart of Gotham's best society. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart recently gave a dinner, the cards of which read for the Grosvenor, an ultra fashionable hotel. First the oysters came, then the soup and fish, and then came consternation. Mr. Stewart gravely announced that the waiters had struck, and that if they would further eat they must go elsewhere. So the guests arose and left the decorated scene of interrupted revelry and proceeded to the Martin, where, amid a perfect bloom of jonquils the entrees made their appearance in a most delightful manner. But here came consternation number two—the roasts at the Martin had almost entirely given out, and there was not sufficient quantity to feed the guests, so off went the party to Delmonico's, where the desired want was supplied with satisfaction. It was then the diners began to suspect that something new was being tried on them, though the host warded all questions artfully. When Delmonico declared he could not serve a party of the size with salad, and when Mr. Stewart announced that he knew of a restaurant where a good substitute could be obtained, they all caught on, and entered into the spirit of the thing. They left Delmonicos and soon found thtemselves in the Chinese quarter, in the solitary restaurant of which that place can boast, where they were served with chop-suey, the oddest substitute for salad ever heard of. But they ate the stuff, and soon continued their pilgrimage for dessert, which they found at the Waldorf in the midst of 20,000 violets.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

BOOK NOTES

"Miss Archer Archer," by Clara Louise Burnham (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) is purely and simply a love story. It is prettily and entertainingly told and is altogether agreeable and charming. The book has a strong American flavor, some of the scenes being in and about Mount Vernon, Pulpit Point and Fortress Monroe. The negro character sketches are quite the best things in the book.

The interest in "Saint Eva," by Amelia Pain (Harper & Brothers), is altogether in the angelic beauty and character of the heroine. She becomes engaged to a man whom she loves with all the passion of her Southern nature, but who does not return her affection in the same degree. He comes into a great estate, and makes up his mind she is not a sufficiently good match. When she realizes he has abandoned her she dies of a broken heart, though her death is precipitated by a stroke of lightning. There are pretty passages in the book and much of pathos. The descriptions of Capri, its customs and its people are especially good. The work has a strikingly effective cover and a frontispiece by Sir Edward Burne-Jones.

J. M. COLVILLE
A New Member of the Frawley Company

The title of Mrs. Hungerford's latest novel, "Lovice" (J. B. Lippincott Company), is quite misleading. It suggests a day in April, with a tiny cloud now and then, and a little blow of wind, but principally all blush and bloom and sunny skies. "Lovice" is not of such. There are bits of sunlight scattered about, but the whole thing is principally cloudy weather, and it all ends in the most un-Duchess-like manner—in the death of the heroine. But Lovice is lovable she loves and she suffers, and when the comes, and when she dies at last, it is, after just as well. Mrs. Hungerford has written in her time—more than the average author—and it may be well for her that in her last book, given to the world after her death, she has struck a note of sadness—for sadness leaves a greater impression than joy.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

The second prize story in the Chicago "Herald's" competition in mystical fiction, "The Mill of Silence," by B. E. J. Capes, has been published by Rand, McNally & Company. Mr. Capes' story was awarded the second prize out of 816 competing tales, and on its appearence in the "Herald" occasioned considerable comment. It is melodramatic to a degree, with a touch of terror now and then, and a little relieving love.

Rand, McNally & Company have also brought out "The Eye of the Sun," by Edward S. Ellis, the fifth prize story in the "Herald" competition. The tale is about an Indian diamond of fabulous value, which the owner brings to America, where it is lost and regained in any number of exciting adventures.

GLADYS WALLIS
Who opens the season with the Frawley Company
Thors, photo

Very interesting and instructive is "The Story of the Birds," by James Newton Baskett, M. A. (D. Appleton & Company). The book is intended for home reading—a sort of course in self education. It treats of all kinds of birds, describing their habits, anatomy and domestic dispositions in a most complete manner. The work contains a number of illustrations.

The art of the safe cracker is being seriously interfered with just now by the increasing skill of the safe builder. As fast as improved processes in safe and vault construction have been brought into use the ingenuity of the safe cracker has thus far found a way to overcome them, but it seems now that the manufacturers lead the cracksmen. The latest device is in the form of a huge globe of iron, inside of which a spherical chest revolves sideways and locks and unlocks automatically, according to the time attachment. The outer globe is a solid casting, and the contents of the inner chest are far in the rear, with more than a foot of solid metal between them and the burglar. This form allows of a curved or saucer-shaped bearing, which is proof against the prying of wedges, and it is said no safe of this pattern has been robbed. But its time will doubtless come, for where there is a safe there is a way. The latest and most startling development in safe burglary is the discovery that by the aid of electricity the stoutest walls of steel and iron can be penetrated with ease and rapidity. The experiment has been made, for the benefit of safemakers, by Samuel Rodman, Jr., a graduate of West Point. Mr. Rodman succeeded by the aid of electricity in getting a good sized hole through five inches of wrought iron in less than half an hour, the electricity for the purpose being obtained by flexible wires connected with electric light wires, on a trolley wire, and led to the safe. The possibility of the operation is admitted by electricians, but many doubts are raised as to the capability and speed of the burglar in handling the current, and again it is claimed that it would be almost impossible to escape detection in making the connection.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

Will not shrink Woolens, Flannels, or the finest of Fabrics. The best and most economical soap made. Washes Without Rubbing . . .

NOTICE.—On receipt of twenty-five Queen Lily Soap wrappers, we will mail to any address a handsome picture, 15x20, free from all advertising matter.

NEW ENGLAND SOAP CO.

307 Sacramento St., S. F.

All the Comforts of Home

FOR CAMPERS
YACHTSMEN TOURISTS
IN

Club Cocktails

ALWAYS TAKE A BOTTLE
WITH YOU

They are better than those mixed by hand

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
Sherwood & Sherwood
SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

Polished Hardwood Floors

$1.50 per Square Yard

Fine Work—First-class References

INLAID FLOOR CO.

602 Market St., Crocker Building

Telephone Main 5998

Sale of Books

WM. DOXEY is now selling Standard Works and fine Library Editions at greatly reduced prices . . . . .

Doxey's 631 Market Street San Francisco

An opportunity for a safe investment is not always at hand. I have an exceedingly choice piece of property in Santa Barbara for sale at one hundred thousand dollars. It will pay interest on much more than its selling-price, and must presently increase in value nearly two-fold. You are not familiar with the opportunities here. Perhaps I can advise you.

LOUIS G. DREYFUS
SANTA BARBARA

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Retiring from Business!

$75,000 STOCK OF JAPANESE GOODS

Must be sold at Auction at 116 Sutter Street without limit or reserve, commencing Monday, April 26th, and continuing daily at 11 a. m and 2:30 p m. T. A. McDONALD, Auctioneer.

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

The Lion Fire Insurance Co. Limited of London. Total Cash Assets in United States, $885 797.09

The Imperial Insurance Co. Limited of London. Established on Pacific Coast in 1852

WM. J. LANDERS, Resident Manager

PACIFIC COAST BRANCH

205-207 Sansome Street, San Francisco, Cal.

MRS. ATHERTON AGAIN

"His Fortunate Grace," the Story of an Interntaional Marriage.

No sooner had the Mechanics' Library declared the unworth of "Patience Sparhawk" and set the community agog to read it, than there appears in the book stores a new novel by Gertrude Atherton, "His Fortunate Grace" (D. Appleton Co.) A curious coincidence surely that the events should hinge so opportunely. I have commented on the genius for advertising which distinguishes Mrs. Atherton among writers, but even if she lacked the talent for being conspicuous, the Fates conspire to thrust publicity on her. The existence of a conspiracy to advance the sales of her novels can hardly be suspected, but the deepest of plots could have accomplished nothing so admirable as mere circumstance has now achieved for her. Think of the advertising she has attained and the curiosity that has been excited—why, she has shared the attention of San Francisco with its latest scandal.

As for the merits of the controversy, there is no good reason why the members of the Mechanics' Library should be debarred from the perusal of "Patience Sparhawk." It is neither immoral nor trashy, and while it does not achieve a holy purpose, it makes excellent reading. There are faults in plenty—the book is melodramatic and unreal, but it is full of observation and deduction, and presents a series of views of contemporary life which are both individual and startling. No one would set up Mrs. Atherton as an accurate critic of life, but she certainly succeeds in being vastly entertaining on the subjects of society, journalism and Christian Temperance work. Her opinion of the men in New York society is diverting, original and preposterous. It reflects the limitations of the writer's experience rather than the facts.

When a man makes violent love to a woman to whom he has but just been introduced, and not only expresses his devotion, but essays violently to kiss her, it is safe to believe he is mad, a blackguard or that the female has provoked the situation by her manner. The latter, Mrs. Atherton denies. The standards of gentility are no different in New York to those that rule in London and Paris, and he who acts as Beverley Peel did and as Latimer Burr did, are cads—obviously and transparently. But they are particular cads, not necessarily New York types. The author's difficulty seems to be in inferring general rules from singular individual experiences. She is a clever, laborious woman, whose talent is for situations and description rather than for characterization. Her book is worthy of attention and study, because it does deal boldly with problems of contemporary life and because it is a transcript of individual experiences. That it is also entertaining and well written adds to its importance as fiction.

"His Fortunate Grace" is decidedly up to date. The dramatis personae are composite portraits of prominent New York men and women. The incident of the Duke of Marlborough's marriage to Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt is the initial suggestion—here is just such an alliance rechauffed with a new alignment of roles. The interest is certainly heightened by the suggestion of reality—one keeps looking for the real people hidden under the masks of the characters. Briefly, the plot relates the coming to America of the Duke of Bosworth, an impecunious British nobleman, with the avowed intention of proposing for the hand of Miss Mabel Creighton, whom he imagines is an heiress. Soon after arriving he is introduced to the beautiful Mrs. Forbes—an idealized Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, an ambitious and determined woman, deeply in love with her husband, the multi-millionaire railroad king and politician, Edward K. Forbes. The latter is a splendid figure, and is evidently modeled after the personality of W. C. Whitney. Here is Virginia Forbes:

Virginia Forbes was thirty-nine and looked less than thirty. Her tall voluptuous figure had not outgrown a line of its early womanhood, her neck and arms were Greek. A Virginian by birth, she inherited her high-bred beauty from a line of ancestors that had been fathered in America by one of Elizabeth's courtiers. Her eyes had the slight fullness peculiar to the Southern woman; the colour, like that of the hair, was dark brown warmed with a touch of red. Her curved, scarlet mouth was not full, but the lips were rarely without a pout, which lent its aid to the imperious charm of her face. There were those who averred that upon the rare occasions when this lovely mouth was off its guard it showed a hint in its modelling of self-will and cruelty. But few had seen it off guard.

The Forbes have an only daughter—Augusta—a clever, opinionated, rather strong-willed young woman, who on introduction takes a strong fancy to the Duke, and in her effort to attract him, is abetted by her mother, whose highest desire it is to shine as prominently in London society as she does in New York. The downfall of the Creighton fortune arrests her designs. Bosworth having gone too far with Miss Creighton to retreat, calls on her father at his office in the Equitable Life Building, and asks for her hand. The manner in which he states his purposes and his necessities is decidedly interesting, and may serve as a model to others:

The Englishman sat tapping the top of his shoe with his stick for some moments after Cuyler had left, then rose abruptly, left the building, and hailing a hansom, drove down town to Mr. Creighton's office in the Equitable Building. The elevator shot him up to the fifth floor, and after losing his way in the vast corridors several times, he was finally steered to his quarry.

A boy who sat by a table in the private hallway reading the sporting extra of an evening newspaper, took in his card. Mr Creighton saw him at once. The room into which the Duke was shown was large, simply furnished, and flooded with light. The walls seemed to be all windows. The roar of Broadway came faintly up. A telegraph machine in the corner ticked intermittently, and slipped forth its coils of clean white ticking, so flimsy and so portentous. From an inner office came the sound of a type-writer.

Mr. Creighton rose and shook hands with his visitor, then closed the door leading into the next room and resumed his seat by a big desk covered with correspondence. He had a smooth-shaven determined face that had once been very good-looking, but there were bags under the anxious eyes, and his cheeks were haggard and lined.

"I have come down here," he said, "because it seems impossible to find you at your house, and it is necessary that I should speak to you on a matter that concerns us both. I came to America to ask your daughter to marry me."

"Have you done so?"

"I have."

"Has she accepted you?"

"Of course she wishes to refer the matter to you."

"She wishes to marry you?"

"I think she does."

Mr. Creighton sighed heavily. He wheeled about and looked through the window.

"I wished she could," he said,—"if she loves

GERTRUDE ATHERTON
HER VERY LATEST PHOTOGRAPH
By Fred'k Downer, Watford

you. I don't know you. I haven't had time to think about you. I should prefer that she married an American, myself, but I should never have crossed her so long as she chose a gentleman and a man of honor. I know nothing of your record. Were the marriage possible, I should enquire into it. But I am afraid that it is not. I am well aware—pardon my abruptness—that no Englishman of your rank comes to America for a wife if his income is sufficient to enable him to marry in his own country." He paused a moment. Then he resumed. The effort was apparent. "I must ask your confidence for a time—but it is necessary to tell you that I am seriously involved; in short, if things don't mend, and quickly, I shall go to pieces."

The Duke was sitting forward, staring at the carpet, his chin pressed hard upon the head of his stick. "I am sorry," he said, "very sorry."

"So am I. Mabel has two hundred thousand dollars of her own. I have as much more, something over, in land that is as yet unmortgaged; but that is not the amount you came for."

The Duke of Bosworth was traversing the most uncomfortable moments of his life. He opened his mouth twice to speak before he could frame a reply that should not insult his host and show himself the exponent of a type for which he suddenly experienced a profound disgust.

"Aire Castle," he said finally, "is half a ruin. All the land I have inherited which is not entailed is mortgaged to the hilt. I may add that I also inherited about half of the mortgages. My income is a pittance. It would cost two hundred thousand pounds to repair the castle—and until it is repaired, I have no home to offer a wife. In common justice to a woman, I must look out that she brings money with her. That is my position. It is a nasty one. It is good of you not to call me a fortune-hunter and order me out."

"Well, well, at least you have not intimated that you are conferring an inestimable honor in asking me to regild your coronet. I appreciate your position. It is ugly. So is mine. Thank you for being frank."

The Englishman rose. He held out his hand. "I hope you'll come out all right," he said, with a sudden and rare burst of warmth. "I do indeed. Good luck to you."

Mr. Creighton shook his hand heartily. "Thank you. I won't. But I'm glad you feel that way."

It is necessary now that the Duke acquaint Miss Creighton with the situation, and he proceeds most unwillingly to her home to do so. Boldly, he has to tell her that she cannot have him, and he accomplishes it with a proper sense of his personal unworth.

The Duke did not call a hansom when he reached the street. The interview to come was several times more trying to face than the last had been; he preferred to walk the miles between the Equitable Building and Murray Hill.

He reached the house in an hour. Miss Creighton was in the library reading a novel by the fire, and looked up brightly as he entered.

"You are a very bad man," she said, "I have waited in for you all day, and it is now half-past four. I am reading Kenilworth. The love scenes are too funny for words. Amy hangs upon Leicester's neck and exclaims, 'My noble earl!' Fancy if I called you 'My noble duke.' How perfectly funny!"

The Duke took his stand on the hearth-rug—man's immemorial citadel of defense—and tapped his chin with his hat, regarding Mabel stolidly with his fishy pale-blue gaze. He was cross and uncomfortable and hated himself, but his face expressed nothing.

"I have seen your father," he said.

"Oh—have you? What—what did he say?"

"When I asked you to marry me I explained how I was situated."

"I know—won't papa?—He's very generous."

"He can't. He is very seriously embarrassed."

The girl's breath shortened painfully. She turned very white. Unconsciously she twisted her hands together.

"Then we cannot marry?"

"How can we Do you want to spend your life hounded by lawyers, money-lenders, and financial syndicates, and unable to keep up your position? You would die of misery, poor child. I am not a man to make a woman happy on three hundred thousand pounds a year. Poor! It would be hell."

She did not look up, but sat twirling her rings.

"You know best," she said, "I don't know the conditions of life in England. If you say that we should be miserable, you must know. I suppose you did not love me very much."

"Not much, Mabel. I have only the skeleton of a heart in me. I wonder it does duty at all. You are well rid of me."

"You certainly did not make any very violent protestations. I cannot accuse you of hypocrisy."

"One thing—I was not half good enough for you. As far as I can remember this is the first time I have ever humbled myself. You are a jolly little thing and deserve better luck."

She made no reply.

"I shall cross almost immediately—shall give it out that you have refused me."

"You need not. I have told no one but Augusta. People will think that we are merely good friends. We will treat each other in a frank, off-hand manner when we meet out."

"You are a game little thing! You'd make a good wife, a good fellow to chum with. I wish is could have come round our way."

The coast is clear now for Mrs. Forbes and her daughter. A gay young society man, Fletcher Cuyler, who is acting as the Duke's impresario, notifies his friend that the heiress favors him. Bosworth proposes at once, is accepted, and Mrs. Forbes undertakes the task of acquainting her husband with the situation. This is a dangerous and most unwelcome ordeal. Forbes is strongly and patriotically American. He scorns international matches, and the Duke of Bosworth, physically and mentally, has excited his profound contempt. Between himself and his wife there exists a deep affection, which has made life a veritable romance for him. However, her ambitions have been excited, and all the kindliness and generosity of her husband is forgotten in realizing a social dream. The scene between them is the best thing in the book and really is highly dramatic in its way:

"I thought this little fortune-hunter was engaged to Mabel Creighton," he said abruptly.

"That was all a mistake——

"He found out that Creighton was in a hole, I suppose. Virginia!—it is not possible?—you did not tell him?—you have not been scheming to bring about this damnable transaction?"

"Of course I did not tell him. I wish you wouldn't screw up your eyes like that at me. I saw before he had been here a week that he had fallen in love with Augusta——"

"Love be damned! Do you imagine that a man like that loves?"

"Well, liked, then. Of course he cannot afford to marry without money——"

"And I am expected to buy him, I suppose?"

"Don't be so coarse! Now listen to me, Ned. I want this match. Of course I should not move in the matter if I did not respect the Duke, and if Augusta didn't love him as much as she is capable of loving. But I want this English alliance—and there may never be another opportunity. I will state the fact plainly—it would give me the greatest possible satisfaction to know that my position was assured in England as it is in America——"

"Good God! What is the matter with you American women? If you sat down and worked it out, could you tell why you are all so mad about the English nobility? Or wouldn't you blush if you could? As I said the other day, it is a germ disease—a species of brain-poisoning. It eats and rots. It demoralizes like morphine and alcohol. After a woman has once let herself go, she is good for nothing else for the rest of her life. She eats, drinks, sleeps, thinks English aristocracy. Even you, if I gave you your head, would find it in you to become a veritable coronet-chaser—you!—my God! Well, it won't be in my time; and if Augusta runs off with this debased, dishonored little wretch she'll not get one cent of mine. And there will be no breaking of wills; I'll dispose of my fortune before I die. I shall take good care to let him know this at once, for I make no doubt he's desperate——"

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure rtock, and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Mrs. Forbes sprang to her feet. "You never spoke so to me before," she cried furiously. "I do not believe you love me. So long as I spend my life studying your wishes—and have studied them for twenty-two years—you are amiable and charming enough; but now that your wife and daughter want something that you don't wish to give them, that doesn't happen to suit your fancy, you turn upon me in your true character of a tyrant——"

"Virginia! hush!" said Mr. Forbes sternly. "I have done nothing of the sort. You are talking like a petulant child. Come here and tell me that you will think no more of this wretched business——"

He went forward, but she moved rapidly aside. "Don't touch me," she said. "I am not in the mood to be touched. And I shall never be happy again if you refuse your consent to this marriage."

"Never be what? Has our happiness rested on so uncertain a foundation as that? I thought that you loved me."

"Oh, I do. Of course I do. But can't you understand that love isn't everything to a woman?—any more than it is to a man? I would be married to no other man on earth, not to a prince of the blood. But it is not everything to me any more than it is everything to you. Suppose you were suddenly stripped of your tremendous political influence, of your financial power, and reduced to the mere domestic and social round? Would I suffice? Not unless you were eighty and in need of a nurse."

She had drawn herself up to her full commanding height. Her head was thrown back, her nostrils were distended, her lips were a scarlet undulating line. There was no other color in her face. It looked as opaque, as hard as ivory. The eyes were merciless; even their brown had lost its warmth. The jewels with which she was hung, which glowed with deep rubescent fire on her robe and neck and brow, gave her the appearance of an idol—an idol which had suddenly been informed with the spirit of pitiless ambition and spurned its creator.

Mr. Forbes had turned very grey. His nostrils and lips contracted. His teeth set. Involuntarily he glanced from the woman to the portrait. The portrait was more alive than the woman.

"Don't you understand?" she demanded.

"No," he said, "I don't think I do. At least I hope I do not. At all events, I hope we may not discuss this subject again. I did not tell you that I intend to pull Creighton through. I cannot see an old friend go under. It will be to the Duke's interest to push his suit in that quarter—if they want him. Now, please go to your room. You are very much excited. If you were not I hardly think you would have spoken as you have."

Next day Forbes goes to Boston on business. Returning home he is told that his wife and Augusta have sailed for London. A letter from the former informs him that if he persists in refusing to consent to the union, she will turn over to her daughter her jewels, country houses and private properties, which together constitute a dot sufficient to compensate the Duke for the alliance. Grief-stricken, Forbes refrains from communicating with her. The unexpected revelation of her cruelty and hardness has surprised and shocked him. In the meantime she has innumerable social triumphs in London, but the silence and determination of her husband prey on her. She grows despondent, but continues obdurate. Finally Mrs. Atherton in a thoroughly characteristic way resolves the situation. All of a sudden Mrs. Forbes discovers that she is enciente, and this strange news (her only daughter is nineteen) is sent at once to Mr. Forbes, who crosses the ocean and takes her again to his heart—with reservations, of course. Certainly, the book cannot be said to lack a certain sensational interest; otherwise it is cleverly handled, and is smartly written. Doubtless it will have a large sale.

C.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

GOODWIN'S GARRICK

A Certain Deplorable Seriousness and Its Consequences.

When you come to look over the list of American plays and players you will find that the strictly first-class attractions are comparatively few. I do not mean to set up any single style of performance as a standard, but running the gamut from farce-comedy to the legitimate, and from extravaganza to grand opera, and picking out the best of each class, you will be astonished at the brevity of your list. Take, for instance, our local play-houses, the Baldwin, the Columbia and the California, and attempt to make up a list of attractions for them for the ensuing year, and you will be appalled at the number of the weeks the theaters must remain closed, or be content with companies that are likely not to draw. "There's lots of room at the top," is true in the theatrical as well as in other professions. All comic opera companies cannot be like De Wolf Hopper's or the Bostonians, nor can we have Kathryn Kidder, "Madame Sans Gene," or "The Prisoner of Zenda" with us all the while. There is scarcely a business in which one may sink money more quickly than in the theatrical, but contrarily, there is probably no line of exertion outside of gold mining, perhaps, in which the investment may prove more lucrative if the premises and conditions are favorable.

I do not like the company that Nat Goodwin has with him this year. Nor do I like to see this gentleman take himself too seriously, for to me he grows less interesting the more seriously he takes himself. Time was when Goodwin's name would have crowded the Baldwin as did the Hoppers during the last two weeks, but in those days he did not figure as the most important figure in his own horizon. He worked hard, surrounded himself with the brightest people obtainable, equipped himself with a live play to fit the times, and so by good, honest work made a success. But Nat is not a Joe Jefferson, and the public is not prepared to accept him as such. Besides this, Jefferson was never over-economical in the matter of support. He gathered to his assistance actors and actresses who themselves were drawing cards, which cannot be said of Mr. Goodwin to-day. Unless you admire Miss Elliott's type of beauty you will find her absolutely uninteresting as Ada Ingot. The Ada of Robertson's play was a sweet, head-strong girl, who held genius above title, and merit and honor above money. Miss Elliott's Ada was that of a posing young amateur who was conscious of possessing a high degree of physical attractiveness, and was willing to rest her claim for laurels upon tnose natural gifts.

In the afterpiece, "The Silent System," Miss Elliott appeared to better advantage. but one cannot say more than that she was good in spots. One of the weapons of a handsome woman in private life is the ability to pout, and Miss Elliott turned what must, by all the rules, be one of the vices of her private life, to one of her virtues as an actress. It is with a feeling of some relief that we contemplate the next week of Mr. Goodwin's engagement, during which he will present Madeline Lucette Ryley's comedy, "An American Citizen." It is a clean, pleasing piece of dramatic work, full of humor, and with a delicate touch of sentiment running through it that is most artistic and pleasant.

B.

STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, } ss.
LUCAS COUNTY. }

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of One Hundred Dollars for each and every case of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

FRANK J. CHENEY.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 6th day of December, A.D. 1886.

A. W. GLEASON,
[SEAL] Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

☞Sold by druggists, 75c.

RACING

The Finale of the Season at the Emeryville Track.

The closing days of the winter and spring meeting at Emeryville track were remarkable for large fields and a good attendance, but the quality of the horses running was below the average of the season, as might have been expected.

Thursday week brought out a field of thirteen maiden three-year-olds to try conclusions at seven furlongs, and resulted in the victory of the Flambeau colt Rosalbra, carrying top weight, 122 pounds, without much effort.

In the two-year-old event, nine-sixteenths of a mile, the St. Carlo colt Socialist, 102 lbs, got the better of Milesio, 99 lbs, in a driving finish, Dalion, 108 lbs, a poor third, St. Philip, 108 lbs, fourth, after making all the running to the head of the straight. The remaining eleven runners made a poor show.

In the mile race The Roman, 104 lbs, and Rey del Tierra, 101 lbs, were both well fancied out of the four runners, and the former proved an easy winner, after waiting on Rey del Tierra for the first six furlongs.

On Friday a baker's dozen put in an appearance for the half-mile maiden two-year-old race. Jumping off in front, Queen B. Morris' colt Dick (Sir Dixon-Fauna) was never headed, and scored an easy win over Lord Marmion, who had kept in second place throughout. Time, 49½.

Saturday's racing took a big crowd across the bay to see the fall of the curtain. Unfortunately the most interesting event was marred by an outrageous bit of jockeying.

The race referred to was the five furlong sprint for two-year-olds, for which a rather choice field went to the post, namely, Elsmore 112 lbs, Torsida 111 lbs, Salabar 110 lbs, Count of Flanders 110 lbs, Rey Salazar 109 lbs, Rosormonde 107 lbs, and Fallen Princess 107 lbs. The youngsters got off to an even start, Elsmore proving quickest on his legs and going out in front, with Rosormonde in immediate attendance till the turn had been rounded, when the latter gave way to Torsida on the inside, who had reached Elsmore's shoulder on getting opposite the paddock. On the whip-hand of the last-named Bergen had by that time brought up Salabar, and an exciting run-in seemed imminent. In the most deliberate manner possible, however, Hennessy, on Elsmore, drew bang across Torsida and closed her out on the rail, compelling Shaw to stop riding, while Salabar came on in the center of the course and reached the winning post with a length and a half to spare, Elsmore finishing second a length in front of Torsida, Count of Flanders a couple of lengths in her rear. The judges promptly disqualified Elsmore and fined his jockey, who had evidently thought anything might be tried on the last day. Some few people thought Torsida was a not unlikely winner, but it appeared to me that Salabar was fully master of the situation under any circumstances.

Mr. Naglee Burk sent his renowned colt Crescendo to the post for the first time this season in the first race, eleven-sixteenths of a mile, purse $300, with top weight, 112 lbs, in a field of inferior horses, only to see him beaten on the post a short head by San Tuzza, 92 lbs. Owners should be allowed to know their own business best, but the policy adopted in this instance was very unfavorably commented upon, and most people whose opinions are worth anything were clearly disgusted. Were the horse himself he could have won in a walk, and as he was just the reverse what was the use of pulling him out and smirching his escutcheon? Every sporting Californian has taken pride in Crescendo and was pleased at Mr. Burk's good luck in breeding so good a colt at the beginning of his turf career.

At the Louisville, Ky., meeting the Debutante Stakes for two-year-old fillies, $1,300, four furlongs, was won by Mary Black, by imp. Islington—Songstress, bred and owned by Mr. Larrabie of Deer Lodge, Montana, the filly running a good fourth a couple of days afterwards in the Louisville Futurity. Islington's get have made such a good start in their first season that it is much to be regretted that a temporary illness, from which he was recently suffering, has interfered with his stud work in California this year.

In another column will be found a brief review of the past racing season in San Francisco.

BENEDICT.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream—it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR
BYRON MAUZY PIANOS
308-314 POST ST.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS

NATURE'S HEALTH RETREAT!

On the Mountain Side
Six Miles from Napa City

My Friend:

May I speak with you a minute?

Yes—Well, you are going somewhere this summer for an outing, are you not?

Yes—Then, of course, you want to combine comfort, health and enjoyment in your visit?

Yes—Well, then, have you ever been to the famous

Napa Soda Springs?

You know that is where the renowned NAPA SODA comes from—the healthiest water in the world. You can see the natural gas bubbling up through the water right before your eyes.

The Springs are not the same in appearance any two years, for improvements are made every season. The buildings are all of stone, insuring coolness in summer and warmth in winter. There is a treat in store for you when you come, whether you have ever been there or not.

These Springs are easy of access and near to San Francisco.

For recreation or rest, this resort is unexcelled.

The service is first-class and terms reasonable.

Among its advantages are:

Hot and cold Napa Soda baths.

A new swimming-tank—warm water.

Climate unequalled—invigorating mountain air.

Relief for Asthmatics.

The most healthful mineral water.

Running water and gas in every room.

Bar, billiards, and bowling-alley.

Lawn tennis, croquet, swings and hammocks, burros to ride.

Napa Soda Springs are the Children's Delight, Mothers' Comfort, and Husbands' Rest.

You will love your neighbor better and hate the Devil more heartily after a season spent in the ozone-producing mountain range at Napa Soda Springs.

Will you come?

ANDREW JACKSON.

Sea Beach Hotel

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

CALIFORNIA'S FAVORITE RESORT! Located on a flowering slope from the beach. Magnificent view of beach, bay and mountains. Salmon fishing, tennis court, croquet grounds and music. Rates reasonable. For terms,

ADDRESS

JOHN T. SULLIVAN, MANAGER

Haywards Park Club House

At the terminus of Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railway. Concert every Sunday during the season from 1 to 5 p. m. The Club House will be conducted under the management of Mrs. Rachael Hayward, whose reputation as a purveyor and hostess is unequalled. Take Oakland Ferry at the foot of Market street on the hour or half hour to Fruitvale Station. The Haywards Electric Cars make connections for Park without change

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND Co. INCORP'D PROPS.

Commencing Next Monday, May 24th, Second and Last Week of

MR. N. C. GOODWIN

SUPPORTED BY MISS MAXINE ELLIOTT AND COMPANY

Presenting for the entire seven performances the great success of his notable career

An American Citizen

By Madeline Lucette Ryley

Next Attraction : The Liliputians

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, May 24th

Omene, the World's Only Female Prestidigitateur, assisted by La Belle Nadini
Jules & Ella Garrison, Talented Travesty Artists
Little Anna Laughlin, Character Artiste
Mitchell & Love, Singing and Talking Comedians
Eclair Bros. "the Demon and the Crocodile"
In conjunction with the Baggesens and the Osrani Pantomine Co Last week of Mlle. Ani and Taclanu
Regular Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

One week only commencing Monday, May 24th
Von Flotow's Favorite Opera

MARTHA

Splendid Cast! Grand Ballet! Correct Costumes!
An opera filled with favorite gems

Look out for Miss Frisco, our First Annual Review

Popular Prices . . 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager

Last performances of East Lynne
The Most Touching Play of the Century
Commencing Monday, May 24th, Magnificent Revival of Jefferson's Phenomenal Success

"THE DARK SECRET"

A Sensational Realistic Melodrama, containing Many Novel Effects
Exciting Boat Race on a River of Real Water!
Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

DOG SHOW

Mechanics' Pavilion, May 19-20-21-22

The largest number of Dogs ever on exhibition on the Coast

Admission 50 cts. Children 25 cts.

A. B. SPRECKELS, President.
H. H. CARLTON, Secretary.

Last Special Racing Day

GIVEN BY THE

California Jockey Club

OAKLAND TRACK

This Saturday, May 24th

For the benefit of the Fabiola Hospital, Oakland

A. D. Cheshire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres.
W. O. Macdougall, Secretary

California Undertaking Company

Finest Funeral Parlors in the City

Tel. Main 971 S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

A TURF REVIEW

Figures and Facts Relating to the Past Season's Racing.

A week ago to-day was brought to a close the season of fall, winter and spring racing, which has continued every weekday since October 24th last, each of the two tracks in the neighborhood of San Francisco having furnished 87 days racing, with from five to seven events on the card each day. Taking part in the sport there have been some 900 horses, reckoning actual starters, in 1,030 events, the aggregate money value of which was $453,275, $234,075 having been given away by the Pacific Coast Jockey Club at the Ingleside track, and $219,200 by the California Jockey Club at Emeryville. It is almost needless to say that no other city in the world is so taken up with the business of racing, nor is it necessary to point out on this occasion the financial bearings of what is practically an industry of vast importance to the State.

The task now set is to deal with the actual sport, which has shown marked improvement on anything that has gone before. On the whole the class of horses has been higher, the science of training more skilfully prosecuted, and the quality of the jockeyship vastly superior; while, last but not least, the administration of the vast affairs of the tracks has been more businesslike and consistent than during any previous season since the present scale of operations commenced. It is no light duty to keep the Turf free from abuses and scandal, but this has been, to all appearances, successfully accomplished, and everybody concerned in the work is entitled to a full measure of credit therefor.

By reason of its situation on one of the extreme boundaries of the globe, as well as of its climatic conditions, California acts as advance and also as rear guard for the rest of the continent in the actual work of racing, horses beginning and ending the several years of their Turf career on our courses when their fellow-creatures elsewhere in America, with but limited exceptions, are taking their ease in winter quarters. This side of the question is surrounded by disadvantages as well as advantages, and in the case of young stock more especially so. On the whole, however, the balance is in our favor, and to that fact is chiefly due the immense development which has been seen in connection with the breeding and racing of thoroughbreds of late years on this Coast.

This year the first race for two-year-olds took place in the middle of January, and during the following four months no less than 164 youngsters faced the starter. As is often the case at the outset of their career, the fillies walked off with the honors, the Burns & Waterhouse Stable playing a strong hand with the following: Recreation by Morello, a winner of 3 races out of 6 starts; Miss Rowena by imp. Midlothian, a winner of 5 races out of 8 starts; Napamax by imp. Maxim, a winner once out of 3 starts. The stable was able to place these youngsters so as to win sometimes with their second best, but there is not much doubt that the first-named is to be regarded as their trump-card so far, whatever the sturdy little Miss Rowena or the racy-like Napamax may eventually grow into. That the sires of the first and last should have been cut off so long before the natural ending of their career at the stud is a serious loss to the breeding interests of the country. Another excellent performer has been Torsida, by Torso, who started in 14 races and won 6 times, being out of the money on two occasions only. Rosormonde, the first American daughter of imp. Ormonde, earned some distinction, but having been badly tended in her foalhood, has not succeeded in stamping herself as of the first rank. Martha, by imp. Dandie Dinmont, ran only 4 times, winning twice and second once, proving herself of high-class and looking like a very good filly, with speed and strength to carry it.

The relative merits of the two-year-old colts have not been quite so clearly indicated, but the pick of the lot would seem to be the two Salvator youngsters, Salabar and Bliss Rucker, the former a little over-fine in make-up perhaps, though his last two performances showed that he is possessed of galloping qualities of a high order. Bliss Rucker is a hardier-looking type and has taking qualifications all round. Morellito and Elsmore, both by Morello, Michael III. by imp. Islington, have all shown the right sort of stuff to be in their composition, while The Cheat, by imp. Deceiver, Sir William, by Fitzjames, and Rey El Salto, by Emperor of Norfolk, all seem likely to be worth watching.

Experienced racing men know, however, that it is impossible to form any reliable opinion of two-year-olds on their form and appearance in the spring.

The performances of the three-year-old division have been lacking in consistency, with the exception of the Springbok mare Scarfpin, who started thirteen times, won five races, second six times and unplaced twice, her first and last outings. The impression generally given by the results of the season favor the following estimates of the prominent performers: Howard S. by imp. Whistle Jacket, Altamax by imp. Maxim, The Roman by imp. Brutus, Scarborough by El Rio Rey, and Scarfpin, over a distance of ground, in the order named, with Caspar, by imp. St. Andrew, a good colt at about six furlongs. Geyser had unfortunately to be turned out of training early in the season.

Of the four-year-olds, Ruinart, by St. Carlo, proved himself a race horse and the biggest money winner of all ages, annexing $9,500 for an uncertain ownership; while Salvable, by Salvator, was the most reliable racing machine, having started nineteen times, won fourteen races, second four times and unplaced one only, winning $6,025. In the early part of the season Mt. McGregor II. was running and proved almost invincible, while towards the end Ostler Joe, by Fresno, gained much distinction and showed promise of becoming a high-class handicap horse over courses from one to two miles in length.

Of the older division, honors were taken by Magnet, Cesarian, California and Yemen as sprinters, with Libertine, Preston, Buckwa and Morte Fonso always there or thereabouts when fit and rightly placed. Salvation, by Salvator, covered himself with glory, racing in the best company with the worst of the weights, and notwithstanding infirmities, showing speed and gameness over a fair distance of ground.

An examination of the carefully prepared and very complete Turf Guide issued by the "Breeder and Sportsman," testifies to the endurance of our thoroughbreds more eloquently than anything. Hark to this! In 29 weeks Tuxedo (S. C. Hildreth) ran in 42 races, Morte Fonso (L. Ezell) 41, Peril (M. J. Kelly) 37, having started in the first and last; Two Cheers (N. S. Hall) 36, Peter II. (Boots & Son) 35, Walter J. (F. McDermott) 34, Miss Ruth (F. W. Graham) 32; while half a dozen more started 29 and 28 times each. To sum up, during the whole period the names of 13 individual horses appear altogether 426 times, and but one of them, Morte Fonso, ran his number of wins into double figures, namely, 11, all the successes of this hard-worked fleet in almost perpetual motion numbering only 44 in the aggregate. This is a somewhat severe commentary, perhaps, on the horse sense, and maybe the humanity of their owners, but it at all events accounts for much of the monotony, which from a sporting point of view is the chief drawback to prolonged meetings. How is it to be corrected?

Old Logan we are taught to regard as an "iron horse," and therefore it will surprise no one to hear that in the last half of the season, 14 or 15 weeks, he ran 24 times, and only now needs one more victory to round off a century of brackets! Any capitalist who can double-up and find takers need not hesitate to entrust him with his confidence—with which valuable tip this little analysis may fitly close.

BENEDICT.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Of the many elegant resorts down town, with public and private rooms, the "Forum," 141 Montgomery street, is unique. The cooking, in American, French, and Spanish style, is excellent, and all liquors first-class.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has sold his partnership interest in the firm doing business under the name of The Novato French Cheese Factory, at the town of Novato, county of Marin, State of California, to C. Schulz, and that the undersigned is no longer a member of said firm, or interested therein, and is not responsible for the debts of said firm. JAMES NEWLANDS JR.
Dated April 20, 1897.

Beyond all question of doubt the greatest sale of Japanese goods ever held on the Coast is now being carried on by Ito, Sotomi & Co., at 116 Sutter street.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Fraud.

• • • •

The extensive counterfeiting of the capsules and labels of our

"Canadian Club" Whisky,

while very flattering, is extremely unpleasant to us as well as to those who drink the vile substitutes.

• • • •

THE HIGH STANDARD

of "Canadian Club" is always maintained. Beware of inferior substitutes. When you suspect fraud, write us at once and we will protect you.

• • • •

Hiram Walker & Sons, Lim'd,

WALKERVILLE, CANADA.

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

SANTA FE LIMITED

On MONDAYS and THURSDAYS the first-class Pullman sleeping-car leaving at 5 p.m. connects at Barstow with the Santa Fe limited train carrying dining-car, buffet smoking-car and Pullman palace drawing-room sleeping-cars for both Chicago and St. Louis via Kansas City.

3½ days to Chicago or St. Louis,
4½ days to New York

SANTA FE EXPRESS

Leaves daily at 5 p.m. Pullman palace drawing-room, also modern upholstered tourist sleeping-cars through to Chicago via Kansas City. Annex cars for Denver and St. Louis.

Boston excursions via Kansas City, Chicago, Montreal and the White Mountains leave every Tuesday. St. Paul excursions every Sunday.

San Francisco ticket office, 644 Market Street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.
Oakland office, 1118 Broadway.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. May 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. May 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. May 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. June 2d and 2d of each month thereafter

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, June 15, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, May 27, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BULLION MINING COMPANY. — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 4th day of May, 1897, an assessment (No. 50) of ten cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of June, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 28th day of June, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California,

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of John Reidy, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, April 29, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

ANNUAL MEETING
OF
The Yosemite Commission

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Commissioners to Manage Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove will hold its annual meeting in Yosemite Valley, at the Guardian's Office, on Wednesday, June 2d, 1897, at 11 o'clock a.m.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary.

San Francisco, Cal., April 27th, 1897.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Gould & Curry Silver Mining Co.

Assessment No. 81
Amount per share, 20 cents
Levied April 29, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 1, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, June 22, 1897
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 27
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied May 11, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 12, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, July 1, 1897
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

JOHNSON & CO.

New Spring Goods just arrived
Ladies' Jackets to order

Merchant Tailors
24 Montgomery Street

THE LATEST NEW YORK STYLES
IN
Men's Hats
AT
FISHER'S 9 Montgomery Street

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

THE LATEST STYLES IN
CHOICE WOOLENS
H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel
Bicycle and Golf Suits

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

Peoples Tel. 195 Sunset Tel. 573 Black

THE
Dashaway Stables
130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.
E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Electric Storage Batteries

UNION IRON WORKS
AGENTS
222 Market Street
S. F.

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S
Original Budweiser Beer
THE FINEST BEER IN AMERICA
THE E. G. LYONS CO., Agents
508-12 Jackson Street.

United States Laundry
Office 1004 Market St.
TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Normann's Cafe
UNDER THE BALDWIN
is the best

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of
Artificial Stone in all its branches
Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty
Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

La Grande Laundry Telephone Bush 21
23 POWELL STREET

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange
EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.
Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Stratford Canning, once British Minister at Washington, tells in his "Reminiscenses" a story of his predecessor, Sir Charles Bagot, who was a very intelligent and attractive man. Sir Charles had to dinner once an American Minister and his bride, and during the repast he heard Lady Bagot say to the newly-made wife: "My dear Mrs. Simpson, what can you be doing?" The salad-bowl had been offered to Mrs. Simpson, and her arm was lost in it up to the elbow. Her reply was prompt: "Only rollicking for an onion, my lady."

Shortly after the recent elections in America, a group of artists were discussing the tremendous upheaval that had taken place throughout the States, and various opinions were offered as to its final development. "And what do you think of it, Mr. Whistler?" asked one of the company. Whistler had not been listening to the discussion, and drawled, in a bored voice, "Think of what?" "Of the elections in the States." "Good heavens!" exclaimed Whistler, in a disgusted tone, "have they Presidents there yet?"

An amusing conversation was held through the telephone, a few days since, between a correspondent of the New York World and the Rev. Dr. Newman Smyth, of New Haven. The reporter wanted a fifty word interview on "Hell" for the Sunday edition of his paper. He wanted it bright and terse, and he got it. "Hell, in my opinion," said Dr. Smyth, "is the place where the Sunday edition of that paper should be published and circulated."

The celebrated chemist, Theophrastus Pancintelli, had been heckling his wife with questions and talking to her with great asperity. The lady became, like Niobe, all tears. "Your tears have no effect whatever upon me," remarked Pancintelli. "I have analyzed them. They contain only a very small portion of phosphate of lime and a little chlorate of soda. All the rest is nothing but water and good for nothing."

The lady was in her country home, with which there is telephonic communication. She had just received a message through the telephone, and, still holding the tube to her ear, said to her husband: "The Thompsons want us to dine with them to-night. Is it good enough?" Before he could speak, the answer came over the wire: "Yes, quite good enough. Come along!"

A certain Episcopalian dignitary, who is young-looking and always wears a white tie, went to call once upon the President of his college. He rang the bell, the door was opened, and he was about to present his card, when he was cut short by the footman, who had run his eye over him, saying: "All right, young man. You're too late. I got the place yesterday."

On the second day in the Wilderness, Longstreet made a fierce attack, and was driving the Union troops. An officer dashed up to General Grant, and, with great excitement, said: "General Grant, Longstreet is turning our right." Grant did not seem to be disturbed in the least. He looked out from under his slouch hat, and said to the officer: "Well, then, we shall have to turn his left."

Once, while Mr. Webster was addressing the Senate, the Senate clock commenced striking, but instead of striking twice at two p. m., continued to strike without cessation more than forty times. All eyes were turned to the clock, and Mr. Webster remained silent until the clock had struck about twenty, when he thus appealed to the chair: "Mr. President, the clock is out of order! I have the floor!"

A Scotchman once hired himself to a Cheshire farmer. At breakfast one of the famous cheeses of the country was set before him. His master left the Scot at table, and later, when he appeared for work, said to him: "Sandy, you take a long time to your breakfast." "Troth, master," replied the Scot, "a cheese o' that size is nae so soon eaten as ye may think."

The Cosmopolitan Club was accustomed to meet in a room which had been Watts' studio, and on the walls of which hung an enormous picture by him of Theodora and Honoria. Some one once asked Lord Houghton what this represented. "Oh," he replied, "you have heard of Watts's Hymns. These are Watts's Hers."

A good story is told by Mr. Willis, Q. C., the new English judge, of his electioneering experiences. He was storming away about something or other at the top of his strident voice, and happened to use the quotation from David Copperfield, "Barkis is willin'." "No," came a voice from the back, "Willis is barkin'."

During the reign of Charles II, one Signor Leti proposed to write a history of the court. You will give offense," urged his friends. "Were I as wise as Solomon," said Leti, "I could not avoid that." "Then be as wise," rejoined the King, who was present, "and write proverbs, not history."

HOTELS AND RESORTS

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE
THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING
The Ladies' Grill-Room
..OF..
The Palace
Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight.

CALIFORNIA'S MOST CHARMING SUMMER RESORTS
ALONG THE LINE OF THE
San Francisco & North Pacific Railway
MAY BE FOUND THE
Mark West Springs, Skaggs Springs,
The Geysers,
Highland, Bartlett, and Vichy Springs,
Blue Lakes, Laurel Dell, Saratoga Springs
Soda Bay, Lytton Springs,
Agua Caliente Springs, Orr's Hot Springs
Duncan Springs
FOR DETAILED INFORMATION, APPLY AT
Ticket Office, 650 Market St., Chronicle Bldg.
Or General Office, Mutual Life Building,
Sansome and California Streets, San Francisco

TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG.

The Tavern of Castle Crag was built in the heart of the Sierras, almost at the foot of Mount Shasta, and amid the most picturesque mountain scenery accessible to the tourist. The eligibility of the place selected was due to a rare combination of flowing water, inspiring mountain scenery and inviting forests.

The Tavern of Castle Crag, with its splendid environment, it was believed would appeal chiefly to those who seek a summer resort for health, recreation, outdoor sports, sympathy with nature and informal sociability. To emphasize this intention and signify the kind of invitation extended, the name TAVERN of Castle Crag was chosen.

To avoid all implication of sumptuous accommodations or the tyranny of social formalism, and to realize this original conception, the management has decided to make the Tavern of Castle Crag distinctively a family resort and especially attractive to those to whom health, recreation and sympathy with nature are paramount considerations. To this end rooms on the first and second floors of this splendid tavern with board will be furnished at a monthly rate of $65 a person; and rooms on the third floor with board at a monthly rate of $50 a person.

The accommodations of the Tavern are first class in every particular. Its parlors and halls are elegant and spacious. Its verandas are cool and inviting, placing the guest always in the presence of the most attractive mountain scenery to be enjoyed from the balcony of any tavern in the world.

The opportunity for out door sports embraces hunting, fishing, riding, bicycling, walking on mountain paths and driving on picturesque roads. The Tavern is located immediately on the main trunk line of the California & Oregon Railroad, and is fourteen hours' ride from San Francisco, twelve hours from Stockton, ten hours from Sacramento, thirty hours from Los Angeles and twenty-three hours from Portland. The Tavern of Castle Crag is reached from San Francisco and Sacramento without loss of time. The train leaves San Francisco at 8 o'clock p. m., arriving early the following morning for breakfast, which is always ready upon the arrival of the train. Returning, the train time affords equal accommodation. Thus, both in going and in coming the comfort of the passenger and the economy of his time have been studied. In brief, the Tavern of Castle Crag realizes to its guests the perfect ideal of that spring-time in the high altitudes of the Sierras which never becomes high summer, and is the comfortable home of pleasing recreation and restful repose.

For particulars apply to
GEORGE SCHONEWALD,
Room 59, Union Trust Building, San Francisco.

The Hotel Richelieu
N. E. Cor. Van Ness and Myrtle Aves.
PRINCIPAL AND FINEST FAMILY HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO
HOTEL RICHELIEU CO.

Hotel Bella Vista
1001 PINE STREET
Elegant Furnishings and Apartments
DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED
MRS. A. F. TRACY.

European Tours
When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's greatest Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowest rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.
THOS. COOK & SON
621 Market Street San Francisco

Highland Springs
ON THE BORDER OF CLEAR LAKE
Lake County : California
The new hotel building, lighted by electricity. Finest dining room north of San Francisco. The greatest variety of Mineral Springs in America. Waters unsurpassed for health or pleasure. Open every day in the year. Boating, bathing, hunting and swimming. Swimming tank, dancing, lawn tennis, croquet, billiards, bowling, etc.
Take Stage at Pieta, shortest and best route to all points in Lake County
Round Trip from San Francisco, $8.00
Rates, $10 to $16 per week.
J. CRAIG, Manager.
San Francisco Office, 316 Montgomery Street.

Hotel Rafael
SAN RAFAEL, CAL.
The Society Resort, Winter and Summer, of the Pacific Coast
FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
Climate Unexcelled!
Magnificent Scenery!
The Sanitarium of the Pacific Coast
Otis Elevators Electric Lights
Headquarters of the San Rafael Hunt-Club and Tennis Tournaments
R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors

Pacific Congress Springs
HOTEL
SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS
SANTA CLARA COUNTY
Remodeled and under New Management
Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco
6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara
12 miles from San Jose
Address GEO. O. WATKINS,
523 Market St., S. F.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED
OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Coming Christian Endeavorers

A New Four-Miles Record

Stanford's Graduating Class

THE WAVE

This Paper not to be taken from the Library

VOL XVI. No. 22 SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 29, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS.

READY—EN GARDE!

TWO MEMBERS OF THE JAPANESE FENCING-CLUB OF THIS CITY IN FIGHTING TRIM

Photo by Weidner

THE WAVE

is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 29, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2-3 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 3 |
| Onward, Christian Soldiers | 4 |
| Patter About Personages | 5 |
| "When a Woman Hesitates"; by Justin Sturgis | 5 |
| Mrs. Hammond's Book | 6 |
| Impressions of the War | 7 |
| Some Dogs of Note | 7 |
| Japanese Swordsmanship | 8 |
| Breaking Turf Records; by Benedict | 9 |
| A Debutante's Diary; by Miss Cricket | 10 |
| Frawleys New Beauty; by Frank Norris | 11 |
| "The Choir Invisible": a Review | 12 |
| Her Answer; by Tom Hall | 13 |
| Dramatic Notes | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

THE HAWAIIAN RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Whether or not the Reciprocity treaty now existing between this Government and that of the Hawaiian Islands should be abrogated or permitted to continue, is a question that deeply concerns this city and this State—more so, perhaps, than the mass of the people realize. It would not be a difficult problem to solve if the facts were available, but the facts are not to be had. Mr. Bierce and the "Argonaut," which is interested in abrogating the treaty, are both inclined to grow sarcastic over Senator Perkins' present perplexity in the matter, but the embarrassment to which that gentleman confesses is shared by most men who, unacquainted with technical knowledge of the details, are seeking the truth of the matter, and desire to act conscientiously therein. Mr. Bierce and Senator Perkins' lesser critics would have that gentleman form a "judgment of his own" and act upon it, regardless of the views or facts advanced by San Francisco commercial organizations, banks and importers who tend to uphold the treaty, and mindless of the arguments and appeals of interior cities which would abrogate it. But Senator Perkins, fortunately, has a wisdom above partisanship, and is merely and only anxious to serve the best interests of the State and the people whom he represents. This in itself is a most refreshing innovation in our politics, but it does seem curious enough that our California Senator should be ridiculed for seeking to ascertain from the people themselves what they consider conducive to their best interests, rather than forming a judgment of his own and acting perhaps erroneously.

We, as a State, cannot afford to have our representatives in Congress cast a vote to injure the beet-producing agriculturist, the beet-sugar manufacturer, or the individuals employed in and about the prosecution of that industry. Nor can we afford to have them cast a vote that will work harm, and perhaps destruction, to our local refineries of Hawaiian sugar, or to the shippers and manufacturers and merchants engaged in the trade with Hawaii, and the farmers that produce the hay, wheat, flour and the like that are shipped in great abundance to the Islands. We are deeply interested in our seaward commerce. It means much to San Francisco and the growth of San Francisco, and likewise means much to the State at large. We are not so heavily burdened with other commerce or industries that we can afford, upon a mere conjecture or speculation, to strike down one or the other. Among just and reasonable men there would probably exist but little, if any, difference of opinion upon this situation if the facts were ascertainable and beyond dispute. Of course, the large money interests and their followers who have capital invested on both sides of the question would continue to wrangle backward and forward, but with the great body of the people, and with our United States Senator Perkins, and let us hope with the rest of Congress besides, a trustworthy statement of the facts would determine the question forthwith.

If it is true that the American beet sugar industry must fail unless Congress abrogates the treaty, then no interest but a selfish interest would insist upon its maintenance. It has been demonstrated that there is in America, and particularly in California, an ample acreage susceptible to beet culture. The almost despairing farmer who has been struggling under the disadvantage of declining wheat values was offered hope, where hope was well-nigh dead. In recent years the condition of the producer of wheat has been most deplorable and the outlook most hopeless. The pariah of India, the peon of Argentina and the peasant of Russia could produce, and did produce, this great staple at a price that meant beggary in America. The future held out no hope or promise of relief, and thinking men who, during the past few years, have been brought face to face with this problem, have offered no solution but that of diversity of crops. Over-production has been pretty general in other branches of agriculture, and it is difficult to determine in just what direction to "diversify." Coming down to California in particular, the sugar beet has promised, in part, to solve this most vexing problem. We should be keenly vigilant for the welfare of our producers, and watch with jealous care lest through some mistaken governmental policy we suffer further disappointment to come to them. To blunder in this direction would be to encourage fresh zeal in Populistic money theories. Full granaries and prosperous husbandry will never recruit the ranks of Populism. If the continuance of the Hawaiian Reciprocity treaty would operate to strangle the hope and suffocate in its infancy this most promising industry, then there should go up an irresistable and unmistakable demand for its immediate and absolute abrogation.

But what are the facts? They are not ascertainable. The advocates of beet sugar insistently protest that their industry must languish unless Congress comes to its immediate aid. An appeal is made to prejudice by anathematizing the Hawaiian planter, and he is set before us as a German or an Englishman, and we are told that we are paying these foreign planters a bounty on their sugar at the expense of the American producer; that the Hawaiian planter employs Chinese and Japanese labor, which we permit to compete with free American labor. Every disagreeable and ugly fact that can be exploited, or statement that can be invented, concerning Hawaii, is rung into our ears, but we hear nothing, positively nothing, of the truth concerning the home industry. The farmer knows the value of his crop. The world knows the market value of a ton of sugar beets. The quantity of beets that it is possible to raise on an acre of land is a thing of pretty common public knowledge. But immediately the product comes into the hands of the sugar manufacturer, then mystery, silence and secrecy begin. The yield of sugar to a ton of beets, the profits made in the evolution from the vegetable to the sugar, are not referred to or exploited. Current rumor, based upon good authority, has it that the beet sugar manufacturers have declared enormous dividends during the past few years, and that the manufacturer has absorbed all the profits of the industry. The argument is advanced that beet sugar may be profitably produced, and is profitably produced, even with the Reciprocity treaty in existence. If the truth were known concerning the profits in the manufacture of beet sugar, we are told, the farmer would demand, and could receive, more for his products. We are told that even though the treaty were abrogated, the manufacturer would continue his concealment as to the profits, and the price of beets would remain the same while the profits of the manufacturer would be increased. The beet sugar manufacturer has the facts. He is stirring heaven and earth to abrogate the treaty, and it is reasonable to assume that, if he conceals the facts in his possession, he is not concealing facts that would sustain his argument as to the necessity for Congressional aid. He will not state the profits of his concern. He might, if his claim for Congressional assistance was well-founded, readily open up his books and conclusively prove to the public that the life of his industry depends upon the abrogation of the treaty. Until he takes this step, and so long as he persistently continues the policy of concealment, we must believe that he is hiding facts that would put a different color on his statements, and perhaps deny them in toto.

IS THE CLERICAL MIND DEGENERATING?

At the annual dinner of an association of churchmen for the advancement of the interests of laboring men, held recently in New York, the Right Reverend Bishop Potter, of the diocese of New York, made a speech in the course of which he expressed with great emphasis some very remarkable opinions on the cause of the troubled relations between wage-earners and employers, and on the effect of the introduction of machinery on the intelligence of the workingmen. The Bishop declares, with all the assurance of one long accustomed to speak ex cathedra, that the general use of machinery is eliminating all intelligence from labor and is rapidly reducing the laborer to the condition of an idiot. He declares that a man whose daily task is the monotonous tending of a mere machine is not much better than a machine himself—is even worse than a machine, for, as the Bishop says, the man must necessarily fight, drink and gamble, when his day's task is done, to save himself from madness, a course of treatment not necessary to preserve the usefulness of the lifeless mechanism. We read that of old the Israelites in Egypt groaned heavily under the tasks imposed on them by Pharoah; but Bishop Potter, who is a logical and courageous churchman, would probably ascribe the present high average intelligence of the Jewish race, and their generally temperate habits of life, to the lack of good brick machines in the ancient brickyards. In former times, the Bishop says, the workmen lived with his employer and was regarded by him as one of the family. To the discontinuance of this intimate domestic relation between capital and labor the Bishop ascribes the strikes, lockouts and all the other acrimonious disputes between employers and employees. If the Bishop's points are well taken the only proper course for us to pursue is to dispense summarily with the use of all machines whose products can be made by hand, and to require every employer of labor to enlarge his family establishment to an extent sufficient to enable him to admit to his domestic circle everybody who serves him for wages. It would be interesting to know how long a course of domestication would be needed to reduce the garrulous Debs to a state of quiet contentment, and the bloodthirsty Boyce of the Miners' Federation to meekness.

The prominence which these queer statements have received, and the wide and astonished comment which they have aroused, are not due to the character of the statements themselves, but to the character and the prominence of the man who uttered them. The Bishop of New York is, to-day, the most prominent figure in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, and he is a prominent figure in the civic life of the metropolis of the country. The things which he said at the churchmen's dinner have been said many times before by other men without arousing any interest, and his sentiments might be echoed at intervals by any number of obscure clergymen without exciting the least comment beyond the range of their individual pulpits. But when the foremost ecclesiastical dignitary of what is always regarded as a highly conservative church openly and emphatically declares himself in favor of abandoning the service of steam to revert to the literal sweat of toil, and of what would be the re-establishment of a form of domestic dependence in place of the present industrial freedom, then the interesting question that arises is not whether it is possible to turn back the hands of the dial so that such a vision of the past may be realized in the future. What is interesting is the inquiry that naturally arises as to what it is that leads the clerical mind to such remarkable conclusions. Is the clerical mind degenerating?

Ever since, in the progressive development of modern religion, the ecclesiastic became differentiated from the lay believer, the clerical attitude has been that of the teacher speaking without authority. From the sacred character of the truths which it is his duty to enunciate and expound, the preacher has always felt himself to be exempt from the necessity of relying on evidence and reason as the final supports of the truth which he delivers and of the conclusions which he urges on his hearers. His method is one of exhortation, not demonstration. Within the peculiar field of strict religion, that is, of religion as an exposition of revealed truth, the hortatory method serves well—indeed, it is the only method possible. But when the preacher steps outside of the limits of the field of religion and essays to teach to such portion of the world as will listen to him his solution of political, social and economic problems, he carries with him the pulpit habit of mind. He announces solutions but makes no demonstrations, and he encounters the opposition and denial of his statements from which he is exempt so long as he confines himself to his duty of strictly religious teaching, and so frequently and so easily is he overthrown or discomfited that his profession suffers in the public estimation, and the suspicion gains ground that the intellectual level of ministry and priesthood lies below that of the other learned professions.

For this suspicion and whatever foundation there exists for it, the clergy themselves are responsible. Their method of teaching religion by a reference to authority, seconded by appeals to enthusiasm, affection and other emotions, is quite as available in the hands of a less than mediocre man as in those of a man of the highest intelligence; and the mediocre man can just as easily—and just as effectively—apply the religious method to the discussion of extra-religious problems as the man of greater ability who is trained only in the methods of the theological schools. The result is that the inferior intellects are attracted to that profession in which their inferiority will be less apparent and less humiliating to them, and the ministry is crowded with men who have assumed the attitude of public teachers without the equipment needed to make their instruction valuable to the world. So long as they remain in the discharge of their obscure pastoral duties such men excite no attention; but when a cleric of such prominence as Bishop Potter enjoys makes public substitution of sentiment and passion for sense and good reason in the discussion of a subject of great and universal interest, it is time for those who have the interests of religion at heart to inquire into the alleged degeneration of the clergy, and to devise means for improving their standard—or restraining their utterances to their own proper field of instruction.

MAYOR PHELAN ON GOOD MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

The enterprise of the "Examiner" has given to its readers, in advance of its regular publication in the "Arena" for June, an article by Mayor Phelan on the subject of "Municipal Conditions in California." The article is one of a series relating to questions of good municipal government written for the "Arena" by the Mayors of some of the large cities of the country. The Mayors of Boston, Albany and Detroit have already contributed to the series, and whatever our own citizens may think of the views of their chief executive as to the present condition of our municipal government, and of his opinions as to the best means for its improvement, they need have no fear that any of his brother Mayors will surpass him in the ease and clearness and fluency with which his opinions are set forth. As a writer our Mayor is a man of whom our citizens may well be proud.

The Mayor's paper is not what its name would lead the reader to expect it to be. It is not an essay on municipal conditions peculiar to California, but rather a general discussion of some of the more vigorously mooted points in the general questions of good government that affect all cities. Indeed, he shows that these questions and their solutions cannot be essentially different in Boston and in San Francisco. It is well that the problem is not one whose solution depends on any local conditions, otherwise the success or failure of the experiments of one city could be of no value in determining the course of others. Every advance in the practice of local good government achieved by the efforts and at the expense of the people of one city is immediately available for the benefit and guidance of the people of any other city who have enough municipal good sense to take advantage of it.

In his account of the present condition of San Francisco Mayor Phelan says: "Patriotic men have organized associations to assist in the better government of the city, and at this time a new charter, built on Eastern models, is the leading feature of the municipal programme, which is being energetically pressed, and which will likely become effective within the next two years. San Francisco has suffered from scattered powers and divided responsibility. Legislative interference and 'boss' politics have made reforms imperative, and the new charter is designed to cure these evils. * * * The charter will, no doubt, confer on the Mayor the power of appointment in most of the administrative offices, and will elaborate a scheme of civil service reform. Under our present system there is a multiplicity of elective officers, and the local Legislature usurps executive functions."

We wish that our present condition were no worse than the Eastern readers of the Mayor's paper will take it to be, and that the day of redemption were as near at hand as the sanguine Mayor believes. His Honor could not be expected to emphasize the dark lines in the picture which he draws of our present condition, nor to refrain from indulging in rosy anticipations when he forecasts the future for us. He is our official head, and he must not seem lacking in his respect for those whose votes have made him the chief citizen of the chief city of the Western half of the United States. But where are the associations of patriotic men organized to promote the better government of San Francisco? What have they done, and what are they doing? We are wont to believe that the bosses who "do politics" must work in quiet, if not in secret, and must rely on surprise for the accomplishment of their nefarious ends. But aggressive patriotism and civic virtue must come out into the open if they are to wage their contest with any chance of success against the powers of political darkness. Since the rejection by the people of the new charter, which was submitted to them at the election of last November, what steps have been taken to arouse the people to the necessity of providing another instrument of city government which shall avoid the errors of the last and commend itself to the judgment of the good citizens who are a majority of our people? It is well enough to talk and write of the deplorable effects of corporate greed in corrupting the people and debauching their officials, but corrupt corporations cannot flourish except in a corrupt soil. They are even more a consequence than a cause of corruption in our municipal life. The suppression of every corporation which is suspected of tampering with the virtue of municipal officials, the recasting of our entire municipal machinery, the election of a legalized, responsible and autocratic "boss" to the office of Mayor would fail to bring about the municipal millennium so long as ignorance of their duties and indifference to the discharge of them are compatible with the character of the "good citizen." The really good citizen is the one who is not content with merely refraining from wrongdoing, who keeps the ten commandments—or most of them—and keeps himself out of jail, but the citizen who does his duty to his fellow-citizens as he does his duty to himself and to his family, even when it is irksome and unpleasant to do it. We need the burgher spirit and the civic pride of older towns—plants of slow growth, but well worth the cost of cultivation. When we have these we shall have better citizens, a better city, and, as a consequence, more tractable and more honest corporations to serve us.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

When the California Kipling arrives I recommend him to the waterfront of San Francisco as a special breeding ground for romances. Plots in plenty there are along the wharves, to be had for the picking up. What an opportunity for a story is offered by the expedition of the schooner Louisa D., fitted out with provisions and a British flag and manned by a crew of eleven mariners whose destination is a group of unknown islands in the Southern Seas. Not literally treasure hunting is this expedition—something more prosaic but as valuable is the motive of the quest. On certain old charts of the ocean, near the 14th degree north, just this side of the Equator, there are shown three small islands which, however, are not marked on the newest maps of the Pacific. Maybe they have disappeared in volcanic convulsion, or, lying far out of the line of travel, have escaped the attention of latter-day mariners. In this region the great deposits of guano are found, and it is in the hope of locating a new accumulation of this valuable fertilizer that the expedition has set out to rediscover the islands. The proprietor is a wealthy resident of Honolulu, Peacock by name, who got a taste of the profits of exploration in a previous adventure which resulted in the locating of the Lacy isle. Here a rich guano deposit was found and turned over to a British syndicate at a profit of $700,000—surely a fair return for a brief voyage. If the Louisa D. is successful in her quest, and the islands occur as marked, they are to be taken possession of on behalf of her Britannic majesty. This partiality for the suzerainty of England is explained by Peacock, who is an American, on the ground that it is easier to trade on the high seas under the laws of the United Kingdom than under the rules of the United States. Before the schooner started on her quest he called on the British Consulate and informed Counsel Warburton of his project. "By what authority, sir, will you raise the British flag?" inquired that dignitary, amused at the coolness of the project. "Authority be blowed!" responded Peacock; "the raising of the flag don't hurt any one. So far as I can see, the trouble begins when some one starts to pull it down." A part of the equipment of the Louisa D., then, was a union jack, which in due course will consecrate the confiscation of the anticipated guano and secure it in the ownership of Peacock. Thus is patriotism converted into trade purposes.

***

The dramatic comedy element is not always confined to the space behind the footlights, even in San Francisco. Sometimes it occurs in such solemn and staid precincts as Judge Wallace's court room. It appears that a few days ago a case came up for hearing before the Judge, in which, should an adverse judgment be rendered, the plaintiff could expect nothing short of a five years' sentence. However, there was a sad lack of evidence to convict. The plaintiff's counsel moved for a rehearing on this ground. Judge Wallace hummed and hawed and considered, and finally granted the counsel's petition. The eminent counsel then moved for dismissal on the same grounds. "Granted," observed his Honor. The plaintiff had stood this while in the dock, vainly endeavoring to understand the meaning of this legal jangle. He could make nothing of it, and looked forward to a five-year sojourn "across the bay." After the granting of the petition for dismissal the bailiff of the court approached the plaintiff, and, touching him on the elbow, remarked, "You can go." "What?" said the other, perplexed. "You can go," repeated the minion of the law. "You are free." "Free?" yelled the prospective guest of Warden Hale, "free, you say," and at the words, without saying so much as good-bye to his counsel, made one leap toward the door. He gained it, wrenched it open and galloped down the corridor like the stricken hind of the poets. "Come back, come back," shouted the bailiff. "Come back, you've forgotten your hat." The fugitive waved his hand behind him as he ran, and without turning his head, shouted: "Never mind my hat, never mind my hat."

***

They call the Governor Steeple Jim at detective headquarters. Since he has re-tried Durrant he has achieved quite a reputation among the thief-catchers. None of them can see just the wherefore of his interference, or even the necessity of it, but they realize he comes from Stockton, and will yet be returned there. They make allowances. Quite the funniest expression of the Executive's weakness is the extraordinary cordiality he assumes on meeting Congressman Maguire, whom he scents as a possible rival in '98. It is a delusion he entertains in his poor moidered brain that the people will have him succeed himself. He cannot realize that his deadness exceeds that of his predecessor, the defunct Markham. It is a bit curious, though, that this extraordinary person, who gives us so spectacular an administration, should come from Stockton.

***

In this commercial era there is no sentiment that cannot be made to yield a profit if it be but properly administered. Some months ago certain local patriots, to whom liberty is dearer than life, met and upbraided the President for his non-interference on behalf of Cuba. The theme was a fertile opportunity for oratory and resulted in a great mass meeting at the Metropolitan Temple. There the eagle screamed and the stars and stripes waved, and a league—the Cuban Liberty League—was organized, with a company of distinguished citizens for its vice-presidents. The movement could not end there. It was necessary that a veritable Cuban or so be discovered to add color to the cause. They found two exiles—Jones, a saloon keeper, and Mascherini, a barber—who straightway established themselves president and secretary of the organization and proceeded thriftily to convert it to their own uses. You can imagine the resplendent horror of the eminent friends of liberty who had so eloquently denounced bloody Weyler and his Spanish myrmidons on finding themselves advertised as patrons and participants in a picnic to be given next Sunday at Wildwood G[illegible] Sausalito—a 25 cent picnic in aid of Cuban li[illegible] Jones the saloon keeper and Mascherini the barber are behind the affair, and a third Cuban named Froment is treasurer. The tickets are all in pale pink, and each announces the list of aristocratic patrons, who are all invited to purchase five tickets. It is said that a special programme has been prepared in which C. M. Shortridge is down as floor manager, General Barnes as president of the day, and H. E. Highton and James D. Phelan make a reception committee. I sincerely hope the barber and the saloon keeper in whose hands the cause of Cuban liberty is enshrined will reap ample harvest for their countrymen suffering under the oppressions of butcher Weyler.

***

Among the millers and in the ranks of the men who plant large areas in wheat there is grief over the condition of the crop. Six week ago prosperity seemed assured. The prospects were most bountiful, promising an immense harvest, but because of the sustained hot winds and the absence of rain, a change has come over the spirit of all these rainbow expectations. Agriculturists have flown to the opposite extreme, and curse the divinities who preside over cereals for neglecting their interests. I am inclined to think, however, that conditions are not so bad as rumor has it. Josiah Ames, who presides over the house of Ames & Harris, bag makers, tells me his orders of sacks provide for a bigger crop than that of last year. Surely the farmers are not buying a greater number of grain bags than they require. Though the warm weather injured also the fruit crop, especially pears and apricots, the damage seems mainly to have been in the direction of decreasing the quantity of fruit on the trees. Though the crop will be smaller than last year, the quality will be far ahead.

***

Since the Corral Hollow coal mines were formally declared open I have heard little of the brilliant results we were led to expect. I have looked for glowing announcements of the new fuel and have seen none. In some way a report has gone out into the community that the results of the venture are by no means satisfactory to the investors. There has certainly been a decline in the value of the stock, and there is considrable curiosity to know what the difficulty is. The projector, Mr. Treadwell, is a man who acquired experience and fortune in gold mining. On the strength of both he assumed an ability to handle a coal mine. He sailed in bravely enough, built a railroad from Corral Hollow to Stockton and then set about getting out his black diamonds. It seems he miscalculated the capacity of his appliances, for instead of taking out 2,000 tons a day, as he anticipated, he is only raising 150 tons per twenty-four hours. Of course that does not pay and cannot be made to yield returns. The situation involves a variety of changes, new arrangements of machinery and other things, and will cost much more money. However, I expect the property will, after a bit, prove all that was expected of it.

***

Apropos of mining, I wrote last week of the development of the Gwin mine. The prospects there continue most encouraging. I am told of a single lump of especially rich rock taken out of the center of the lead which was carried from the mine to the mill under the arm of the superintendent. It yielded $11,000 worth of gold. Of course, this does not mean that a new bonanza has been found. In every good mine there are very rich streaks, and this is an instance. The best mining investment of which I have heard is Superintendent Daggett's "Santa Rosalie," in Mexico. This is the political property about which there was so much ado between Daggett and Congressman Maguire when the former took office. I know one man whose original investment was $380. Since the mine has begun to pay dividends he has had $150 per month from it. Besides this, there have been surplus earnings which have gone into the development of the property, with such results that the dividends are soon to be doubled, and he will have $300 per month. The prospects point to some greater possibilities, as the ore body is very large.

***

It is not so many moons ago since the directors of the Kennedy mine refused from an English syndicate the sum of one and a half millions offered them for that prosperous mine. To-day they are questioning the value of the property. For many years the Kennedy has been one of the steady dividend paying mines of California. Its directors have divided from forty to sixty thousand dollars every month, and there was nothing to indicate a lessening of the yield. It has long been the deepest mine on the Mother Lode. Its apparent inexhaustibleness had been a source of consolation to the Superintendents of other properties in its vicinity. On the twenty-four hundred foot level, however, the trouble has come—and this level is several hundred feet below any other mine on the Lode. It seems the pay chute has disappeared. In the ore extracted there is no gold. All of a sudden the property has ceased to be productive, and among the stockholders there is consternation. Maybe the interruption is temporary. It is possible that this is but a barren zone. Once before a similar condition intervened. At the eight hundred foot level the vein vanished, and it seemed that the mine was exhausted. However, a new company was organized, and four hundred feet below they encountered immensely rich rock, and have prospered ever since. However, mining at the depth of the Kennedy is pretty expensive, and that consideration will affect future operations. It costs money to pump water and haul rock twenty-four hundred feet. There is but little deep mining in California. In the Transvaal, Brazil and Westralian mines excavations have been made to a depth of at least thirty-five hundred feet without exhausting auriferous deposits. There is no reason to suppose that geological conditions here will prove different from those that rule elsewhere. I am inclined to think it will be found that the Kennedy will soon again be numbered among dividend payers.

BOSWELL JR.

The Reception Committee of the California Branch of the Christian Endeavor Society in session at its headquarters in the Young Men's Christian Association Building, Rolla V. Watt presid ng

ONWARD, CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS!

The Advent of the Endeavorers, and What It Means.

An army with flying banners descends upon the city in the course of the next few weeks. The army of those who endeavor to be Christians—the Christian Endeavorers, in other words. Never has San Francisco witnessed so tremendous a throng, and how to accommodate, and to feed, and to transport, and in general to handle it is a problem that Edhem Pasha himself might be puzzled to solve. Twenty-five thousand is the number, all told, and this is what statisticians love to call "a conservative estimate." Some there are who say the city will be even 40,000 larger during the days of the convention.

It might be believed from these figures that not a single Christian Endeavorer will stay away from the convention. In reality, however, the multitude of the Endeavorers who will overflow the city this summer is about one seventy-fifth of the total number of members in America, for the C. E. claims a membership of three million.

It started — this enormous society — modestly enough some sixteen years ago, with a little organization in Maine. A certain Congregational Minister, Dr. Francis Clark by name, was its founder and promoter. Dr. Clark at that time had not the remotest idea that his little society was to be the charter organization of some fifty thousand more, and that its principles should in the course of some dozen years be adopted by over three million of young people throughout the United States. For the society is essentially one for young men and young women. There is no particular or especial reason why this should be so —and, in fact, there are plenty of older people among the ranks of the Endeavorers. But the laws that govern such vast multiudes as this are obscure and complex and difficult, almost impossible, to formulate. The Society has simply gathered the younger generation to itself and that is all there is to be said about it.

One reason for the enormous development of the society may perhaps be found in the fact that its lines are very generously broad, almost everybody is eligible, no matter of what creed or sect. The society is interdenominational, drawing its followers from Calvin as well as from Wesley. There is no limit to the size of the individual associations, and what dues there are are purely voluntary. There is a further advantage in this interdenominational system, to wit: that it goes far, very far, in the moulding of public opinion, in the broadening and enlarging of merely sectarian prejudice and in the breaking down of all barriers of antipathy and jealousy between the various creeds.

Personally, Dr. Clark is—for a man who must necessarily occupy such a prominent position—as plain and unassuming a gentleman as could be met with the world around. As general of this army of 3,000,000, he has been a man much sought after, a man whose opinions have been deferred to, whose person has been held in admiration and by many of the great ones of the earth. A less sincere or less earnest philanthropist might easily have been spoiled by the honors he has received during his three tours of the world, but in some manner known to those who know him best Dr. Clark is the same simple, kindly and approachable gentleman to-day as he was when his society numbered but a dozen or fifteen members.

The Golden Gate Union, the Pacific Coast branch of the organization, is preparing to receive the delegation from the East. The task will be herculean, since it is without precedent. Five or six thousand is as large a visiting body as has ever been "handled" in San Francisco.

It is a curious and perhaps a significant fact that, whereas, to entertain an expected assembly of 5,000, the Republican National Convention of this State set aside a sum of $100,000, the Golden Gate Union declare that five, and perhaps six, times that number of C. E.'s can be cared for at an outlay of only $25,000.

---

The doctors attending the Turkish wounded have had many stories to tell of the wonderful vitality of the Turks and their rapid recovery. For the most part they attribute these remarkable features to the abstemious lives the Turkish soldiers lead in the way of eating and drinking.

---

Japan is to spend $40,000 in putting twelve young Japanese students through a three years' course of study of naval architecture and marine engineering in England. They will work as gentleman apprentices with the great shipbuilding firms.

JOHN WILLIS BAEHR
GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION

DOCTOR FRANCIS CLARK
PRESIDENT AND FOUNDER OF THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY

WILLIAM SHAW
NATIONAL TREASURER OF THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY

PATTER ABOUT PERSONAGES

Some Late Gossip About Notables of the Moment.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree has at length realized the ambition of every aspiring actor, and now rejoices in the possession of a theater all his own, where he may do precisely as he pleases, unt ammeled by suggestions from the box office or the managerial department. It is rather an expensive game for the actor to own his theater, as the divine Sara has already discovered. But Mr. Tree is no doubt possessed of a greater business capacity than Dona Sal (though that is saying little), and his venture, assuredly an artistic success, will no doubt be financially satisfactory as well. Mr. Tree opened his theater in the first week of this month with the dramatization of Gilbert Parker's "Seats of the Mighty," himself assuming the role of Doltaire. Of Mr. Tree's acting nothing need be said. The mounting and scenery of the piece was superb, the beginning of the second act presenting a stage picture, the finest London has seen for many days, while the explosion scene was a veritable surprise in the way of artistic and powerful effect.

Speaking of new ventures leads one to note Mrs. Humphrey Ward's excursion into "pastures new." Mrs. Ward has evidently been innoculated with the lecturing virus. She desires to be heard as well as read, to be "seen of men" as well as to so paragraphed in the newspapers. Mrs. Ward has undertaken a lecturing tour, and of late has appeared upon the platform to "crowded houses." Mrs. Ward made her first bow to the public in the new role in Edinburgh, and was received with tremendous enthusiasm, an enthusiasm which she managed to reawaken at several different times during the evening. It is said that the author may include America in this her first tour, so that we shall perhaps have an opportunity of judging for ourselves of the creator of David Grieve in a new light.

It comes to hand that Prince Hohenlohe is not to resign after all. This should be welcome news to Germany, and, for the matter of that, to Europe at large, for, left to himself and his own erratic devices, Emperor Willie might easily involve the delicate machinery of Continental diplomacy in a pretty tangle. Hohenlohe is the brake, the drag, the check-rein, whatever you like, that keeps little Willie in hand, and his resignation is his means of coercion. Whenever his royal master threatens to break out of bounds Hohenlohe—other things failing—drops in with a carefully worded resignation, which William dare not accept, for fear of trouble in the Reichstag. So there is an oft-repeated little scene, in which William promises to amend his ways and Hohenlohe takes back his letter of resignation and goes home grumbling that he'll think it over, and the matter is dropped—for that occasion, only to be revived a few weeks later.

For some reason, not evry clearly expressed, the Presbyterian Church has thought fit to be displeased with the brilliant author of "Beside the Bonny Briar Bush," Ian MacLaren. No doubt the Reverend Dr. Watson expressed unorthodox views in some of his books, which have made him famous. At any rate a synod was cited in order to try the Reverend Doctor for heresy. The summoning of the assembly caused no little excitement, and for a time the public and the press looked forward to a sensational trial. They were both disappointed. MacLaren is a man of good judgment and solid convictions, and adopted the only really dignified course of action possible under the circumstances. A summons had been sent to him, citing him to appear and show cause, etc., etc. But the author-preacher simply and quietly ignored it, and, much to the disappointment of cranks and sensation-seekers, has gone calmly and serenely on his way.

Taking the combined judgment of the reading world into consideration, it would appear that Kipling has written a good poem and a mediocre story, i. e., "The Vampire" and "Captains Courageous." The phrase of "a rag and a bone and a hank of hair" is probably destined to live long in the English language, while most readers consider "Captains Courageous" as good only "in spots." It will be admitted, however, that the "spots" are pretty close together.

And now the "Chee Chee" does not go to Greece as war correspondent, after all. Curious how such stories as this will start, and once started, how they will travel. The majority of the public fully believed that Kipling was already on the scene of hostilities, whereas he himself has probably not even contemplated crossing the channel. By the way, from where does the "Chee Chee" get all his information; and having gotten it, how does he manage to retain it? To read his stories, one could readily believe that he had been at different times soldier, sailor, lighthouse keeper, chief engineer, diplomat, lawyer, doctor, and now, with his "Captains Courageous" he could almost delude us into the belief that he had spent the greater part of his thirty-odd years aboard a Grand Bank fishing boat. A wondeful little man, truly, this "Chee Chee."

In the House of Commons they have begun to question the intelligence of Lord Salisbury's diplomacy. It has long been customary to regard him as a great foreign minister, yet his conduct of the Greek crisis has been seriously questioned. The Radicals are all eager to attack him, but their leaders always discover just as they are preparing to clutch at some handle he seems to have given them that it has been greased, so to speak, overnight. He is denounced in London for bombarding the Christians, and at the same time is cursed abroad for plotting to protect them. That is to say, he plays in and out of the game, and nobody at any point can be wholly sure whether it is due to his weak stupidity or abnormal subtlety.

M. Hanotaux, the French Foreign Minister, less than a dozen years ago was lecturing on history at a salary of £6 a month to a small class of four or five in the Sorbonne, Paris. The task over, he generally took his way to the office of the "Republique Francaise," Gambetta's paper, which printed some of his literary and historical contributions. Here it was he met one evening Spuller and Jules Ferry, who gave him a helping hand, for he had already begun to climb the official ladder, being employed in the department of archives at the Foreign Office. The rapidity of his promotion was marvelous. Before the end of 1885 he had been appointed Counsellor to the Embassy at Constantinople, and the next year he secured a seat in the Chamber, and at this moment his position is unique.

When a Woman Hesitates

By JUSTIN STURGIS

Mrs. Trevor was not at home when Barclay called that afternoon, but the butler had instructions to tell him to wait for her; she had gone—where, Barclay did not quite understand—and would be back in half an hour. Barclay had waited for perhaps five minutes in the drawing-room examining the familiar paintings on the walls and turning idly the leaves of the gift books on the table, when a rustle of skirts from the direction of the portieres made him start and face about quickly, with the idea in his mind that Mrs. Trevor had returned sooner than expected. But it was not Mrs. Trevor who stood smiling at him in the door. Instead it was a very pretty — a wonderfully pretty — young girl of twenty or thereabouts, dressed in a smart tea-gown that set her off admirably.

"Oh," she said, with a mixture of coquetry and timidity that was charming, "is this — this is Mr. Barclay, I believe?"

Barclay replied that he had every reason to think it was.

"I am Miss Willis," she went on; "Mrs. Trevor's cousin."

Barclay bowed.

"From the country."

Barclay smiled, because it was evident she expected him to.

"And Mrs. Trevor asked me to—to talk to you in case you came before she got back—and—and—I don't think she will be back for half an hour."

"It is delightful!" murmured Barclay, vaguely.

"Which?" said Miss Willis, beginning to laugh. "By the way, you had better sit down." She settled herself upon the sofa.

"Why, just this." Barclay waved his hand as though to take in the situation, inclusive of Miss Willis and himself.

"It's delicious!" said Miss Willis.

Barclay sat down—upon the sofa.

"But we've not been introduced, you know," began Miss Willis, shaking her head at him.

"We must get along without it."

"Do you think we can?"

"Can what?"

"Get along—together."

"Some one has said that 'together' is the prettiest word in the language. Yes, I think we can."

"But will you meet me half way — you know I'm from the country."

"I'll do more than that, if you will let me." Barclay dropped his hand upon the sofa.

"That would be very kind. Oh, I was to make tea for for you, so Mrs. Trevor said."

"Oh, bother the tea! Wouldn't you rather talk?"

"I think I would—to you."

Barclay looked quizzically at the point of his varnished boot.

"You know, I — I'm not in such a hurry to have Mrs. Trevor come home." He slid his hand an inch or two along the sofa.

"And she won't be here for—a—whole—half—hour."

"I've heard of a battle that was won in less than that time. Do you think a girl could be?"

"Could be won in half an hour?"

"Yes."

"That would depend much upon the man, wouldn't it?"

"If the girl would meet him half way?"

"But one man promised to do more than that."

"I say, Miss Willis——"

"If the girl would let him, you know. And she might not let him——"

Barclay's hand paused.

"Unless——"

It moved forward again.

"Unless she felt sure the man thought she was worth the battle."

The hand moved forward another inch. There was an instant's silence, then Barclay said:

"She is worth it, I think."

"But it might be a long and very dreadful battle."

"I'm thinking of the girl, not of that." As he spoke his hand touched hers, in the folds of her gown. He took it in his own. She did not move. Suddenly she flashed a smile at him.

"I'm sorry Mrs. Trevor keeps you waiting so long. It's more than half an hour already."

"I'm not."

"Are you quite sure of that?"

"Absolutely."

Miss Willis drew her hand from his and rose to her feet with a good-humored smile, then she said:

"I ought not to be surprised at her being late, because I know that she does not intend to come at all."

"Not coming at all?" said Barclay, puzzled.

"No."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that Mrs. Trevor has digged a little pit for you, and that you have fallen into the midst of it."

"The deuce!" exclaimed Barclay, his eyes widening.

"You know—or perhaps you don't know," continued Miss Willis, smiling good-naturedly, "that Mrs. Trevor has been of late a little—just a little—suspicious of your protestations of devotion. She thinks that you are a sad rogue, Mr. Barclay, and that despite your assurances, that you would flirt most outrageously, most unconscionably, with the first pretty girl who would permit it."

"Come, now, I say, Miss Willis."

"And so, since Mrs. Trevor has the great goodness to think me not too unpresentable, she asked me to receive you this afternoon, and to make myself agreeable, in order that I might inform her afterward as to results."

"The devil she did!" cried Barclay, quite out of countenance. He got to his feet, his forehead puckering uneasily.

"She even went so far," said Miss Willis, always with the same entrancing smile, "as to confide to me two little notes, one of which I was to hand you in case you proved faithful, and the other should you prove false. In one of them—the one you would have received had you been good—she thanks you for your constancy, and swears to you that she will always and forever love you; the other one—well, the other one treats you in the manner you have deserved and gives you your freedom."

"And naturally," said Barclay, gloomily, "it is this last one you are going to give me?"

"Don't you think you have merited it?"

"How do you know one letter from the other?"

"The bad one I marked with a cross—see?" and she held it towards him.

"I say—look here, Miss Willis," exclaimed Barclay, suddenly; "are you vexed with me for what has happened this afternoon? Do you regret our little tete-a-tete?

Miss Willis put her lips together and turned the note about and about in her fingers. She said nothing.

"Well, then," said Barclay, "when you tell Mrs. Trevor all about it, she won't be very well pleased will she, now?"

"Probably not."

"Women like Mrs. Trevor, even when they are expecting it, don't like to be—deceived."

"She will be furious."

"Especially when their successful rival is their little cousin—from the country?"

"That is one way of looking at it, of course."

"Which you hadn't thought of. I shall be dismissed, of course; but aren't you afraid she will send you home as well? You know the 'woman scorned' quotation?"

"She might send me back—that is quite true."

"Whereas, if you should give me the other letter—the one without the cross—Mrs. Trevor will never know, and I can come often, and—and—and have you make tea for me when Mrs. Trevor is out, and thus you and I and Mrs. Trevor—all of us, in fact—will be happy. Now what do you say?"

Miss Willis hesitated a moment. (You know what happens when a woman hesitates.) Her eyes met Barclay's, and she smiled in spite of herself.

Then without a word she handed him the unmarked letter.

There was a roll of wheels on the asphalt outside, and the clapping of a carriage door.

"There is Mrs. Trevor now!" exclaimed Miss Willis.

William Waldorf Astor has taken a big house in Picadilly for the Queen's Jubilee Day, and has invitations out for two dances in June, to which royalty has been invited.

COMMENCEMENT AT STANFORD

The Class of '97 Celebrate the Ceremony of Graduation.

They have launched a new class down at Stanford during the week, with the full expectation that it will beat the contract figure on its trial trip. It is the class of '97, and it numbered a hundred and twenty, all told. The festivities of commencement week began on Monday, when the graduates dedicated the class plate and presented the soph. cane to the lower class-men. These two ceremonies are chief among the time-worn customs that have been invented and take the place of those that only came with years. The "plate" is a bronze tablet suitably inscribed that is set into the cement walk about the quadrangle The cane is a sort of staff of office bestowed upon the Freshmen as a visible sign of their promotion to the dignity of second year men.

On Thursday evening occurred the principal social "function" of the week. The "prom. concert" in the Quad, and a really very pretty affair it was. Over a thousand lights, electric and otherwise, were hung about the "Quad," while an orchestra of musicians brought down from the city made the night melodious with all sorts of marches, selections and quicksteps, from the Stanford University March to that of Lohengrin.

The senior theatricals were given on the morning of the same day, and were as successful as the most enthusiastic amateur could have wished. The play was John Kendrick Bangs' "Proposal Under Difficulties," the leading parts being well interpreted by F. M. Riley as "Yardsley," G. W. Bush as "Barlow" and Miss Grace Streeter as "Dorothy Andrews." The "Proposals Under Difficulties" was in a manner given under difficulties itself, in that the audience was able to contrast it with the work of such professionals as Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott, who followed with their presentation of "The Silent System." Ferris Hartman was also brought from the Tivoli and added materially to the fun of the occasion. The programme was closed by a one-act farce called "A Pair of Lunatics," written and presented by the students. G. H. Robinson and Miss Flossie Jones were the bright particular stars of this piece and acquitted themselves with the ease and thoroughness of professionals.

The alumni reunion and lunch in the chapel followed after the close of this histrionic carnival. Mr. Charles Field of the Bohemian Club of this city, and President of the Stanford alumni, acted as toastmaster, in which capacity he called forth from President Starr Jordan a discourse on the "Alumnis and the University."

Wednesday was commencement day, the great day of the college year. The hundred and twenty diplomas were presented to the graduates in the gymnasium, which, it must be admitted, looked rather bare of decoration. Professor Jordan said a last word to the graduates on the wholesomeness of the world they were about to face, and ended with what he called a "plea for old-fashioned goodness."

Not the least enjoyable feature of commencement week at the cardinal college is the open-house system in vogue among the fraternities. House parties are formed and the boys entertain their cousins and sisters —and incidentally other boys' cousins and sisters—during the public days. The largest house party of the week, and no doubt the most enjoyable, was that given by the Sigma Nu fraternity, which is quite the best of the Stanford clubs.

The Pennsylvania railroad is emphatically the property of its stockholders. It has $130,000,000 of stock and $80,000,000 of bonds. Half its stock is owned in England. When its President wants money he goes to its stockholders. There is a security of employment, a civil service running all through the great force of employes.

SCENE FROM "A PROPOSAL UNDER DIFFICULTIES," ENACTED BY THE SENIOR CLASS AT STANFORD UNIVERSITY

Thors, photo

A STRONG STORY

Mrs. John Hays Hammond's Account of the Uitlander Rising.

The latest word on the Transvaal crisis of '96 is spoken by a woman. Mrs. Hammond, wife of the famous engineer, John Hays Hammond, has told of the revolution, all of which she saw and part of which she was, in a little book under the title "A Woman's Part in a Revolution." It may be said that Mrs. Hammond and her sister-in-law Betty were almost the only gentle-women left in Johannesburg four days after the insurrection broke out. Mrs. Hammond's "Part in the Revolution" was the part of a heroine. She proved herself a man's woman in every way, standing by her "good man," as she calls him, with a pluck that makes one feel proud that she is an American.

Mrs. Hammond tells her story admirably well, dramatizing whenever she can and striking off occasional little word pictures with a cleverness that is quite above the ordinary.

"Pretoria," she says, for instance, "was like a steam-bath. Frequent thunder storms were followed by a blazing sun. Vegetation grew inches in a day, and emitted a rank smell. People were sallow and languid, and went about with yellow-white lips."

There is nothing meanly feminine or little about the story; none of the hysteria and exclamation which would have been so easy to adopt under the circumstances. Mrs. Hammond goes right about her work in an honest, direct, forcible fashion, disdaining subterfuge or useless restraint, saying what she means, angry at cowardice and littleness and frankly glad and proud over courage and honesty and unbroken faith.

The narrative is a straightforward story of an insurrection that echoed round the world, told from the standpoint of a clear-headed American woman, who was too brave to run away when her husband was in danger and too noble to counsel her husband to run away when he had the chance to do so, even though to remain meant probable execution. A good idea can be obtained of the spirit of the book (and incidentally of the spirit of the splendid woman as well) by her comment upon the discovery of the famous "letter of invitation" upon the field of Kungusdorp. "It was picked up," says Mrs. Hammond, "on the battlefield in a leathern pouch supposed to be Dr. Jameson's saddle bag. Why in the name of all that is discreet and honorable didn't he eat it!"

On almost every page are interesting passages and descriptions of the men and scenes of those exciting days. Not one of the least entertaining bits is Mrs. Hammond's description of her visit to Kruger:

"The home of the President of the South African Republic is an unpretentious dwelling, built of wood, and on one floor. There is a little piazza running across the front, upon which he is frequently seen sitting, smoking his pipe of strong Boer tobacco, with a couple of his trusted Burghers beside him. Two armed sentinels stood at the latch gate. I hurried through the entrance. A negro nurse was scurrying across the hall with a plump baby in her arms. A young man with a pleasant face met me at the sitting-room door, and invited me to enter. It was an old-fashioned parlor, furnished with black horse-hair, glass globes, and artificial flowers; a marble-topped center table supporting bulky volumes,

THE '97 GRADUATING CLASS OF STANFORD UNIVERSITY

Thors, photo

MR. TOM C. GRANT'S DON BERNARDO

MISS MINA D'EVELYN'S MARQUIS

bound in pressed leather, with large gilt titles. There were several men already in the room—Boers. Those nearest the door, I saw, regarded me with a scowl. I was a woman from the enemy's camp. At the further end of the long room sat a large, sallow-skinned man, with long grizzled hair swept abruptly up from his forehead. His eyes, which were keen, were partly obscured by heavy swollen lids. The nose was massive but not handsome. The thin-lipped mouth was large and flexible, and showed both sweetness and firmness. A fine mouth! He wore a beard. It was President Kruger. He was filling his pipe from a moleskin pouch, and I noticed that his broad stooping shoulders ended in arms abnormally long. We shook hands, and he continued to fill and light his pipe. Mr. Grobler, the pleasant-faced young man—grandson and secretary to the President—observing that I was trembling with fatigue and suppressed excitement, offered me a chair. We sat opposite each other, the President in the middle. I spoke slowly, Mr. Grobler interpreting. This was hardly necessary, President Kruger answering much that I said before it was interpreted. I could understand him perfectly from my familiarity with German and especially Platt-Deutsch.

"I explained that I had not come to talk politics—'No, no politics,' interrupted the President, in a thick, loud voice. Nor had I come to ask favors for my husband, as I felt assured that the honesty of his motives would speak for themselves at the day of his trial, but I had come as a woman and daughter of a Republic to ask him to continue the clemency which he had thus far shown, and to thank Mrs. Kruger for the tears which she had shed when Johannesburg was in peril.

"President Kruger relaxed a little. 'That is true; she did weep.' He fixed me with his shrewd glance. 'Where were you?' he asked, abruptly.

" 'I was in Johannesburg with my husband.'

" 'Were you not afraid?"

" 'Yes; those days have robbed me of my youth.'

" 'What did you think I was going to do?'

" 'I hoped that you would come to an understanding with the Reformers.'

"His face darkened.

" 'I was disappointed that the Americans went against me,' he said.

"Mr. Sammy Marx rose and left the room. I was seized with one of those sudden and unaccountable panics, and from sheer embarrassment—my mood was far too tragic to admit of flippancy—blurted out: 'You must come to America, Mr. President, as soon as all this trouble is settled, and see how we manage matters.'

"Kruger's face lighted up with interest. 'I am too old to go so far.'

" 'No man is older than his brain, Mr. President;' and Kruger, who knew that in all the trouble he had shown the mental vigor of a man in his prime, accepted my praise with a hearty laugh. This was joined in by the Boers from the other end of the room."

SOME DOGS OF NOTE

The accompanying illustrations present prize winners in three of the sections at the recent Kennel Club show in this city.

Marquis (30561), by Ormonde-Carlotta, winner in the Challenge class for Mastiffs (Dogs), and of the Hermann Oelrichs gold medal for best mastiff. This dog has been a winner of first prize open classes at Omaha, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Pittsburg and Chicago, also special for best mastiff at Chicago and first Challenge at St. Louis.

As a stud dog he has already proved a success, his young stock in owners' kennels being very choice, and one of his puppies having won first prize at the Mascontah Kennel Club show. His weight in show condition is 170 lbs.; color, a beautiful fawn, with black markings; head, ears, legs and feet excellent, body symmetrical, back strong and action good—altogether a very fine specimen of a true English mastiff, and especially adapted for crossing with bitches lacking in mastiff type.

Don Bernardo, by California Bernardo-Lady Butte, whelped September, 1895. Winner of first prize St. Bernard novice class; first prize rough-coated dogs, open class, and President's Silver Cup for best California bred St. Bernard. This is a remarkably fine young dog, weighing now close on 200 lbs., and, if he goes on as he is doing, it is quite on the cards that he will excel his grandsire, Lord Butte, who was a champion in Europe. His owner values Don Bernardo at $2,500.

Among the specialties of the show were the Belgian Griffons, of which Mr. W. S. Kittle exhibited four, all of them bred by Mr. George Crocker. These dogs have lately been introduced as a new feature in European shows, and if not attractive, they are certainly uncommon as regards looks. They created much interest, and the thanks of dog fanciers are due to Mr. Kittle for the exhibition he made of these novelties.

MR. W. S. KITTLE S GRIFFONS

IMPRESSIONS OF THE WAR

Turks Tranquil and Temperate — Greeks Suspected of Cowardice.

Within the last week or so the real war news from Greece has been coming in fast. Not the detached, fragmentary telegrams, garbled by the censor and distorted by frequent relays, but the written accounts of special correspondents—the men who record impressions, not merely collect news. The features of the campaign that have astonished Europe are the extreme moderation of the Turkish conquerors and the cowardice of the Greeks. The best correspondence that has come from the war is that of G. W. Stevens, who gives in the "Mail," in a very impressionistic style, the story of the Turkish entrance into Larissa:

"Over the scattered, smashed, disheveled, disgraceful relics of Greece marched the conquering Turk. Already a huge army was pouring in from every opening into the plain—horse and foot and the perpetual patient baggage train. But the conquering Turk displayed no exultation. Here, between the rich cornfields of the plain of Thessaly, he marched as always—strongly, sloppily, composedly. The entry of the Turkish troops into Larissa was the sweetest and most lovable thing I have seen during this week of the war.

"I will not say that there was no single case of disorder; a few men were arrested for looting. But I patrolled the city for hours, and I do say that the order, the discipline, and the good humor of the Turks and Albanians could have been excelled by no nation in the world; more, I do not believe that any nation could have equalled it. In no other country I ever heard of are soldiers so well disciplined, so simply, unquestioningly, even childishly obedient to their officers. The officers had forbidden pillage and violence, and the soldiers obeyed. I have seen more rioting at a supper bar in the National Liberal Club than I saw on the first day of the occupation of Larissa. Why? Partly, no doubt, it was due to the admirable arrangements made by the officers. I saw Hakki Pasha, who had entered the town with his division—a Turk of the old type—short, stout, gray-bearded, grave, yet with a jolly twinkle somewhere under the surface of his eyes. When I congratulated him he was almost embarrassed, and said it was an accident. But the discipline he established was not an accident, and any general in the world might be proud of it to his death. Sentinels stood at every corner, mounted patrols paced down every street. The bank and all the other principal buildings had sentries of their own, and it was pleasant to see how hard Albanians scorned the Greek sentry boxes and sat down contentedly on the stones. There was only one possible objection to the arrangements made—that they were not necessary."

Another explanation of this exemplary behavior comes in a dispatch to the "Times":

"There have been several attempts at plundering among the Albanian regiments, but they have been isolated, and this morning two soldiers, who had been warned, were shot in the market-place for disobedience of orders. The effect was instantaneous, and the commandant's exemplary action shows better than words the discipline that exists."

The Turkish soldier—though Harding Davis nearly five years ago called him the finest fighting man of his inches in Europe—has been a surprise to the world in general, and to Greece in particular. There is a certain disconcerting, business-like directness about his attacks that will not brook argument. "It was of little use," says Stevens, "protesting that the Turks were ill-fed and starving, when, after a day and night spent in fighting, they showed their red fezzes over the earthwork. Well-fitting uniforms may win on a dress parade, but when a line of powerful men is advancing with the bayonet there is small consolation in the holes or patches displayed by their garments."

As for the Greeks—they do not emerge from their battles as heroes. There seems little reason to doubt the stories of the general correspondents, who don't hesitate to impute cowardice to the flying Hellenes. Of the evacuation of Larissa, the "Times" correspondent writes: "The remainder of the Greek army, after distinguishing itself by setting fire to the barracks and looting the shops of the civil population, judged discretion more serviceable than valor and fled pell-mell. Even the doctors and the hospital assistants left their charges, some of whom died untended and alone before they were found out by the Turkish medical officials. The Crown Prince, indeed, endeavored to restrain the excesses of his disbanded soldiery and to prevent what might have once been an orderly retreat from lapsing into the miserable debacle whose effects are now before us. No doubt, as a Prince and a gentleman he did his best. But it is evident that the army under his command was as lacking in organization as it was in real morale.

Edhem Pasha anticipated a stubborn resistance at Larissa, for this position was strong. There is a river running south of the town together with strong intrenchments. The "Telegraph's" correspondent says: "The miserable fact remains that thirty or forty battalions of infantry, with cavalry and guns, ran away from strongly intrenched positions, without firing a shot for their country. The Turkish officers, though always confident of victory, could hardly express their astonishment at the result. They always despised the courage of the Greeks, regarding them as a nation of talkers, better in speech than in action; but, still, they could scarcely believe in this sudden and ignominious flight."

A good deal of sympathy has gone out from every quarter of the world toward the English volunteers who have gone to emulate Byron and to bleed for Greece. A grim and unromantic writer in the "Telegraph" writes the following from Larissa. He is a destroyer of sentiment, this war correspondent. He says: "It may be hoped that the farce of volunteer assistance will never again be played. Where are the four Englishmen who, a month ago, left Charing-cross with a sublime sense of their own heroism? Were they well among the foremost of the runners, or did they bleed or fall in Byronic fashion for the cause of their adoption? It is painful to relate that the value of some of those individuals was lightly estimated by those whom they came to succor. They were abruptly ordered home after repeated exhibitions of inefficiency, with the assurance that they were not worth the rations wasted upon them. Some offers of assistance were met by counter demands for money."

President McKinley's idea of creating a tariff commission auxiliary to the Department of Commerce, to which all tariff issues and recommendations might be delegated, would succeed in accomplishing in a day what Congress takes months to do. The project would take tariff and money out of politics altogether, and give them over to a commission, carefully chosen, with full power to revise, change, amend and modify at will. The Secretary of the department, it is intimated, is to be Mark Hanna. His position will give him greater power than any of his confreres; it will make him the very head of the tariff and monetary questions of the country—a veritable financial autocrat.

Lulu Hurst has written a book in which she gives an explanation of how she performed her feats of apparently superhuman strength, stating that it was all done by "deflection of force." The Savannah "Press" objects, and declares, doubtless for the glory of the State, that Miss Hurst's "laws of leverage" and "deflection of force" are all "fol-de-rol," and insists that she had a "strange power," of whose origin and extent she herself knew and knows nothing at all.

Doctor Kurowaza gets in one on the neck

Parrying a heavy drive

The Doctor goes to his knee

Almost over

Ready for action

THE JAPANESE FENCING CLUB OF SAN FRANCISCO

Photos by Weidner

JAPANESE SWORDSMANSHIP

Fencing as Practiced by the Mikado's Subjects in This City.

My friend Kurowaza first told me about the Japanese fencing clubs, and in the same breath asked me to come to one of its meetings. The club numbers 150 regular members, and Kurowaza is the President. Unfortunately many of the fencers are out of town for the summer, but enough of them got together of a Monday morning of this week to give one a fairly good impression of the game.

The club has its headquarters in a little court just off O'Farrell street, in the Japs quarter, and when I arrived some half-dozen swordsmen were already on the spot and engaged in putting on their costumes or uniforms, one hardly knows which to call them. It is picturesque enough, this fencing accoutrement of theirs, and the color of it is stunning, dull, stone blues and sombre reds and olive greens with here and there a vivid wink of orange. The helmet is a cumbersome affair, quite unlike the wire mask of the European fencer. It is quilted over the top and sides of the head and the bars are of steel and as thick as a pencil. The breastplate is of stout papier mache, lacquered to a fine glaze, while from beneath hangs a long skirt, the last garment you would suppose a fencer would elect to wear.

The weapon is, of course, the sword, not the little wisp of steel of the foil or rapier, but a ponderous, hacking arrangement to be wielded in two hands, heavy enough, murderous enough, to cleave you a man to the chin if desired. This for the serious business of life—or death. For practice and sport a sham sword is made of withs of bamboo, bound together like a harlequin's bat, or, if you prefer it, a lictor's bundle of rods. Kurowaza was just calling time on a couple of contestants as I came up. The court was cleared, leaving them a space some twenty feet square. It was different from any style of fence I have ever seen, not in the least the kind that Professor Tronchet would ever teach or approve. The Japs did not stand in a straight line, but danced about one another, shuffling and dodging, and stamping like challenging bucks, slovenly foot work I suppose Tronchet would call it, and ever and again they would shout hoarsely through their helmets. It was spectacular, but not very scientific, magnificent, but not war. The only parries they employed were those in quarte and in sixte, and they never lunged. Sometimes even they were content to catch a blow on their arms or padded shoulders. It was the edge of the weapon that they relied upon, never the point, and any porton of the body was fair for a blow. They crouched to their work like so many cats, and their quickness of attack and recovery was feline as well in its rapidity. It was fine fighting while it lasted, for they never took or allowed a moment's rest. Up and down, back and forth, give and take, whack, clatter and clash, it ought to have been swords, but, though it was only bamboo foils, it was exciting enough to be satisfactory. Boxing with clubs might be a good definition of it, for there was the duck in it, the swing and the side step in it, and once when Nakamura brought in a tremendous staggering crash full on his adversary's front the watching Japs cheered as when the boxer lands a straight drive on the chin. The other dropped to his knee, and the second blow whined in the air over his head and swept from his helmet a little round knob of wood, whose significance I had not until then understood. But as the little wooden sphere filliped from the mask like a ball hot from the bat the cheer of the Japs rose to a great shout, and the fencers dropped their weapons and pulled the helmets from their steaming faces. This was the great point in the bout, it appeared, to strike off the crest of the foe's helmet, and Nakamura had done it as cleanly as though it had been shorn with a blade.

This fence of the Japanese is fine fighting, but you will look long before you will find much delicacy in it. It is a combination of half a dozen encounters—boxing, fencing, the single-stick, the broadsword and the bayonet exercise, but it is picturesque certainly, and if the big two-handed sword of the Ronins were substituted for the bundle of sticks, you can imagine it quite as thrilling as necessary.

" 'One band of the Greeks came inside last night,' remarked Charlie, as his large red face met my awakening eyes. 'Where?' 'Karya; bin shoot all night; bin shooting always.' I thought it was only another Krania affair—Greek reservists disguised as brigands, two days' shooting, and the matter handed over to be settled between Constantinople and Athens. However, Karya is not far—perhaps fifteen miles or so. I would go and spend the night. So I had them pack up my bed and a box of food and load it on a pack-saddle. I mounted the Beetle, as my larger and more brazen-mouthed pony is called, mounted Charlie on the Flea, which is the name of the one which trots like the gas in a siphon, and off we went to Karya.

Sir Alfred Milner, the new High Commissioner of British Africa, made a strong impression on the Boers by addressing them in their own patois. He was appointed three months ago, and then knew neither Dutch nor German, but has contrived to learn both languages since.

A wooden monument has been erected over George du Maurier's grave; over the place, that is, in Hampstead churchyard, where the casket containing his ashes has been buried.

ELMWOOD FARM'S CH. M. LUCRETIA BORGIA, 4 YEARS, BY IMP. BRUTUS-LEDETTE

Holder of the World's Record for Four Miles (Time 7:11) Made at Oakland Track May 20, 1897

Photos by Hodson

BREAKING TURF RECORDS

A California-Bred Mare Sets Three New Long-Distance Marks.

On Thursday, May 20th, a notable bit of galloping work was done at the Emeryville track. In the middle of the afternoon's racing the Elmwood Farm (William Boots & Son) started their 4-year-old mare, Lucretia Borgia, 85 pounds, Clawson in the saddle, to beat the California record for four miles, 7:20¼. The track was in fine order, but the general opinion was not in favor of a successful issue, a slight shade of odds being laid in favor of "the enemy."

As Starter Ferguson gave the word to get ready Clawson lifted the mare into a canter and, with the fall of the flag, had her going well, hard held and close to the rail. Judging pace with a nicety and keeping his mount at an even swing, her jockey put the first mile behind him in 1:50, when he proceeded to increase the speed. As the mare came into the straight for the concluding part of the second mile, she was joined by her owners' Nabapolassar—this is a real name—who laid off a couple of lengths, forcing the pace, which marked 1:45¼ for the second mile. With no change in the order of the proceedings, and still running free, she bid adieu to her first attendant when the homestretch was reached, and was favored with the company of another son of imp. Brutus, Peter II, who forced her to the end of the third mile in 1:47½. Thus far Father Time was already in the rear. Well around the top turn and the mare seems to dwell for a moment, but Clawson gives her a call and her running mate gets jealous, only to bring forth fresh effort, which, with judicious urging, for the rest of the route, brings her to the end of the final mile in 1:48¼, the holder, not merely of the California, but the world's record, for four miles, in 7:11.

Time: First mile, 1:50; second mile, 1:45¼; third mile, 1:47½; fourth mile, 1:48¼. One mile, 1:50; two miles, 3:35¼; three miles, 5:33¾; four miles, 7:11.

It was a big question to ask of a little one and that one a mare at a time of year by no means the best for testing the powers of one of her sex.

Cheers had been ringing in the air long before the feat was finally accomplished, and as the little mare pulled up they resounded in a vast roar, while the excitement of the assembled thousands was intense. As she returned to the judges' box she seemed perfectly cool and little blown.

Regarded solely as a time contest, and probably that is the only way in which it can be considered, the performance was a remarkable one. There is not the least doubt that thousands more people would have been present to witness the feat had the appointment been more fully advertised and its possibilities better appreciated. Twenty-one years ago the renowned Ten Broeck, then 4 years old, carrying 104 pounds, undertook a similar task at Louisville, Ky., and the time he made, 7:15¾, has since stood as the record.

It will be remembered that on May 1st Lucretia Borgia, carrying 92 pounds, was a competitor in a four-mile race for the Ingleside Stakes, won by Little Bob in 7:24½, and on that occasion was handicapped by having a jockey on her back, who had barely strength enough to keep his seat to the end of so long a journey, much less hold her together, and yet she finished within some three lengths of the winner. In the interval she had faced the starter twice in races of one mile and one and one-eighth miles respectively, and as she pulled up after the recent time test without showing the least sign of distress the little Brutus mare is evidently a really sterling piece of goods. Of this she gave evidence early in her career on the turf by winning a race at a mile, as a 2-year-old, and that she is a thorough stayer there can be no manner of doubt. The weak point in her record performance, of course, is that the weight carried was but a feather, but anything else would have been out of the question for a little animal of her calibre.

Lucretia Borgia is in color a bright chestnut, standing 14.3½, of true proportions and nice quality, muscular and free from any appearance of weediness, with feet and legs of the best, ample bone for her size, sinews and tendons well developed. When extended her action is level and smooth, fully explaining her ability to sustain it over a great stretch of ground. She is as sound and free from blemish as on the day she was foaled, temperate and sensible, with a very fair share of true thoroughbred beauty.

The mare was bred by Messrs. Boots & Son at Elmwood Farm, Milpitas, Cal., and was sired by imp. Brutus, he by Macgregor out of imp. Teardrop, dam Ledette by Nathan Coombs out of Gipsy by imp. Hercules out of Miami by Belmont, the last-named mare being also the dam of Nathan Coombs, her grandsire and granddam on the dam's side being thus out of the same mare. Both the first and the second dam were bred by her owners.

Analysing the time made and comparing it with that of her previous four miles run in the Ingleside Stakes, it appears that the first mile at Emeryville was done in identically the same time as the last mile at Emeryville, the third mile at Ingleside in the same time as the second mile at Emeryville, the first half of the journey at Ingleside corresponding to a fraction therefore with the last half at Emeryville, while the last three miles on the latter track were covered in 5:20½, the first three in 5:22¾, as against the race record, 5:24, of Drake Carter, 115 pounds, at Sheepshead Bay, in 1884. Lucretia Borgia's performance further cut records by making her time for the first two and three-fourth miles 4:55¾, as against Hubbard, 107 pounds, at Saratoga, in 1873, 4:58¾. She, therefore, now holds three fastest American running records at the longest distances on the flat as against time.

Before closing these notes it is but just to draw attention to the good work of little Clawson, to whose skill no little of the credit is due. As the mare went to the post I asked Mr. Charles Boots what rate of speed he was looking for in the first mile, and he told me that his instructions to the boy were to make it in about 1:50, and quicken a bit thereafter. His orders were obeyed to the letter, and the good judgment displayed by the owner thus bore fruit that surpassed his most sanguine expectations.

Since the year that Peter the Great made his mark Brutus stock has been held in high esteem, and this fresh feather in the bonnet of Macgregor's son, it is safe to say, will prove an enduring token of his successful career at the stud in California. BENEDICT.

The doubts expressed by Sir Clements Martin, President of the Royal Geological Society, in a paper recently read before that body as to Sebastian Cabot's claim upon the discovery of North America do not seem to have very good foundation. Sir Clements lends confusion to his statements by ascribing the credit at one time to the English captains who accompanied John Cabot in the voyage of 1498, and at another time allowing it to John Cabot himself. He also puts himself at variance with Mr. Henry Harrisse, who likewise discredits Sebastian's claim. Harrisse rejects his theory that Cabot's landfall was in Labrador. Of the two arguments advanced against Sebastian Cabot, Mr. Harrisse's is by far the more logical and convincing, but not quite logical and convincing enough to deprive the plucky Genoese of the discovery accredited to him by accepted history.

The Princess of Wales sympathizes deeply with her brother, King George; but she has given offense to Lord Salisbury by subscribing to the London "Chronicle" fund for the relief of the Greek sick and wounded. The Prince does not share this feeling, and in the royal household there has been a fine development of bitterness.

According to Edhem Pasha's report, the Greek army consists, apart from the mountaineers, of a mere conglomeration of ploughboys, shopboys, brigands and pickpockets—of everything, in short, save soldiers.

A SCENE AT THE EXERCISES AT SAN RAFAEL COLLEGE.

THE FEMININE ORCHESTRA OF THE COLLEGE

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

You know, Diary dear, with what degree of pleasure I was contemplating the Dog Show. Well, my anticipations were more than realized, but the human exhibition proved of even more interest than the canine. Dogs are dear things, though. I just love them. For one thing they so nearly resemble men. The St. Bernard dogs look exactly like judges; their air is so medieval, their expression of calm sagacity reminds one irresistibly of a judge in wig and cloak presiding over the Supreme Court. To me the great Dane is the autocrat as well as the aristocrat of the canine kingdom. He is such a noble looking fellow. The bulldogs, mastiffs, terrier and pug belong to the prize fighting element. The grey hound, in fact all the hounds, suggest by their air of keenness, the detective—the real sleuth. The collies are the clerical dogs, for do not they take care of the sheep and see that none wander from the fold. I wonder are they as exacting as some of our pastors? Some of the dogs were especially interesting, and I noted that those marked dangerous were among the most gentle and affectionate. I like the daschunds; they suggest drawings by Aubrey Beardsley, and seem to revel in their lack of proportion. I was interested in the owners of the dogs and the pride they took in their beasts. They hung around their lairs and pampered them in every way. Every one was there. Arthur said that some of the fellows went both in the afternoon and evening.

The preparations for Ethel Cohen's wedding go on apace, and our interest gains hourly. It is to be by far the smartest wedding of this year. Mr. Jouillin is decorating the Unitarian Church, and expects to make it a perfect dream of beauty, to delight the eyes and comfort the souls of the multitudinous admirers of Miss Cohen. It is to be a white wedding—infantry colors, you know. The bridesmaids are to be all in pure white organdie gowns ruffled to the waist, and holy veils, in the English fashion. Ethel's dress is to be very plain—white satin and orange blossoms, with puffs of tulle. She was to have been resplendent in some famous old lace of her mother's, but alas, the flames, which are no respecters of heirlooms, demolished it. Poor Ethel, she lost ever so much in that wretched fire. The music is to be quite a feature. It is taken from "Runnymede," by Mr. H. J. Stewart, and Mr. Harrison has written suitable words for Miss Cohen? Is not that lovely? Fancy having one's anthem composed especially for you—just like a real princess—and I am sure Mr. Harrison's verses will be prettier than Alfred Austin's.

Ethel and Mr. Bent have been furnishing their wee cottage at the Presidio in the daintiest fashion: it is to be the cosiest of nests, and suggests a doll's villa, in which one might keep house on a miniature scale. The reception at Mrs. Gibbons is to be a regular crush, I am told, and we are to be in evidence, except Arthur, who has gone off on a fishing expedition with some of the boys.

Our summer plans are still deliciously uncertain. Papa is most anxious to go to San Mateo, which is booming. Colonel Fred Crocker's family is installed in the Willie Howard house. Mr. Howard has taken the Moses Hopkins' place, near Redwood City. Miss Howard is growing such a stylish, pretty girl, and promises to be one of the belles, Papa says. Charley Green of the railroad has bought about three acres at Highland Park, San Mateo, and is going to build there. I think San Mateo is going to be the suburb par excellence of San Francisco. You see all the smart set, especially the railroad contingent, are buying down there, and it is bound to become the Newport of California. At Burlingame there are still two houses to let. You see they are unfurnished, and the owners would prefer to sell them. The Mayo-Newhalls, George Newhall and the Joe Tobins have now three of the houses. Walter Hobart's latest acquisition to his place is an immense swimmng tank. Is not that delightful? Although for my own part the sea bathing at San Mateo is so excellent I hardly see the necessity of a fresh water tank. Of the other San Mateo contingent the Schwerins have the same cottage as they had last year. Mr. C. B. Stone has been fortunate enough to lease the Lee villa, and Mr. A. S. Baldwin the Reed place.

Leila went over to Sausalito to spend a week with Mr. and Mrs. Charley Macintosh in their cosy cottage. She says there is quite a goodly crowd over there this season, and there is promise of much gaiety. Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Robinson have taken one of the Thomas cottages. Captain and Mrs. Lyman and Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Carroll have cottages also. The hotel there has been fixed up and papered throughout by Mr. Chamberlain, who is now the manager. He used to have the Beresford, you know, and they say he is a fine caterer. The one thing needful, I think—don't you? There are any number of men in Sausalito. Eugene Garber, Alec Hamilton and Carey Friedlander have the Wakefield Baker cottage. There are loads of interesting Englishmen in the place. Mr. and Mrs. Will Barnes are also there. Horace Platt and his sister,Mrs. Kent, formerly Nina Platt (and once a belle here) have a cottage, and anticipate making things lively. Leila says she had rather a quiet week of it, save on Saturday, when Mrs. Wakefield Baker gave a launch party to El Campo. They had a merry time, only poor Gus Costigan, one of the most popular of the men, met with a painful accident. He was dancing on the deck, when his foot slipped and he fell and broke his ankle. Was not that a horrid shame?

Stella Locan's engagement to Fritz Denicke is announced, and the marriage will be celebrated in the fall, I believe. Stella is a stunning-looking girl—might pose for a Statue of Liberty; is tall, finely made, and has a decided air of distinction. Fritz is a dear, jolly boy, and is quite clever. They are both young and are ideal lovers—the sort you read of but rarely see. You know they have grown up together. His sister was Stella's greatest friend, and when boy and girl they were sweethearts. Is not that charming? Now I positively detest the boys I knew before I came out (when I still wore short frocks). They always seem to patronize me or else resent my slightly superior airs. And what fearful teazes they are—whew!'

On Tuesday evening I went to the Irish concert given by Denis O'Sullivan and Daniel O'Connell. It was a great success. I have never heard Mr. O'Sullivan sing better; his heart seemed in those sweet Irish ballads. The audience was enthusiastic to a degree, and he received some exquisite bouquets, as well as a number of encores. Mr. O'Connell recited several Irish poems, in which poor, dear England received scant mercy. I supnose, though "right is might," the sympathy is always with the losing side. And now, for another week, farewell to you. I shall have weddings without number in June. Miss Cohen's, Miss Burton's and Miss Mabel Estee's—and I do love weddings, even if the dissimilarity merely exists in the couples. And so, with love, from your fond

MISS CRICKET.

***

Fabiola Day is always anticipated with much pleasure among the Oakland people, as the managers of the association usually arrange some interesting fete. Last year, the floral tournament was an immense success, but this season the ladies decided to get up some new form of entertainment. They had thought it over, and were debating upon various devices, when Mr. Tom Williams offered them the race track, with all its appointments and officials, for the day. The management were more than pleased, and accepted Mr. Williams' offer with alacrity. A procession was formed on Harrison street, and innumerable gaily equipped vehicles moved out to the track. Some of the carriages were very smart. Churchill Taylor drove a gaily decorated cart, in which were the Misses Gage, Miss Evans, Mrs. Allender and Miss Morey. Three of the girls wore pale pink frocks, while the others wore blue. Each carried a white parasol trimmed with ribbons. Miss Grace Gorrill had a party of young people in her English cart. All wore white pique suits with red shirt waists and sailor hats. Their parasols were in white silk with red ribbons. Misses Jean and Florence Hush and Miss Harriet Kittridge were among them. Perhaps the most striking-looking rig was the English T cart of the Misses Alice and Lucy Moffitt. It was decorated in Fabiola colors, and the girls wore light frocks. Miss Alice Moffitt wore pale blue with white leghorn hat trimmed with drooping ostrich feathers. Miss Lucy Moffitt wore a combination in lavender shades, and Mrs. Ned Howard was ogwned in pink with picture hat covered in pink roses. Mrs. Remi Chabot took a bus load of young people in a carryall trimmed with scarlet and orange. Miss Kate Chabot, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Knight and the Remillards were among her guests. There were multitudinous carriages whose sole decoration was in the bright costumes of the occupants. Then many did not join in the procession, but drove out to the track. Among them Mr. and Mrs. Grayson, Mr. Ed Steele, with Misses Bertha and Elsie Steele; Mr. Havens with Misses Florence and Grace Walker. The grand stand looked very brilliant with tier upon tier of red, purple, orange and green hats covered in flowers resplendent as the rainbow. Nearly all the ladies wore white duck or grass linen frocks. The races were very exciting, the enthusiasm tremendous, so that the ladies of the Fabiola are again congratulating themselves on the success of their day.

A big tea was given on Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. George McNear, served from four to seven o'clock. Mrs. McNear was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Seward McNear, Mrs. Bowles and Mrs. George McNear Jr. The house was decorated with roses and carnations. About three hundred people called during the afternoon. Exceedingly pretty was the young married people's dinner given by Mrs. Oscar Fitzalan Long at Highlands in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Worden. The table was massed with La France and Jacqueminot roses. Among those invited were Mr. and Mrs. Magee, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. George McNear Jr., etc.

An engagement dinner was given by Mrs. Lucy Hayes in honor of Mr. Samuel Shortridge and Miss Laura Gashwiler on Friday evening. Miss Gashwiler looked exceedingly handsome in a light silk gown. A smart little luncheon was given by the Misses Gage in honor of Miss Katherine Chabot last week. Afterwards, the young people played "Pig." Miss Chabot carrying off the first prize. Among those invited were Misses Lohse, Miss Henry, Miss Archibald, etc. A jolly card party was given by Miss Katherine Harrub on Saturday afternoon to a number of the Deux Temps set. The prizes were very pretty, and during the afternoon musical selections were rendered by the different girls. A yachting party was given to twenty young people by Mrs. T. C. Coogan on Saturday. They sailed round the bay and had luncheon on board.

The marriage is announced of Mrs. Olive Reed and Mr. Seth Cushman. The ceremony, which is to be a simple one, is to take place on June 16th. Mr. and Mrs. Cushman are to live in San Francisco.

The innumerable friends of Dr. and Mrs. E. S. Breyfogle will be glad to learn that they have returned to San Francisco and are again at their old home in the Palace Hotel. Dr. Breyfogle has been doing the hospitals of the continent, and has appropriately mingled pleasure with business.

A pretty wedding occurred at the California Hotel last week, when Miss Florence Olcovich became Mrs. Henry Goldstone. Miss Olcovich's gown was white satin covered with tulle, and trimmed with point applique lace and satin ribbons. The veil was attached to the hair by the groom's gift— a diamond sunburst; the bouquet was of bride's roses and orange blossoms, arranged in a shower. The ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Jacob Nieto, was followed by the wedding breakfast, and the rest of the evening passed in dancing.

The anticipated gaiety at San Mateo commences to be realized. The Hotel Mateo has sent out invitations for a dance on Saturday evening (the 29th), and tennis tournament on Monday next. The court is in first-class condition, and I believe the Whitney Brothers, who are the "Double" champions, are to meet a team of clever players from Los Angeles, who will venture to try conclusions with them. Quite a number of people are quartered in the Hotel, and there are many families from San Francisco established in the surrounding cottages, so there can hardly fail to be a large gathering for the ball. For this season the Mateo has been put into first-rate condition; it has been redecorated, the furniture replenished and otherwise renewed; a clever chef has been put in charge of the cuisine, and everything done to promote the comfort of the guests. Manager Shepard, who is now in charge of the institution, is a hotel man of experience, who intends ministering in every way to the comfort and pleasure of his guests. The dance to-night is the forerunner of many other pleasant gatherings during the season.

That some women are well dressed at a tenth of the cost that enables many an heiress to look dowdy is recognized. It is accomplished by watching opportunities. There is just now a chance to purchase smart hats at greatly reduced prices at E. E. Caswell's, 28 Post street. The swellest hats in town are being sold there at from five to ten dollars—about half the average price.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
ures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

SAN RAFAEL COLLEGE

Graduates Distinguish Themselves in Music and Elocution.

This has been commencement week at the Dominican college, San Rafael. Exercises in the different departments have been on since Monday, and in them all much excellence has been displayed, both in the aptitude of the pupils and in the training ability of the instructors. The elocutionary entertainment of Wednesday deserves mention in particular. This exhibition was given most successfully, the young ladies displaying unusual attainments in declamation, in grace of movement and in beauty of pose.

The commencement occurred yesterday afternoon, and attracted a large number of patrons and friends of the college. The exercises went off unusually well, with much smoothness. The music, vocal and instrumental, was of merit out of the ordinary, the vocal bolero of Miss Agnes Branks deserving special attention. The college orchestra, containing about twenty members and made up entirely of students, succeeded in making a sort of mild sensation. With the exception of organ and piano it consists exclusively of stringed instruments, mandolins, bandurrias, guitars, violin and harp. The instrumentation for the orchestra was arranged by Sister Irene, and to her the general excellence of the music may be attributed.

The following is the list of honors for 1897: Medals and diplomas, awarded to Misses Guenllian Blethan, Grace Burke, Agnes Branks; certificates, awarded to Misses Katherine O'Dea, Nellie Butler, Blanche Cronin, Cora Brill, Ethel Gunn; medal for good conduct, awarded to Miss Lola Duran; distinguished, Misses Cora Brill, Hazel Bonnifield, Grace Burke, Ethel Fannof; medal for application, Miss K. O'Dea; second medal, to Miss Amy O'Connor; distinguished, Miss Ella Bethune. Medal for mathematics, Miss Jessie Henderson; distinguished, Misses Nellie Butler, A. O'Connor. Medal for improvement in music, Agnes Maloney. Medal for art embroidery, Miss Marie Sosa; distinguished, Miss Ella Bethune. Painting, Miss Nela Souza.

The college has the benefit of a most fortunate location, as well as of a thoroughly competent faculty. It is situated in the most beautiful part of San Rafael, conceded to be one of the most delightful places in the State. The gardens and surroundings are all that nature and art can devise, and while it is safely "far from the madding crowd," it has the advantage of easy access to San Francisco, being connected by hourly trains.

The Chinese drama, "The First Born," will commence its fourth week at the Alcazar on Monday evening. The success of this little drama has been remarkable. In addition to "The First Born," H. Grattan Donnelly's play, "An America Girl," will be given, with the entire Alcazar company, including George Osbourne and Adele Belgarde, both of whom were in the original production.

Mme A Ruppert begs to announce to the ladies of San Francisco that she has recently removed to rooms 15-16, 131 Post street, where she hopes to receive the same patronage as formerly.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

DR. G. A. DANZIGER, Dentist, 22 Geary st.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

FRAWLEY'S NEW BEAUTY

An Impression of the Opinions of Miss Gladys Wallis.

Now that I sit down before this copy paper, with pencil and wits sharpened to the task, and open the tap of whatever brain cell stores up the recollection of things, I find that I can remember in detail but little of my interview—call it rather talk—with Miss Gladys Wallis of the Frawley company.

I discover that I have carried away an impression rather than a record. I can remember perfectly well how Gladys Wallis looked—it would be hard to forget that—and how very delightful was her manner, but I'm very much afraid I did not ask her a sufficient number of leading questions. For instance, I did not ask her if she rode a wheel. I know nothing of her views on woman's rights. I have come away without obtaining her ideas as to the temper of San Francisco audiences, and I shall drag out the rest of my existence in crass ignorance of her liking for pets.

But as to impressions. I had never seen Miss Wallis, but the moment she came into the hotel parlor I knew beyond any question that she was the young lady I had come to see. Whether "Gladys" be a stage name or not, it fits her as a glove. Somehow, if I saw her in a crowd I think I would guess her name.

She is one of the smallest little bodies imaginable, with very tiny hands and feet, and a very small smile, and she wore—Just here the film is blurred again; I recall something dark blue and something brown—but whether the skirt was blue and waist was brown or whether the waist was brown and the skirt blue I cannot precisely say. Then there was a jewel cluster somewhere, a wonderful affair, but I don't know if it was at her throat or on her finger.

I think I began by apologizing at first for existence generally and afterward, more particularly for existence as an interviewer. (Fancy how an interviewer on a daily would snort at this.) Then we sat down and—don't speak it above a whisper—Gladys Wallis' feet did not reach the floor.

Said I: "I haven't the faintest notion what to talk to you about."

"Nor I the faintest notion what to say," said Gladys Wallis.

"And to be personal on fifty seconds' acquaintance is unwarrantable," I observed.

"But shouldn't you be personal, in order to—to—"

"To earn my salary?"

"To make a good interview, rather."

"One should," said I. "But suppose we shun the personal note—for once."

"But you might write things that I never said."

"I would write nothing you wouldn't like."

"How do you know the things I like?"

"I know the things you don't like."

"For instance?" Miss Wallis picked at a jewel cluster on her finger. (It was on her finger, after all.) "For instance?" she said again.

"Interviewers," said I, still very humbly.

"I will tell you one thing I don't like," she said decisively. I fumbled for my note book.

"What's that?"

"I don't like a man to be meek." I put it back again.

"I'll be a roaring lion if you would like it any better."

"But don't be meek. You'll never be a good interviewer as long as you're meek."

"But I don't want to be a good interviewer," said I.

"What then?"

"A very poor one."

"You're not even that."

I bowed. "You are very kind."

"But your readers won't know a thing about me."

"Yes, they will."

"They won't know facts."

"They will have something better. They will receive an impression; the same that I have received, I hope."

"How do you expect to manage that, if you don't put down exactly what I say? You haven't used your note book once."

"I won't put down 'exactly what you say.'"

"Well then?"

"I'll try and remember as much of your conversation as I can, and what I can't remember I'll imitate. You give the impression at once of being very bright, very clever and very quick at repartee. I shall try and give the subscribers the same impression, even if I cannot repeat your precise words."

"Do you mean to say that you are making a character study of me?"

"Heaven forbid."

"At any rate, say that I am very ambitious and that once I starred."

"'Miss Wallis,' I quoted, 'informed our representative that she was bent upon attaining the highest round upon the ladder of fame. It will be remembered that Miss Wallis has already shone in the theatrical horizon as a bright particular star in a galaxy of unprecedented brilliancy.' How will that do?"

"It won't do at all. I thought you said this was not to be an interview."

"So I did. I forgot. I will just say that once you starred."

"And that I am very ambitious."

"And that you are very ambitious. I say, a thought occurs to me. Can't you give our paper your ideas upon interviewers?"

MISS GLADYS WALLIS
ACCORDING TO FALK

Gladys Wallis reflected a moment.

"I could, but I won't."

"Why not?"

"Because you wouldn't put it in, if I did."

"There's a glimmer of truth in that," said I. "You know the definition of a good interviewer."

"What's that?"

"The one that interviews the least. Do you think I have succeeded in answering the description?"

"I'll wait till I see it in print," said Gladys Wallis.

"I devoutly hope you'll like it," said I.

And I wonder if she will.

FRANK NORRIS.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

THE RACES FOR CHARITY

In the way of sport the two short supplementary meetings of last week do not call for comment. The fields of horses were usually large, especially at Emeryville, but the quality poor, and the riding left much to be desired.

The best race, the Fabiola Purse, $400, 1¼ miles, on the last day, which was won by Wheel of fortune, 106 lbs., in California record time, 2:06¾, would certainly have been taken by The Roman, 96 lbs., who was beaten a head on the post, if the rider of the latter had kept his mount straight, while the third horse, Taranto, 81 lbs., who had made fast running for the first mile, suffered also for want of a jockey that could gather him up in the run in.

Nearly all the leading stables have now moved on in search of fresh game, and nothing in the way of running races worthy of notice will be seen in California until the State Fair next September.

The following are the results of the extra two days' racing at each track for the benefit of the various institutions:

Per Pacific Coast Jockey Club—

INGLESIDE TRACK.

| | |
|---|---|
| Boulevard Fund | $2,256 |
| Veterinary College | 1,034 |
| Woman's Exchange | 1,410 |
| | $4,700 |

Per California Jockey Club—

OAKLAND TRACK.

| | |
|---|---|
| Children's Hospital, San Francisco | $2,360 |
| Fabiola Hospital, Oakland | 4,100 |
| | $6,460 |

Making a grand total of $11,160 actually handed over to the beneficiaries.

The ladies of Oakland worked hard to make the Fabiola day a success, and their efforts were well rewarded.

At the Ingleside track next Monday afternoon, the final benefit for the Boulevard Fund will take place, and it is expected the affair will be well patronized. The Jockey Club has put the track at the disposal of the Boulevard Committee, and a programme of both trotting and running races has been arranged. Owing to the length of the card the meeting will begin an hour earlier than usual.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure rtock, and are of high value from an ocujistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

MME. A. RUPPERT

ORIGINATOR OF THE

World-Renowned FACE BLEACH

FACE BLEACH has stood the test of 20 years, and is to-day acknowledged to be the best remedy known for BLACKHEADS, OILY SKIN, PIMPLES, FRECKLES, AND ALL FACIAL BLEMISHES.

SAMPLE BOTTLE sent to any address, in plain wrapper, accompanied by my book,

"HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL"

on receipt of twenty-five cents.

MME. A. RUPPERT,
Rooms 15-16, 131 Post Street, San Francisco.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE

No Sex Problems in James Lane Allen's New Novel.

Will "The Choir Invisible" (The Macmillan Company) repeat the success of "A Summer in Arcady"? The latter became a subject of controversy in literary and religious circles because of certain perilous situations in which hero and heroine were involved—situations in which natural forces were allowed legitimate expression. In "The Choir Invisible" there are no danger places; the problem of sex and its various solutions are not intruded. The dramatis personae move on an exalted plane; they are possessed of the primitive virtues. John Gray, the hero, discovers that he loves Mrs. Falconer, but his tremendous conscience and the exquisite purity of her character prevent the declaration of his infatuation. His love for Amy, her niece—a previous fascination—had no intermixture of mere passion. It was a spiritual affection directed at qualities with which Gray's imagination had endowed the girl, who was veritably a cold-blooded little flirt. Indeed, it was no fault of his, but rather the intervention of fate which saved him from this calculating beauty.

This is a romance pure and simple that James Lane Allen has given us—the scene of it Lexington, Ky., after the War of Independence. For a background the forest primeval. There is an historical setting, which serves to define the conditions of the period—the upgrowth of the frontier settlement, the politics of the region. A figure and a factor in the events of that moment is the hero, John Gray, but the plot concerns itself most with his relations to the Falconers, whose clearing in the midst of the woods is the place of his love making.

After all, it is but tapestry, this book, the figures embroidered on a gorgeous background of forest and foliage and sunset—chivalrous and distant figures woven in with the most exquisite effects of color and light. Why not tapestry for a change? Have we not Zola and Howells and George Moore giving us the prosaic details of mere life? Here is an enchanting composition blent of the green and the gold of the woods, of sorrow and hope, of temptation nobly withstood and misfortunes bravely sustained, of renunciation and disappointment, which are an incitement to high living rather than a source of despair.

Certainly "The Choir Invisible" contains passages of admirable prose. One of the most exciting scenes is the fight in the little schoolhouse between the schoolmaster, John Gray, and the cougar. He has just suffered a crushing disappointment in realizing the frivolity of Amy, and after a sleepless night, goes in the early morning to the scene of his duties:

At the first glimpse he thought it a dog—long, lean, skulking, prowling, tawny—on the scent of his tracks. Then the mist passed over it. When he beheld it again it had approached nearer and was creeping rapidly toward the door. His listless eyes grew fascinated by its motions—its litheness, suppleness, grace, stealth, exquisite caution. Never before had he seen a dog with the step of a cat.

It reached the hickory block, which formed the doorstep; it paused there an instant, with its fore quarters in the doorway, one fore foot raised, the end of its long tail waving; and then it stole just over the threshold and crouched, its head pressed down until its long, whitish throat lay on the floor; its short, jagged ears set forward stiffly like the broken points of a javelin; its dilated eye blazing with steady green fire—as still as death. And then with his blood become as ice in his veins from horror and all the strength gone out of him in a death-like faintness, the schoolmaster realized that he was face to face unarmed with a cougar, gaunt with famine and come for its kill.

His eyes had never known what it was to be subdued; he had never taken them from the cougar; he rose slowly from his chair, realizing that his chances would be better if he were in the middle of the room. He stepped round in front of his table and walked two paces straight forward and then paused, his face as white, as terrible, as death. At the instant of his moving he could see the tense drawing in of all the muscles of the cougar and the ripple of its skin, as its whole body quivered with excitement and desire; and he knew that as soon as he stopped it would make its spring.

With a growl that announces that all hiding and stealth are over, the leap came. He had thrown his body slightly forward to meet it with the last thought that whatever happened he must guard his throat. It was at this that the cougar aimed, leaping almost perpendicularly, its widespread fore feet reaching at his legs. The under part of its body being thus exposed, he dealt it a blow with all his strength—full in the belly with his foot, and hurled it backward. For a second it crouched again, measuring him anew, then sprang again. Again he struck, but this time the fore feet caught his arm as they passed backward; the sharp, retractile nails tore their way across the back and palm of his hand like dull knives and the blood gushed. Instantly the cougar leaped upon the long, wooden desk that ran along one side of the room, and from that advantage, sprang again; but he bent his body low so that it passed clean over him. Instantly it was upon his desk at his back; and before he could more than recover his balance and turn, it sprang for the fourth time. He threw out his arm to save his throat, but the cougar had reached his left shoulder, struck its claws deep into his heavy coat; and with a deafening roar sounding close in his ears, had buried its fangs near the base of his neck, until he heard them click as they met through his flesh.

He staggered, but the desk behind caught him. Straightening himself up, and grappling the panther with all his strength as he would a man, he turned with it and bent it over the sharp edge of the ponderous desk, lower, lower, trying to break its back. One of the fore feet was beginning to tear through his clothing, and straightening himself up again, he reached down and caught this foot and tried to bend it, break it. He threw himself with all his force upon the floor, falling with the cougar under him, trying to crush it. He staggered to his feet again, but stepped on his own blood and fell. And then, feeling his blood trickling down his breast and his strength going, with one last effort he put up his hands and seizing the throat, fastened his fingers like iron rivets around the windpipe. And then—with the long, loud, hoarse, despairing roar with which a man, his mouth half full of water, sinks far out in the ocean—he fell again.

Amy Falconer, who John Gray courts, is not really the woman whom in his heart he really loves. This is Mrs. Falconer, an aristocratic Virginia woman impoverished by the war, who is married to Major Falconer. To her John comes for the hand of her niece, and thus she defines the characters of women who wed:

"You might remember this: some women in marrying demand all and give all: with good men they are the happy; with base men they are the broken-hearted. Some demand everything and give little: with weak men they are tyrants; with strong men they are the divorced. Some demand little and give all: with congenial souls they are already in heaven; with uncongenial they are soon in their graves. Some give little and demand little: they are the heartless, and they bring neither the joy of life nor the peace of death."

"And which of these is Amy?" he said, after a minute of reflection. "And which of the men am I?"

"Don't ask her to marry you until you find out both," she answered.

A scene that resides in the memory like the image of a fine painting is the marriage of Amy and Joseph. Gray waits for them in the depths of the wood, and watches the procession through the tree trunks. It is an exquisite description:

It was a day when the beauty of the earth makes itself felt like ravishing music that has no sound. The air, warm and full of summer fragrance, was of that ethereal untinged clearness which spreads over all things the softness of velvet. The far-vaulted heavens, so bountiful of light, were an illimitable weightless curtain of pale-blue velvet; the grass, the stems of bending wild flowers, the drooping sprays of woodland foliage, were so many forms of emerald velvet; the gnarled trunks of the trees were gray and brown velvet; the wings and breasts of the birds, flitting hither and thither, were of gold and scarlet velvet; the butterflies were stemless, floating velvet blossoms.

"Farewell, Kentucky! farewe...' he said, looking about him at it all.

Two hours passed. The shadows were lengthening rapidly. Over the forest, like the sigh of a spirit, swept from out the west the first intimation of waning light, of the mysteries of coming darkness. At last there reached his ear from far down the woodland path the sounds of voices and laughter—again and again—louder and louder—and then through the low thick boughs he caught glimpses of them coming. Now beneath the darker arches of the trees, now across pale-green spaces shot by slanting sunbeams. Once there was a halt and a merry outcry. Long grapevines from opposite sides of the road had been tied across it, and this barrier had to be cut through. Then on they came again; at the head of the procession, astride an old horse that in his better days had belonged to a mounted rifleman, rode the parson. He was several yards ahead of the others and quite forgetful of them. The end of his flute stuck neglectedly out of his waistcoat pocket; his bridle reins lay slack on the neck of the drowsy beast; his hands were piled on the pommel of the saddle as over his familiar pulpit; his dreamy moss-agate eyes were on the tree tops far ahead.

They were riding side by side, the young husband and wife. He keeping one hand on the pommel of her saddle, thus holding them together; while with the other he used his hat to fan now his face, now hers, though his was the one that needed it, she being cool and quietly radiant with the thoughts of her triumph that day—the triumph of her wedding, of her own beauty. Furthermore, she was looking ahead to the house-warming that night when she would be able to triumph again and also to count her presents.

(For sale by A. M. Robertson.)

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

DR. H. G. YOUNG — Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

THE GREAT STONE OF SARDIS

A NEW NOVEL

By FRANK R. STOCKTON

A humorous romance of twentieth-century inventions

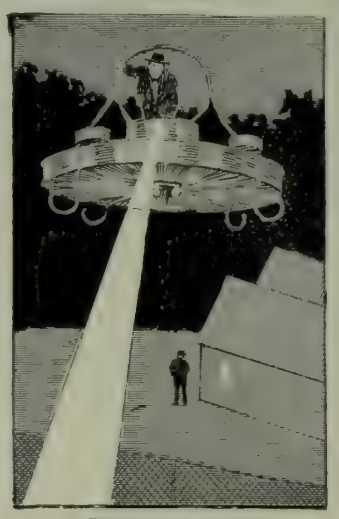
A salient feature of this story is a submarine expedition to the North Pole.



A BURGLAR AT SARDIS

The illustrations, by Peter Newell, are in rare sympathy with the author.

HARPER'S FOR JUNE

QUEEN LILY SOAP

Will not shrink Woolens, Flannels, or the finest of Fabrics. The best and most economical soap made. Washes Without Rubbing . . .

NOTICE.—On receipt of twenty-five Queen Lily Soap wrappers, we will mail to any address a handsome picture, 15x20, free from all advertising matter.

NEW ENGLAND SOAP CO.

307 Sacramento St., S. F.

During the . . . Summer Months

S. & G. GUMP

113 Geary Street

WILL SELL

Paintings and Pictures of all kinds
Bronze and Marble Statuary
Vases, Ornaments, Lamps,
French Furniture, Mirrors,
Brass Tables
Crockery and Glassware

At Greatly Reduced Prices

TO MAKE ROOM FOR FALL IMPORTATIONS

An opportunity for a safe investment is not always at hand. I have an exceedingly choice piece of property in Santa Barbara for sale at one hundred thousand dollars. It will pay interest on much more than its selling-price, and must presently increase in value nearly two-fold. You are not familiar with the opportunities here. Perhaps I can advise you.

LOUIS G. DREYFUS
SANTA BARBARA

Normann's Cafe

UNDER THE BALDWIN

is the best

The Lion Fire Insurance Co. Limited of London. Total Cash Assets in United States, $885,797.09

The Imperial Insurance Co. Limited of London. Established on Pacific Coast in 1852

WM. J. LANDERS, Resident Manager

PACIFIC COAST BRANCH

205-207 Sansome Street, San Francisco, Cal.

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of

Artificial Stone in all its branches

Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty

Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

SOHMER PIANOS ARE THE BEST!

BYRON MAUZY 308 Post St.

To the Pure all things are

PURE

BUT

Schlitz Beer

IS THE

PUREST OF ALL

Therefore drink SCHLITZ and keep in good health

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood & Sherwood

SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

Sale of Books

WM. DOXEY is now selling Standard Works and fine Library Editions at greatly reduced prices. . . . . .

Doxey's 631 Market Street San Francisco

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S
Original Budweiser Beer
THE FINEST BEER IN AMERICA
THE E. G. LYONS CO., Agents
508-12 Jackson Street.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

La Grande Laundry Telephone Bush 21

23 POWELL STREET

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
. . ALSO . .
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 12c inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Retiring from Business!

$75,000 STOCK OF JAPANESE GOODS

Must be sold at Auction at 116 Sutter Street without limit or reserve, commencing Monday, April 26th, and continuing daily at 11 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. T. A. McDONALD, Auctioneer.

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

A. D. Cheshire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres.
W. O. Macdougall, Secretary

California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971. S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary
Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

HER ANSWER

BY TOM HALL

Lieutenant Jack Osborne, of Uncle Sam's cavalry, was ushered into the presence of Miss Violet Buchanan by a butler who was, too evidently, smiling. The whole world knew that Jack loved her, and every one knew, when he went on leave after two years of hard service on the plains, that he would go straight to New York and propose to her. That was the plan he had made when he graduated at West Point, and during the last waltz at the graduation hop he had frankly told her of it.

Society was in considerably more doubt as to her attitude in the matter. That she liked Jack immensely there could be no possible doubt. Who did not? He was handsome, smart, gallant and manly. and had a small income besides his pay. But she was a girl who was really rich, and, being beautiful, amiable and accomplished, there was hardly any limit to her possibilities in marriage. Indeed, it would seem like throwing her away to wed her to a mere second lieutenant of cavalry in an army that was without even the remote prospect of a war. On the other hand, however, Violet was known to have character enough to marry whom she wished. Nor would she be guided by caprice. Her acceptance of a man might be regarded as the greatest compliment that could be paid him.

No one understood this feature of the situation better than Jack Osborne did. As he would have said himself, "She would solve his personal equation, and if she were satisfied with the result she would accept him, otherwise not." And this was an encouraging view to take, for it showed him there was at least a possible chance for him—perhaps a good one. There was only one thing that worried him, and that was a matter he could have lied out of, or at least concealed. But deception was neither to Jack's liking nor to his nature. He wanted to be on absolutely fair and square terms with his wife that was to be, and he did not want a secret on either side. So he resolved to confess to this one little indiscretion.

"Miss Buchanan," he began, after the usual interchange of society greetings, "I have not come here to make a campaign of strategy. A cavalry charge is much more to my liking—and so here goes. I love you. Will you mary me? But don't answer, please, yet. I want to tell you of just one thing before you make up your mind. It is not in the line of the usual confessions of a man of the world, for I have never been very much a man of that kind. It's just a silly scrape I got into, thoughtlessly, and you will have to help me out, if by any good fortune your answer should happen to be yes."

"Well," said Miss Buchanan, lifting her dark arched eyebrows inquiringly.

"It is this," continued Lieutenant Osobrne. "I am not at all a Don Juan and I don't believe I've ever been temptel to kiss many girls. But I was sitting in my bachelor quarters one day last summer reading 'She Stoops to Conquer.' While I was meditating on the idocy of a fellow who could be gallant enough to kiss a serving maid, but who was a bashful booby among the ladies of his own station in the world, the door was opened and my week's washing delivered. Now, my washing is done by Mrs. O'Donnell of our post, and it is delivered by her daughter Nora; and Nora is a girl of 19 or 20. She is pretty in her way, modest, and what is of more importance, spotlessly neat and clean. I must confess that to a man who had been in the far West for almost two years she was something of a temptation. But she had been delivering my washing thus for two months and the idea of kissing her or even speaking an unnecessary word to her had never before crossed my mind. Nor would such a thought have occurred to me then but for that confounded play I had just been reading—and I must say that in opposition to the rest of the English speaking world I wish the gifted author of it had never been born. For you see even at this late day he is the author, also, of my miserable predicament. Well, be that as it may, the idea occurred to me and I put it into execution at once—that is, I put my arm around Nora's waist and kissed her. She blushed, struggled and screamed and fell into a chair weeping. I must confess that I was surprised—and that I was ashamed. I began to apologize, feeling most awfully uncomfortable, when on looking up I saw the first Sergeant of our troop scowling at me from the doorway. It dawned upon me at once that they were lovers, that the Sergeant was frightfully angry and that the only thing that restrained him from attacking me was my official rank. He was too good a soldier to forget that. In fact there is no better soldier in our regiment, and Jackson is universally liked and respected. Personally, I would not have done him an injury for the world, and I would not have him think me anything but his friend. Indeed, my influence with the men would be badly injured if Sergeant Jackson and I did not get along well together. So I resolved to have a talk with the Sergeant and try to smooth things over.

"Go out, Nora," said I gently to the weeping girl. 'Go home to your mother. Now, Sergeant, just step in a moment.' He did so.

"'Sergeant,' I said, 'you undoubtedly saw the little incident that just occurred here?'

"'I did, sir,' he answered respectfully, but shortly and a trifle savagely.

"'Well, I wish to assure you that such a thing has never occurred before, and I give you my word of honor never shall again. The fact is I was reading a miserable play that brought the idea to my mind. I make this explanation, as possibly Nora and you are something to each other.'

"'We are, sir,' he answered.

"'Sweethearts—engaged?' I ventured.

"'We are man and wife,' he said.

"Well, if he had knocked me over the head with the butt end of a carbine I could not have been more astonished. Worse and more of it! I would want to kill a man who would kiss my wife, and I had no doubt he wanted to perform that same delicate surgical operation for me.

"'Your wife!' I gasped in astonishment.

"'Yes, sir—married last night, sir, very quietly—Colonel's permission,' he answered.

"Not only his wife, but his bride of a day! What could I do? Discipline, army regulations, my rank, prevented my offering him a proper personal satisfaction, and I sincerely wished all this was not the case, for I felt that I deserved a good thrashing at his hands.

"'Sergeant,' said I, 'you are a bold man, and so am I. I know that we ought to fight. Army discipline, which we have both sworn to maintain, prevents that. There is also to be taken into consideration the fact that I meant no harm to any one, certainly not to you, for I did not know you and Nora were married, or even sweethearts, for that matter. But I apologize to you, and I want to make fair and square reparation so that we may get along together as men who respect each other.'

"'Now, I'll make this proposition. When I marry it shall be with the understanding that you are to kiss my wife just once.'

"Well, the Sergeant accepted the proposition. And that is the predicament I am in. If you marry me you will have to let the Sergeant kiss you—just once, and on the cheek, for that is where I kissed Nora. Now what is your answer?"

Miss Buchanan blushed and looked modestly but almost laughingly at the floor.

"I'm just dying for a kiss," she answered, and added mischievously, "Is the Sergenat good looking?"

---

Word comes from Chicago that the Woman's Club of that porcine metropolis is about to open a list for gentlemen themselves. This looks much like generosity, and so it may be termed to a limited extent. The advantage to a man of such a membership is not to be underestimated. He may have tea every Wednesday afternoon with three lumps of sugar if it pleases him; he may exchange with his friends of the board, or the ladies, little side talk anent the trifles of the day. There are many delightful lectures on dress reform and vital topics of the times, besides books to read, in plenty. Truly this seems like boundless generosity, but in truth it is not, for this feast of culture and of tea is tinctured with the acid of revenge. The ladies are rising to the proper sense of their dignity, as people in the lower walks of life would say they are "getting even" with the cruel man, for although admitted to their club he is deprived of that priceless privilege—the right of every citizen, the right to vote. Herein is the "tincture," the getting even; at last woman meets man on his own ground; he may vote for his Governor, his Congressman, and his President, but he may not vote for even the janitors of the Woman's Club.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure, be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and is made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

☞Sold by druggists; price, 75c. per bottle.

The leading article in the June "St. Nicholas" is "The Risks of a Fireman's Life," by C. T. Hill, illustrated by the author. Lieutenant John M. Ellicott, U. S. N., explains the meaning of the different bells on board a man-of-war, and A. H. Verrill describes a strangely constructed city in the island of Saba, built in the crater of an extinct volcano. Grace Wickham Curran has an article on cycling, called "Nature's Cycle Path," and Gustave Kobbe tells how a ship may be steered without a compass.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has sold his partnership interest in the firm doing business under the name of The Novato French Cheese Factory, at the town of Novato, county of Marin, State of California, to C. Schulz, and that the undersigned is no longer a member of said firm, or interested therein, and is not responsible for the debts of said firm. JAMES NEWLANDS JR.
Dated April 20, 1897.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 211 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS

NATURE'S HEALTH RETREAT!

On the Mountain Side
Six Miles from Napa City

My Friend:

May I speak with you a minute?

Yes—Well, you are going somewhere this summer for an outing, are you not?

Yes—Then, of course, you want to combine comfort, health and enjoyment in your visit?

Yes—Well, then, have you ever been to the famous

Napa Soda Springs?

You know that is where the renowned NAPA SODA comes from—the healthiest water in the world. You can see the natural gas bubbling up through the water right before your eyes.

The Springs are not the same in appearance any two years, for improvements are made every season. The buildings are all of stone, insuring coolness in summer and warmth in winter. There is a treat in store for you when you come, whether you have ever been there or not.

These Springs are easy of access and near to San Francisco.

For recreation or rest, this resort is unexcelled.

The service is first-class and terms reasonable.

Among its advantages are:

Hot and cold Napa Soda baths.

A new swimming-tank—warm water.

Climate unequalled—invigorating mountain air.

Relief for Asthmatics.

The most healthful mineral water.

Running water and gas in every room.

Bar, billiards, and bowling-alley.

Lawn tennis, croquet, swings and hammocks, burros to ride.

Napa Soda Springs are the Children's Delight, Mothers' Comfort, and Husbands' Rest.

You will love your neighbor better and hate the Devil more heartily after a season spent in the ozone-producing mountain range at Napa Soda Springs.

Will you come?

ANDREW JACKSON.

Its Purity
A Surety
Of
Its Excellence

Accept
No
Substitute
None
So
Good
None
So
Pure

Vina
Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG.

The Tavern of Castle Crag was built in the heart of the Sierras, almost at the foot of Mount Shasta, and amid the most picturesque mountain scenery accessible to the tourist. The eligibility of the place selected was due to a rare combination of flowing water, inspiring mountain scenery and inviting forests.

The Tavern of Castle Crag, with its splendid environment, it was believed would appeal chiefly to those who seek a summer resort for health, recreation, outdoor sports, sympathy with nature and informal sociability. To emphasize this intention and signify the kind of invitation extended, the name TAVERN of Castle Crag was chosen.

To avoid all implication of sumptuous accommodations or the tyranny of social formalism, and to realize this original conception, the management has decided to make the Tavern of Castle Crag distinctively a family resort and especially attractive to those to whom health, recreation and sympathy with nature are paramount considerations. To this end rooms on the first and second floors of this splendid tavern with board will be furnished at a monthly rate of $65 a person; and rooms on the third floor with board at a monthly rate of $50 a person.

The accommodations of the Tavern are first class in every particular. Its parlors and halls are elegant and spacious. Its verandas are cool and inviting, placing the guest always in the presence of the most attractive mountain scenery to be enjoyed from the balcony of any tavern in the world.

The opportunity for out door sports embraces hunting, fishing, riding, bicycling, walking on mountain paths and driving on picturesque roads. The Tavern is located immediately on the main trunk line of the California & Oregon Railroad, and is fourteen hours' ride from San Francisco, twelve hours from Stockton, ten hours from Sacramento, thirty hours from Los Angeles and twenty-three hours from Portland. The Tavern of Castle Crag is reached from San Francisco and Sacramento without loss of time. The train leaves San Francisco at 8 o'clock p. m., arriving early the following morning for breakfast, which is always ready upon the arrival of the train. Returning, the train time affords equal accommodation. Thus, both in going and in coming the comfort of the passenger and the economy of his time have been studied. In brief, the Tavern of Castle Crag realizes to its guests the perfect ideal of that spring-time in the high altitudes of the Sierras which never becomes high summer, and is the comfortable home of pleasing recreation and restful repose.

For particulars apply to
GEORGE SCHONEWALD,
Room 59, Union Trust Building, San Francisco.

J. Smith & Co.
TAILORS
Suits to Order from $10 to $40
Fine Line of
Imported and Domestic Woolens
First-Class Work and Perfect Fit Guaranteed
944 MARKET STREET
UNDER BALDWIN HOTEL
Branch, 571 Market Street, near Second.

The Forum
JOSE C. CASTRO
Proprietor
141 Montgomery Street
An elegant place, where only the best of refreshments and liquors are served
Mid-day, afternoon and night lunch, consisting of fine American, French and Spanish dishes. Private rooms.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 56
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied May 21, 1897
Delinquent in office June 25, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, July 16, 1897
J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

DRAMATIC NOTES

The Frawley Company opens its season at the Columbia Monday evening in "The Fatal Card." The play is thrilling and intense. The plot and movement are novel and interesting.

Miss Hattie Nathan's dramatic and dialect recital, under the auspices of the Eureka Society for Protection of Children, came off successfully at the Maple Room in the alace Hotel last evening.

The great tank which was specially constructed for "The Dark Secret" will be again used at Morosco's in "Lost in New York," the play for next week. "Lost in New York" is one of Leonard Grover's most successful dramas, and has already been given several times in this city, under the title of "Cad, the Tomboy."

The Baldwin will be closed for six nights commencing Monday evening, after which the Lilliputians will open in "Merry Tramps," for an engagement of two weeks beginning Sunday, June 6th. The piece is a spectacular affair in four acts and eleven tableaux, with elaborate stage settings. Bertha Jaeger, Adolph Zink, and Franz Ebert are still with the company.

Professor F. D. Piccirillo, the mandolyrist, gave his concert at Byron Mauzy Hall, Thursday evening. Professor Piccirillo played an arrangement of "Faust," and also a Raff cavatino with piano and violin. The Mascagni Mandolin Club, of which Professor Piccirillo is director, gave several numbers, and the artists included Professor S. S. Martinez, Mrs. H. V. Dickey, Sig. G. Almagia, and Mrs. Letitia Bonfoy-Ripperdan.

At the festival concert of the combined Stanford and Apollo Choral Societies at Metropolitan Hall, last Saturday evening, the choral work won much commendation. The numbers covered a wide range, from "The Mesisah," and "Elijah," to the "Linden Tree," and a "Summer Song," but the heavy work was given equally as well as the lighter compositions. Mr. H. B. Pasmore directed the concert, and to his leadership much of its success is due.

The Orpheum has a novelty for next week in Adgie, the dancing girl and her trained lions. Billy Carter, the comedian and banjoist, opens with a lot of funnyisms and negro melodies. Morton and Elliott, musical entertainers, and the "World's Trio," Perry and Lulu Ryan, and Emma Wood in eccentric comedy, are also among the new people. The mysterious Omene commences her second week. The Garrisons are held over, as are also the Eclair Brothers, and the Baggenses. A special matinee is announced for Monday, Decoration Day.

The "Dark Secret" finds much favor at Morosco's this week, especially the regatta scene, which is quite gay with its flags and banners, and most realistic with its real boats and river of real water. Another pretty scene is Henley by moonlight, the illuminated church making an effective background. The acting is good throughout. Maud Edna Hall and Lorena Atwood share honors as May Joyce and Nellie Norton, and Josie Haynes gives some really clever character work as the French adventuress. Sanders Stevens is convincing and agreeable as Edward Loates, and John J. Pierson and Fred J. Butler make two capable villains.

The production of "Martha" at the Tivoli this week is altogether the very best the opera has had for some time. Myra Morella makes an attractive Lady Harriet, singing the part very well, and acting with much grace. Her "Last Rose of Summer" is received with much enthusiasm. Rhys Thomas sings Lionel agreeably, and John J. Raffael makes a good Plunkett. W. H. West's Tristan, and Maurice Darcy's sheriff are both well done. The ensembles are given with much life and spirit, and the ballet in the fifth act, a repetition of last week's, is prettily given. Next week the Tivoli will revive "Manon," which is certainly one of the prettiest light operas of the time. It will be followed by an absolute novelty, "Miss Frisco," a musical burlesque review of local happenings for the last year.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

When You Go to San Rafael
Get your Lunch at the NEW OYSTER HOUSE opposite the Court House
Everything fresh and well served. Oysters, Clams, Crabs and Shrimps a specialty. Families and Hotels supplied. Marin County Market on Fourth St.

REASONS FOR USING
Walter Baker & Co.'s
Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

GEO. H. KAHN,
OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

Haywards Park Club House
At the terminus of Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railway. Concert every Sunday during the season from 1 to 5 p. m. The Club House will be conducted under the management of Mrs. Rachael Hayward, whose reputation as a purveyor and hostess is unequalled.
Take Oakland Ferry at the foot of Market street on the hour or half hour to Fruitvale Station. The Haywards Electric Cars make connections for Park without change.

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
Monday Evening, May 31st, Third Annual Engagemen
Our Home Organization
THE FRAWLEY COMPANY
Presenting Haddon Chambers' and B. C. Stephenson's Great Drama
"THE FATAL CARD"
Every Evening, including Sunday. Matinee Saturday Only.

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, May 31st
Special Matinee Decoration Day
Attraction extraordinary, ADGIE, the Dancing Girl and Her Trained Lions
Billy Carter, America's Great Comedian and Banjoist
Morton & Elliott, Musical Entertainers
World's Trio: Perry and Lulu Ryan and Emma Wood in the Latest Eccentricities
In conjunction with Mysterious Omene, the Garrisons, the Eclair Bros. and the Baggesens
Regular Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
One Week Only, commencing Monday
Genee's Beautiful Comic Opera, in Three Acts
NANON
The Hostess of the Golden Lamb
Great Cast! Sumptuous Costumes! Superb Scenery!
Next, the whirl of the town, MISS FRISCO
A round of pleasure!
Popular Prices . . 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE
WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager
Last performances of The Dark Secret
With its Exciting Boat Race
Monday, May 31st, Third Week of the Successful Engagement of our Favorite, Maud Edna Hall, in a Grand Scenic Prouction of the Great London and American Success
"LOST IN NEW YORK!"
The Stage Converted into a Vast River! New Scenery and Effects! New Songs and Specialties!
Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

St. Denis
Broadway and Eleventh St.
NEW YORK
OPPOSITE GRACE CHURCH
EUROPEAN PLAN
In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the Metropolis than the St. Denis.
The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine, and its very moderate prices.
William Taylor & Son.

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., S. F.
Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45
OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER
DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union
532 CALIFORNIA ST.
Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,379
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503
ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier
DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND
Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.
Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.
Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars
Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.
DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco
33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.
DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.
Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.
Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000
A. J. CARMANY : : Manager
OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING
Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE
OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
301 Montgomery Street

A. K. DAGGETT
Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over.

Address GEO. SCHONEWALD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

SANTA FE LIMITED

On MONDAYS and THURSDAYS the first-class Pullman sleeping-car leaving at 5 p.m. connects at Barstow with the Santa Fe limited train carrying dining-car, buffet smoking-car and Pullman palace drawing-room sleeping-cars for both Chicago and St. Louis via Kansas City.

3½ days to Chicago or St. Louis,
4½ days to New York

SANTA FE EXPRESS

Leaves daily at 5 p.m. Pullman palace drawing-room, also modern upholstered tourist sleeping-cars through to Chicago via Kansas City. Annex cars for Denver and St. Louis.

Boston excursions via Kansas City, Chicago, Montreal and the White Mountains leave every Tuesday. St. Paul excursions every Sunday.

San Francisco ticket office, 644 Market Street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.
Oakland office, 1118 Broadway.

cific Coast Steamship Co.

eamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for rts in Alaska 9 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. June 1, 5, 9, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30; July 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 26, 30; August 3, 7, 11, 16, 20, 24, 28.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. June 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. June 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. the 2d each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, June 15, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, May 27, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BULLION MINING COMPANY. — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 4th day of May, 1897, an assessment (No. 50) of ten cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of June, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 28th day of June, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of John Reidy, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, April 29, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

ANNUAL MEETING
OF
The Yosemite Commission

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Commissioners to Manage Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove will hold its annual meeting in Yosemite Valley, at the Guardian's Office, on Wednesday, June 2d, 1897, at 11 o'clock a.m.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary.

San Francisco, Cal., April 27th, 1897.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Gould & Curry Silver Mining Co.

Assessment No. 81
Amount per share, 20 cents
Levied April 29, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 1, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, June 22, 1897

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 27
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied May 11, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 12, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, July 1, 1897

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

JOHNSON & CO.

New Spring Goods just arrived

Ladies' Jackets to order

Merchant Tailors

24 Montgomery Street

THE LATEST NEW YORK STYLES
IN
Men's Hats
AT
FISHER'S 9 Montgomery Street

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

THE LATEST STYLES IN
CHOICE WOOLENS
H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel
Bicycle and Golf Suits

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

Peoples Tel. 195 Sunset Tel. 573 Black
THE
Dashaway Stables
130 S. Second St., San Jose, Cal.
E. CHAMBERS, Prop.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
610 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Highland Springs

ON THE BORDER OF CLEAR LAKE

Lake County : California

The new hotel building, lighted by electricity. Finest dining room north of San Francisco. The greatest variety of Mineral Springs in America. Waters unsurpassed for health or pleasure. Open every day in the year. Boating, bathing, hunting and swimming. Swimming tank, dancing, lawn tennis, croquet, billiards, bowling, etc.

Take Stage at Pieta, shortest and best route to all points in Lake County

Round Trip from San Francisco, $8.00
Rates, $10 to $16 per week.

J. CRAIG, Manager.
San Francisco Office, 316 Montgomery Street.

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort, Winter and Summer, of the Pacific Coast

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
Climate Unexcelled
Magnificent Scenery!
The Sanitarium of the Pacific Coast
Otis Elevators Electric Lights

Headquarters of the San Rafael Hunt-Club and Tennis Tournaments

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.

Proprietors

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

The Hotel Richelieu

N. E. Cor. Van Ness and Myrtle Aves.

PRINCIPAL AND FINEST FAMILY HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO

HOTEL RICHELIEU CO.

Hotel Bella Vista

1001 PINE STREET

Elegant Furnishings and Apartments

DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED

MRS. A. F. TRACY.

European Tours

When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's greatest Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowest rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.

THOS. COOK & SON

621 Market Street San Francisco

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign

403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

The correspondent of a big New York daily was directed by a letter from his managing editor to obtain from each of the Supreme Court Justices a brief essay about the Court. He had a good deal to do that day, and just glanced over the note, but proceeded to read it over to Justice Field, on whom he made his first call. In the body of the letter was this sentence, "Of course the old duffers do not expect to be paid for this work." The correspondent read hurriedly, and he ran right into it before he knew where he was. He stopped and was about to omit the remainder, when Justice Field said: "Hold on—what was that? Let me see that for a moment." "Oh, that's of no consequence, Judge," said the correspondent. Field glanced over the correspondent's shoulder and read the sentence. There was a twinkle in his eye that showed that he appreciated the humor of the situation, but the correspondent got no essays from that Court.

A Collector of Customs in New England having obtained his appointment through Democratic influence, was looked to by that party for patronage. To the surprise of both factions, all the good berths went to Republicans, and a delegation of Democrats called upon him to know what the matter was. "Look here, Z.," said the spokesman, "how about this? You've turned the party down dead; not a Democrat has had a place from you." "I know it, boys," returned the Collector, "but it's the cursed Civil Service. I have to fill the places from chaps who have passed their examinations, and the truth is there isn't a Democrat in the lot. They try, but they don't get through. But," he added, "I'm doing the best I know how." "What's that?" asked the spokesman. "Well, they're all mild Republicans I've put in, and I'm working to make Democrats out of them before my time is up."

Joe Shelby of Missouri, when in Washington, met Senator Harris, whom he had known as a member of the "Carlotta" colony, near the city of Mexico. The latter received the Missourian very coldly, and after he had gone explained to a circle of friends. "I don't see where that fellow got the impudence to speak to me at all. Me and Pap Price and Governor Allen of Louisiana were down at Carlotta when that rebel chicken stealer came along. We had fixed up a little distillery, an' I made fo' bottles of the finest liquor, suh, you ever tasted. This Shelby drank one bottle of it the first day. Next mornin' we had to ride ovah the plantations. We lef' him at the house an' he drank two mo' bottles of it, suh." "What became of the other bottle, Senator?" asked a listener. "We aged it an' drunk it, suh." "How long did you keep it, Senator?" "Fo' days, suh."

Caleb had three children—John, Mary and Jane. John is the eldest, and so the most inquiring. He had heard that babies were bought from doctors, and one day asked his mother about prices. "Mother, how much did I cost?" he inquired. As some reply had to be made his mother said, "Two hundred pounds." John thought it over for a moment, and then asked, "How much did you pay for Mary?" "Three hundred pounds." "Why, she cost more than me!" "Yes; girls always cost more than boys." "What did you pay for Jane?" Jane is a little self-willed tyrant. "Jane cost me four hundred pounds," said Mrs. Caleb; and John lapsed into deep thought. In a few moments he said, "Mamma, I don't think Mary cost too much, but I think you got stuck with Jane."

In "Early Days Recalled" Mrs. Ross tells of a discussion her mother had with Thomas Carlyle. Her extraordinary eloquence and fire prevailing, Carlyle lost his temper, and burst forth in his Scotch tongue, "You're just a windbag, Lucie—you're just a windbag!" I had been listening with all my ears, and, conceiving him to be very rude, interrupted him by saying, "My papa always says men should be civil to women," for which pert remark I got a scolding from my mother. But Mr. Carlyle was not offended, and, turning to her, observed, "Lucie, that child of yours has an eye for an inference."

Mr. Zea, Colombian Minister in England, died suddenly. He was insured in various offices, and rumor said he had shot himself. A meeting of one of the insurance boards was held, and the directors were talking the matter over, when Doctor M. appeared, who was the company's medical referee, as well as Mr. Zea's own physician. "Ah, now you can tell us the true cause of Zea's death." "Certainly I can," said the doctor, solemnly, "because I attended him." Here he paused, and was surprised to find that his merely preliminary remark was hilariously received as a solution of the whole question.

Somebody asked Congressman Allen how he stood on the contest over the Democratic position in the House. "Oh, well," said he, "I haven't been registered yet, and I think I am on both sides. It reminds me of a man who was running for the Legislature. I met him one day and said, 'Bob, how are you getting along with the Prohibitionists?' 'All right,' said he. 'And how?' said I. 'Well,' said he, 'I drink with the liquor men and vote with the Prohibitionists.'"

A visitor to a charming spot in the South of Ireland asked one of the natives what the industry of the place was. "Mostly poaching, sorr," he replied, adding with a merry twinkle of his eye, "and taking in each other's washing."

HOTELS AND RESORTS

HOTEL MAJESTIC

Central Park West, 72d and 71st Streets, NEW YORK

FACING CENTRAL PARK

THE ELITE HOTEL OF AMERICA

CONDUCTED ON AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLANS

ONE of the Largest and Finest in the World — 600 rooms, with 245 bathrooms. Absolutely Fireproof. Most luxuriously appointed. Cuisine of the highest order. An ideal resort for Families, Transients and Tourists. Select Orchestral Music every evening. Spacious Foyer and Promenade Halls, Drawing and Music Rooms. Excellent appointments for Private Dinners, Banquets, Dances, and Receptions. Board of Directors' Meeting-rooms. Bowling Alleys and Shuffle Boards for Private Parties.

References required of parties not personally known to the management.

While this hotel is organized and conducted on the grandest scale possible, prices are kept moderate. Excellent home during the Summer for Gentlemen whose families are at distant points in the country or abroad.

P. S.— Parties visiting New York are cordially invited to inspect this magnificent hotel, which will be found one of the greatest attractions of the city. Within twenty minutes' reach of the Business and Theatre Districts. During the Summer Season the beautiful Private Rustic and Palm Gardens, situated 300 feet above sea level, are open to guests only.

A. F. MUELLER.

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight.

CALIFORNIA'S MOST CHARMING SUMMER RESORTS

ALONG THE LINE OF THE
San Francisco & North Pacific Railway
MAY BE FOUND THE

Mark West Springs, Skaggs Springs,
The Geysers,
Highland, Bartlett, and Vichy Springs,
Blue Lakes, Laurel Dell, Saratoga Springs
Soda Bay, Lytton Springs,
Agua Caliente Springs, Orr's Hot Springs
Duncan Springs

FOR DETAILED INFORMATION, APPLY AT

Ticket Office, 650 Market St., Chronicle Bldg.
Or General Office, Mutual Life Building,
Sansome and California Streets, San Francisco

Pacific Congress Springs

HOTEL

SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS
SANTA CLARA COUNTY

Remodeled and under New Management

Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco

6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara
12 miles from San Jose

Address GEO. O. WATKINS,
523 Market St., S. F.

Sea Beach Hotel

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

CALIFORNIA'S FAVORITE RESORT! Located on a flowering slope from the beach. Magnificent view of beach, bay and mountains. Salmon fishing, tennis court, croquet grounds and music. Rates reasonable. For terms,

ADDRESS

JOHN T. SULLIVAN, MANAGER

California Girls Who Fence — Pictures of a Mountain Inn

A Woman Lion-Tamer

THE WAVE

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

VOL XVI. No. 23 — SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 5, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS.

HON. J. J. DE HAVEN

WHOM THE PRESIDENT HAS APPOINTED DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

Bushnell, photo

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 5, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2–3 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 3 |
| Fencing for Women | 4 |
| La Guerre Opera Bouffe | 4 |
| "A Thief for Twenty Minutes"; by Justin Sturgis | 5 |
| The Lady of Lions | 6 |
| Dramatizing "Tess": an Interview | 6 |
| Two Worthies; by B. C. | 7 |
| A Tavern in the Clouds | 8–9 |
| A Debutante's Diary; by Miss Cricket | 10 |
| Turf Notes; by Benedict | 11 |
| "The Descendant": a Review | 12 |
| The New Frawleys | 12 |
| The Magazines | 13 |
| Dramatic Notes | 13 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

THE SCANDAL AT SAN QUENTIN.

California has furnished, at intervals in her brief life, many moral and interesting spectacles for the rest of the world, and we are now maintaining our well-deserved reputation for originality by the unique display of a great prison practically controlled by the convicts who have been sent there to be restrained, punished, and, if possible, reformed. The felons in the State penitentiary at San Quentin have made an ample demonstration of their ability to suspend the rules and discipline of the institution, to defy successfully the authority of the prison officials, to paralyze every form of prison industry and to hold possession of the place quite after the manner of a besieged garrison awaiting terms from the besieger. Incidentally they have proved, also, that the authorities who were incompetent to prevent this insurrection are quite powerless to punish the insurgents.

About six weeks ago the news came from the prison that a number of the convicts who were assigned to work in the great jute mill, the part of the prison which furnishes occupation for most of the inmates, had announced their dissatisfaction with the conditions under which they were required to labor, and their resolution to "strike" if their grievances were not redressed. The complaint of the aggrieved convicts did not set up that any restraint or hardship had been imposed on them which was not contemplated by the terms of their sentences. Indeed, no felon in San Quentin has ever had occasion to make any complaint of the hardship of hard labor in that resort for criminals. What the "strikers" complained of was, in fact, that the favors of the warden were unequally distributed to his convict assistants in the jute bag industry, so that while all had leisure enough for devising and practising all sorts of prison iniquity, some had more leisure than others—a condition of things not to be tolerated, apparently, by any right-minded convict. On this occasion the obedient warden attended promptly to the call of the aggrieved felons, listened to their demands, promised to give them consideration, and probably did all that the proud gentlemen in stripes wanted him to do. The whole affair progressed smoothly, on the lines of a free contract between the warden, representing the State of California, as one party, and the discontented spinners of jute, the cherished felons of the State of California, the other party. The episode presented every appearance of an ordinary industrial strike, except the visible labor union; and this was not needed, for the fourteen hundred felons of San Quentin have since been able to show that they are a very compact and well-organized "union," even if the interest of organized labor is not their professed object. The whole affair would have been delightfully comical if it had not been so deplorably serious. The convicts were not slow to reap the fruit of such a victory. They had learned, if they did not know it before, that the warden feared them more than they had cause to fear him, and they proceeded to push their advantage. Ten days ago another "strike" was declared, and the entire force of the striped union in the jute mill declined the hard labor provided for them by law. What their grievances were this time, or what further amelioration of their lot they expected to obtain, has not been clearly revealed, though the submissive warden went promptly among them and urged them to resume their discarded tasks. This kindly counsel being coarsely rejected by the associated felons, the warden simply had them confined to their cells, and then the prison became a perfect pandemonium. When a select seventy of the convicts had been thrust into a portion of the prison which—for what reason is not apparent—is called "the dungeons," they promptly broke down the dungeon doors and raged and rovoed at liberty in the dungeon corridor, the entrance to which they had barricaded with the doors of their dungeon cells. There are prison wardens in other places, men hard of heart, nrm in mind, and possessed of the idea that the first duty of a warden is to maintain discipline in his prison and to punish, at all hazards, concerted rebellion on the part of convicted felons, who would have availed themselves of the opportunity to fire into such a mob of raging felons and to kill convicts till rebellion should be drowned so deep in convict blood that even its ghost should not rise to the surface during the life-time of the present generation of criminals. But our simple and kindly warden of San Quentin is no such man of blood. He fired a dozen harmless shots into the convicts' barricade, and then removed his charges to other quarters where they enjoyed greater facilities for continuing the riot. He had carefully saved his convicts, and for days they continued their uproar. From the wicket of every cell came forth such a torrent of jeers, oaths, taunts and threats, delivered with all the energy of the vilest vocabulary of felony, that the officers of the prison hesitated to appear in the prison yard. The warden stayed outside rather than listen to the reproaches of his ungrateful wards, and the public were repeatedly assured that the prison directors heartily supported him in his firm stand against the "strikers."

The demonstration is complete that for every purpose, except perhaps that of mild restraint, for which a prison is maintained, the institution at San Quentin, under its present government, is a grotesque failure. Punishment and reformation are not to be looked for in a place in which the worst of criminals are better fed, better clad, better lodged, than many honest and hard-working free men. There are not a few convicts in San Quentin today who have deliberately committed crime in order to return to the comforts and privileges of convict life. A place which offers attractions for criminals to break into it can hardly be regarded as furnishing deterrents to crime or inducements to reform. Opium in abundance finds its way within the prison walls, and money circulates there freely, and the authorities are either powerless or unwilling to put a stop to these sources of demoralization. They are even incompetent to protect the well-meaning convicts, if there be any such, from the murderous rule of the self-constituted authorities among the convicts themselves. Murder is one of the prison industries, as the records of the Superior Court of Marin county will show. Such a prison is a scandal and a disgrace to the State that maintains it. A warden who has failed to prevent and then failed to punish such a revolt as this at San Quentin has ceased to be of any possible use in his position, and is a source of great danger. If a competent successor cannot be found for him, let the prison be abandoned and let the fourteen hundred associated felons be subjected to the discipline of Folsom. California cannot afford to entertain the world with the spectacle of a penitentiary ruled by a convicts' union, in which prison discipline is regulated by the results of organized "strikes."

THE LABOR UNIONS AND THE UNEMPLOYED.

The Hon. George F. Edmunds, formerly a Senator in Congress from the State of Vermont, had a plumber at work in his house recently from whom he received some casual information which seemed so surprising to the ex-Senator that he imparted the astonishing revelation to the public as news. It seems that when the plumber had finished his job in the Senator's house he sought the Senator to ask for assistance in getting his son into some employment in the service of the Government. After Mr. Edmunds had described to the plumber the unsatisfactory character and the uncertain tenure of such positions under the Government as the son of the plumber aspired to, he asked why the plumber did not bring up his son to follow his own trade, a practical knowledge of which would ensure him a much better living than any employment he would probably receive from the Government. The poor plumber replied that he would be glad to do so if he could, but he could not, because the rules of the plumbers' associations strictly limited the number of available apprenticeships and he was unable to secure one of the few for his boy. And that is what astonished the ex-Senator!

Well, there was no real cause for his astonishment. He simply lacked information which it had not fallen to his lot to acquire. In the long course of his public life Mr. Edmunds has, doubtless, read and heard a great deal about trusts. Our populistic maniacs have made it impossible for any man not blind and deaf to escape an extensive education in the subject of trusts and the iniquities and corruption which they engender. But the leather-lunged populist has not even the faintest roar in him for the meanest, the most ignorant, and the most dangerous trusts that exist in our country. It has not been considered popular or politic to denounce the efforts and the tendencies of the labor trusts; on the contrary, they have been sedulously cultivated and protected, and most carefully of all in those States where the populistic horror of other trusts is loudest and most virtuous. So it is quite possible that the existence of a labor trust among the plumbers had escaped the attention of Mr. Edmunds until it was revealed to him by the man to whom the trust had denied the right to bequeath to his son the handicraft by which he earned his bread.

The people of San Francisco are accustomed to be worried from time to time by appeals for contributions to relieve the wants of the unemployed. The prophets of evil and the preachers of discontent point to the existence in the community of some hundreds of stalwart idlers—the "unemployed"—as evidence of the approaching failure of our system of government unless we can rescue ourselves from the crushing grasp of the trusts, to which they ascribe all of our miseries. Well, for once, at least, we are ready to strike hands with the populists and lend them all the aid that we can furnish to any movement which has for its purpose the destruction of trusts, taking first those which have wrought the greatest public injuries and whose continued existence involves the greatest public danger. In the list the labor trusts will easily command the first position, and should naturally receive the first attention, if for no other reason than that by their arbitrary and ignorant rules and regulations they have established a system which, if persisted in, will ensure us a constantly increasing army of "the unemployed." The labor unions have, wherever they have succeeded in their efforts, established labor trusts which close the market to laborers not included within the unions, and, in the true spirit of ignorant monopolists, they have made entrance into their unions as difficult as possible. They have sought further to protect themselves from competition by restricting to the lowest possible limit the number of youths who shall be permitted to learn trades in the shops under union control. To the foreigner, the immigrant who arrives here with his trade mastered, they are grudgingly hospitable, because they fear him, and he is therefore admitted to the union on terms as hard as he can be made to submit to. It results that the vacancies in the trades are filled largely by these foreign workmen, and the native-born youth grows up to adopt the profession of the "unemployed." Some few, to be sure, may learn something of a trade in a school for manual training, but the labor trusts are a unit in their opposition to such schools, seeing in them a peril to their monopoly. We do not expect that our offer of assistance will be cordially accepted by the anti-trust forces. We do expect to have with us next winter an increased contingent of the unemployed, and to be called on for renewed contributions for their relief. Perhaps the unfortunate son of Senator Edmunds' plumber will be among them, and if he is we suggest that the relief committee escort him to the officers of the local Plumbers' Union and the Master Plumbers' Association.

THE NOMINATION OF JUDGE DE HAVEN.

In filling the vacancy on the United States District Bench by the appointment of Judge J. J. De Haven, President McKinley has not only selected a thoroughly able, competent, honest and conscientious man, but he has chosen the individual who, above all others, was the first choice of the people of this State. "The Wave" advocated the appointment of Judge De Haven to the Circuit Bench to succeed Judge McKenna, and its position was endorsed almost unanimously by the independent press of the interior of the State. Their testimony in his behalf vouched for the popularity of the man throughout the length and breadth of the State, and must have added great weight to the endorsements of individual citizens which were forwarded to our Congressional representatives. It was a noble tribute, nobly tendered.

For the treatment accorded him by the press, without regard to party, Judge De Haven feels deeply grateful, and has so expressed himself. Primarily, of course, it was the man himself, his career in public life, his unswerving integrity in Congress, and his ability and honor as a jurist that brought out these high encomiums so generously bestowed upon him. Senator Perkins was also a warm supporter of Judge De Haven. He had served with him in the Legislature nearly a quarter of a century ago, and was familiar with his history as a legislative and as a judicial officer. The relations existing between these gentlemen had not been closely intimate. There was no obligation of friendship resting upon Senator Perkins in this connection, and his advocacy of Judge De Haven was a tribute to the high character of the man rather than a mere expression of friendliness or the wiping out of a political debt. In his action in this respect, Senator Perkins has again given evidence of the eminent fairness and justness that marks his official career.

We prophesy for United States District Judge De Haven an honorable and we trust a long career upon the Federal Bench. As a Judge he is impartial. He knows neither friend nor foe; is moved by neither fear nor favor; has neither like nor dislike, animosity nor affection. In his judicial life, the individual is to him as nothing. It is the law he is called upon to interpret and decide, and it is the law alone that governs his decisions. His career as Judge has demonstrated that under the most trying circumstances he is able to, and does, discard every extraneous influence, and is governed wholly and solely by his views of the law. He is an ideal Judge, and the congratulations of bench and bar go out to him. Indeed, the community itself is entitled to congratulation that it has for life upon the Federal Bench a man of such learning, strict integrity and honor.

ARCHITECTURE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

No city offers better architectural advantages in the way of building sites than does San Francisco. A hilly city is peculiarly adapted to fine effects in the way of residence structures. Consider, for an instant, in proof of this, how the rise and slope of Nob Hill offset even the stupid and unreasoned pile of the Hopkins house. This same edifice on a level would seem tame indeed. With but a little more taste in its construction and design it could easily have been made one of the most imposing monuments of its kind west of the Mississippi.

But California architects are, or have been, short-sighted even to blindness. They have tried to impose upon this country and this climate architectural conditions which, no matter how well they are adapted to New York or to Chicago, are lamentably out of place in such a community as ours. Say what you will, deny it as much as you may, San Francisco is yet dominated by the provincial element. The country invades us at every point. Pines and eucalypti grow in our vacant lots, and it is no unusual sight to see a couple of cowboys—call them ranch hands, if you will—driving a string of horses down Van Ness avenue—in the shadow of the Spreckels brown-stone house, by the way. Yet in the face of these conditions we must still be victimized by the hideous deformities, imported from Eastern centers, brown-stone and horrible, meaningless scroll work, iron capitals on wodden pillars—this very iron painted a stone gray to imitate the wood that imitates stone.

What we demand of our architects is but a reasonable adaptation of material to environment. There is no necessity of building of granite in a climate as warm as ours. It is sheer idiocy to overlay brick with cement in the face of the dampness of our summer fogs. A little exercise of forethought, of mere common sense, and we should have more of the charming brick villas, such as one occasionally sees out on Pacific Heights, or the delightful wod and plaster combinations, such as the Middle Ages taught us to admire.

We submit herewith a communication apropos of an article that appeared recently in these columns comparing the architecture of San Francisco with that of Los Angeles:

Monterey, Cal., May, 31, 1897.

"The Wave." To the Editor—Sir: Apropos of your ideas on architecture, it occurs to me that there is a chance that you are a little severe in your strictures. Don't you think it would be just and generous to let the good people of San Francisco have what they want? And if they prefer to model their architecture after the worst to be found in the small towns of the Middle West, why not let them do so in peace?

We are all familiar, through the comic weeklies and colored Sunday supplements, with the Cannibal Islander, a silk hat on his head and cuffs about his ankles, and with the African Prince in his equally interesting outfit. These characters are accepted in good faith, as things of humor, and fill the bill gracefully, gratefully and satisfactorily. Now, why not have the local architecture perform a similar function, for there is nothing so similar, so parallel to the Cannibal with his silk hat, with cuffs on his ankles, as the average native and his house. (Perhaps this is a little hard on the hat and the cuffs, but let it go at that!)

But, seriously, would it be mean to say that there is no town (cities barred as being not in the class) in this country of the size of San Francisco (or one-half or one-quarter of its size), where the average taste in things architectural is so foul? I venture the statement and challenge anyone to show the contrary.

In view of the fact that the natural conditions, climate and natural formation of the place suggest to the trained eye possibilities that would be simply impossible in any other American town of its size, it seems almost as though there was some blight, some judgment of God or a "hoodoo' or some other dreadful old thing on the place. Though we boast an unrivaled climate, topography suggestive of Mediterranean shores, with their beautiful terraces and simple but true and honest architecture, the houses here are such as to shock and astonish those not "to the manner born," and no wonder it paralyzes our Eastern visitors, who have heard of the "magnificent mansions of Nob Hill costing fortunes each."

Your article in "The Wave" of May 15th is one of the most serious and well directed it has been my good fortune to read; and if architects could live to the age of that good old gentleman Methesuleh, I would be tempted to join your effort to get things on a more rational basis; but "Ars longa, vita brevis," and the good people are satisfied and happy in the belief that their architecture is equal to their climate, and they do not care for anything different, and WON'T have any old-fashioned ideas infused into their architecture! Not on your life!

Architecture to be good should be unaffected, honest and true: a rational and decent solution of the problem that man has had to solve since creation. How many of our buildings are examples of this kind of thing?

I read that some one recently ventured the opinion that there are a dozen first class lawyers and a dozen first class doctors in San Francisco. I would to God there were one-quarter as many first class architects! Think of the vast, the tempting possibilities! And look at what they have brought upon us! Law and medicine appear to be recognized professions in California, but who will assert that architecture is so regarded?

I have made a careful study of the problem from all sides for a number of years—over seven—more than half of this time on the spot, in active practice of architecture, and what I have written is not the impression of a tourist or a writer (for writing is not my "strong graft") but the result of study, observation and reflection of a practicing architect, and I believe that if your article is sincere, the matter should be taken up and supported by such of the profession as have faith in a future state of existence.

ARCHITECTUS.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Fortune is so often a matter of happy occasion that it is hard to make fixed rules for the gathering of millions. The fact that a man has gold is no warrant that he will continue to have it, but it is safe to believe that he who, like Russell Sage, has ever on hand coin to capitalize an opportunity, is sure to leave an estate. Such a man is McLaughlin, the San Jose banker, who purchased for $87,000 the Shasta Lumber Company with its thirty-two square miles of sugar pine forests, its private railroad, chutes, mills and mining rights, representing an investment of over one million dollars. This is the institution that wrecked the fortunes of Barney Murphy and his bank. He had nearly a quarter of a million of his own in it, besides what he put in for the bank and for his relatives. Wells, Fargo &Co. had advanced a small fortune to the concern also, and many private citizens had contributed. Originally the venture was a capital investment, but it failed because it grew too large for the means of its projectors and because they had not among them a man fit to handle so bold an enterprise. It was at a foreclosure sale on the steps of the San Jose court house that Mr. McLaughlin made the purchase. He is a wealthy man, a shrewd dealer and competent to so capitalize the company as to make a huge turn on his investment.

***

The passing of the new water rates will undoubtedly precipitate the struggle between the Raineyites and the forces of reform. It will compel an alliance between the adherents of Maguire and Phelan, and the "Examiner," which has hitherto let Rainey alone, will now make him a target. There is little doubt that the Granger Boss will be routed and driven out of politics. The combination against him is more potent than anything he can create, and with the passing of Rainey vanishes the political aspirations of the Governor. Since the Supervisors deprived Rainey of patronage, the condition on which he held power is being realized. He had no real hold on his forces, and made the shining mistake of grasping for everything within his range of vision. Moderation is the secret of permanence in politics, as in all other things. It must be admitted also that among both Republicans and Democrats it continually grows harder for a boss to hold supremacy. There is an increasing distaste for dictation, and he must be an able man now who would lead his party.

***

Among the arrivals from Honolulu the other day was that clever, slick trader who is familiarly known as Billy Irwin throughout the Islands. There is not in Hawaii a smarter business man or a shrewder politician than this unpretentious manipulator of men and deals, who is not only rich on his own account, but richer with the backing and association of Claus Spreckels. Some years ago, when Claus had gathered together a large amount of gold coin as the result of one of his plays, he placed $100,000 of it under the control of W. G. Irwin, and another hundred thousand with Ned McFarlane. Irwin, who is a natural financier, used the money in his banking business, and organized some big deals, which he executed with such success that his funds doubled and trebled, and he ranks now as one of the richest men in the Islands. Some conception of the scale of his operations and the profitableness of the sugar trade under existing conditions may be gathered from the fact that his transactions netted him last year $400,000. The fortune that aided Irwin's deals did not extend to McFarlane's, whose investments failed and whose capital diminished. Finally Spreckels lodged all his money with Irwin, who is to-day, in his own right, several times a millionaire. However, a change has come over him since Claus Spreckels has undertaken to abrogate the reciprocity treaty. Irwin has grown sad and thin. Here is his partner and old friend, the Sugar King, actually opposing his prospects, cutting off the source of his income, and all on account of beets—a commodity in which he has neither principal nor interest. No wonder he looks harassed and feels injured. However, the autocratic Claus has a strong feeling for his friends and old asociates, and it is not probable Irwin will be much of a loser whichever way the treaty goes. Nowadays it is said the Sugar King has virtually ceased his opposition, and is content to let the status quo alone.

***

It is unfortunate the several societies interested cannot agree on a worthy celebration of Queen Victoria's Jubilee. Among the Scotch organizations and the Bri[illegible] Benevolent Association there is unanimity and of cou[illegible] these institutions represent the best element of our Eng[illegible]lish-born population. In every American community we find two classes of Britishers—those who, succeeding in a material way, join their fortunes with that of the country which has given them wealth or a living, and the dissentients, who, while living here, rail at the country, its institutions and its privileges. The first sink their allegiance to the mother land and become citizens of the United States, vote at our elections and identify themselves with the worthiest element and objects of our community. The others make what they can here, and have for their object the gathering of enough to live elsewhere. The Sons of St. George—which is the disturbing faction—is composed of young men who are in America not from choice, but because of necessity. They are of the order of adventurous wanderers who have drifted here from Australia, the North or the South, and their traditions and principles tend to the exaltation of English ideals over American conditions. It is a benevolent and protective order, otherwise; its members make the cricketers who try conclusions across the bay of Sundays. They are vigorous and athletic and smoke pipes, but they are not of us, nor with us, save under protest. When the leading organizations, composed of men prominent in business and professional life, are on one side of a case, and on the other we find the St. George's Club, there need be no argument as to which faction this community will side with. As for the particular controversy—an issue about the management of the Victorian Hospital, in the direction of which the St. George's Club demands a voice—it cannot be denied that the British Benevolent Society has long been the representative foreign society here. It has done splendid work and won respect—there is no reason why it should have to yield pre-eminence to the St. George's Club.

***

There is a foolish impression that women who write erotic novels or passionate poetry must necessarily have immoral tendencies. This is a glaring error. It is possible to imagine ladies of gay lives writing romances of illicit love making, but the probabilities are that if fate brought them to writing for a living they would make their characters as respectable as monuments. The truth is it is those who adore the conventionalities most devoutly who create the rakes and hoydens of literature. Take Ella Wheeler Wilcox, for instance. She is a thoroughly proper woman, married to a man she loves, and the mother of an interesting family. Mrs. Atherton, whose frank treatment of sex and marital problems has achieved such broadspread notoriety, leads a thoroughly blameless life. Though she is Bohemian in her ways and her name has often been linked with literary personages, there is not a positive fact against her character. With the Atherton family she is not popular, because she took the liberty of putting them into her books, but they have nothing to urge against her reputation. Her interest in immorality is intellectual. She likes to write of situations, but does not experiment in search of experiences. Maybe Mrs. Atherton would achieve a higher distinction in letters if she would obtain her facts about society and other things at first hand. She has nothing but hearsay on which to base her dicta about the elect of New York. She has seen them at Newport, at the theaters, on Fifth avenue, in the opera house, but it is safe to assert that her circle of personal acquaintances—who, by the way, are all possible subjects—does not include a single woman of the veritable haut monde. Consequently her strictures are worth very little.

***

When her husband died Mrs. Atherton was left but a small property, the bulk of his fortune going to their daughter. Like the members of the Atherton family, he had a share of the paternal acres, and in the girl's name is the inherited property. Since then she has been a literary lady, and has supported herself by her pen. She has written much, and though her books may have fetched but little money, her newspaper writings have always been generously remunerated. Her mental process is slow, and she has no facility. When she writes hastily her style is rough, but she has an excellent capacity at seizing the sensational feature of a situation, and her matter and generalizations are always debatable. It is a notable gift, that of exercising a public by one's strictures. By the way, Miss Atherton is now at school in the East, and will, doubtless, make her social debut here next year. She has spent but little of her life with her mother.

***

That President Jordan intended to challenge the professions by asserting there were but a dozen first class lawyers and a dozen first class doctors practicing in San Francisco, I don't believe. He is not given to making invidious comparisons of that character. It is curious though what indignation this imputation has aroused among the great and little men of the Crocker, Mills and Parrott buildings. I have actually heard the Doctor alluded to as a demagogue, and yet no one but Dr. Beverly Cole seems disposed to take issue with the verdict. We are indeed blessed if we have two dozen first rate men in the professions. Practice and prominence by no means argue knowledge and scientific ability, and a doctor to be "first rate" must possess both in a high degree. The "lawyer with a pull" may only be a huckster, who secures success by stacking the cards against his opponent. Had Dr. Jordan made the same statement in New York he might have approximated the situation more accurately. But what were the City Editors thinking about when they failed to gather interviews with our eminent lawyers and doctors to discover who the other eleven were? Apropos of Jordan, he has certainly made himself our leading critic. His strictures are continually precipitating sensations. He has made a success of the Stanford University, and is beloved by his graduates, but he has set the ministers by the ears by asserting the truth about revivals; he was the most practical speaker before the Pure Food convention, and talked common sense on the facts of living to the Woman's Congress. Surely that is a brilliant record for half a year's labors.

BOSWELL JR.

THE LESSON

THE ASSAULT

FENCING FOR WOMEN

Parry and Riposte as an Exercise for the Fair Sex.

In face of the fact that five minutes' fencing is more fatiguing than five minutes' boxing, you will be told by those who know that practice with the foils is the very best possible exercise for women. This adaptability may be, in part, due to the fact that women are naturally good at fencing. To be an expert fence of the Haute Ecole requires the strength of wrist and arm that only a man can acquire, but a woman can be a moderately good fencer in a much shorter time than her husband or brother. Women pick up the knack of the thing quicker than men do, and master the very delicate, almost impalpable wrist and finger work in half the time. Just in this connection it is curious to note that piano-players, especially female performers, are particularly apt pupils with the foil. The reason for this, so Professor Tronchet once told me, lies in the fact that what fencers call "the feeling for the blade" lies almost entirely in the fingers. It would seem that the sensitiveness in the finger-tips that is developed by scales and exercises and the like is just the thing necessary for a proper grip on the hilt. "Grip" is probaly the wrong word, for no good swordsman or swordswoman "grips" their foil, and, indeed, the tighter it is gripped the easier it is for your adversary to disarm you.

Most women are averse to fencing for fear that it will over-develop the muscles of the arm and the——well, the muscles in general. But it don't do that, somehow. Tronchet showed me his arm, that has wielded a foil for nearly forty years, and it was positively slender. It is true that women develop the chest rapidly enough after they have begun to fence, but there are few women who should object to that. Then again, women are quicker with the eye than men, and besides that have a certain supersensitiveness of perception, intuition, instinct—call it what you will—that foresees an adversary's move, even before he maks it—guesses at it, feels it—in some delicate way in the contact of the blades. But the great difficulty that stands in the way of a woman becoming really great with the foils, is that she lacks coolness. The same delicacy of nerves that stands her in good stead on ordinary occasions upsets her quite completely when in a match for points. You must keep cool while you are working the little steel whip, for the variation of an inch, the deflection of a muscle by ever so little, will very probably mean a point against you.

Then again, there are fencers and there are fighters. The very best distinction I remember to have been drawn between Mr. Corbett and Mr. Fitzsimmons was along these same lines. Corbett was described as a wonderfully clever boxer. Fitzsimmons was mentiontioned as an equally clever boxer and a "fighter" as well. A fencer must warm to his work — must have the "do or die" streak in him or her, somewhere — the determination that is not afraid. It's hard to find this purely masculine element in a woman. One woman from California has it, and Tronchet names her as the best fencing girl in America. Olive Olliver is the girl, and after three years at the foils she could literally fight M. Tronchet's assistant to a standstill — could force him clean off the mat. She was so clever that she could rest while she was fencing — could stand back there on the mat and parry and parry and parry, while the assistant thrust, and then—piff! paff!—she'd lunge out like a sprung bolt and come in on her man, touch him and recover with a dexterity that savored of the miracle. But she was a very strong young woman, was Miss Olliver, and stood five eight in her——fencing shoes. I should have liked to have seen her at her work.

There is no one particular set of muscles a woman develops in fencing — that's the beauty of the game. She exercises every tendon of her body simultaneously, and the grace and the delicacy that comes with the repeated practice is beyond words. Girls have been known — girls who aspired to the stage — so awkward that they could not walk into a crowded room without feeling as if their feet and hands were growing larger, who nevertheless took to fencing to overcome this difficulty, and brought themselves in time to face a packed theatre from the wrong side of the footlights with the ease and self-possession of veterans—all due to their fencing practice. Gracefulness is, after all, merely co-ordination of the muscles, and when you see that every individual muscle known to anatomy is brought into play in the course of a fencing bout, you will be ready to believe that there's something in it after all.

The thing that masters of fence demand of their women pupils is not a tremendous expenditure of strength, but rather an exhibition of skill. The "lunge" is all very well, but it should occur no oftener in a fencing bout than a swing for a knockout does in a sparring contest. Women can and do readily master the most essential feature of the foils, i. e., the finger work, the flexions and pronations that tell the most, and they catch on to the thing infinitely quicker than men. For the average man to become an average good fencer, five years of daily practice is absolutely necessary; but how long do you suppose his sister or his cousin, or his wife, if you like (always presuming she is the average kind of girl) — how long do you suppose she must be at it before she can beat him? Two years only! Think of it! And Olive Olliver could have made him look like a lemon-grater after she had been at it for three!

SECOND PARRY ON A LOW THRUST

LA GUERRE OPERA BOUFFE

However It May Only Be the End of the Beginning.

And now from the press correspondents with the armies in Thessaly goes up a wail that there has been no fighting worth corresponding about. There has been marching on the part of the Turks and retreating on the part of the Greeks, a war involving 100,000 men has been in progress and not one thousand have been killed. The thing has become the most farcical campaign of the century, and all because of the cowardice of the Greeks. "Saturday morning, the Greeks gone; Sunday morning, Larissa taken." That is how Stevens of the "Mail" describes one of these battles in Thessaly. Every journal of note made elaborate and enormously expensive preparations for gathering news of the fighting. The correspondents upon the field were as a swarm of bees and each had a train of horses and tents, supplies and retainers. The illustrated papers had artists and photographers on the spot by the dozen, and the telegraph companies outdid each other in their preparations to handle the war dispatches. And after all these preparations comes the greatest burlesque of war that has ever been played, and the newspapers, after expending small fortunes to obtain war news, have merely played the part of advertiser to a vast comic opera. Each time that there was promise of good fighting the Greeks negatived it by running away.

Standing on the top of Milouna, Stevens, of the London "Mail," looked down upon a plain covered with Turkish and Greek soldiers and waited for a tremendous battle to begin. He says, speaking of this plain: "No troops could cross the brown without showing dust storms on it; none could cross the green without showing black lines for infantry and brown lines for cavalry, black blots with smaller black satellites grouped around them for guns. You could see every move on a chessboard a hundred square miles in size, with eighty thousand men for pieces and the fate of two nations for the stake. It was the finest place to see a battle one could imagine. Only—only there was no battle to see."

The more news that comes to hand concerning the Greek debacle the more one is compelled to believe that the good name of Greece will be tarnished for years to come by the series of mismanagements, blunders, incompetencies and arrant, inexcusable, blind cowardice that have made up the exasperating stories of the war. For instance, Stevens describes the loss of Thessaly in these words: "On Friday evening we were in position to fight a great battle for Thessaly. To-day, or Tuesday evening, we are practically its masters, and we have not lost half a dozen men between then and now. How did it all come about?"

But now comes a truly formidable bit of news. Greece has been beaten abjectly and finally, and it would have been supposed that with Thessaly at their feet, after hardly a blow had been struck, the Turks surely would not have deemed it necessary to bring up reinforcements. But Turkey has taken a leaf from Greece's book. Greece defied Europe with an army of 80,000 and bullied the powers and declared themselves ready to make war upon "The Concert," and for a time The Concert actually hesitated and temporized before the bluffing little nation. If Greece could defy England, Germany, Russia and France with her handful of troops, what cannot Turkey do with her army of the best soldiers of Europe. So it has come about that while the armistice is pending Turkey has been pouring into Northern Greece company after company, regiment after regiment, brigade after brigade, until to-day there are probably 500,000 Turkish troops between Milouna and Dhomokos. Perhaps these half million troops are there to reinforce Edhim Pasha against the 30,000 terrified Greeks, or perhaps they are there to back up Turkey's demands when The Concert begins to arrange the terms of peace. It is the mobilization of this tremendous army that is perhaps the most important feature of the campaign—more important than the mere defeat of the timorous Greeks.

Concerning this serious and menacing situation Julian Ralph has written the following:

"The Sultan's counselors said to him: 'Do you not see that Greece successfully defies all Europe, and yet is not a thousandth part as strong as Turkey?' Continuing, his advisers said: 'You have been deceived too long. Turkey has been the cat's-paw of its own foolish fears of Europe. We now know the helplessness of the Christian nations and their inability to combine. Let us mobilize a grand army on the soil we have captured in Greece. Let us heavily garrison each Greek town we have taken, and when the war ends let us make our own terms and declare our huge army shall not be removed until our demands are satisfied.'"

In a word, the Greek war has been used by Turkey merely as a pretext for showing her strength to the European nations. Long after it was apparent that the Greeks had no sand, Turkey continued to pour men into Macedonia and Thessaly. She added 60,000 troops after it was evident that her army could whip the Greeks hands down. To-day the whole route from Salonica to Dhomoko is blue with the enormous procession of reinforcements that will number 300,000 men when all reach the field. Two hundred thousand reserves are in readiness to proceed to the front.

This mobilization completely throws the war into the shade. It means Turkey's readiness for a great war. It means her determination to show the Christian powers that Turkey is no longer willing to play the part of dunce in the European school.

Not the least among the many disappointments of this guerre pour rire is the Crown Prince Constantine himself. He has incurred the lasting enmity of the correspondents not only by his pusillanimous conduct at the front but by his petty niggling with the dispatches. Indeed, he is described as giving more time to and taking more enjoyment out of revising the correspondents' stuff than in the maneuvering and disciplining of his troops. He allowed no dispatch to be put on the wires that was in any way uncomplimentary to himself or that contained any adverse comment upon his management of the campaign. He has been known to alter entirely the text of dispatches that passed under his hands, even to the sending of false and misleading reports of military actions. So persistent and effective has been his hostility to the press representatives that they have been at times compelled to send their "stuff" by couriers and others, or else to go themselves.

The little kingdom of Bavaria is the center of the beer-brewing interests of continental Europe. The ordinary American bar is an unknown feature there, the beer hall being provided with tables and chairs, and the barrel containing the beverage being in full view of the customers. The beer is drawn direct by means of a wooden spigot, the kegs being brought every morning from the cellar of the brewery and the beer being therefore fresh and sufficiently cool. The use of ice is condemned, as iced beer is regarded as unwholesome, the Bavarian considering that ice destroys the life of the beer. The latest statistics show the annual production in Bavaria as 425,000,000 gallons. All beer is carefully examined and analyzed by Government officials, and certain stringent provisions with regard to the ingredients are strictly enforced.

A Thief for Twenty Minutes

By JUSTIN STURGIS

"Look at me," said Mrs. Trevor.

Inasmuch as I had come for no other purpose I obeyed with some alacrity.

"I look like an honest woman, don't I?"

I nearly upset my teacup at this, and I've forgotten what I said.

"Yes," said Mrs. Trevor; "and yet once I came so near, oh, so very near, being a thief."

I can't say whether I was relieved or dismayed, but I declare I was interested. Mrs. Trevor put the cap over the blue flame of the little lamp, and dropped a slice of lemon in her tea.

"It just shows," she went on, moodily, "you live your life along, and you do things and rent a pew somewheres and you think you are as far removed from what the papers call the 'criminal classes' as you possibly can be, and you thank your God that you are not such as they, and then something happens — the occasion presents itself, and all of a sudden you find that deep down in the heart of you that there is a little criminal hidden away after all. First you are curious to know what this little criminal is like, and then it scares you, and then it makes you feel so humble and ashamed, and very charitable, you know. Fancy me a thief! and practically I was that. I believe," said Mrs. Trevor, settling back on the sofa, "that I shall tell you all about it.

"It was when I had been married to Trevor about two years. You know how fond he was of horses then. I don't believe he missed a single day at the track during the season. I used to go with him often enough. We and the Farringtons used to make up parties. One day—will I ever forget that dreadful day?—it was a Saturday, and it had rained all the night before. The race for the Shattery Cup was to be run, and, of course, we were going — Nina Farrington and her good man and Trevor and I. We were going in our carriage. At noon Trevor came home and said he could not go—there was to be a directors' meeting, and he had to be there. 'But,' says he:

"'Jo, put up twenty-five for me on Hammer and Tongs in the Shattery Cup race, will you? I have an idea that she may win to-day on that sticky track,' and he gave me the money.

"Well, I called for the Farringtons a little after one, and we went out to the course. The Shattery Cup was the first on the card. We got there a bit late. A whole lot of people whom we knew were there already, and little Tony Jones came over to our carriage and brought me some flowers, and stood there chaffing and talking for nearly quarter of an hour. Then, all of a sudden, everybody cried 'They're off!' and I looked up, and sure enough, they were off for the Shattery Cup.

"'Oh,' I cried, vexed at forgetting about Hammer and Tongs, and I was just going to ask Tony if he couldn't put up Trevor's twenty-five even then, when I remembered that he had told me not to let any one know he was betting. So I had to sit still and watch the race. If Hammer and Tongs won I knew Trevor would be horribly put out with me, and say things — you know how Trevor is—and I just sat there in the carriage and prayed and prayed that he wouldn't win. And he didn't — the favorite won, and Hammer and Tongs finished nowhere. Well, I thought I was saved, of course. I could tell Trevor that the horse was looking out of all form, and couldn't possibly have won, and he would praise me for my good judgment. Tony Jones went away to get his winnings, and Farrington went with him. Mrs. Farrington was talking with the Belcher boys on the other side of the carriage, so I was left alone for a moment. One of the messengers came along and suddenly I beckoned to him and gave him Trevor's twenty-five dollars.

"'Put it all on Brandywine in the next race,' said I, in a whisper.

"Why I did this I don't know—I never will know. It was just a whim—the flimsiest kind of a caprice. I knew absolutely nothing about the horse, and had never even known of his name till I saw it on the card. Perhaps it was because I fancied the silk he sported — old gold and green. I didn't even know how the men were betting on him; whether he was a favorite or an outsider. I didn't know the weight he carried, nor the distance he was to run—nothing, nothing. I wanted Brandywine to win, and that was all.

"Well, the race started and I watched the old gold and green through Farrington's glasses. All around me the crowd was calling for Maybird and Criterion, and as the horses came 'round the turn Tony Jones swung his hat and shouted, 'Maybird leads — it's Maybird's race!' and then Farrington said 'No, Criterion is holding him.' Then he broke off, and exclaimed, 'What the devil is that horse coming up on the outside?' 'By Jove, I don't know!' gasped Tony, all in a breath. But I knew, because his rider wore an old gold cap and a green shirt. It was Brandywine. His jockey was sitting almost on his neck, and his arm was swinging like a windmill, and we could hear him crying out to his horse between jumps. I never was so excited in my life, and I bit a hole through the forefinger of my glove to keep from screaming. Then the race came down and past in a ripple of hoofs and a cloud of dust. A dirty little negro boy threw his bucket in the air and yelled 'Brandywine wins!' and I looked at him, caught his eye, and nodded to him, saying, under my breath, 'Yes, yes, Brandywine wins.'

"There was lots of confusion then, and bye and bye I saw my messenger coming back. He was bright enough to understand that I didn't want to have it known I had been betting on Brandywine. So he chose a moment when our party wasn't looking and slipped a roll of bills into my hand.

"'How much?' I whispered.

"'The odds were sixty to one. You've won fifteen hundred dollars.'

"I suppose my demoralization began from that moment—from the moment I felt those bills in my hand and knew that they represented fifteen hundred dollars. Strangely enough, I was cool and collected upon the instant, and found means to put the money into my pocket without any one noticing. When Mrs. Farrington turned back to me she said:

"'Tony Jones says an outsider won, and that his cousin lost nearly a thousand dollars on the race.'

"'I only wish Trevor had been here,' said I. 'I think I've heard him say that Brandywine was a good colt.'

"You see, I had begun to lie already. Trevor had never so much as spoken a word to me about Brandywine. But the race and its result and the betting, and above all, the touch of those bills and the knowledge that I had won fifteen hundred dollars without so much as moving from my place, had undone me completely. Remember, it was the first time I had ever bet on a race.

"Then it flashed upon me that this money was Trevor's, not mine. I never remember to have been quite so bitterly disappointed. It was positively cruel. I suffered a real physical spasm at the thought. I did not consider Trevor as my husband, but only as someone, not myself, who was to profit by my efforts. If I had done as Trevor had told me, he would have lost his money. I had acted according to my own judgment and he was fifteen hundred dollars richer. If he had gained that money in any other way—by a business transaction, say—I would have been only too glad on his account, but because I had gambled for him and won I grudged him every penny, and felt bitter and mean. I wanted the money. You can have no idea how I wanted it.

"I don't know when and how it occurred to me Trevor would never be the wiser if I should keep his winnings, but I realized on the way home that I had been considering this side of the question for several minutes. You see, this was the situation: Trevor would think that I had bet on Hammer and Tongs, but that horse had been beaten, and he would not expect me to give him back any money. Nobody knew that I had won on Brandywine, Trevor last of all. I could keep the money and he would never know, or I could give him back twenty-five dollars and tell him the half-truth, that I had missed the opportunity of placing it on Hammer and Tongs. I did not, I could not, bring myself to call it thieving—it was preposterous—impossible. I only knew I wanted to keep my fifteen hundred dollars.

"Ah, the things that I could do with my money! The delight I would have in spending it! Never, never, never, was a sum of money so dear to me. I planned a thousand schemes. I thought of the gowns I could buy, of the dinners I could give, of the hundred and one little unsatisfied desires I could gratify. You will say I could have had an equal amount from my husband by the mere asking; well, so I could, but don't you see, this money—this dear fifteen hundred—was a found treasure, a visitation of providence, a god from the machine—anything you like—that was charming, fascinating, alluring. I made up my mind to keep it in spite of everything.

"But another impulse was the saving of me. Almost without intending it, I told Mrs. Farrington of my luck before we arrived home. I simply could not keep the news to myself. The desire to dazzle her with my fifteen hundred, I suppose, had much to do with it. At any rate I told her, and then Farrington, without stopping to think.

"Now I could not keep the money. I had to be honest in spite of myself. And with that a strange revulsion of feeling came over me. Within ten minutes after I had spoken to Mrs. Farrington I was aghast and horrified at myself. The idea that I could have even entertained the wish of keeping the money terrified me. I did not kn it could be so easy to be vile.

"That was a little crisis in my life," finished Mrs. Trevor. "It never returned, but it was a strange experience—for twenty minutes I was a thief."

"Now," said I, "I want to know one thing: Did you ever tell Trevor?"

I shall not tell you what Mrs. Trevor answered.

Do you think she ever did tell him?

---

The naval demonstration made by Great Britain recently in the Mediterranean, though quietly accomplished, has been a source of considerable interest to the other powers. The fleet consisted of forty-two vessels in all, and probably represented the most convincing and tremendous naval aggregation of the century. The "Moniteur de la Flotte" (Paris, April 17th), expressed a conviction that the French Chamber will never vote the $110,000,000 which must be spent annually for many years to come in order to make the French fleet equal to the British, while Germany can hardly fail to understand the hint conveyed to her. While this great assemblage of British warships was collected in the Mediterranean, the realm of the Kaiser committed its interests in the Greco-Turkish question to a single cruiser, and was apologizing to the United States Government for its inability to find any craft at all to represent the Empire on the occasion of the ceremonial dedication of the tomb of General Grant.

---

Havelock Ellis has spent some years in tabulating the reference to colors in literature. Yellow is rarely mentioned in the Bible, and blue not at all. Blue is not mentioned in Homer; red rarely, but he mentions yellow twenty-one times in a hundred. Since the Christian era red and yellow are mentioned most frequently, but blue is referred to twice as often since the sixteenth century as before. Poe mentions yellow twice as often and blue about one-quarter as often as any of his contemporaries in the list. That the color sense is a late development is shown by the fact that the natives of South Africa can distinguish only white and black (which are not colors at all) and red. Blue they call black, and yellow red. Green they cannot distinguish at all—confusing it with yellow and red with both.

One of the most curious results of the investigations made by doctors in the Russian jails is the statement that each group of criminals has its own peculiar color of the eye. A legal journal of Odessa states that it has been found that thieves and murderers usually possess "chestnut-brown"eyes. Robbers—that is to say, thieves in a large and violent line of business—have slate-colored eyes, and the same is said of criminals convicted of swindling. The vagabond classes, among whom are probably reckoned the passportless class, have eyes of azure-blue tint. The color most observed among minor criminals and those convicted of slight offenses is "chestnut-brown green."

According to official statistics close on eighty thousand persons visited the eleven principal curative springs of Bohemia during the summer of 1896. Of this vast number rather more than half went to Carlsbad alone. The attendance showed a falling off as compared with that of the previous season, owing to inclement weather and unusual attractions in other parts of Europe. These figures are interesting as showing the possibilities which attach to the many invaluable springs which abound in some of the most beautiful parts of this State. As these become better known through the enterprise of their proprietors a rich harvest should be reaped.

A regular slave mart still exists in many country districts of Finland. Once a year such paupers, lunatics and aged people of each parish who cannot support themselves are put up at public auction and consigned to those families or farmers who will board them at the lowest price offered by the parish authorities. The helpless creatures are made to work as much as possible by their owners, who have the right to chastise them.

Certain young colored women of Norcross, Ga., have been poisoned by the application of a lotion guaranteed to make colored people white. Face bleach to make white women whiter is not unknown, and the results of some processes for improving the skin are serious, if there is not a disfigurement for life, as in the case of one of the colored women who made use of a generous quantity of the lotion. Hairdressers say that bleached hair is sure to fall out eventually.

DECORATION-DAY YACHTING ON THE BAY

MISS GEORGIA BUSBY
One of the new beauties of the Frawley Company
Thors, photo

MISS SIBYL SANDERSON
Antonio Terry was granted a divorce from his wife on May 22d by the Civil Tribunal of the Seine. He is free now to marry Miss Sanderson, to whom he has been engaged for several years. He is many times a millionaire. This is the latest portrait of the Californian prima donna, by Reutlinger

MISS MAY MANNERING
The young English actress whose beauty is said to rival that of Maxine Elliott
Sarony, photo

BELLES OF THE BOARDS

THE LADY OF LIONS

Adgie and Her Tawny Pets, with Remarks on the Power of the Eye.

Prince is the lion bon garcon, a big, clumsy, lazy, shiftless, good-natured lump of a lion, with unexpected lapses of coquettery (as for instance when he throws out a paw at Adgie's swirling skirts when she's doing her dance in the cage), like any overgrown puppy. Trilby is very young, hardly old enough to have any developed character; but Victoria—if ever a lioness deserved a good hiding Victoria is that one; a nasty, evil, perverse, cross-grained, treacherous, snarling, sulky cat, with a skulk like an assassin and teeth like whetted knives.

"She should be sold or shot," Adgie told me as I followed her into her dressing-room after the turn was over. "That ought to be an iron-clad rule, once a lion has bitten you, sell him or shoot him."

"And has she bitten you?"

"Look at my nose."

There was a long scar on it, sure enough.

"And my thumb."

The nail was missing.

"And I just wish you could see my ankle."

So did I, but I didn't say so.

"You see," said Adgie, "Victoria is not what we call a handling lion, such as Prince. Prince was born in a cage, but Victoria is forest bred; was two years old before she was captured."

"I declare!" said I. "I don't see how one comes to choose such a profession as yours."

"Oh, I got into it by degrees. My father was a cigar seller in Mexico, and used to keep wild animals, pumas, and monkeys and foxes and the like, and so I got used to them. Then I went with a circus for awhile with a troop of performing dogs, and next I began going into the cage with young lions, whelps, and so little by little I got into the way of it."

"How about 'the power of the human eye' over them?" I asked her at this point. I hoped that Adgie would scoff at this, for I wanted to shatter that ideal. I did not believe that one could "look down" a lion.

"Why, of course," said Adgie, at once. "When I look straight at Victoria I can see her pupils get larger and larger, and she gets nervous and wants to slink out of the way. Yes, I can make them cower that way, if they will only give me time. It's these little nips, and digs, and the quick lashing out of their paws that tell, and it's all done like a flash before you are aware of it. And then you know you can be prepared for every imaginable accident and contingency, and the very one particular last thing that you had not thought of is the one that happens."

"As for instance?"

"Well, at Los Angeles, when I was doing that act where I lie down with Prince and put his paws around me (the audience don't know it, but that's the part of my work that I dislike the most)—well, on that special morning he slipped his paw over the back of my head, then good-humoredly enough he began clawing at my head, just as a kitten would claw at a hearth rug. If I had moved or twitched away he would have scalped me like an Indian, but I lay still and called for Mr. Hall, who prodded him away."

"And your other narrow escape?"

"Again, in Los Angeles, I had my head in Prince's mouth and he made up his mind to close it. I could feel his jaws contracting. I did my best, but what's my strength! I jerked my head away and his great teeth snapped like a spring trap right in my ear. So close was it that he did actually catch a lock of my hair between his teeth. Oh sooner or later I suppose they will be the death of me."

"I can't see then why in the world you stay with them."

"Because I'm very fond of my lions. It's always the same. After each accident I say, 'Now, this time, you brute, I'm going to shoot you, this time I shan't forgive you,' and then in the morning when I come to their cage up go their tails, and they rub up against the bars, and when I go in they paw me over and are so glad that I can't have the heart to do it. Poor old chaps, they don't know any better."

"Hold on!" I exclaimed, "you don't mean to tell me that they are fond of you?"

"Why, of course," said Adge, blandly.

Which was one view of the matter that had entirely escaped me.

DRAMATIZING "TESS"

Lorimer Stoddard Explains How the Great Play Was Made.

Now what shall one say of a young fellow of twenty-six who has orders for plays from Goodwin and from Daly and from the Tabers and other such swells, who

LORIMER STODDARD
Whose dramatization of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" has been the success of the season in New York wrote a dramatization of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" between Friday noon and Wednesday night, and a dramatization that set the New York critics and the New York audiences all agog with praise and commendation. All this Lorimer Stoddard has done, though he is yet to see his seven and twentieth birthday. How did he do it? you say.

"Well," he said to me, "you see, Hardy had made a dramatic version of the play, and had sent it about to different managers, to Daly and others. They wouldn't touch it because they said it was impracticable from a stage point of view. Finally Harper Brothers sent it to Mrs. Fiske, because they knew she wanted it. Mrs. Fiske had read a play of mine—the one now under rehearsal by the Frawleys—and she thought I could take hold of 'Tess' and dramatize it, provided Harpers and Hardy approved. Well, they did approve, and so I went at it, hammer and tongs. I read 'Tess' through very carefully, and turned down a page when I wanted an act to end. For instance, I turned down page 150. Everything before page 150 must be explained or enacted in the first act, and so on all through the five acts. For each act I chose one salient particular point around which the action was grouped and which led up to the climax, always trying to keep the atmosphere of the thing as much as was possible. In the first act the point I made (different from the novel a little) was this: Tess leaves her letter of confession on Angel's windowsill, together with a rose. I have made her mother—who is planning for her to marry Angel—steal this letter and leave only the rose in its place. Angel, finding the rose, believes it to be some sort of declaration made to him by Tess. He comes up to her and takes her in his arms, and Tess allows him to do so under the impression that he has read her letter and forgiven her. The second act is the wedding, and the climax that is brought about is Angel's abrupt departure after Tess' final verbal confession. The third act shows where and how Tess returns to Alec d'Urberville. The fourth act consummates in the murder of Alec, and the fifth, very short, merely relates the capture of Tess in Stonehenge.

"To start in with, I wrote a scenario of the action, merely the story of the thing without conversation, in order to get the movement of the piece before breaking it up into dialogue. That was the hardest part of the work, the choosing of what I was going to dramatize. I had just got this done and written perhaps fifty lines of the first act when I got word that owing to some complication, some misunderstanding in the contract, the time I was allowed for finishing the work was suddenly curtailed. Mrs. Fiske came to me in all sorts of consternation, quite hopeless as to even producing the piece. 'That's all right,' said I. 'I'll have your play for you,' and in five days it was ready, sure enough, but of course the hardest and longest part of the work—the scenario—was over and done with. And by the way, say right here that Mrs. Fiske is, in my notion, quite the most wonderful actress we have in America. With her in the title role my work was easy. She is a small woman, but somehow in the scene of the last act she manages to give one the impression of expanding and dilating as she speaks the last words. Just as the dawn is breaking and the men are closing in about their resting place, she says, 'The sun has come,' referring to another line uttered at the beginning of the act. The critics have chosen to consider this the crux of the play. One that I know of wrote eight different critiques upon it, called it 'Wagnerian.'"

"How 'Wagnerian?'" I asked.

"In it's out-of-door-ness; see how I mean?"

I saw exactly. Then I said, to start a new line:

"What style of play do you prefer to write, Mr. Stoddard?" and Stoddard said:

"The kind that will take."

Which is reasonable enough, at least.

As President Kruger's term of office will expire next year, the Transvaal Volksraad will be required to make provision for the election of his successor before the end of May. Oom Paul is a candidate.

MISS ALICE MOFFIT

MRS. BENT, NEE ETHEL COHEN

MISS EMMA BUTLER

MISS BERNIE DROWN

MISS JULIA CROCKER

MISS MARGUERITE JOLLIFFE

MISS HELEN WAGNER

MISS IDA GIBBONS

MRS. CHARLES LYMAN BENT (NEE ETHEL COHEN) AND HER BRIDESMAIDS

A PAIR OF WORTHIES

The Death of a Noble Spendthrift and the Marriage of an Aristocratic Scoundrel.

Two of the most prominent figures among the continental nobles during the last five years have been the Hungarian Count Esterhazy and the Prussian Duke Gunther of Schleswig-Holstein, brother of the German Emperor.

An important event in the lives of each one of these men has of late brought them into unusual public prominence. Gunther is to be married, Esterhazy has just died.

In some respects Count Esterhazy was a man to be admired, in spite of his extraordinary eccentricities and his boundless extravagance. He was a patron of arts, a Mycenas, but on a scale that would have put even the Augustan Knight to shame. In his forty-sixth year Esterhazy came into his father's title and his father's enormous fortune, and at once the reckless vagaries of his character were unloosed. He immediately took possession of the old family castle in Tata, Hungary, and in a surprisingly short time had built there a theater, a circus, a Greek amphitheater and a race course. He tried to buy every piece of property in town in order that he might literally hold the place as did his ancestors. As soon as he had purchased a house he caused it to be painted red as a sign of his ownership. Esterhazy not only wanted to "own the town," but he wanted to paint it red as well.

The money that this strange-minded man has lavished upon the drama would almost build a battleship. In his theater at Tata, for a few weeks during every year, a company of young players appeared at his expense and under his own management. The audiences were composed of his friends, whom he summoned from every quarter of Europe, Paris, London and St. Petersburg. If Esterhazy approved of the work, either of the actor or the author, it was very probable that the young aspirant would be educated at his expense. A certain dramatic school in Vienna was specially organized to furnish artists for these plays, and soon it was current gossip that the young girls who went to perform at Tata were speedily corrupted. If this was true it was also true that the Count knew nothing of the fact, as he returned every night immediately after the performance and never took part in any of the midnight festivities.

His circus was another of his passions. During the summer season amateur circuses by the score were held on the parade grounds of the town. In these circuses the servants of the Count and some of his soldiers figured as performers, while the Count himself wielded the whip of the ringmaster. On one of these occasions the royal "artist" had the misfortune to gouge out the eye of one of his troupe, his valet. As a compensation the victim was given a glass eye and presented with a really fine farm and a charming villa.

Esterhazy was a blown in the glass sportsman. But in this as in everything else his eccentricity was apparent. He never wagered on a race unless his own horses were entered, and then never more than 300 gulden. He never was present when his horses ran, but remained at home, in bed, with his physician at his side to brace him up with stimulants and to allay his nerves with narcotics in case his horses lost. If he won, however, Esterhazy celebrated the event with tremendous solemnity, but turned over every penny of his winnings to the people of his stable.

Of a far different character is Gunther of Schleswig-Holstein, own brother of Emperor William. Gunther is fairly putrid with vice, a man as utterly devoid of the sense of honor as the lowest jailbird that ever wore stripes. For ten years he has figured in every capital of Europe as a debauchee, a gambler, a wrecker of homes, a drunkard, a liar and general blackguard. He has been exiled from court so many times that this form of chastisement has lost all its terrors for him, and has been practically banished from Berlin for the last six years.

A fair idea of the moral caliber of this fine young gentleman may be had by a glance at the part he played in the now famous "Kutze anonymous letters scandal."

The Duke had become infatuated with the Countess

FRANK WORTHING

The clever English actor who plays leading roles in the Frawley Company

Hohenau, one of the most beautiful women of the German court and at the same time one of the most irreproachable. Despite the fact that she was already married and even romantically devoted to her husband, the Duke made her the object of the most conspicuous and insulting attention. The Countess at first attempted to ignore him. She returned his letters unopened, sent back his presents, avoided him at court balls and finally cut him publicly at one of the court functions.

At this the scoundrel at last took offense, and began to forward to not only the Countess but also to all the members of her acquaintance the most outrageously abusive and vilely scurrilous anonymous letters, charging the lady with the most infamous practices, in a language quite befitting a hod-carrier or truck driver. Not only this, but the chivalrous nobleman allowed a certain Von Kotze to be arrested and disgraced as the author of these missives. The Count and Countess of Hohenau laid their case before the Emperor, and demanded that the Duke be brought to justice. Kotze was cleared of the charge, but the Emperor was not over-gracious to the Hohenaus, who had dared to accuse his brother. The upshot of the affair was the temporary banishment of the Duke from the court, a punishment which, as said before, has but few terrors for him.

And now comes the news that this rascal is to be married to a young convent-bred girl of sixteen, a girl absolutely ignorant of the world, the very pink of innocence, the Princess Dorothea of Coburg-Kohary, reared by her parents, Prince Ferdinand, the Austrian field marshal, and the eldest daughter of the King of the Belgians, in the strictest adherence to the Catholic Church. She is described as having a fresh, pink and white skin, large hazel eyes and a well-rounded though youthful figure.

This horrible misalliance has been brought about by the Princess Clementine of Coburg, known to be one of the most astute politicians of the world. As no dynastic issue is at stake, it is hard to imagine the raison d'etre of the union, other than the possible checking of the Duke's career. But if this end is accomplished at all, it will be at a sacrifice which only the bride herself can tell of or appreciate.

SONNET.

Watson and I and several others thought
That Abdul Hamid would be damned at last,
And out of Europe bag and baggage cast,
When Greece her rabble to the frontier brought;
But there a Tartar in the Turk she caught,
For Edim's sword was like that deadly blast
Which o'er Sennacherib's great army past
When ancient Israel with Assyria fought.

But times have changed; we saw no angel swoop
To snatch poor little Greece from out the soup,
Where Turkish bayonets did her carcass stir.
So Willie Watson, you must change your tune,
And sing the single star and crescent moon,
Or write a sonnet to a scimiter.

—L. A. R.

Miss Mary Mannering is the new beauty whom Daniel Frohman has begun to boom as the rival of Maxine Elliott. There are more picturesque portraits than that of the actress which appears on this page, but one obtains from it a rational impression of her style. She comes to us with the Lyceum Company, and is said to have talent out of proportion to her charms. She is young, being but twenty-one, but she has been on the boards since arriving at six years. Miss Mannering is leading lady in the Lyceum Company, and seems to have commended herself both to the critics and the theater goers in New York.

Lecturing on the "Study of Law," on the occasion of a great university function, Judge Wendell Holmes demonstrated, in a manner highly piquant, that the study of the law means just how to avoid it; that law is neither a matter of morals nor logic, and that Roman law in particular is a useless and antiquated encumbrance. He thus steered his audience of students clear of the hypocrisy which treats law, as we have it in actual life, as a branch of deductive philosophy.

The British Legislature is said to be growing abnormally lazy. The House of Commons was counted out recently, with some 400 members present, before six o'clock on two successive days, on the first occasion the time, 4:50 p. m., being the earliest on record.

THE CRAGS FROM DOME TRAIL

IN CAMPING PARTY

MOSS BRAE FALLS

A TAVERN IN THE CLOUDS

Castle Crags and the Wonderful Country Surrounding It.

When the first visitor to the spot saw the peaks that have since been called Castle Crags he went on record as saying, "They don't make 'em any better than that." And the echo of that pioneer visitor's speech seems to have hung about the three great cliffs, so that now one catches it up involuntarily. They don't make 'em much finer, it is true. For the scenery around the Tavern of Castle Crags runs the gamut of mountainous beauty from end to end many times in one day, striking every note of the picturesque from the pretty and the charming to the sublime and the magnificent.

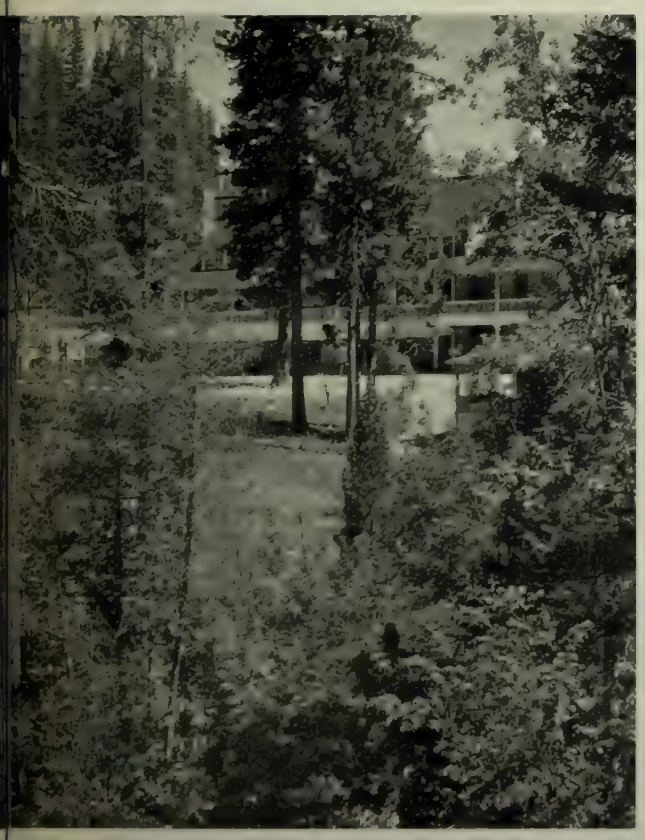
The sojourner at the Tavern may sit quietly on the veranda that faces the Crags and without moving from his place enjoy a slow-shifting panorama of color and form and light that is quite unequaled anywhere on the Pacific slope, not even in the Yosemite. Looking out in the morning the Crags seems to be but one flat, solid mass of impenetrable rocks shrouded by a thin veil of blue mist, but later on their appearance changes; little rifts and canyons appear, with here and there a waterfall and here and there a solitary, huge sugar pine, growing, apparently, from the very rock. The peaks draw apart in clusters, until the groups resemble the spires of the Milan Cathedral, enormously enlarged. Again, in the evening, the great walls of granite are flooded with a gorgeous radiance of red and golden light.

Formidable as they appear, it no great exertion to travel these "rattling crags among." Trails starting from the Tavern lead into the fastnesses of the great rocks, and though there are pathways [illegible] erous enough to be attractive to those who "go in [illegible]r mountain climbing on Alpine proportions, the majority of the

E WCODS

WHERE TROUT ABOUND

AN EARLY-MORNING CANTER



MPSE OF THE TAVERN

footways are easy enough traveling for even women. Indeed, there is scarcely a point of interest about the Tavern that cannot be reacher by norseback. The view to be obtained of Mount Shasta from the summit of the Crags is in itself worth the trip to the Tavern, for from this coign of vantage there are no intervening mountains or ridges that tend to dwarf and diminish the splendor of the mighty hill.

The Tavern of Castle Crags is much that its name implies. You have come here to have a good time, not to dress three tir . day, nor to do precisely the same thing at preci. the same hours in precisely the precise and conventional way. There is a certain homeliness and graciousness about the Tavern folk that goes far to do away with the stiff formality that is the great drawback of other less favored localities. You may do as you please in and about the Tavern; eat when you please, and, above all, wear what you please, even to a golf suit or riding habit at the supper table.

A feature of the hotel is its donkeys for the use of the children of the guests. Quite an innovation on the usual hotel management, which forbids children the parlors, frowns them out of the corridors, keeps them off the grass and forbids them to pick the flowers.

There are plenty of things to do at the Tavern—any number of occupations for spare time. There is riding and driving, and the walks of the place are one of its reasons for existence. Then there are things to shoot and things to fish for, deer there are and quail, and you may get trout at the very veranda of the hotel, and no stream about the place is so small but what it contains some fish. So taking it all in all, the Tavern of Castle Crags is as interesting and charming a locality as one would wish to pass a vacation in. Plenty of camping, plenty of sport, plenty of pure, sweet, spicy mountain air, views as big as "all out of doors," and tramps that are made expressly for the purpose of developing an appetite. The Tavern offers all the advantages of camping out combined with "all the comforts of home."

China has decided to organize a new navy, and orders are about to be sent to England or the Continent for four armored cruisers, two fast cruisers and several torpedo destroyers. If the Celestial Empire is determined on possessing a navy it would be well for it to place it in charge of a better personnel than that which oppsed the Japanese during the last war. China will find a navy a cost'y luxury, as additions and improvements will continally have to be made to keep it up to the requisite level of excellence, and as the empire is piling up a heavy debt it will have difficulty in meeting the outlay. If China would turn her attention to her internal resources she would acquire more beneficial results than she may ever expect from a navy. The country posseses mineral deposits of enormous extent; in iron ore she is immensely rich, and her coal beds, if properly worked, would revolutionize the commerce of the world. Their extent is estimated at a round four million square miles, the output of which might suffice to meet the needs of the world for a couple of thousand years to come. There are mines of anthracite in Shansi equal in quality to the best Pennsylvania, and virtually inexhaustible.

The election of "Billy" Mason will add another competent shorthand reporter to the membership of the United States Senate. Several years ago he was considered one of the best in the country. Judge Withrow, of the Rock Island railroad, used to say that a first-class stenographer was spoiled when Mason went into politics. It is not generally known that Senator Chandler, of New Hampshire, is also a proficient stenographer, like Representative Hitt, of Illinois. Both of them have been professionals, and both still use the shorthand system in making notes during debates, committee meetings, etc. Although he has not had active practice for twenty-five years or thirty years, Mr. Chandler is able to make and transcribe his notes as rapidly as when he was a young man in daily practice as reporter for the Supreme Court of New Hampshire.

Moral causes are generally physical causes, says William Penn Nixon of the Chicago "Inter Ocean." Cheap paper made from wood and straw instead of cotton rags has lowered the prices and tone of our better journals. Circulation became the motive to print and the aim fell lower down. Yet, from what we hear, the most profitable journals have maintained their price. Our drop to one cent in Chicago was the issue of a competition between Lawson and Medill. Lawson was publishing a two-cent new morning paper for one cent, while Medill became apprehensive about his old two-cent paper, and threatened a war. We all came down together to a cent. At that price there is nothing much at the business; but Lawson's evening paper is rich, as is Medill's Sunday issue; so they keep up the war.

Paris doctors declare that X-rays produce violent palpitations of the heart. Drs. Seguy and Quenisset have experimented on their students and on themselves, and declare that when continued the palpitations are unendurable. They stopped them by placing a metal plate between the heart and the rays. They advise people who are not in perfect health to keep out of the way of the X-rays, or, at any rate, to protect their vital organs against them.

Gertrude Atherton's new novel, "His Fortunate Grace," has for its motive an international marriage between a British peer and an American heiress. Mrs. Atherton satirizes society life and introduces in the tale at least one character, that of an ambitious society woman, which, it is said, will be recognized by all New Yorkers. The story recalls real episodes suggesting both the Craven-Martin and Marlborough-Vanderbilt affairs.

It was recently authoritatively stated in the course of some proceedings in a London police court that, contrary to the general practice of foreign consulates, the Consul of the United States never gave pecuniary assistance to destitute Americans, he having no fund for the purpose, in order to enable them to return to their own country.

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

What especial attraction, Diary dear, has the month of June for those who are inclined matrimonially, and why is it that prospective brides almost invariably choose it for their mating time? Hymen seems to reign supreme, and usually celebrates his advent by a nuptial feast on the very first day of the month. This year Minnie Burton opened the season with the eclat of a military wedding. She made a rarely pretty bride, was dressed in shimmering satin with puffs of tulle round the skirt, a long train and bodice trimmed with orange blossoms. She is a real June maiden, with very light brown hair, rosy cheeks, and is tall and willowy. What adds to her attractiveness is the dark brown eyes which form so great a contrast to her fair hair and skin. Some of the girls think her even prettier than Leila, but I would hardly say that. Leila and Kathro looked unusually well in pale blue taffeta silk frocks covered in tulle and trimmed with vast quantities of baby ribbon. Mrs. Burton wore a stunning gown of black satin and chiffon. Minnie carried bride roses and her sisters great bunches of pink buds. I took quite a fancy to Lieutenant Pearce; he seems a thoroughly good sort, as Arthur would put it. There were any number of army men, all in their regimentals, and they do set them off. If I were an officer I should don mine on the shallowest possible excuse. I wish you could have seen Lieutenant Boyd. Whew! he made a stunning picture, and if I had not lost my heart already I fear yesterday would have completely vanquished me. Lieutenant England looked well, and as for Mr. Ames, positively he is one of nature's soldiers, and wears his uniform as if he were especially built for it. Poor Mr. Palmer has broken his ankle and is laid up in lavender—is that not a shame? His horse fell on it, I believe. Never mind, his weary hours will be shortened by the attention of endless girls, I have not the slightest doubt. There were only twenty-five at the ceremony, and Minnie and Mr. Pearce stood in a corner of the room beneath a portiere of Bankshire roses, with an Oriental lamp casting a dim religious light over the scene. The windows were curtained with woodwardia ferns, and the whole house decked with roses. A big reception followed the ceremony, and Mrs. Pearce was assisted in receiving by Miss Grace and Pearl Sabin, Miss Hooper, Miss Currier and Mrs. Cavalier Jouett. All wore light frocks. The ladies were in blue and pink, Miss Currier in blue, Mrs. Jouett in black and white.

Some of the girls who came to the reception looked splendid. Miss Marie Voorhies wore an effective gown of red and purple brocaded silk, a small bonnet of pink poppies and white plumes and a broad lace collar. Miss Sara Dean also looked fetching in a black watered grenadine over apple green silk trimmed with narrow bands of black velvet and a big picture hat.

Afterwards we all went to Aunt Sybil's to dinner, and later to the Columbia to see "The Fatal Card." The house was well filled, the audience remarkably smart, considering that every one is on the wing. My cousin Mabel is having a glorious time just now. You know she is just sixteen, old enough to enjoy things, but too young to take even a boy's attention seriously. She is the jolliest little thing, and a great favorite. Last Saturday she and about twenty of her young people were invited by Mrs. Jimmie Robinson to go on a yachting party. They cruised round the bay all day, and in the evening Mrs. Robinson gave them a dance. A number stayed all night, and on the morning went on a coaching trip to Mill Valley. Is not Mrs. Robinson a pearl among matrons? I wanted Aunt Sybil to follow in her footsteps, but between you and me, dearest Diary, I think she is too selfish. I wish more of the married ladies would give us these treats; if they did we should ask them to our select little dinners and tell them of our love affairs and treat them as comrades. I think they would find that even matrimony and motherhood had compensations, after all.

The Downey Harveys have bought a place in Belvedere, and intend spending part of the summer there. This week they have gone down to San Luis Obispo to Baron von Schroeder's ranch, and anticipate remaining there until the fifteenth. I saw Mrs. Martin at Minnie Burton's wedding; she was looking exceedingly well. The latest amusement among the younger set seems to be taking parties to the top of Tamalpais. We went up last week, remained at the hotel all night, and got up to see the sun rise. I looked over the register, and found nearly all our crowd had either been up there with their own kith and kin or else had taken a few of their intimes along. It is a delightful ride, and we all enjoyed ourselves immensely. I hear of quite a number of people who are going to the Yosemite in the near future.

On Wednesday we all went to see Ethel Cohen married at the First Unitarian church. The wedding was an essentially smart affair—what the dailies would designate a function. The church was packed to the doors, and all the world dressed in its best clothes was there. I was rather disappointed in the scheme of decoration. Flags are all very well in their way, but I hardly consider them appropriate in a church. They were arranged in a species of canopy over the chancel, or what do they call the altar in a Unitarian church? The bridesmaids, headed by the maid of honor, came in at the left side of the church, walked down the center aisle, and met the bride at the door. They looked very pretty, but rather timid. Emma F. Butler's gown was lovely blue taffeta silk draped in organdie, and trimmed with lace. The bridesmaids were in white frocks, the skirts covered in purple and edged in lace. Their veils of tulle were caught on one side and fell to the waist. The six ushers led the way up the church, and after them came the bridesmaids, then the maid of honor, and, lastly, Ethel Cohen walked alone. She looked radiant and positively stunning. Her long gown was simplicity itself, but was so becoming. Her veil was draped low, which made her look much shorter than usual. She was met at the altar by her mother, who gave her away. The ceremony was ever so short; in fact, was ended in seven minutes. It seemed odd not to hear the familiar "In the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost" of the other churches. Lieutenant Bent repeated the responses in a loud, clear voice, audible all over the church. The music was very pretty, and Mr. Harrison's words exceedingly sweet. Afterwards we went to Mrs. Gibbons' to the supper and reception. It was a comparatively small affair and delightfully enjoyed. Ethel asked most of us by telephone. The girls wore pretty evening gowns—and we had a jolly time with the officers. Leila and her Harry seemed deeply interested in it all. Ethel's presents were really lovely. Nearly all of us are thinking of going into bankruptcy with this rush of weddings. Think of it! First Minnie Burton's and Helen Wright's, then Ethel Cohen's and next week Jessie Coleman's. Why don't they all elope and spare their families the expense of a trousseau and earn the eternal gratitude of their friends?

And now, dear Diary, farewell. I am so dead tired I must seek my anxious couch. Your weary MISS CRICKET.

* * *

The season at Burlingame is in full swing, and in most of the villas the owners are comfortably installed. There are gatherings at the club house in the evenings, and the San Mateo roads are gay with equipages. Still the noises of building are heard in the air, though substantial progress has been made on the new houses. In a very few weeks the new occupants will be privileged to move in—all but the Kruttsnichts, whose villa is a bit behind the others. The Carolans are settled in their pretty home and talk of a house warming.

At San Mateo many of the veritable Burlingameites are residents, and in this set it has become the proper thing to take a run up to the club house at night. Riding and driving are enjoying their usual vogue and the talk is very often "horsey." By the way, the latest in rigs is Walter Hobart's hansom cab, which he drives himself. It is quite a feature.

The new directorate at Burlingame has certainly achieved a signal victory. The institution is now on a sound financial basis. Its debts have all been paid and the future promises an increasing prosperity. Many of the men who resigned at the time of the turmoil two years ago have returned to their allegiance, and it is only a matter of months when the membership will have assumed its old dimensions. This success is due to the intelligent and good management of the board, and reflects great credit upon its business acumen and tact. At the meeting Sunday A. B. Ford was elected President pro tem to act during the absence of Mr. Joseph Grant, who is soon to be married and intends spending his honeymoon abroad.

The polo season opens next Sunday, and there is sure to be a large gathering at Burlingame. Several big parties are being made up for lunch on the terrace, and there is to be music. It is anticipated that Prince Luigi of Savoy will play in the polo game, and if he is as successful in creating as much excitement among the habitues as when he was here before, there is lots of fun ahead.

The season at San Rafael formally opened on the first of June. There are at least one hundred people quartered at the Hotel Rafael and all the villas around it are occupied. But little has occurred thus far to comment upon. The new arrivals are settling themselves down for the season, and have really not begun to entertain each other. The various equipages are being lined up for the evening driving, which has always been a feature of the fun at San Rafael. The hotel itself is in first-class condition. There is good music every afternoon and evening and an evident effort to look after the comfort of the guests. The cuisine is especially acceptable—which is really the most important consideration. Among those who are at the hotel for the season are the following: Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Davidson, Colonel Kip and the Misses Kip, Mrs. and Miss Sutro and Mr. Charles Sutro, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fries, Dr. Shiels, Miss Shiels, Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, Madame Barrios and suite.

Miss Lucille B. Kelly entertained a number of her friends at the Hotel Lenox last Saturday evening. The little miss had just turned 11 years, and this was made the occasion for a merry gathering of her companions. Some of the youngsters developed wonderful grace and talent in fancy dancing, and contributed much to the pleasure of the evening. The dining-room was tastefully decorated with flowers and Japanese lanterns. In goblets of lemonade the youngsters toasted the diminutive hostess and bade her Godspeed on her journey to Los Angeles, where she will spend the summer. Among those present were the Misses Helen and Olive Bruning, Miss Emma Hirscher, and Master Willie Bailey.

* *

With the last days of May vanish the dying glints of the glamour cast by Easter tide. The sole social excitement anticipated for June is a series of weddings, among them—those of Miss Jessie Coleman, Miss English, Miss Wright and Mrs. Olive Reed. The Easter season has lasted much longer than usual, and although the Oaklanders are discussing the question of their peregrinations, thus far but few among them have sought their summer haunts. Last week the principal events were the lawn party given to the Misses Florence and Jean Hush by Mrs. Thomas and Mrs. Will Magee, and the McNear tea.

The lawn party took place at the Haywards Club House. A special car was chartered for the occasion, and all the Deux Temps and Friday Fortnight girls invited. They wore light lawns and garlanded hats, and it would prove a difficult task to find a more comely set of maids. All or nearly all are tall and athletic looking, with bright eyes, broad shoulders and blooming complexions. Miss Edith Preston of Redwood, Miss Annie Voorhies, Miss Pauline Fore and Miss Sallie Quinan were among the most attractive. When they arrived at the Club House they found a capital lunch awaiting them. The McNear tea was given by Mrs. Bowles, Mrs. George McNear and Mrs. Seward McNear as a farewell before their departure for the Hawaiian Islands. About twenty girls assisted in receiving; all wore grenadines or summer silks. Miss Farries, Miss Florence Brown, Miss Amy McKee and Miss Chabot were among the most fetchingly frocked of the receivers.

Very fashionable indeed was the Flower Fete at Arbor Villa on Saturday afternoon. The Presidio band furnished the music, and among the amusements provided were tennis, croquet, dancing, donkey riding, etc. One of the features of the occasion was the battle of the roses, between a number of men and maids. The young girls assembled on a balcony and pelted the men below with masses of yellow, pink, and red posies. The affair was for charity, and the returns more than satisfactory.

The girls belonging to the Greek letter fraternities had a very jolly time at the home of Mrs. A. A. Moore on Saturday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Moore were out of town, so the young people had the house to themselves. Miss Carmen Moore had arranged a dinner for twenty-five, and later the girls sang, played games and disported themselves in a way congenial to their spirits. Miss Flora MacDermot gave a big dancing party on Friday last to seventy-five young people. It was an eminently enjoyable affair, as the MacDermot house is especially adapted for entertainments of that order. The rooms were canvased and the house decorated from garret to cellar. Miss MacDermot assisted her sister in receiving.

The ladies of the Ebell Club had a gala day on Tuesday last. Nearly two hundred took luncheon at the Club rooms. Mrs. Henry Butters, Mrs. G. Ripley and Mrs. Helen Nuggatt were the guests of honor. The hostess of the day was Mrs. B. A. Knight. The girl choristers of St. Paul's Episcopal Church were entertained at a card party recently by the Ladies' Work Committee. Progressive whist was played. Miss Bessie Palmer and Miss Florence Sharon carried off the prizes.

An interesting engagement is that of Miss Martha Shearer of Yreka and Mr. Sam Prather of Oakland.

Mdme. Camille Urso continues to be entertained by the Oakland people, among whom she figures as a social star of the first magnitude. The last festival given in her honor was a reception by Mrs. S. P. Hughes on Thursday, which was largely attended. The concert given by Mr. Dennis O'Sullivan on Thursday evening at the Congregational Church was, from both the social and financial point of view, an immense success. The church was crowded with smartly dressed people. Mr. O'Sullivan was in excellent voice. The selection which received the most applause was one by Beethoven. His Irish songs were not rendered with his usual voice. Mr. Purcell gave several violin solos, which were well received.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. bottle.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 211 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Style counts more positively in a hat than in a gown. To obtain a chic hat intelligent women go to E. E. Caswell's, at 28 Post street. It is interesting to note that all the hats and bonnets in this stock have been reduced to half price.

Food Value of Cocoa.

The "International Journal of Surgery" says:

"Experience has shown that a properly prepared cocoa product constitutes an ideal beverage for invalids and convalescents, acting as a mild nerve simulant and at the same time supplying a considerable amount of available nutritive material.

"Such a product is Walter Baker & Co.'s Cocoa, which differs from all preparations of its kind in that in the process of manufacture great care is taken to retain, in a pure and unaltered form, those active principles and nutritive elements of cocoa seed which render it both a luxury and a food.

"This preparation is esteemed an agreeable, comforting, and nourishing beverage in chronic disorders, during convalescence from exhausting diseases, for feeble children, and during the after treatment of severe surgical operations."

LOVE-MAKING TAUGHT

The Whimsical Conceit of An Old-Maid Authoress.

The art of cupid does not seem sufficient nowadays to give men the knowledge of love—there is something more required, and to supply this long-felt want Miss Lillian Bell of Chicago has suggested the founding of a college for the training of men in the art of love-making. Miss Bell, it will be remembered, is the lady who wrote "A Little Sister to the Wilderness," and "The Love Affairs of an Old Maid," as well as a number of articles shedding more or less light upon hymeneal subjects. Mentioning old maids, it may be said that Miss Bell has made herself a defender of that much-misunderstood class—a sort of prophetess leading her unmarried sisters out of the wilds of neglect into the valleys of vindication. Old maidism is a condition of choice not of necessity. Miss Bell knows thousands of homely and superficially unattractive women—and not one of them but has had at least a solitary offer. So is it with the unmarried woman—she could wed if she would, but she will not. As for the bachelor, he deserves the opprobrium of neglect, for Miss Bell reverses the time accepted condition: it is no longer the woman without the offer, but the man without the acceptance, for it is in this instance where man does the proposing and woman the disposing.

Just why a man should be refused is due, Miss Bell claims, to his inability to properly express his affection. He does not go about it in the right way. He lacks in—well, it matters little what he lacks in most, he makes up altogether a most unhappy whole. He should learn to woo, and as he is incapable of instructing himself he should betake himself elsewhere. It is here the long-felt want asserts itself—here is the need for a school of love. It should be a college for lovers with a post graduate course for husbands. As conditions are, thinks Miss Bell, a man is a thing of clay in the hands of a girl. She can do almost anything with him; he, poor blind being, never suspects anything. Like a reed shaken in the wind, like a painted weather-cock on a gable end, he turns about and is blown about in every way. No wonder he is incapable of expressing emotion or affection when he does not realize that he has any. He must go to school—the necessity of it calls out a novice in the night—he must go to school, but first he must have a school.

Miss Bell should light the fires of love and gather to herself Cupid and Hymen. She should send to the highways and the byways and call in the lame, the halt and the blind of bachelordom. To these should she give instruction, in all the fulness thereof, instruction in the amiable art of making love. Surely such a thing is much to be desired.

That the season for country sojurns is now in full swing can easily be seen by the number of parties traveling over the San Francisco and North Pacific Railway. Along the line of this popular company are found many of the most beautiful spots in the State, and one does not have to go far from home to get into that portion of the country most to his liking, be it the fruit farm in the valley, where all good things satisfying to the inner man abound, or the shady nooks of the mountains, with their health-giving springs hard by charming resorts laid out and arranged in such a fashion as to make them attractive to any one who seeks peaceful rest, enlivened by the refined comforts always demanded by society. The S. F. & N. P. R. R. issues a useful illustrated prospectus, which intending travelers can procure by application at their office, 650 Market street.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

Royal makes the food pure, wholesome and delicious.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

WOMAN'S SPHERE

Parkhurst on Female Sufferage—An Anti-Matrimonial Club.

Dr. Parkhurst has seen many things in his time, and his knowledge thereof has made him great in the land. He has tussled with many topics, and with the Tammany Tiger, as well, and all these things and many others have fallen before him. Now comes he as have every one and everything of late, to the discussion of woman. That portion of humanity designated as woman has been having a rather independent time of late days, at least the portion that is of clubs and congresses, of higher walks and spheres. This sort of woman has drawn unto herself much discussion. She is no longer what she was, and little longer shall remain what she is; there are new barriers to burn away before she enters in the promised land flowing with ballots and with privilege. Too long has she lain in the depths of domesticity, gazing up at the heights of emancipation; the time has come to soar, and soaring has she been for many moons.

This colossal evolution has been mostly self-effected, the balance of it the result of liberal-minded but misguided men. Such a man as Dr. Parkhurst would surely prove an oracle to the unfettered sex—his words would weigh most mightily. Dr. Parkhurst has spoken. He has spoken on woman, she of the sphere and the higher walk, she of the ballot and the advanced idea, the shirt front and the manly tie. He has given his idea of such as these, and it is is andromaniac. A new word—absolutely a new word, coined by the doctor himself, and it applies to the woman who ambles after modes of men. The idea of broadening out seems to be the right bower of the advanced female—to work into the ways of men—considering the difference merely one of physiology. Dr. Parkhurst has spoken, and let the struggling sex attend—the doctor believes in woman broadening out and expanding, too, as much as she will, but only in the ways of woman. The sexes are separate and distinct from one another, differently constructed and with different work to do. Woman's supremacy is in her womanliness; her higher walk, her elevated sphere is altogether in her home, not in the haunts and habits of men. God and nature constructed her very different from her brother, and the Creator recorded His intention in a way she will never be able to forget, and all the female congresses may meet and argue that her sphere is coincident with the sphericity of the globe or of the heavens if they will, but they will succeed about as well as the old woman who tried to sweep back the sea with her broom.

Dr. Parkhurst does not say it isn't good to vote; that it i sunwise to have spheres and ideas, or that other things of the sort do not deserve to be pushed along—they are all good enough, but there is so much else that should be given the preference, so many things of higher mould—and all this may be summed up in one word—home, to live for home, and all that is of home.

But the cause will not die, even though Dr. Parkhurst will not support it—there are many others who will, and, like the soul of the immortal Brown, it shall march on Infinitessimo. Relief comes from Michigan, not from Kalamazoo, but from Edwardsburg, a tiny town as great in wisdom as it is diminutive in populations. In Edwardsburg there are young women, modern-minded maids, who have formed a good new-fashioned bachelors' club that is just too darling for anything. Little is necessary for membership—an unblemished character, a good disposition, and a limit in age of twenty-five years. The new club recognizes marriage, but not till many things have come to pass. Much must be learned before the final step, which should not be taken before twenty-five. Prior to that period a woman is developed neither mentally nor physically. Her bod yiacks, her brain lacks and her heart lacks along with them. A girl must ripen as well as apples and pears, and to do this it takes years—twenty-five of them. It is upon this horticultural principle that the young women of Edwardsburg are laying out their plan of action, and in their time much may be expected of them—any amount of economics, scientific and political research, new lights on evolution, glimpses in the life unseen—in brief, everything requisite for the new wife. There is a little thing called love that has been known to assert itself in matters of marriage; the maidens of Edwardsburg have heard of this, but the prospect does not arouse alarm; love is quite welcome, it will even help along the idea conjugal companionship which they have puzzled out. Love may laugh at locksmiths and others of the sort, but when it comes to the Edwardsburg Bachelor Girls' Association, with its course of preparation wonderfully and wisely made, it is very likely it will bide a bit and wait at least till twenty-five.

H. S. K.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet all. S. Constantini, proprietor.

WOMEN AND MANNERS

A Controversy as to Which is the Gentler Sex.

The difference in courtesy between men and women has been a topic of much recent talk among a select number of New York notables. The seats of these mightles have been rocked in every direction anent the question, and opinions of many colors have been flying into print. It would seem from it all that men are not the brutes, to put it plainly, that they are often said to be; in fact, they are quite the opposite, and some have even gone so far as to say that women are oftentimes of that ungraceful order themselves. Most women of late days have the idea that they are quite capable of looking to themselves—which may be said to be true—they look too much to themselves and not enough to others—and therein lies the rub, the chord discordant in the symphony of cruelty. But man has always had the art of looking to himself; it is his by right of nature and of inheritance; he has always had it, and some say he has grown callous in the possession of it. Others affirm to the contrary, in particular, Mrs. Sherwood, that stereotyped grande dame of society as it appears in type.

Mrs. Sherwood looks upon men—American men before all others—as still possessing the chivalry of the middle ages; that the same grace and gallantry that guarded the honor of long-haired maidens and jousted at the tourney for a smile or other fleeting trophy. But the women of the day, thinks Mrs. Sherwood, are not of half so kind a caste. The gallantry and grace of the men has spoiled them and they dare to do what men would never dream of, so great is their presumption. The high hat folly comes under Mrs. Sherwood's disapproval, and it is in this and in other phases of play-going that she terms her own sex lacking in deportment.

Against the idea of all this masculine gallantry comes the opinion of a well-known authoress. This literary lady thinks the society young man lacking in good manners. She says he will take all he can get and give nothing in return, not even civility. He will eat the good dinners and drink the good wines of his hostess and think his presence sufficient return for it all. His manners are supremely bad—in fact, he is horribly impolite. He knows he is the current coin of society, and since he is he may pass himself in any manner pleasing to him. But men are generally polite to women, she thinks—and she actually believes some one has said they are spoken of among the nations for their politeness. But the women of the crowd, she of the bargain-counter and the elevated train—she is rude in all reality, and she who travels—who occupies the dressing-room long enough to clean even her conscience, she is likewise truly. And the shop lady, her manners are really shocking, so very unpleasant, so different from the shop girls in France and abroad generally. Another phase of the unpleasant woman is the lady with the loud voice, and America rejoices in many of such; in fact, there is a sort of pushing national manner and a sort of national voice that is so very disagreeable, and woman possesses both in all their fullness.

FOR RENT, IN SANTA BARBARA—The most beautiful residence property in the city; large house, completely furnished throughout; large stable and carriage house; lawn, flower garden, shrubs and vines cared for by competent gardener at expense of owner. Apply to Joseph J. Perkins, Santa Barbara, Cal.

New Safe-Deposit Vaults.

Safes $4 to $150 per annum. The Union Trust Company's new safety vaults, corner of Market and Montgomery streets, are the strongest, best guarded and best lighted in the city. Superior accommodation for its patrons. Ladies will find apartments for their exclusive use. The company transacts a general banking, trust, and savings business, and acts as executor, administrator, trustee, and as custodian of wills, and consults as to trust matters without charge. Valuables of all kinds taken on storage.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has sold his partnership interest in the firm doing business under the name of The Novato French Cheese Factory, at the town of Novato, county of Marin, State of California, to C. Schulz, and that the undersigned is no longer a member of said firm, or interested therein, and is not responsible for the debts of said firm. JAMES NEWLANDS JR.
Dated April 20, 1897.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

TURF NOTES

Brooklyn Handicap—The Epsom Derby and its Bearing on California.

In very mistaken fashion races of any importance are frequently styled "classic" nowadays. Properly speaking the epithet should be reserved for three only, as far as English events are concerned, namely the Two Thousand Guineas, the Derby and the St. Leger. As to the leading events of the American and Australian turf, the time has hardly yet arrived for the application of the term, at any rate it should not be applied to the Brooklyn Handicap, or in fact any handicap anywhere, as it sometimes is.

The Brooklyn Handicap, $10,000, one and one-fourth miles, was run at Morris Park last Monday, and resulted in the victory of the 4-year-old Howard Mann, 106 pounds, the property of G. E. Smith (Pittsburg Phil.), ridden by the California jockey, Henry Martin. The track was in muddy condition, and the time, 2:09¾, consequently slow. The same stable also started Belmar, 121 pounds, the other winners being Handspring, 125 pounds; Sir Walter, 115 pounds; Ben Eder, 113 pounds; The Swain, 110 pounds; Loki, 108 pounds; Lake Shore, 105 pounds; King Arthur II, 98 pounds; Volley, 95 pounds, and Jefferson, 88 pounds.

The different telegraphed accounts of the running are not by any means in agreement, as some say the winner was untouched by whip or spur throughout the race, and others that a furlong from home Martin was driving him for fear of being caught by Lake Shore and Volley, who came in second and third respectively, Howard Mann finishing with four lengths to spare. It is evident that Volley, who was ridden by Lamley, ran a good race, as, though taken very wide, he made up a great deal of ground in the last half mile. Handspring failed to add to his reputation, though he ran well for a mile, when no doubt his heavy impost and the state of the going got him into trouble.

The stable seems to have executed quite a coup, as the winner was not named to start before the morning of the race, and yet was heavily backed.

On Wednesday last the Derby was run at Epsom, and as might have been expected was a less exciting event than when won last year by the Prince of Wales' Persimmon. The result, however, comprising as it does both the Middle Park Plate and Two Thousand Guineas, is of much interest to California breeders and turfmen. The winner was Galtee More, the property of Mr. J. G. Gubbins, Lord Rosebery's Velasquez second, Mr. J. S. Harrison's History third. The field consisted of eleven runners only, the Prince of Wales starting his colt Oakdene, who ran fairly well, being in the lead for a good part of the distance, and finished fourth.

Galtee More was born in County Limerick, Ireland, where his owner has been until lately a master of hounds, and is now breeding thoroughbreds to some extent, this colt being of his own raising. Mr. Guboins is a first-rate sportsman, and his success is sure to be most popular and adds considerably to the extraordinary good fortune that the Irish division has met with on the English turf this season. The race was regarded as practically a certainty for the winner, odds of 4 to 1 being laid on him, and he won pretty much as he liked.

Galtee More is by Kendal, a son of Bend Or, out of Morganette by Springfield, and it is worth while making note how this interests California. In the first place, we have here sires got by Bend Or as follows:: Imp. Ormondie, the property of Mr. W. O'B. Macdonough, the imported horses Order, Golden Garter and Golden Dawn, as well as Ormondie's son Goldfinch, all at Rancho del Paso. Turning to Galtee More's dam we find imp. Watercress by Springfield, and therefore her half brother, in the stud at Rancho del Paso.

About the time this paper goes to press the Oaks will be run, and if it should be won, as it seems most probable, by Chelandry, daughter of imp. Goldfinch, who has proved herself so far the best of her sex as a 2 and 3-year-old, there will be further cause for congratulation.

Velasquez, the second horse, by Donovan out of Vista, the dam of Sir Visto, who won the Derby in 1895, represented the Galopin strain of blood, but judged by his 3-year-old form, so far, the winner has made the most improvement in growing on and has brought further glory upon the great tribe of Stockwell.

The first of the big sales of thoroughbred yearlings by the Easton Company in New York this season will be that of Rancho del Paso on June 21, 22, 23, when 150 head will be offered at auction. The consignment will leave Sacramento probably to-day, in charge of Mr. John Mackey, and, as racing affairs are in a more settled condition in the East than they were a year ago, it is to be hoped there may be an improvement in prices over those realized at the last sale.

The final transfer of the American Stud Book by Colonel S. D. Bruce to the New York Jockey Club disposes of a vexed question in a satisfactory manner, and removes the apparent necessity previously existing for duplicate registration.

At a special meeting of the Western Turf Congress, held at Cincinnati last week, it was decided to debar all persons from track privileges who shall resort to the courts for settlement of grievances with which the congress has power to deal. At the same time a committee was appointed to confer with the Jockey Club, and, if possible, adjust differences in regard to registration.

The Thoroughbred Record, of Lexington, Ky., has drawn special attention to the 2-year-old Frohman (Hungar—Jewel Ban), property of David Gideon, and winner of the Laureate and Eclipse stakes and second in the Juvenile Stakes after a bad start. From his picture, the colt looks as handsome as paint, and his breeder, Major B. G. Thomas, says his forehead is a perfect reproduction of his sire. Of his underpinning, the important part of a racehorse, the illustration leaves us, as is too often the case, in doubt.

BENEDICT.

Mme. A. Runpert begs to announce to the ladies of San Francisco that she has recently removed to rooms 15-16, 131 Post street, where she hopes to receive the same patronage as formerly.

J. W. Carmany, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Dr. G. A. Danziger, Dentist, 22 Geary st.

A certain old justice of the peace in Vevay, Ind., had strange ideas of court procedure. On one occasion, after all the evidence was in and the plaintiff's attorney had made an elaborate argument, the defendant's attorney arose to begin his plea.

"Hold on there," exclaimed the court. "I don't believe I can let you proceed, Mr. Smith. I have a very clear idea now of the guilt of the prisoner at the bar, and anything from you at this time would have a tendency to confuse the court. I know the man is guilty now, and I don't want to take any chances."

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Governor Leedy, the new Populist Executive of Kansas, objects to the new-fangled water faucets which he found in the once lavatory. After several trials and mishaps he turned to his secretary and thus declared himself: "Go down town and buy me a tin wash pan. When I worked for Dave Gore on his farm back in Macoupin County, Ill., a tin wash basin and a big stump at the back door served as our lavatory. I prefer the tin basin to this patent water squirting apparatus which city folks use." The tin pan is now in use at the Executive office.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Dan Ieuch, proprietor.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

They had a meeting of Baptist ministers at Buffalo, recently, and one of the elders, a meek looking brother, arrived with a very sad looking black silk hat. He explained that he had placed his tile, crown down, on the seat in front of him. Unnoticed, a stout woman came in and squatted on that plug, telescoping it as flat as a below-the-Terrace pancake. While she was apologizing one divine broke in with: "Well, madam, I might have told you that that hat wouldn't fit you."

MME. A. RUPPERT

ORIGINATOR OF THE

World-Renowned FACE BLEACH

FACE BLEACH has stood the test of 20 years, and is to-day acknowledged to be the best remedy known for Blackheads, Oily Skin, Pimples, Freckles, and all Facial Blemishes.

SAMPLE BOTTLE sent to any address, in plain wrapper, accompanied by my book,

"HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL"

on receipt of twenty-five cents.

MME. A. RUPPERT,
Rooms 15-16, 131 Post Street, San Francisco.

"THE DESCENDANT"

A Spirited Novel of Modern Newspaper Life.

Though its advent has attracted little attention, though it has not been proclaimed in the publishers' circulars or in the "Bookman" as a notable work, though it has escaped the lynx eye of the sensation editors of Sunday supplements, and there has been manifested no particular curiosity as to its author, "The Descendant" (Harper & Brothers) is an interesting and fascinating story, and just escapes real distinction by a misunderstanding of background. This is an American story; its author has more ability than information and is now more competent to construct a character than to paint an environment. The hero, Michael Akershem, is a powerful, vivid figure; the evolution of his temperament is natural and the consequences legitimate, but the defect is that the writer knows nothing of the life in which his creation is developed. Akershem is represented as editor of "The Iconoclast," a New York daily paper which has been built up on Socialism and sensationalism. The journal is an important factor in the life of the man; there are meetings of its directors, allusions to its office details and the work of its staff, all of which are purely imaginative and dictated by the intuition of the author. It is not difficult to obtain a journalistic atmosphere, and background plays as important a part in a novel as in a picture. It helps situations and reflects on character and is important in shaping conclusions.

However, there is a finely imaginative quality in the book that compensates both for this deficiency and also for the tendency towards generalization, which is also a feature of "The Descendant." Briefly, the plot turns on the career and misfortunes of Michael Akershem, the illegitimate son of a peasant woman. Adopted by a farmer of the neighborhood, he grows up a sensitive but most intelligent child, with the head, face and brains of a genius. His temper is incurably affected by the jibes and contempt of the neighborhood, but he gains an education, reads all the books available and comes to New York to seek a livelihood, but, above other things, a change of place, where the secret of his birth will not be held against him. After starving for days and drinking the very dregs of disappointment, he is picked up by a whimsical journalist named Driscoll, who is editor of the "Iconoclast"—a new daily started to make a sensation. The handling of these opening chapters is admirable, the style poetic, especially in the descriptive passages, which are finely done. Akershem develops into a great writer, notable for his bitterness, his powerful style and his tremendous sincerity. Driscoll resigns, goes to Florida, and the hero takes his place and makes the paper a veritable firebrand. The former chief returns and expostulates with his pupil:

Then I read your diatribes and saw that you needed the check rein, so I came back. My dear Shem, you are making the mistake of being in earnest. Nobody should be in earnest, it is bad form. Theories are meant for playthings; if you use them as weapons, they go to pieces and cut you."

Akershem laughed.

"That's a fact, Shem; the only successful reformer is the one who never attempts to put reforms into practice. They're the men the world goes mad over while it stones their tools."

"I was born to be stoned."

"Nonsense! don't give Fate a chance to rile you. Providence has to be hoodwinked. If you want to get anything in this world, turn to wanting something else, and ten chances to one the first will come—only you won't want it."

"Any more moralizing at my expense?"

"Lots. You need it. You have gone and made society a bugbear, and now you're trying to bully it. Let it alone. People aren't half as big fools as they look, and, anyway, it's no concern of yours. If men choose to erect idols in the market-place, why should you trouble to tear them down? A sensible man doesn't do that—a sensible man is wild, wicked, stupid, if you will, but he is never in earnest. He knows that if society is rotten he can't purify it by poking and prying, but will only succeed in soiling his hands in filth. Let the world alone and it'll let you alone."

"But it hasn't let me alone and I won't let it. I'll protest against it with my dying breath. I was talking to Semple last night—"

"Semple!" said Driscoll, "Hedley Semple! He's a man who is playing with edged tools. I tell you what is play to him is death to you. He talks his views, but you live yours. That's wrong. Theories have nothing to do with life; they are to be talked about, that's all. Make it play, Shem, don't—"

Then he broke off with a laugh.

"I'm getting in earnest myself," he said, "which I don't do on principle. My state of simple nature, you see, has cultivated in me the simplicity of primitive man. It is the only life worth leading, after all. This vast machine of nervous energy called civilization is demoralizing. It keeps the brain at fever heat and produces vertigo. It destroys individuality. Quit it, my dear Shem; you need rest. Leave politics, the tariff, the currency, and all the other fruits of perdition alone. The currency is the devil's own institution for making maniacs of men. I recognize his stamp."

"Don't be an ass, Driscoll. I know what I'm doing."

"The deuce you do! I never saw a reformer who did. They might be classified as a distinct species having eyes in the back of their heads."

"You've managed to readjust yours, I see."

"Ah, well, a young sinner makes an old Solomon. There is nothing so profitable to a philosopher as the sins of his youth."

"Or so confoundedly pedantic as the repentance of his age."

The heroine of "The Descendant" is Rachel Garin, an artist, also a genius, of excellent family, charming, beautiful and unconventional. With her Akershem falls in love. The wooing of the beautiful and fascinating girl is charming. She resists him for a long time, but she succumbs to his powerful personality. It is Mike's first affaire, and though he has condemned marriage as an institution and denounced it editorially, he is profoundly ignorant of women. After an interview with Miss Garin he proceeds to arraign matrimony in the usual editorial and commences in this vien:

"Like many a custom which has begun as an experiment to end as a fetich, the institution of marriage has not been without a purpose to serve in the course of social evolution. But customs, like garments, wear out and lose their original usefulness, and like garments, require to be discarded for a more advanced and more suitable order.

The influence of the woman is on him, however, and he turns for assistance to Driscoll:

"Say, Driscoll, what kind of creatures are women, anyway?"

Driscoll took his arm and drew him under the electric light.

"Been drinking, old man?" he inquired. "No; hand cool, pulse not quite even, but will do. Oh, women! Bless me, I give it up. Ask another. They're one of the Almighty's enigmas for proving to men that he knows more than they do. Oh, all women aren't alike, you know. There're several patterns. There's the woman with brains and the woman without—last-named variety remarkably plentiful. Then there's the woman of good character and the woman of bad, and the woman who is supposed to have none to speak of. There's the pretty woman and the ugly woman. There's the woman that's worthy of God and the woman that the devil wouldn't take at a bargain."

"Are—are they sensible and thoughtful? Are—are they like men?"

"They're trying to be, my young innocent. But they haven't gotten that far down yet. Give them time, though. Vice is mighty, you know—"

"Nonsense, Driscoll, don't be a fool! Could you—did you—were you ever in love?"

"Could ?—did I?—was I? Well, damn me, I could, and I was, and I did. I wasn't born wise, you know, Shem. I cultivated it."

"You wouldn't marry her because—"

"I'd have been deuced glad to. I couldn't."

"Why not?"

"She wouldn't. Bad taste. I agree with you. She was one of the plentiful type—without brains, you know. She married a missionary."

Alas! the girl loves, and loves madly. He declares himself, and suggests that they marry. Rachel will not permit him to compromise his principles; they agree to defy the conventionalities, with the most unfortunate consequences. Here is the situation:

"You love me, Rachel?" He spoke imperatively.

"Love you!" With a passionate sob she threw back her head, stamping her foot upon the floor. "Don't you see that I love you?" she cried. "My God! I can't help it; I love you!"

"Oh, my beloved!" His kisses fell hotly upon her quivering lips. But as he caught her to him a latent spark of her old independence took fire and flamed forth. She broke from him.

"It is dreadful—dreadful!" she cried.

"But, Rachel, does it make you wretched? I am yours—yours for life or death. I will give up my work to-morrow and marry you."

The girl started.

"Marry me?" she repeated. "How could you?"

He smiled, and, catching her outstretched hands, kissed them.

"I worship you," he said. "I would throw away every chance of my life—every hope, every principle, for you!"

"They would scorn and laugh at you. You have lived your principles for years, and now, at the first bid of a woman, you cast them away. Oh, no; I cannot! I cannot!"

"Let them laugh at me. If I have you, what do I care, darling? Darling, can't you understand? I shall resign from my party. I have made it, and have the right to unmake it. I'll get a position as coal-heaver, brakeman—anything."

"And in six months you would regret it. Do you think that a man's love can extinguish ambition? Only a woman's love can do that. You would live to regret your work, your freedom; you would brand yourself a traitor in your own eyes, and I—God! I should go mad, for I love you."

She kissed him as he leaned above her.

"Do you think that I could live and know that I had ruined your life?" she asked. "I had rather kill myself now, before you had time to reproach me. I had rather never lay my eyes on you again. Oh, my love! my love!"

Rachel was young, and ignorant, as most young things are. She had not learned that self-immolation is the surest bond by which one binds one's self to another. It is not those who sacrifice themselves to us whom we love, but those to whom we sacrifice ourselves. Perhaps there is a fundamental principle of egoism which sustains it, but the fact is there; we do not cease to value a possession which has cost us a great expenditure of ourselves. Self-immolation on the part of another we are apt to regard lightly, deeming that of small value which places not a greater price upon itself. Oh, we are only wise in our own conceit!

The story unwinds from this on—the girl is made to suffer for her daring; he is sorry in her disparagement. But they are happy—until there cometh in the other woman. Her part in the tale may be discovered by the reader. I cannot resist quoting this paragraph, which shows the influence of sensational journalism. It is the "other woman," Miss Allard, who has persuaded Akershem to visit the slums with her:

"Meddling does no good, and I'm not a missionary, but—but your paper has a wide circulation. It enters thousands of homes; people read it for your language and your style who otherwise would shrink from an expression of your opinions. Its influence is sweeping, and its influence is your influence." The flute-like quality of her voice was at its highest. Its penetration was almost painful, its decision merciless. "I work among the poor—the very poor. I see the harm done by useless agitators—by men who write and speak things they dare not act upon, but which ignorant men and women accept as a gospel. No, I do not mean Mr. Semple; he does not half the harm that you do."

"Harm!" he emphasized; "your words are badly chosen."

"It is not your motive that I call harmful," she said, more gently—so gently that he almost forgave her. "It is not your cause—I do not judge that—I but see the effects."

"And they?"

"There was a family upon Hester street, an old woman, several granchildren, and a boy—a bright, enthusiastic fellow, the main support of the family. He had been the support for five years, and was not more than twenty—the apple of the old woman's eye—"

"Well?" for she had paused.

"The first time I heard your name—I remember it well, for the old woman was sick and I had gone to see her—The Iconoclast lay upon the table, a newspaper print of yourself upon the wall, the boy stood in the center of the room. The old woman was speaking; she said, 'Them Akershemites will be the ruin of you.' And the boy rushed from the room in a rage. I asked her what she meant, and as she pointed to the print of yourself she said, 'My boy is possessed with his notions, and they will be the ruin of him.' The boy banded together a small party, calling themselves Akershemites; they were inspired by a hatred of their employers, of every form of restraint. They made depredations upon the small storekeepers in the neighborhood, which ended in a row in which one of them was shot. We tried to get the boy a situation, but he would not sacrifice his liberty. The old woman and the children went to the almshouse, and a month later the boy cut his throat." She had spoken coldly and distinctly, but when Michael looked at her he saw that her eyes were suffused with tears.

"But," he said, with an angry intonation, "you are unjust. The boy did not follow my teaching. Clearly you are ignorant of my doctrines, else why should you make me responsible for a lawless riot?"

"I hold you indirectly responsible," she replied. "Can a cause be good of which the effects are so disastrous? Shall I go on?"

"Yes."

"There are many from which to choose. I have seen much misery. Some"—with a laugh—"I grant you, had never heard your name others had. There was a man with a wife and five small children. As long as duty bound him to his post he supported them, then he became your disciple, and you—well, he deserted them for a younger woman, that was all. You may say it was the natural evil of the man's nature. So it was. But until your latitudinarianism released him from his conventional scruples, that nature was kept down by training and inherited belief. Yours is an ideal theory, Mr. Akershem, intended for an ideal humanity, with an innate desire to do right and a superhuman recognition of good and evil. The world as it is to-day cannot stand your views. You have done harm. But I have said enough."

"Yes," retorted Michael, bitterly, "you have said enough." His face was pallid, and his breath came quickly. "You have sought to fling all the misery of the world upon my shoulders. This is the result of my honest endeavor to help mankind—this" His emotion touched her almost against herself.

C.

THE NEW FRAWLEYS

A Good Melodrama at the Columbia Theatre.

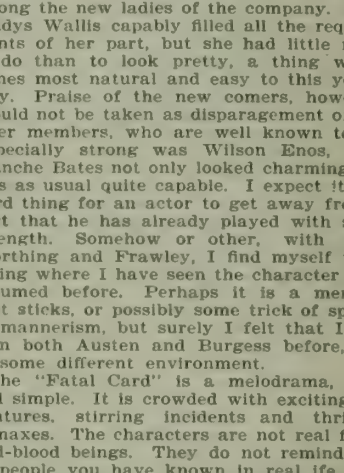
The Frawley company has returned to us, and that it has lost none of its popularity is testified to by crowded houses and well-satisfied audiences at the Columbia. Among the new members J. M. Colville and Theodore Hamilton, to my mind, appear to the best advantage. Eleanor Moretti, who had earned my good opinion when she played Roxie in "Pud'nhead Wilson," took the lead among the new ladies of the company. Miss Gladys Wallis capably filled all the requirements of her part, but she had little more to do than to look pretty, a thing which comes most natural and easy to this young lady. Praise of the new comers, however should not be taken as disparagement of the older members, who are well known to us. Especially strong was Wilson Enos, and Blanche Bates not only looked charming but was as usual quite capable. I expect it is a hard thing for an actor to get away from a part that he has already played with some strength. Somehow or other, with both Worthing and Frawley, I find myself wondering where I have seen the character they assumed before. Perhaps it is a memory that sticks, or possibly some trick of speech or mannerism, but surely I felt that I had seen both Austen and Burgess before, but in some different environment.

The "Fatal Card" is a melodrama, pure and simple. It is crowded with exciting adventures, stirring incidents and thrilling climaxes. The characters are not real flesh-and-blood beings. They do not remind you of people you have known in real life. Indeed, they are well nigh impossible, but you do not expect them to be otherwise. The situations are painted in the same lurid and impossible colors. You must take the play for what it is meant to be, a melodrama, and if you have an analytical mind you had better leave it with your cane and overcoat in the cloakroom. Do this, and you will enjoy both the play and the acting. The production is really a compilation of interesting and exciting short stories. There are a prologue and four acts, and they might quite as well be reconstructed into five one-act plays. Except for a mere unimportant mention of some trivial occurrence in a previous act, they are quite disconnected and apart from each other.

The comedy side of the play is embodied in the first scene of the third act, where Harry Burgess, a lovesick young man, declares his affection for Cecile Austen under the most disadvantageous circumstances. While the young man is in swimming Aunt Penelope, the conventional old maid of the stage, makes off with his clothes. In this dilemma his sweetheart appears, and from the other side of a convenient hedge he explains his predicament, and takes the opportunity of confessing his love with much amusing byplay and pleasing, easy-going comedy.

I gave myself up completely to the melodrama, but I cannot now determine whether it was the second or the fourth act that most stirred my blood. My nerves were at a pretty high tension in the second act, when the two murderers were crouching, trembling, over the dead body of Austen Senior, while his son in the outer hallway was begging admittance and pleading for his father's forgiveness. It is a strong scene. But the last act holds another scene quite as dramatic and interesting.

B.



VINTINE

it cures nervous people is a great muscle-builder is a great nerve-food is pleasant to take is permanent in results
is what worn-out people need

SOLD AT

Brooks' Homoepathic Pharmacy
119 Powell Street
AND AT ALL DRUGSTORES

Sole Agency Boericke & Tafel's Homoepathic Medicines. They can be had nowhere else on the Pacific Coast.

Tired, overworked eyes gain rest and comfort from properly fitted glasses. We have every facility for testing the sight and adjusting glasses. Oculists' prescriptions promptly and carefully executed. Hirsch & Kaiser, Opticians, 7 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure rtock, and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

PURE FOOD
MAKES RICH AND PURE
BLOOD, AND KEEPS THE BODY HEALTHY

Crosse & Blackwell's
Pickles
ARE MADE WITH PURE MALT VINEGAR
PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
Sherwood & Sherwood
SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

Sale of Books
WM. DOXEY is now selling Standard Works and fine Library Editions at greatly reduced prices . . . . . .
Doxey's 631 Market Street San Francisco

ELECTRIC..
Supplies
Construction
Repairs
CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS
409 MARKET STREET

Retiring from Business!
$75,000 STOCK OF JAPANESE GOODS
Must be sold at Auction at 116 Sutter Street without limit or reserve, commencing Monday, April 26th, and continuing daily at 11 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. T. A. McDONALD, Auctioneer.
ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

La Grande Laundry
Telephone Bush 21
23 POWELL STREET

A. D. Cheshire, Pres. and Man. A. Larsen, Vice-Pres.
W. O. Macdougall, Secretary
California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971 S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary
Embalming a Specialty. Open Day and Night

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange
EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.
Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

When You Go to San Rafael
Get your Lunch at the NEW OYSTER HOUSE opposite the Court House
Everything fresh and well served. Oysters, Clams, Crabs and Shrimps a specialty. Families and Hotels supplied. Marin County Market on Fourth St.

A. K. DAGGETT
Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

THE MAGAZINES

Some Choice Bits of Periodical Literature.

To have read the several magazines with sufficient intentness and attention to speak positively of their merits argues the spending of many hours in that pursuit. They make a pile nowadays, a formidable pile of literary material, and one does not contemplate the criticizing of them with eagerness. They are gathered here in front of me, and I have been lazily skimming through them—looking at the fine pictures of Marlborough House in the "Cosmopolitan," and turning then to the excellent work of R. Cotton Woodville, who supplies some really spirited pictures illustrating Poultney Bigelow's "White Man's Africa" to "Harpers'." Then I suffered myself to read T. P. O'Connor's entertaining article on "The Celebrities of the House of Commons," in which one is told all about the distinguished statesmen who lead politics in Great Britain. We have all read sketches of Gladstone, John Bright, Joe Chamberlain and the other great personages whose names appear as frequently in the newspapers as those of our own great men, but never have they been focussed better than in this article. Mr. O'Connor is a newspaper man, the editor of the weekly "Sun," and he has had many a long year in the House of Commons under Parnell. He has lived in the atmosphere, and you can learn here the secret of Gladstone's oratorical eminence, the characteristics of Sir William Harcourt's oratory, the story of Balfour's rise, the impression which Mr. Asquith made when he first addressed the House, the influence of John Morley and the cause of Joseph Chamberlain's wonderful success. Some serious-minded prigs may stigmatize this review as gossip, but it's not. It is the best kind of information—the facts interpreted with atmosphere and color. You can imagine the difference between the report of a church convention by a man who knew the ministers and their peculiarities and characteristics and that furnished by a cheap journalist bent on obtaining merely the proceedings as recorded by the Secretary. The first tells you what is really important about the personalities of his subjects, and how they differentiate themselves from the others. Perhaps the best story in the collection is that which tells the rise of Secretary Balfour, who, from a lackadaisical young aristocrat, has become the leader of the House:

"When Mr. Balfour came to be Chief Secretary for Ireland he had to speak nightly. At first he made a very bad hand of it. I remember well the first night he had to deliver a speech of any magnitude; it was in introducing the Coercion Bill. The bill was a very drastic measure, and there were misgivings even among Mr. Balfour's own friends as to its wisdom or necessity; and when Mr. Balfour sat down, after passing rather shamefacedly through a hurricane of derision, anger, and interrogation from the Irish benches, the cause of coercion and of Mr. Balfour seemed to be lost. These were the days in which Mr. Goschen was regarded as the great man of the Unionist party; and I also remember from that period the look of almost childlike delight with which Mr. Balfour looked up at Mr. Goschen as he drove home, with all the effectiveness of a great and a trained debater, the case which Mr. Balfour should have made and had failed to make for himself. But time went on; every night Mr. Balfour was subjected to a torrent of questions; his policy in Ireland was of a character to provoke constant parliamentary attack; and the result was that, having to fight nightly for his life, Mr. Balfour was kept in constant practice, and the House woke up one day to find that the stumbling, ineffective, and almost despised man had grown to be one of the most effective and powerful and ready debaters of the House of Commons. The struggle in Ireland was such as to bring out his peculiar powers."

Quite as interesting is the narrative of how John Morley became an orator:

"Mr. Morley early made up his mind that he was not a good speaker, and this affected his speaking. I remember seeing him shortly after he delivered what was really a good speech in the home-rule struggle, and he said, 'I did badly, of course; I always do badly.' Like Sir William Harcourt, as I have already said, he had the fatal habit—very natural in a man who had had a pen in his hand all his life—of writing down every word of his speeches, and this took away all spontaneity and vivacity from them. And like a good mnay other self-distrustful and inexperienced speakers, Mr. Morley began by an extreme vehemence. In the desire to produce effect—in the fear that he would not produce it—he lashed himself into extravagance of language and of gesture and of voice. There is no more fatal defect in the House of Commons. I forget who said it first, but whoever said it said a very true thing when he declared that the language and speech and demeanor of the House of Commons should never go beyond the tone of polite and well-bred society. This was the art the secret of which Mr. Gladstone had learned better than any man of his time. He could be deadly effective and speak scarcely above the tone of the drawing room; he could thrill with a whisper; he could kill with a staement that was moderate to reserve."

However, the serious reader who wants facts can turn to the meteorological article by Dr. Henry Smith Williams, or to Dr. Prudden's interesting account of the discovery of strange remains in the caves of canyon walls in Northern San Juan county. This is the region where the Cliff Dwellers had their homes, and the investigations show an older civilization than that which they represented. As for the short stories in this "Harpers'," they are hardly up to the level of the rest of the book. "With the Eye of Honor" is there, and "Grandmother Stark" by Owen Wester is mere potboiling.

The article in this "Century" is that on St. Gaudens. It is capitally illustrated. You cannot find a finer example of the half-tone process than the several pictures of the Shaw memorial, which is declared to be the sculptor's masterpiece. With it are reproductions of the Lincoln statue, the beautiful figure of Rock Creek cemetery, of the bas reliefs of the Butler children drawn inimitably by Kenyon Cox. These are fine, but the best picture in the "Century" is Howard Pyle's illustration of "Hene Andre! a Spy," on page 264. It is a fine and vital composition, the effect compounded of half-tone and engraving, a system which is used in the several big magazines nowadays, and is made excellent use of by the "Cosmopolitan." Besides the timely stuff about Queen Victoria, in the June issue, the best editorial judgment is shown in the "Heroes of Peace" series, and in the articles about "A Great Modern Observatory" and "How Food Is Used in the Body." In the latter Professor Atwater tells of a series of experiments conducted under the auspices of the government to investigate the manner in which food builds up the body. The short fiction is poor, there being little quality in "How Sarah Paid for Peace."

I. B. Connery's article on the Garfield-Conkling tragedy is not very well handled, and is better for its matter than its manner. The difference between the literary methods of Connery and that of T. P. O'Connor illustrates the distinction between old and new journalism. There is no atmosphere in the narrative of this bit of American history, though its characters were surely as picturesque figures as ever appeared before the country. However, it effectively dissipates what romance may linger round the memory of Conkling, who is stigmatized as "unjust, ungrateful, suspicious and arrogant. Furthermore, I have met no human being, no matter what important services he had rendered the Senator, who failed to fall under the ban of his displeasure the moment any difference of opinion occurred respecting public or private matters. If he possessed in any degree the virtue of gratitude I never saw it." The Constable and "Moonshining" pictures in number are fine engravings, and the material of the Marlborough House article is gossipy and informative. "The War of Worlds" is an aggravation to read in serial form. It is certainly interesting, but there is no reason for "The House of Life," which is a wretched attempt at story telling, with neither plot nor value.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

A full assortment of the latest Eastern novelties at Gruenhagens, 20 Kearny street. Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make—a specialty. Goods delivered free to Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure, be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and is made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

☞Sold by druggists; price, 75c. per bottle.

In one of the suburbs of Belfast trade was dull, and the chief grocer in the district found his earnings becoming smaller day by day. One morning an old customer entered. In expectation of something good, the grocer jumped up from his seat, and, rubbing his hands, said: "Well, missus, what can I get you?" "A ha'pennyworth o' soap," was the reply. "Oh," said the disgusted grocer, "ye'll be for washin' the canary to-day?"

Beyond all question of doubt the greatest sale of Japanese goods ever held on the Coast is now being carried on by Ito, Sotomi & Co., at 116 Sutter street.

A young English upstart, whose conversation implied that he had been at school at Eton, though probably he had never been there in his life, was talking loudly about the injustice of flogging, and said that he for one had several times been flogged for speaking what was the truth. An American, who had been listening, looked at him a bit inquisitively, and t hen remarked: "I guess, stranger, they cured you of it."

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

QUEEN LILY SOAP
Will not shrink Woolens, Flannels, or the finest of Fabrics. The best and most economical soap made. Washes Without Rubbing . . .
NOTICE.—On receipt of twenty-five Queen Lily Soap wrappers, we will mail to any address a handsome picture, 15x20, free from all advertising matter.
NEW ENGLAND SOAP CO.
307 Sacramento St., S. F.

In photo-engraving, as in other lines of trade, you sometimes pay superior prices for inferior work. We guarantee superior work, by a new process, at moderate prices.
Send for estimates to
THE WAVE PUBLISHING CO.
24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

GEO. H. KAHN,

OPTICIAN,
201 KEARNY, Cor. Sutter.

PHOTO SUPPLIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
DEVELOPING AND PRINTING.
GEO. H. KAHN,
201 KEARNY ST., COR. SUTTER.

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR
BYRON MAUZY PIANOS
308-314 POST ST.

The Forum JOSE C. CASTRO Proprietor
141 Montgomery Street
An elegant place, where only the best of refreshments and liquors are served Mid-day, afternoon and night lunch, consisting of fine American, French and Spanish dishes. Private rooms.

JOHNSON & CO.
New Spring Goods just arrived
Ladies' Jackets to order
Merchant Tailors
24 Montgomery Street

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of
Artificial Stone in all its branches
Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty
Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

THE LATEST NEW YORK STYLES
IN
Men's Hats
AT
FISHER'S 9 Montgomery Street

Its Purity
A Surety
Of
Its Excellence

Accept
No
Substitute
None
So
Good
None
So
Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

Haywards Park Club House
At the terminus of Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railway. Concert every Sunday during the season from 1 to 5 p. m. The Club House will be conducted under the management of Mrs. Rachael Hayward, whose reputation as a purveyor and hostess is unequalled.
Take Oakland Ferry at the foot of Market street on the hour or half hour to Fruitvale Station. The Haywards Electric Cars make connections for Park without change.

BALDWIN THEATRE — AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.
Sunday, June 6th, Matinees Wednesday and Saturday
Two Weeks Only
The Liliputians
In their Greatest Success, the Brilliant Spectacular Play
MERRY TRAMPS
Beautiful Costumes! Magnificent Scenery!
Original Music, Dances, etc. Three Gorgeous Ballets

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
Monday, June 2d : Second Week
The Great Success
The Fatal Card
PRESENTED BY
THE FRAWLEY COMPANY
Monday, June 14th, the New Comedy, The Interlopers

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, June 7th
Russell Bros., the Irish Servant Girls
Vaidis Twin Sisters, Aerial Wonders
Dailey & Hilton, Comedy Creators
Johnson & Dean, King and Queen of Colored Aristocracy Tremendous success of ADGIE and Her Lions
In conjunction with a great big bill
Regular Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
Last Nights of NANON
Next Week, Our First Annual Review
MISS FRISCO
A Melange of Song, Dance, Ballet and Humor!
All the favorites in the cast!
The past and present blended in a novel manner
A Perfect Scenic Production
Popular Prices . . 25 and 50c.

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE
WALTER MOROSCO : : : Sole Lessee and Manager
Last performances of Lost in New York
With its Realistic River Scene
Commencing Monday, June 7th, Initial Production on this Coast of the Romantic Drama
The House on the Marsh
Dramatized from the well-known novel of the same name by Mervyn Dallas
Fourth week of our favorite, Maud Edna Hall
New Secenery, Stirring Incidents, etc.
Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

DRAMATIC NOTES

Daniel Frohman's Lyceum Company follow the Liliputians at the Baldwin. The company includes James K. Hackett, Charles Wolcot, Mary Mannering, Katherine Florence and Maud Odell. The "Prisoner of Zenda" will be given in addition to three new plays, "The First Gentleman of Europe," "The Mayflower," and "The Late Mr. Costello."

The Frawley Company and "The Fatal Card" have been so well received at the Columbia that it has been decided to continue the drama for another week. The piece is now in perfect running order, and doubtless will continue to attract a large attendance. On Monday, June 14th, Mr. Lorimer Stoddard's new comedy, "The Interioper," written especially for the Frawley Company, will be given its first production. Much is expected of it.

The Russell Brothers, character impersonators, come to the Orpheum next week with their Irish servant girl sketch. The Vaidis Twin Sisters, in their aerial performance, are also looked to open, as are Daily and Hilton, eccentric comedy creators, and Johnson and Dean, king and queen of colored aristocracy, in specialties; adgie, the dancing lady of the lions, has made a sensation, and will continue to appear in conjunction with a strong company.

The Liliputians open at the Baldwin tomorrow (Sunday) evening in their new spectacular piece, "Merry Tramps." The production contains three ballets, the most beautiful being the electrical ballet for which sixty young women of most distinguished underpinning have been engaged. Selma Goerner, Adolf Zink and Franz Ebert assume the parts of the three tramps. Joe, Jim and Bob are said to be as full of fun and as clever and entertaining as ever. The engagement is for two weeks, including Sundays and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Denis O'Sullivan will make his final appearance in San Francisco before leaving for London at Native Sons' Hall on Monday evening. The affair will be a testimonial, and has been arranged by a number of gentlemen, including Mayor Phelan, Dr. Pauliski and Mr. William L. Carrigan. Mr. O'Sullivan will give numbers by Dvorak, Beethoven and Wagner, in addition to several old English and Irish songs. Mrs. Carmichael Carr will accompany, and a feature of the concert will be the first appearance in public of Mrs. Walter MacGavin, well known in private life for her delightful singing of French music.

At Morosco's next week a dramatized version will be given of Mervyn Dallas' celebated novel, "The House on the Marsh." The dramatization has been successfully maue, and contains all the intense interest and sensational incidents that characterized the story. Maud Edna Hall will assume the part of the governess heroine, and Irma Fitch will reappear as a coquettish housemaid.

Miss Eunice Westwater has arranged a programme of much excellence for her song recital at Native Sons' Hall Wednesday evening. The selections are all interesting and the affair promises to be thoroughly enjoyable.

After many weeks of careful preparation the Tivoli announces the production on Monday evening of the long promised "Miss Frisco." The piece is the work of Joseph B. Cassell, a San Francisco journalist, and is as full of humor as it is of novelty. The whole thing hinges about the return to earth of old Emperor Norton, who sings in a sort of passing way the fads and the follies of the time, enlivened with any amount of comedy and bright fanciful music. W. H. West will be Emperor Norton, J. J. Raffael Ned Weanaway, Phys Thomas Lord Allbut Kliftum, Myra Morella Francisco Fogg "Miss Frisco," and Elvia Crox Seabrooke, and Miss Alameda Mole a very new widow. The scenes are well known places about town, and include Lotta's Fountain, the Cliff House, the Chutes, and Golden Gate Hall during the Woman's Congress, introducing the explosive Brachmacharin.

During the . . .
Summer Months
S. & G. GUMP
113 Geary Street
WILL SELL
Paintings and Pictures of all kinds
Bronze and Marble Statuary
Vases, Ornaments, Lamps,
French Furniture, Mirrors
Brass Tables
Crockery and Glassware
At Greatly Reduced Prices
TO MAKE ROOM FOR FALL IMPORTATIONS

DEER PARK INN
Altitude, 6500 feet. Caterer to those who demand the noblest in mountain surroundings. For booklet, address
J. S. LIBBY, Room 1, Flood Bldg., S. F.

TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG.

The Tavern of Castle Crag was built in the heart of the Sierras, almost at the foot of Mount Shasta, and amid the most picturesque mountain scenery accessible to the tourist. The eligibility of the place selected was due to a rare combination of flowing water, inspiring mountain scenery and inviting forests.

The Tavern of Castle Crag, with its splendid environment, it was believed would appeal chiefly to those who seek a summer resort for health, recreation, outdoor sports, sympathy with nature and informal sociability. To emphasize this intention and signify the kind of invitation extended, the name TAVERN of Castle Crag was chosen.

To avoid all implication of sumptuous accommodations or the tyranny of social formalism, and to realize this original conception, the management has decided to make the Tavern of Castle Crag distinctively a family resort and especially attractive to those to whom health, recreation and sympathy with nature are paramount considerations. To this end rooms on the first and second floors of this splendid tavern with board will be furnished at a monthly rate of $65 a person; and rooms on the third floor with board at a monthly rate of $50 a person.

The accommodations of the Tavern are first class in every particular. Its parlors and halls are elegant and spacious. Its verandas are cool and inviting, placing the guest always in the presence of the most attractive mountain scenery to be enjoyed from the balcony of any tavern in the world.

The opportunity for out door sports embraces hunting, fishing, riding, bicycling, walking on mountain paths and driving on picturesque roads. The Tavern is located immediately on the main trunk line of the California & Oregon Railroad, and is fourteen hours' ride from San Francisco, twelve hours from Stockton, ten hours from Sacramento, thirty hours from Los Angeles and twenty-three hours from Portland. The Tavern of Castle Crag is reached from San Francisco and Sacramento without loss of time. The train leaves San Francisco at 8 o'clock p. m., arriving early the following morning for breakfast, which is always ready upon the arrival of the train. Returning, the train time affords equal accommodation. Thus, both in going and in coming the comfort of the passenger and the economy of his time have been studied. In brief, the Tavern of Castle Crag realizes to its guests the perfect ideal of that spring-time in the high altitudes of the Sierras which never becomes high summer, and is the comfortable home of pleasing recreation and restful repose.

For particulars apply to
GEORGE SCHONEWALD,
Room 59, Union Trust Building, San Francisco.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

Miss West's School for Girls
Opens Monday, August 16th. Preparation for college. A limited number of house pupils. Kindergarten in connection with the school. Miss May B. West, principal. 2014 Van Ness Avenue, San Francisco, Cal.

Oakland Seminary
528 Eleventh Street, Oakland, Cal. Next term opens July 26th. For particulars, apply to Mrs. M. K. Blake, principal.

Selborne School, San Rafael, Cal.
The Winter term commences September 1st. For particulars, apply to Principal.

Beware of Imitations
This is a fac simile of the package
Genuine Diamond "L" Tea
Pure and Uncolored
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., S. F.
For sale by all grocers

NATIVE SONS' HALL
Wednesday Evening, June 9th, at 8 o'clock
SONG RECITAL
BY
Mrs. Eunice Westwater, Contralto
ASSISTED BY
Mr. A. Borlini, Baritone
Mr. Giulio Minetti, Violinist
Mr. S. Martinez, Pianist
Tickets, Fifty Cents, including Reserved Seat
On sale at Sherman's Music Store Tuesday and Wednesday, June 8 and 9, and at Hall Wednesday evening.

Fraud.

The extensive counterfeiting of the capsules and labels of our

"Canadian Club" Whisky,

while very flattering, is extremely unpleasant to us as well as to those who drink the vile substitutes.

THE HIGH STANDARD
of "Canadian Club" is always maintained. Beware of inferior substitutes. When you suspect fraud, write us at once and we will protect you.

Hiram Walker & Sons, Lim'd,
WALKERVILLE, CANADA.

For names of dealers handling the genuine whisky, apply to our wholesale agents
WM. WOLFF & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO

The German Savings and Loan Society
526 California St., S. F.
Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45
OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER
DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union
532 CALIFORNIA ST.
Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503
ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier
DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND
Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.
Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.
Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars
Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.
DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES.; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco
33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.
DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.
Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.
Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000
A. J. CARMANY : : Manager
OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING
Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE
OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over.

Address GEO. SCHONEWALD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

SANTA FE LIMITED

On MONDAYS and THURSDAYS the first-class Pullman sleeping-car leaving at 5 p.m. connects at Barstow with the Santa Fe limited train carrying dining-car, buffet smoking-car and Pullman palace drawing-room sleeping-cars for both Chicago and St. Louis via Kansas City.

3½ days to Chicago or St. Louis,
4½ days to New York

SANTA FE EXPRESS

Leaves daily at 5 p.m. Pullman palace drawing-room, also modern upholstered tourist sleeping-cars through to Chicago via Kansas City. Annex cars for Denver and St. Louis.

Boston excursions via Kansas City, Chicago, Montreal and the White Mountains leave every Tuesday. St. Paul excursions every Sunday.

San Francisco ticket office, 644 Market Street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.
Oakland office, 1118 Broadway.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30 and every fifth day thereafter.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, 9 a. m. June 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. June 1, 5, 9, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30; July 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 26, 30; August 3, 7, 11, 16, 20, 24, 28.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. June 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. June 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. the 2d each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, June 15, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Mariposa," for Australia, Thursday, June 24, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BULLION MINING COMPANY. — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 4th day of May, 1897, an assessment (No. 50) of ten cents (10c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of June, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 28th day of June, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of JOHN REIDY, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California,

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of John Reidy, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, April 29, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 56
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied May 21, 1891
Delinquent in office June 25, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, July 16, 1897

J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 27
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied May 11, 1897
Delinquent in office, June 12, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, July 1, 1897

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

J. Smith & Co.

TAILORS

Suits to Order from $10 to $40

Fine Line of
Imported and Domestic Woolens

First-Class Work and Perfect Fit Guaranteed

944 MARKET STREET
UNDER BALDWIN HOTEL
Branch, 571 Market Street, near Second.

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

THE LATEST STYLES IN
CHOICE WOOLENS
H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
623 Market St. (up stairs) opp. Palace Hotel
Bicycle and Golf Suits

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

Electrical Supplies
BROOKS - FOLLIS
ELECTRICAL CO.
523 Mission St., San Francisco

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

United States Laundry
Office 1004 Market St.
TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort, Winter and Summer, of the Pacific Coast

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Climate Unexcelled!
Magnificent Scenery!
The Sanitarium of the Pacific Coast
Otis Elevators Electric Lights

Headquarters of the San Rafael Hunt-Club and Tennis Tournaments

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors

St. Denis

Broadway and Eleventh St. NEW YORK

OPPOSITE GRACE CHURCH

EUROPEAN PLAN

In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the Metropolis than the St. Denis.

The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine, and its very moderate prices.

William Taylor & Son.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

The Hotel Richelieu

N. E. Cor. Van Ness and Myrtle Aves.

PRINCIPAL AND FINEST FAMILY HOTEL OF SAN FRANCISCO

HOTEL RICHELIEU CO.

Hotel Bella Vista

1001 PINE STREET

Elegant Furnishings and Apartments

DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED

MRS. A. F. TRACY.

European Tours

When you want to know anything about travel come to the world's greatest Tourist Agents. We sell tickets over all railroads and steamship lines at the lowest rates. Drafts, Letters of Credits, Guide Books, etc.

THOS. COOK & SON

621 Market Street San Francisco

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S

Original Budweiser Beer

THE FINEST BEER IN AMERICA

THE E. G. LYONS CO., Agents
508-12 Jackson Street.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED

to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant odor, $1.00 a bottle

LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle

LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st., N.Y. Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Judge Reathia, an old and very popular German saloon-keeper, was elected Police Judge of South Omaha. Being of a thrifty turn of mind he determined not to sell a paying business for any temporary political prominence, so he refused to see any disparagement to his judicial service in the white apron he wore serivng at the bar after court was out. Of course, innumerable complications ensued. For instance, some morning thet Judge would be confronted with a motley of drunks. The Judge fresh from the bar, would call up one and say: "Vell, vere did you gid dot beer vat you trink?" If the prisoner would say at the "Bodega" or some other well-known saloon the Judge would say in stentorian tones: "Ten dollars und costs—next." So it would go down the line until one would say that he got his beer at the Judge's saloon, and then the Judge's hard look would melt to one of the sweetest smiles and he would say: "Let dis man go; he is discharged." The old offenders realized the situation, and it soon became hard to find a drunk who had not got his whisky at the court's saloon. Unfortunately the Judge's till did not harmonize with his calendar, and disgusted with the perjury of habitual boozers, he relinquished his establishment, and devoted himself to purging the town of its drunks.

The Bishop of Manchester is a cleric of excellent sense and toleration. Before his elevation to an English See, he officiated as Bishop of Melbourne, Victoria, and he was rather given to lecturing in out of the way places. One night he had to make a talk in a far-off township in the mountains. The hall was packed, but a young bushman, attired in a striped shirt and moleskin trousers, and wearing a flaming red comforter, was determined to push his way to the front. He thought he saw a vacant seat on the platform, and made for it. "Would you mind shoving up a bit, misses?" he said to a quiet homely-looking lady. "No, no; you mustn't sit there," interposed a local clergyman; "that's the Bishop's wife." "Nonsense!" exclaimed the Bishop, who had overheard the remark. "Squeeze up a bit, Mary." And Mary did.

The cycle "boom" in the Midland counties has enabled many small cycle makers to make their fortunes. One of these spoiled children of fortune, having recently incorporated his establishment with the pleasantest results to himself, felt justified in exchanging the humble menage of an artisan for a large house with several servants—quite an establishment, in fact. A tradesman who had known the gentleman in the lowlier stages of his career remarked to one of the servants: "Your master has got on, and no mistake! I suppose he's getting quite refined now?" "Oh, yes, that 'e is," replied the girl; "he washes hisself in the 'ouse now!"

Whistler, the great painter, was suffering with a sore throat. He sent out his valet to purchase some medicine with which to gargle. The valet returned with the bottle, opened it, but in handing it to Whistler he stumbled and spilt half the contents over his master's swellest waistcoat. There was a moment of suspense. Whistler had begun: "You chum—" When of a sudden he stopped, uttered a cry of joy, and shook the valet's hand. "My good man," he shouted, at the top of his hoarse voice, "don't say a word. You've spoilt my waistcoat, but you've given me the shade that I want for my picture, and I'm everlastingly grateful to you."

Daniel Webster, though not given to flattery, could on an occasion turn a compliment with grace. At a little gathering one night the talk turned on a very pretty woman, whose eyes were notably fine. An enthusiastic army officer aid: "They remind me, with their long, dark eyelashes, of artillery in ambuscade." "They should rather be compared to heat lightning," said another. "Not so," put in Mr. Webster, with a perfectly grave face, "for you must be aware, my dear sir, that heat lightning never strikes."

Mr. Justice Hawkins, of the London law courts, is a severe person, but has also a sense of humor. Before him, recently, a dock laborer was subjected to a somewhat vigorous cross-examination, in the midst of which the judge interrupted him with a question. Not hearing the judge's remark, the counsel quickly capped with another before the dockhand had time to reply. "Look here!" said the latter to the eminent gentleman examining him. "You shut up; I'm talking to the Governor now."

Mrs. Bancroft, the wife of the historian, when staying in London, went one day to a matinee musicale in Mayfair. On the way she was attracted by a display of shawls in a Regent-street window, and, stopping the cab, went into the shop and bought one, throwing it over her shoulders to wear at the fashionable gathering. The astonished guests were edified by the sight of the elegant Mrs. Bancroft floating through the various rooms with a placard on her back bearing the words, "Very Chaste."

A gigantic haddie bone, such as would have settled half a dozen ordinary men, had been removed from the gullet of a son of Caledonia, and the Glasgow surgeon said: "'Tis wan o' the maircies o' Providence it didna kill ye, Sandy." Sandy turned the trophy over curiously and replied: "Aye, an' I'd like ta keep it as a relic." "Then a'all tell ye hoo, ye maun keep it in som' place whaur 'twill be soaked in speerit—say whusky ——" "Ay, docther, docther," responded the laddie, "ye micht well ha' left it whaur it was!"

HOTELS AND RESORTS

HOTEL MAJESTIC

Central Park West, 72d and 71st Streets, NEW YORK

FACING CENTRAL PARK

THE ELITE HOTEL OF AMERICA

CONDUCTED ON AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLANS

ONE of the Largest and Finest in the World—600 rooms, with 245 bathrooms. Absolutely Fireproof. Most luxuriously appointed. Cuisine of the highest order. An ideal resort for Families, Transients and Tourists. Select Orchestral Music every evening. Spacious Foyer and Promenade Halls, Drawing and Music Rooms. Excellent appointments for Private Dinners, Banquets, Dances, and Receptions. Board of Direetors' Meeting-rooms. Bowling Alleys and Shuffle Boards for Private Parties.

References required of parties not personally known to the management.

While this hotel is organized and conducted on the grandest scale possible, prices are kept moderate. Excellent home during the Summer for Gentlemen whose families are at distant points in the country or abroad.

P. S.—Parties visiting New York are cordially invited to inspect this magnificent hotel, which will be found one of the greatest attractions of the city. Within twenty minutes' reach of the Business and Theatre Districts. During the Summer Season the beautiful Private Rustic and Palm Gardens, situated 300 feet above sea level, are open to guests only.

A. F. MUELLER.

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight.

CALIFORNIA'S MOST CHARMING SUMMER RESORTS

ALONG THE LINE OF THE
San Francisco & North Pacific Railway
MAY BE FOUND THE

Mark West Springs, Skaggs Springs,
The Geysers,
Highland, Bartlett, and Vichy Springs,
Blue Lakes, Laurel Dell, Saratoga Springs
Soda Bay, Lytton Springs,
Agua Caliente Springs, Orr's Hot Springs
Duncan Springs

FOR DETAILED INFORMATION, APPLY AT

Ticket Office, 650 Market St., Chronicle Bldg.
Or General Office, Mutual Life Building,
Sansome and California Streets, San Francisco

Pacific Congress Springs

HOTEL

SANTA CRUZ MOUNTAINS
SANTA CLARA COUNTY

Remodeled and under New Management

Only Two-and-a-half hours from San Francisco

6 miles from Los Gatos 10 miles from Santa Clara
12 miles from San Jose

For rates and printed matter, address

JOHN S. MATHESON, Manager.

Sea Beach Hotel

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

CALIFORNIA'S FAVORITE RESORT! Located on a flowering slope from the beach. Magnificent view of beach, bay and mountains. Salmon fishing, tennis court, croquet grounds and music. Rates reasonable. For terms,

ADDRESS

JOHN T. SULLIVAN, MANAGER

The Making of a Fireman — Bad Architecture in the City

"Through a Glass Darkly;" by Frank Norris

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY
This Paper not

VOL XVI. No. 24 — SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 12, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS.

A STRANGE RELIEF-SHIP

The steel whaleback "City of Everett," that will take a cargo of wheat to the relief of the starving natives of India

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 12, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| Picking Season in a California Cherry Orchard | 4 |
| "Through a Glass Darkly"; by Frank Norris | 5 |
| When Cherries are Ripe | 5 |
| Pseudo Architecture; by Justin Sturgis | 6 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 6-7 |
| A Queer Relief-Ship | 7 |
| A Day With the Fire-Fighters | 8 |
| Training of Firemen; by Frank Norris | 9 |
| A Royal Mountain-Climber | 9 |
| A Debutante's Diary; by Miss Cricket | 10 |
| Dramatic Notes | 11 |
| Pen Portraits by Mrs. M. E. W. Sherwood | 12 |
| "Miss Frisco" at the Tivoli | 13 |
| Turf Notes; by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The inability of the State of California to hang its own murderers, after they have been by its own courts pronounced to be ripe for hanging, has been strikingly exhibited in two separate cases within the last ten days. In the case of Worden three years, lacking only one month, have elapsed since the crime was committed, of which, after a fair trial, he was, by an impartial jury, declared to be guilty, and deserving of the punishment of death. In the more notorious case of Durrant, two years and two months have passed since the discovery of the ghastly crime of which he was accused, and for one of which alone the law demanded the highest penalty. In each case a long trial was followed by a long delay to afford opportunity for the inevitable appeal to the Supreme Court. When that court, after long consideration, had rejected the appeals and had formally refused to reconsider the rejection and had demanded the convicted prisoners to be executed in accordance with the sentences pronounced upon them by the trial courts, it might fairly have been presumed that judicial investigation of the facts in the two cases and the law relating to them had been completed. Surely the time spent in the hearings and appeals was more than ample to bring out the truth of every disputed fact, and to solve every legal problem arising in either case.

To the amount of delay involved in these proceedings, entirely unnecessary though most of it is, the public has become accustomed, though hardly reconciled. We have grown so tender in the treatment of our murderers that we endure, with only an occasional growl or murmur of impatience, the prodigious delays of our State courts in reaching final decisions in their cases. The only compensation we have for this holding of justice at bay for months and even years is the feeling of assurance that no innocent victim of misleading appearances and chance circumstances could run that long gauntlet of the law without having his innocence somewhere made apparent. We know very well that in this long and sometimes languid chase after the wicked justice is often outpaced, or grows weary, so that many a malefactor escapes with much milder chastisement than the law has prescribed, and not a few go entirely unwhipped. We console ourselves for this with the conviction that in any event the lash of the law is not laid on the shoulders of the innocent, nor even too heavily on the backs of the guilty; and that when, at last, the hand of justice drags a man to the gallows we may feel sure that he has merited his doom. Heretofore we have regarded the usual appeal to the clemency of the Governor as the last refuge of the convicted murderer, and with the denial of that appeal we have looked for the legal extinction of the criminal.

But we have learned from the almost simultaneous cases of Durrant and Worden that there are still further and perhaps finer meshes of the legal web through which our felons must be passed before justice can be dealt out to them. Both of these over-ripe, convicted murderers have been rescued for a time from the very foot of the gallows by merely raising in a United States court some trivial question as to the proceedings by which they were convicted in the State courts. That the issue raised in the Federal Court are entirely frivolous, and that they are raised solely for the purpose of securing a delay of the executions, is evident from the fact that in both cases the interference of that court was not sought until the Governor of the State had definitely declared that he would not exercise his power to commute the sentence of death to one of life imprisonment in either case. If there were any legal merit in the motions made in behalf of the condemned before the Federal judges, or if the attorneys who made the motions had any real belief that such action could be relied on to save finally the lives of their clients, is it conceivable that the action would have been delayed till after executive clemency had been refused? Every intelligent citizen in the State knows that delay was the sole purpose that the attorneys had in view. And their purpose has been accomplished.

It is worth noting that it is not by any action of the Federal Court that this result has been reached, for that court promptly refused to act. But the refusal was just as valuable for the purposes of the attorneys for the murderers as the active interference of the court would have been. An appeal from refusal to act gave them just as much time as they could have secured by an appeal from a decision after a hearing. The court is helpless and powerless in the face of the law, which provides for a right of apepal and a stay of execution in such cases. And there seems to be nothing to prevent another such frivolous appeal to the same courts, on some other trivial pretext, when the present appeal shall have been rejected, provided that a Federal judge can be found within the State to whom to make a new application. We may be reduced to the necessity of inviting the United States judges to abandon our State temporarily whenever we have on hand a sufficient number of convicted murderers whom we really desire to have hanged.

The murderers themselves are hardly to be blamed for desiring to have their lives prolonged. As a rule they are quite as reluctant to be hanged after their applications for hanging have been duly certified by the court and jury as before. They have nothing to lose in playing the game out to the last card, and there is always the hope that something may turn up if the game lasts long enough, and it looks now as if death from old age might turn up in many cases. The public and the cause of justice alone have anything to lose in the game after the first sentence is passed on the culprit.

Nor is it fair to reproach the attorneys who do, in behalf of their clients, only what he law permits, and their duty as lawyers requires, them to do. They fight for delay, and for every chance that delay may bring with it, much as the physician, under the same sense of duty, struggles to prolong the life of the patient, even when he knows the case to be hopeless. It is the law itself which is at fault, and the law is what the people make it. If it is worth while to hang murderers at all the certainty and celerity of the hanging alone can make it worth while. To hang a man who has been kept in jail storage for three years after the commission of the crime for which he is sentenced is to throw away the greater part of the deterrent effect of his punishment, which is the most valuable result sought. It gives time for the growth of maudlin sympathy and sentiment at the expense of the public sense of justice. If the people really desire that the death penalty shall swiftly and certainly follow the crime of murder, they will see to it that their representatives protect from abuse the right of appeal in criminal case, and that access to the Federal courts shall be cut off in cases in which Federal jurisdiction and Federal questions are not really involved—and are not raised in good faith, or for any purpose but delay. At present the people seem to be content that justice, in capital cases, shall be strangled by the law, and nothing else.

THE BILL-BOARD NUISANCE.

The political influence that is interested in defacing our streets with billboards, standing from eight to twenty feet high, is so strong that probably no effort on the part of the press or the people can ever put an end to the nuisance. But over in Oakland, a city which must depend much upon its beauty for its attraction, there is no Police Commissioner with a large interest in an advertising company, and no strong and corrupt political influence interested in its maintenance. It should therefore be a comparatively simple matter for that community to put an end to the disfiguring advertising devices that deface its thoroughfares and detract from the beauty of our most attractive suburban city.

The law cannot compel an owner to exhibit civic pride, or to so manage and conduct his business and his property as to make it attractive to the citizen and visitor, but it may prevent sign companies and the like from defacing the dead walls; it may put a stop to those high disfiguring fences, which are really a menace to life and a nuisance as well. If there is no other way to accomplish this end, a prohibitory license would be most effective.

The city of Oakland is, with most commendable enterprise, expending a large sum of money in the making of a park at West Oakland, and otherwise adorning its municipal gateway so that the tourist and wayfarer may not be badly impressed by the unwholesome and uninviting view now presented at the overland depot. In a short time thousands of strange visitors will throng her streets, and will form and carry away impressions and institute comparisons that will not be to the advantage of our neighbor. Every vacant lot in that city has been recently emphasized by a fence of outrageous height, adorned with flaming and highly colored advertisements. So general is this display and flagrant the abuse that unless our sister city would have the strangers take away the impression that Oakland is a city of bill-boards and dead walls, they should take some steps to immediately abate the nuisance, which is even more marked and abominable there than here. We commend this nuisance to the attention of the Oakland press.

THE REGULARS AND THE MILITIA.

The officers and men of the National Guard of the State are engaged, at this time, in active preparations for their annual encampments. The recent reorganization of the State troops, with the resulting inprovement in the personnel and in the geographical distribution of the several commands, gives ground for the hope that these camps, which have always been supposed to be for the military instruction of the Guard, may be so managed as to attain to a fuller measure of that instruction than was possible under the old regime. The instruction is needed, and we believe that the commissioned officers, and the enlisted men of the State's regiments are, by a large majority, anxious to receive it and willing to profit by the experience.

In the former days—which are only too recent, however—when it was not at all difficult to pick out from the roster the names of many general, regimental and staff officers, who regarded their commissions and their right to wear the State's uniform as merely valuable aids to the promotion of their political, professional or commercial ambitions, the summer camps were anything but edifying military spectacles. Entertainment, not instruction, seemed to be the principal purpose of the gathering of armed men, and the character of the entertainment provided was not always such as would meet the approval of moralists or martinets. A large part of the supplies taken to the camps consisted of articles not mentioned in the ration returns or found in the list of commissary stores of a well-regulated army, and one of the results was invariably to attract to the camp a swarm of visitors and camp followers distinguished by extraordinary thirst rather than by any marked zeal for or interest in the welfare of the State's military establishment. The ruin of soldierly appearance was generally completed by the arrival of the Governor, in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief, with his suite of sham colonels of the staff, each attached awkwardly to a sword, to be sure, and clad in a uniform, generally a misfit, but with nothing else about him suggestive of military character or previous military experience. It is safe to say that in those camps the Guard appeared at its worst possible, and that discipline and instruction really suffered as the result of every such experience.

On the other hand, the United States troops always show to much better advantage on the march and in camp than they do when quartered in garrisons. Our army has developed a system which makes the domestic establishment of every officer who chooses to maintain one a part of the military establishment, from which it results, strangely enough, that the army has its horde of "camp followers" always with it, except in camp. A visit to any garrisoned post will show how heavy is the burden thus imposed on the military service, and a short acquaintance with the conditions of garrison life will prove that the domestic comforts of the officers' wives and children and their various relatives and connections by marriage are always entitled to precedence over mere matters which affect only the military efficiency of the command. One consequence of this is that the United States soldier in garrison is a good deal of a family drudge. He does the family marketing and runs on other family errands; he raises vegetables and keeps the flower-beds in trim condition; he may be the coachman and frequently milks the family cow; he splits firewood, delivers coal, and is often an expert shoeblack; and if he is master of any trade the quartermaster will set him to practicing his art generally for the improvement of the officers' quarters. In the intervals between these indispensable occupations he occasionally takes off his brown canvas working garb, puts himself into the army blue, and does a little soldiering. It has been suggested more than once that our militiamen might, with some advantage, have their camps pitched at or near some large army post, but we earnestly advise them to stay away from such neighborhoods. The spectacle presented by the regular soldier, as he lives and moves and has his being in garrison, is not calculated to raise the military ardor and ambition of the citizen soldier.

But the soldier of each kind may do the soldier of the other kind a good turn. Let the civilian troops exert themselves to get their regular brethren a respite from the domestic drudgery and routine of their garrison life. Let the regulars be sent to establish a camp at some place where there will be room enough for the State troops to camp near them, if not actually with them. Then the militiamen can see the regulars at their best —and at their best there are no better troops to be seen —and much profit will be derived by the guardsmen from the example and instruction of their professional brethren. Let all the campfollowers be religiously left behind, and if the Commander-in-Chief desires to visit and inspect his troops let him be earnestly entreated, in the name of his hopes for future political preferment, to bring with him no civilian colonel, no matter how unsoiled may be his uniform, or how vast his thirst, who does not know how to wear a sword and ride a horse. Such a camp might easily be made a camp of real instruction without eliminating the pleasure of the militiamen's annual outing under arms. Regular troops, in small detachments, have more than once been detailed, as a sort of military models, to attend the camps of the State troops in Eastern States, and the results have been in every way satisfactory. Let the experiment be tried here, and we venture the prophecy that it will develop into an annual custom.

HAWAIIAN VS. BEET SUGAR

An Interesting Contribution to an Important Controversy by L. Saroni.

San Francisco, June 9, 1897.

To the Editor "Wave": In the "Call" of June 6th, Charles Freeman Johnson, in a long article, expresses his personal opinion on the Hawaiian treaty. He says and states, among other things, that we have had financial statements on the one side torn to pieces by professional writers on the other. The truth is that the friends of the treaty have placed statistics before the people, and invited general criticism and discussion, but the advocates of abrogation have refused to abandon their original whine that the beet sugar industry is injured by the treaty. Repeatedly they have been requested to make public the cost of manufacturing white dry granulated beet sugars, and to make a clear, conservative and honest showing as to the requirements of further protection to that industry. But on this point they are singularly silent.

The cost to the manufacturer of beet sugar is not an unknown quantity to the promoters of abrogation; they have it thoroughly within their power, from their own books, and from their own experience, to satisfy the public demand concerning the expenses of beet culture and the cost of the refining process.

Mr. Johnson continues: "What every man wants, is the truth." Upon this invitation I propound the following questions to Mr. Johnson, and invite reply:

First—What is the recognized standard established by European statistics of the cost of raising sugar beets in Germany?

Second—What is the cost, so far as our statistics go, of raising sugar beets in America?

Third—What is the average percentage of saccharine matter in the German product?

Fourth—What is the average percentage of saccharine in the American sugar beet?

Fifth—What is the cost, including all expenses, of manufacturing sugar from the beet, according to German statistics?

Sixth—What is the cost, including all expenses, of manufacturing sugar from the beet, according to the statistics of California?

Seventh—How does the co-efficient of the American beet compare with that of the German?

Eighth—What should constitute a reasonable profit on the investment in the manufacture and sale of beet sugars?

Ninth—What has been the profit, in percentage on investment, for the years 1895-6 and 1896-7, exclusive of governmental bounties, to the beet sugar manufacturer of California?

If Mr. Charles Freeman Johnson will furnish these statistics to the public, and verify them if it be necessary, he will be promulgating knowledge which the public earnestly desires and eagerly solicits.

The few pointed questions which Mr. Johnson asks are:

First—"Who is it wants this treaty?" The Johnsonian answer, "The Hawaiian people; the traders—(all those seeking private profit from trade with Hawaii.)" To which I take the liberty of adding the treaty is desired by the statesmen, whose intelligence prompted them to extend certain benefits as a diplomatic measure to the people of Hawaii, in exchange for the strategic advantages gained by the United States in being placed in control of Pearl Harbor, and in a sense, of the Pacific ocean; it is desired by men of the type of Seward, who had the foresight, and the confidence, in the face of greatest opposition, to secure Alaska to the United States, for the smallest slice of which England now shows her eager ambition; it is desired by men who see the advantages in the acquisition of Hawaiian trade and Hawaiian co-operation, notwithstanding the ridicule and opposition of a prejudiced few; it is desired by American citizens who have invested their fortunes in Hawaii.

Mr. Johnson asks: "Who oppose this treaty?" and answers: "All citizens seeking the development in the United States of the industries now fostered in Hawaii, by the treaty," meaning the beet sugar industry. In my opinion the honest men who oppose this treaty are the misguided, uninformed farmers, led to believe by the Sugar Trust that it will bring advantages to the beet growers. It is true some few Boards of Supervisors have expressed themselves in opposition to the treaty, but it is likewise true that they acted with mistaken zeal to serve the beet industries of their districts, and without having a knowledge of the facts.

Questions three and four are absurd and purposeless.

Fifth—"Why was this treaty made in 1876?" Johnsonian answer: "On the part of the United States, that the Pacific Coast might be supplied with cheap sugar. On the part of the Hawaiians, that a market might be made for their products." My answer is, By the United States to obtain a coaling station, to wit, Pearl Harbor; to create an outlet for her products; to secure the advantages on the Pacific ocean which would accrue from friendly intercourse with the Hawaiian people. On the part of the Hawaiians, as a business proposition against which no intelligent person can take exception. Mr. Johnson states that the United States made this treaty so the Pacific Coast might be supplied with cheap sugar. If this be so, I now ask the question, "Did the Pacific Coast get cheap sugar?" "No, it wanted it, expected it, and would gladly have welcomed it, but a Johnsonian-Hawaiian took advantage of this opportunity, and sugar by his manipulation sold on the Pacific Coast at 2 cents a pound higher than in the New York market."

Sixth—"Has the treaty fulfilled the purpose of its creation?" Johnsonian answer: "On the part of Hawaii, yes; on the part of the United States, no. The bounty in shape of duty remitted, instead of benefiting our people, was paid over to the Hawaiians in the shape of a higher price for their sugar." I reply to this, The Hawaiian people entered into this treaty with a view of finding an outlet for their goods, in return for which they granted this country, in addition to a remission of duties, other concessions. They took advantage of the opportunities, increased their outputs, and furthered their ends within the limits of the treaty as any enterprising party would do under similar circumstances. On the other hand, if the Americans did not ship as much of their products to Hawaii as they had hoped for, it is because they have been satisfied to take such trade as naturally came to them. The native Hawaiian had agents in America looking after his interests, but the Johnsonian-Hawaiian remained at home and waited for Hawaiian business to come to him. That 23 per cent. should have gone to other countries like Germany is not to be wondered at. Mr. Johnson states that the duty remitted instead of benefiting our people was paid over to the Hawaiians in the shape of a higher price for their sugars. I regret I am here compelled to state that what Mr. Johnson states is true, and the boodle was divided. Does he know how?

Seventh—"Who sought to have it extended when the first seven years' term expired?" Johnsonian answer: "The Hawaiian people, and the traders." My answer is, Those mutually interested. Unless we desire to charge corruption to the President and Senate of the United States, and unless we desire to admit that the Hawaiian planter is our superior in intellect, then I will state that its continuance was with a thorough understanding of the values of the treaty to the people of this country.

Eighth—"What does it gain to the Hawaiian people?" Johnsonian answer: "In 1897, $4,355,706 cash bounty on their product, being duty remitted at 40 per cent., besides a market for $10,889,271 of output, or a total of $15,244,977, which we paid them; of this $14,727,541 being for sugar, the industry fostered by the treaty, and going to private citizens, not to the government." My reply is, If the 10 per cent. duty which the Hawaiian government places upon imports into its territory was insufficient to satisfy the American people, we should have demanded that these duties be increased before renewing the treaty. I am satisfied there would be little difficulty in inducing the Hawaiian government to inaugurate a tariff similar to that we have in force in the United States.

Ninth—"What does it gain for the United States?" Johnsonian answer: "$380,395, being 10 per cent. duty remitted, besides a market for $3,803,956 of our goods, or a total of $4,184,351 paid us for our goods exported. Loss to the United States, $11,060,626, paid them more than they paid us. This loss is to the private citizens of the United States, not to the government itself. The loss to the Federal revenue is the $4,355,706 duty remitted." My reply is, The answer merely figures upon dollars and cents, and leaves out all the other points at issue.

Tenth—"What special interest does it chiefly effect?" Johnsonian answer: "Sugar industry of the United States." My answer, The Sugar Trust of the United States.

Eleventh—"In which country does it develop such industry?" Johnsonian answer: "The treaty develops only the sugar industry of Hawaii." My answer, That is just what was intended when the treaty was made.

Question twelve and thirteen are equivalent to repetitions.

Fourteenth—"What will California lose or gain by abrogation?" Johnsonian answer: "Lose only her proportion of the $380,395 applying on products to Hawaii from California or on commissions on goods sold by her commission merchants; gain the sugar industry, adding many millions to her commercial wealth, say $5,000,000 next year, restoring prosperity to the agricultural sections of this State, with its corresponding prosperity in commercial circles." My answer, Lose nothing that she is now receiving. Gain, nothing, since the gain will go entirely into the pockets of the Sugar Trust. More of this anon.

Question fifteen requires no special answer.

Sixteenth—"From what portions of the State of California comes the agitation on both sides?' Johnsonian answer: "For the treaty, from those sections which are the headquarters of the traders and of the owners of Hawaiian investments in sugar plantations, almost entirely confined to commercial interests in the City of San Francisco. For abrogation, throughout every section of the balance of California, where the main interest is the development of the State of California, rather than in the commercial development of a foreign country." My answer, There are others who desire a continuance of the Hawaiian treaty. The writer of this article neither resides in Hawaii, nor seeks trade with the Hawaiian people. He is an earnest advocate of a continuance of the Hawaiian treaty, because he believes the beet sugar industry of this coast requires a continuance of that treaty to prevent its being absorbed and controlled by parties objectionable to a large proportion of the people of the United States. As regards what portions of the State agitate the question, there are evidently two factors. On the one side the sugar people, aided by the beet sugar industry, and still further aided by the misguided farmer, whose opinion has been formed by erroneous and misleading statements. On the other hand, there has been created a vast aggregation of interests, to wit, mercantile, manufacturing, shipping, and banking, with the investors and capitalists who have furnished the money, and who would be destroyed by abrogation.

Question seventeen is mere reiteration.

Eighteenth—"What are the possibilities for the development of this industry in the United States under proper conditions?" Johnsonian answer: "With proper encouragement we can supply our entire home consumption of 2,000,000 tons, thus keeping in this country about $90,000,000 annually now sent abroad." My answer, It is barely possible that we may supply our entire home consumption of 2,000,000 tons with beet sugar, but it is likewise essential that to accomplish this it will be necessary for the cane industry to discontinue their degradation of the beet sugar by placing it upon the market at a lower figure than the cane when mixed with beet, and it will be necessary for them to engage missionaries to eliminate the degradation of beet sugars from the grocers' catalogue, who, in their daily quotations, state: "SUGAR, WE SELL WESTERN REFINING GRANULATED, NO BEET SUGAR," and, "WE QUOTE YOU PURE WESTERN REFINING COMPANY'S CANE SUGARS," and various others of a similar nature, calling the particular attention of the consumer to the inferiority of the beet, and also to have their missionaries call upon the manufacturers and induce them to eliminate such comments as: "NOTICE, ALL CANDIES MADE BY ME ARE MADE OF CONFECTIONERY SUGAR, REFINED BY THE WESTERN SUGAR REFINING CO., OF SAN FRANCISCO."

Nineteenth—"Does the continued fostering of this industry in Hawaii interfere with the development of the industry in the United States?" Johnsonian answer: "Yes." My answer, No. (Here, of course, is an opportunity for a discussion, and if Charles Freeman Johnson is willing to have an open debate on this question with the writer, the loser to pay for the hall and other expenses, the writer will be glad to meet him in the contest.)

Question twenty is embraced in twenty-one and twenty-two, to which I make the same answer made to question nineteen, and embrace it in my challenge to Charles Freeman Johnson.

Twenty-three—"Will the abrogation of the treaty cause the loss of the export trade of $4,184,351?" Johnsonian answer: "No." My answer, A matter of great unimportance compared to the other losses which the United States may have and feel, if the Hawaiian Islands enter into contracts with another nation.

In discussing the balance of Mr. Johnson's letter, I come to one point, the essential point of this entire article, and it is one which I have endeavored, and am still endeavoring, to avoid as emanating from me, to wit —to demonstrate to the people of this country whether or not further protection is necessary to the beet sugar industry of the United States to make it a profitable enterprise. The question which presents itself is, "Will a continuance of the Hawaiian treaty injure the beet producing agriculturist and the beet sugar manufacturer?" The advocates of abrogation have used this as their one and only argument. The friends of the treaty are willing to make the fight on these lines. They are prepared with their estimates and statistics as to the entire cost of producing beet sugars, commencing with the growing of the beet and concluding with the final sale and disposition of the refined product. Are the advocates of abrogation prepared to fight it out on these lines? If so, I will say to Mr. Johnson that, if he can induce the advocates of abrogation to present their figures and prove them in the same manner that we will present and prove ours, I am assured the friends of the treaty are willing to rest their case on the decision of unprejudiced judges.

LOUIS SARONI.

U. S. Senator Foraker advocates the policy of turning the tariff over to a non-partisan commission. "Here am I," he said, "fresh from the practice of law, called upon to fix technical rates and arrange schedules over the vast arena of man's production and ingenuity. What is a modern tariff? It is guess work modified by compromise. A few gentlemen in the private parlor of a hotel formulate the bill by calling in such persons of knowledge or interest as they wish. Some one person has the endurance for it. He is the expert; the rest of us are the weary-headed witnesses of his mathematics. I undertake to help my constituents and those appear who have a lively interest, and show me the superior equities on their side. Upon the bench and when Governor of the State I could expedite and advance matters, but here I learn the useful lesson that all things must take their turn, that the indivdual Senator is a filament in the Federal web, and that a hemisphere of a nation like ours comprehends nearly every product in the dictionary and every aspiration in the mind."

Loading up

The pickers

To the packing-house

The Meek mansion

An orchard nymph

The packing-house hands

Really helping

THE PICKING SEASON IN A CALIFORNIA CHERRY-ORCHARD

Through a Glass Darkly

By FRANK NORRIS

SCENE—The bay window of a certain down-town club of San Francisco. Some half dozen young men are present, smoking and chaffing and discussing "whiskey-and-sodas." Directly opposite, on the other side of the street, are the windows of a fashionable milliner's.

CHARACTERS—TOM, DICK, and HARRY, and (later) JACK (who is engaged to DOLLY STREET).

Tom (looking out of the window): I wonder now how many women stop and look in at that milliner's window as they go by.

Dick: One in three is a good average.

Harry: If there was a bargain-sale sign out, they wouldn't go by at all.

Tom: Look—here comes a girl.

Dick: She's a stunner, too! But she's in too much of hurry. Bet she don't stop.

Harry: Bet she does.

Dick: Take you—how much?

Tom: Hurry up—she's almost in front.

Harry: Betcha dollar.

Dick: A dollar it is.

(Interval of breathless suspense.)

Tom: Now she's right there. She's going by—no, she ain't. Wait a minute, now.

Dick: She's slowing up.

Harry: She's got her eye on that green bonnet.

Tom: And it's marked down.

Harry: She can't possibly go by that.

Tom: She is, just the same.

Dick: No, she ain't.

Harry: There—there—there—she's stopped—she's going up to the window. I say, you owe me a dollar, old man.

Dick (gloomily): There you are. Wimin folk air powerful onsartin.

Tom: Look here. I'll tell what we'll do. I'll pick out a girl as I see her coming down the street—understand?—and you fellows will bet on whether she stops and looks in at that window or not. Dick, he'll be the bear—that is to say, he'll bet she don't stop, and Harry will be the bull—he'll bet she does. I choose to be the croupier.

Dick: And how about if she goes in?

Tom: Then that pays double—just like a natural in virigt et un. All clear?

Dick and Harry: Sure—clear's glass. Go on now, pick out a girl. Won't this one do that's coming—the one with the net bag?

Tom: Not at all. There's an art in this thing that you fellows don't appreciate. That girl's from the country. Look at her feet. She won't even look in. She's spent too much money in town already, as you can see from the size of her net bag. She won't even allow herself to look in. I won't choose her, because the chances are too much against Harry.

Dick: How about that one just behind. She's a city girl, no mistake—the one in a tailor-made gown and the black sailor?

Tom: Yes, we gamble on this one. "Here she goes and there she goes, and whether she stops or not nobody knows."

Dick: A dollar, hey?

Harry: A dollar each time.

(They put up their money, and the girl passes by without stopping.)

Tom: Dick wins. (Dick takes the money.) Hurry up, you fellows—here comes another. This is a shop-girl, or perhaps she runs a soda-water fountain in a candy-store. And still the little ball goes 'round.

Dick: Not enough salary to think of bonnets. She'll never stop in a thousand years. There's my dollar.

Harry: It's the very reason why she will. She dreams of those bonnets every night. I'll see your dollar and I'll raise you a half.

Dick: And fifty cents harder.

Harry: And fifty cents harder than that.

(The girl goes straight into the store, indifferently, without even glancing at the window.)

Tom: Harry wins double.

Dick (with an aggrieved shout): She was the saleslady for that store. I appeal from the decision of the referee—dirty work! Yah—fake! fake! (groans).

Harry: All bets go with referee's decision. I'll trouble you for that money, old chap.

Tom: Hello, here comes Jack. Shall we let him in?

Dick: He's engaged to be married to Dolly Street. He won't take enough interest in other girls even to bet on their weakness for bonnets.

Harry: He's to be married next week. It's about time he devoted himself to a study of a woman's interest in bonnets. Oh, I say, Jack, come over here and "join our merry throng!"

Dick (scornfully): Skin game! Turn out the gas! It's a notorious swindle! But tell him what the game is, Tom.

(Tom explains at length.)

Jack (with intense interest): I see—I see! It's great! I tell you what—I'll bet on whether she goes in or not. I'll be a plunger. I can only lose a dollar if she stops, but I stand to win two if she goes in.

Harry: Here comes a stunning-looking girl. See, the one with the heavy veil. I'll bet she's pretty, if one could see her face. Do we take this one, Tom?

Tom: Messieurs, fait votre jeu.

(They all make their bets. The girl pauses a moment in front of the window, looking at the bonnets and hats, starts on again, hesitates, and turns back and enters the store.)

Tom: Jack wins double.

Jack: I say, this is better than poker.

Dick (giving him the money): That was a swell-looking girl, though.

Harry: Wish we could have seen her face.

Tom: There she is—look—in the window of the store. The saleslady is showing her a hat. She's looking over here.

Harry: Who, the saleslady?

Dick: No, you jay; the girl—that swell girl.

Jack: That's so. She's looking right up here at the window.

Tom: Think she sees us.

Harry: Why, of course; that's what she's looking for. She's looking at me.

Jack: No, it's me she's looking at.

Harry: You're all wrong. She can't see you, Jack, sitting where you are.

Jack: 'Course she can (greatly excited). I say, I say, I say—look there, fellows—I think—I think, that—yes, she is—she's really smiling at me. Shall I smile back at her?

Harry (indignantly): Don't you dare—that smile's mine.

Jack: Betcha five dollars it's not.

Harry: Betcha ten it is.

Jack: I'll take that.

Dick: How you going to prove it?

Tom: I tell you. First Harry will wave his hand at her and see if she waves back at him, or bows. And then Jack will try. And the one she answers wins the money. Catch on?

Jack: That's a go. There's my ten dollars.

Harry: And there's mine.

Tom: Now, then, Harry, wave your hand.

Dick: And be just as charming and gracious as you know how.

(Harry waves his hand at the girl, who puts her chin in the air and turns away her head.)

Harry: All is lost but honor.

Tom: Hold on—Jack hasn't won yet. She may turn him down, too. It's up to you now, Jack.

(Jack tries. The girl smiles very prettily, nods her head at him and waves her gloved hand.)

Jack: Horray! She's mine! Harry, perhaps you can play mumblety peg, but when it comes to girls, you're out of the running! Gimme that ten dollars. Whatle you fellows have to drink?

Dick: Hold up a minute. Watch the girl. She's going to try on a bonnet, and is taking off her veil. Now we'll see if she's pretty or not.

Jack: She's radiantly beautiful—I feel that she is.

Tom: There, her veil's off—she is pretty. Look at her, Jack.

Jack (looks and then drops into a chair with a gasp): It's Dolly!

Dick: Who?—what?—Miss Street?

Tom: It is, for a fact. I say, Jack—I—we—look here old man. We've—I've acted like a damned fool, and if it'll do any good I'll apologize—I can't begin to say how cut up I am. I guess (turning to Dick and Harry) I guess I can speak for all of us—we've been a lot of beastly little cads, and—and—well, I'm downright ashamed of myself. Will you shake hands on that?

Jack (extending his hand): That's all right; of course you—we didn't know it was—who it was. I don't know why in the world I didn't recognize the dress, but that was a new waist I guess, and the veil was so thick. I guess I'll go down and see Dolly as she comes out. Some of you fellows sign the card for me, will you? (Exit.)

(Tom, Dick and Harry, left to themselves, look ruefully at one another for a moment.)

Tom: This is what our 'cross-the-water cousins would call an oncommon jolly rum go.

Harry: No wonder she waved her hand at Jack. But, Lord! what do you suppose she thinks of me?

Dick: But do you think now she knew who it was?

Harry: You mean that she didn't recognize Jack, after all?

Dick: It's pretty far from here across the street, and through two panes of glass.

Tom: Would Dolly Street flirt with a man she didn't know, and she engaged to Jack?

Dick: Pooh! Would Jack flirt with a girl he didn't know and he engaged to Dolly?

Dick: Betcha five dollars she didn't recognize Jack.

Harry: Betcha ten dollars she did.

Dick: Take you.

* * * * * * *

(Five minutes later. Dolly Street, coming out of the milliner's, meets Jack at the door.)

Jack (confusedly): Say, hello, Dolly! Did you—those fellows—we didn't know——

Dolly (surprised at seeing him): Why, dear old Jack, where did you come from? I haven't seen you in an age!

Scottish heroes fare somewhat badly at the hands of Sir Herbert Maxwell, himself a Scotsman of repute, in his recently-published book, "Heroes of the Nations—Robert Bruce and the Struggle for Scottish Independence." He has little doubt that William Wallace is identical with William le Waleys, who was charged at Perth with robbing a woman of three shillings worth of beer, while his general estimate is that Wallace was a low-born adventurer of shady morals, who pushed to the front in lawless times, won and lost battles, became an outlaw and broken man, and with a price on his head was captured and executed in London like any ordinary brigand. In Robert Bruce, Sir Herbert finds a man of sordid, self-seeking nature, imbued with cunning, who bertayed his friends and his country many times to secure his own ends. Only a titled clansman would thus dare to trifle with the cherished historical traditions of his country.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. Waters, military attache of the British Embassy at St. Petersburg, who has just returned from a 4,000 mile sleigh-ride from St. Petersburg to Vladivostock, denies the stories told of Siberian horrors. Colonel Waters asserts that in the majority of cases the Siberian exile is better off than at home, and that political prisoners, unless guilty of a serious non-political crime, are neither imprisoned nor fettered, nor are they subjected to the many other indignities generally accredited.

By the birth of the Duchess of York's little girl the number of Queen Victoria's descendants rises to eighty, seventy of whom are alive. She has had nine children, four sons and five daughters; forty-one grand children, and thirty great grand children. Two of her children and eight grand children have died.

WHEN CHERRIES ARE RIPE

How a Thirty-Thousand-Dollar Crop is Handled.

Probably there is no better known and certainly there are few larger ranches in the State of California than that owned by the Meek estate. It is situated a little ways outside the city of Oakland, and covers a huge tract of land between San Lorenzo and Haywards. It is spread over 3,300 acres of some of the finest fruit-bearing country on the Pacific Coast. A thousand acres of this extent is in fruit, for the most part cherries. Indeed, the Meek cherry orchard is one of the largest cherry orchards in the West.

The ranch is owned and controlled by the two Meek brothers and their sisters, how skillfully may be known from the fact that in spite of hard times and a depressed market, there has never been a year when it has not paid and paid liberally. A full crop of cherries from this wonderful orchard will bring its owners anywhere from thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars. The entire ranch itself is valued at very nearly a million. It was the Meek brothers who built the Haywards electric road in order to give value to their property, and now the land bordering the line is worth a thousand dollars an acre, either for orchard land or villa sites.

Just now the season's cherry picking is going on at a great rate, and a little army of pickers are toiling from tree to tree, stripping the branches like a swarm of locusts.

The sight is picturesque, for the pickers come by families and live in the cherry orchard in a small village of tents. At the heighth of the season nearly one hundred and fifty pickers are employed. They are of all ages and sexes, as the work is of such a nature that it can be performed as well by women as by men, as well by a ten-year-old girl as by a grown man. The pickers are, of course, boarded at the expense of the ranch, and besides are paid from seventy-five cents to a dollar a day, so that a wife and two or three children can make as much money during the few weeks of the picking season as the head of the house can earn during the entire year.

After the picking, the cherries are taken over to the packing house and handled at once. The riper cherries are sorted out and put upon local markets, while the more backward are shipped East. The force of packers on the Meek estate can dispose of 420 boxes per day. Two thousand boxes go to the car-load, and must be hurried to their destination as speedily as possible, for there is no fruit that loses its flavor quicker by over-keeping than the cherry. For the same reason the boxes must be rapidly marketed, for they will not keep many hours in the heat of an Eastern summer. There are plenty of difficulties in the way of getting the California cherry upon the dining tables of the Eastern consumer, but with ordinary care, and a fair season, the prices obtainable are not bad. In Chicago a ten-pound box of California cherries can be made to bring a dollar if properly handled. While in New York, though the Eastern local market comes into competition, the same quality will sometimes sell for twelve cents a pound. However, the Meek brothers do not make a specialty of Eastern shipments. The principle upon which the orchard is managed is that if a reasonable price can be obtained for the crop at home it is better to sell to local markets rather than ship across the continent.

And still that troublesome little rumor of the Kaiser's insanity will not down. It has been denied and scoffed at and ridiculed the world round and trampled under foot until it gave every evidence of being absolutely and utterly dead, and yet invariably after a longer or shorter interval, behold! it stirs and comes to light again, and an obscure story of some strange utterance, some unexpected outbreak on the part of the Emperor goes the round of the gossips, but little by little Berlin grows accustomed to the reports, just as Munich did over the tales of her mad king. In the debate, a few days ago, on the "Lese majeste" clause of the penal code, many covert allusions were made to the subject, which were immediately frowned upon by the President. The latest prank of the Kaiser's was to appear without an overcoat on the occasion of the unveiling of his grandfather's statue, though the day was bitterly cold. Not content with this, William came to the ceremony wearing the uniform of an aide-de-camp, and upon one of the old generals inquiring the reason he replied solemnly: "I have made myself aide-de-camp to my grandfather." Many instances of this nature are occurring every week, all of which goes to prove that some of these fine mornings the Empire may awake to find itself confronted with the problem of a vacant throne.

The Pope is encouraging his Embassadors to go into society, and in pursuance of this policy Mgr. Clari, the Nuncio at Paris, gave a grand reception at his palace. The grande monde flocked to the affair, but was embarrassed as to what style of dress to wear. Very decollete gowns are obviously out of order, but the Nuncio declined to prescribe what degree of bareness is permissible. His Secretary, Mgr. Peri Morosini, speaking on the subject, said:

"The guests are expected to observe a happy medium. In other words, while not expected to come muffled up to the throat, ladies are not supposed to appear too much exposed. However, the Nuncio trusts to the tact and discretion of the Parisians, as a token of respect for the sufferers in the recent catastrophe."

Mme. Adam thinks that Paris and the French people would be the laughing stock of Europe, were William II to pay the visit to the French capital, which it is said he expects to make. Mr. Moris Barres thinks Paris might stone the Emperor to death, which would be a misfortune. "It would be a misfortune," he adds, also, "if they did not."

HON. W. W. MORROW

Whom President McKinley has appointed to the Circuit Judgeship vacated by Attorney-General McKenna

PSEUDO ARCHITECTURE

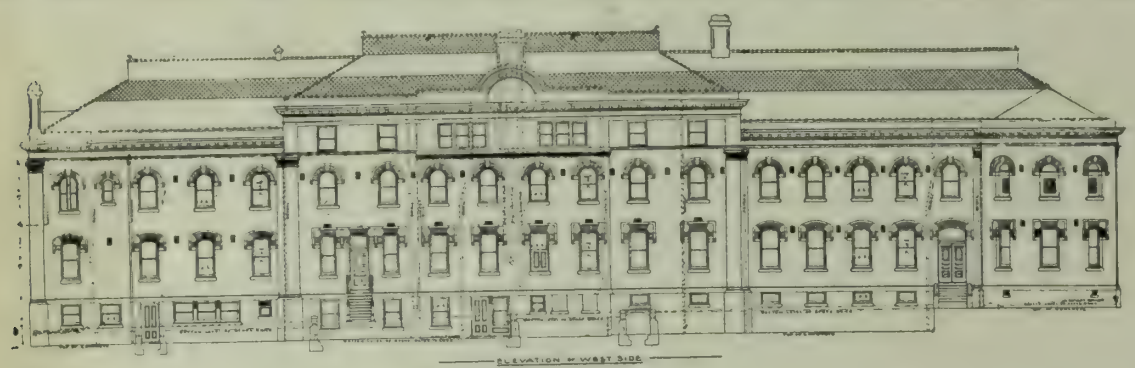
A "Romanesque" Academy and a "Classic" Lecture Hall.

Barnum said that the American people like to be fooled, but it has remained for the people of California to take a quiet, serene satisfaction in being unscrupulously and flagrantly insulted. Two new buildings designed for educational purposes are about to be erected in this State. One the agricultural building for the State University at Berkeley, the other the Academy of the Sacred Heart at Menlo. The public is told that the Sacred Heart Academy is in the Romanesques style; that the agricultural building is classic, and a specimen of other University buildings to follow.

Be pleased for a moment to consider the pictures of the "Romanesque" academy and the "classic" lecture hall. From the point of view of simple good taste of



THE SACRED HEART ACADEMY

It might be a public institution, but it is called Romanesque. C. T. Devlin is responsible even plain every day homely common sense, the constructions are absolute monstrosities. "Romanesque!" "classical!" Look at the academy. It is really so atrociously bad, so vilely crass, so mean and sordid, it violates so persistently every canon of good architecture that it is almost beyond criticism. As a shoe factory perhaps it might be a moderate success, but even a shoe factory would have spared us that roof. Even a shoe factory would have omitted the quoins over the windows. Why were these quoins so placed; why were they placed at all? Ask yourself, now, would not a plain, unpretentious wall-space have been better? The cost of that abortion was $80,000. Think what could have been done by a capable architect with less money, and then compare it with the building that is to be erected. And Californians will look at this thing and be content; will even consider it a rather fine effort; will say that it is "Romanesque," and will call this crude, cheap, vulgar, tawdry, disproportionate box of red brick and sandstone "architecture."

And that agricultural building—now observe it. Aren't you glad that you know what the rest of the U. C. buildings are to be like? This is "classic" in the faith. Thirty-nine windows crowded into 112 feet, a fence appropriately put around a roof, a pediment and four chimneys; result, "classicism." In God's name let us be thankful to the architect and Board of Regents who have taught us the meaning of the word.

Classic! It is simply outrageous to throw that name to the California public. But the regents and the architect know their game. The California public will take the outrage, and be thankful for it, for the California public does not know the simplest, the most elemental, the most primitive signs or symbols of good architects. They don't want to know it. They want the "classic," the "Romanesque," the "new classic," and such tommyrot. They want to "lay over" some other community by a lavish, reckless expenditure of cement and cresting and millwork and quoins and castiron mouldings. There is perhaps no class of public buildings which should be more carefuly designed than those which are designed to meet the needs and the requirements of the college student, because he spends in his college four years of the formative period of his life, at a time when he receives ideas and impressions. In after life he invariably looks back with affection upon his old college, and in all fairness to him he ought to be able to recall the buildings to mind with a sense of pride.

It is proposed to spend four millions of dollars in the erection of "edifices" upon the Berkeley campus, of which the Agricultural Building is a specimen. The result is calculated to throw into the shade not Stanford only, but even Yale and Harvard. Four million dollars sounds like a very large sum until we recollect that Harvard possesses in buildings alone something more than fifteen millions of dollars. Lever Hall itself, one of the Harvard recitation halls, cost six hundred and fifty thousand dollars. But the Regents and Mr. Reinstein hope to "lay over" the entire group of Harvard buildings at an outlay of four million.

They tell us that we are to expect something like the "classic" Agricultural building. Instead of looking to Europe for ideas and designs for this new university, the Board of Regents and their architect might well stop at the Harvard "yard" and consider well such structures as old Holworthy, and Hollis, Stoughton, Massachusetts and Harvard. These old college buildings are built in the simplest manner—plain, honest, rectangular, and of substantial brick. There is hardly a trace of ornamentation (no quoins over the windows), but proportions are observed, and simplicity and honest construction. The result is a building as far superior to the "classic" farce of the U. C. Regents and the "romanesque" horror of the ladies of the Sacred Heart as the Sainte Chapelle is superior to a Piute wickiup or a Mashona kraal.

JUSTIN STURGIS.

A replica by Mr. Hutchinson, of the famous Chantrey bust of Sir Walter Scott, was recently unveiled with due ceremony in Poet's Corner, Westminister Abbey. On the occasion a speech was made by Colonel John Hay, the American Embassador, and "The Sketch" (London. thus alludes thereto: "It may have been a trying moment when Mr. Bayard's successor rose for the first time in this country to address a critical audience. His face is that of a reserved literary man, with small features and dark, short beard turning grey. He speedily showed that he was worthy to succeed even Mr. Bayard. His style was a little florid, but he spoke with real eloquence, and as the representative of a large section of Scott's immense constituency; he recognized that great and good man's gifts with a generosity which touched the audience. * * * At the end of his speech he was enthusiastically applauded, none being more demonstrative than Mr. Balfour."

The Irish proposals of the Salisbury government have created more interest in England than aught else the new ministry has done. They contain schemes of relief from taxation and imperial grants which no Irish leader will dare reject, and which the English Liberals won't like to object to, owing to their relations to the home rule question. The whole move is extremely clever from a party point of view, and if Lord Randolph Churchill, who proposed the same thing eleven years ago, had been given his way by the Tory Cabinet the entire subsequent history of the politics of both England and Ireland would have been different.

When the great Belgian tenor, Van Dyck, appeared one day as a witness in a law case, the counsel inquired of him: "How do you spell your name—with a 'ck' or only a 'k'?" His reply was: "With a 'k' only; you can hear the 'c' at the opera to-night." Nevertheless, the name is invariably spelt with a "c" in operatic prospectuses, advertisements and critiques.

FRANK LEACH

Editor of the Oakland "Enquirer," appointed by the President as Superintendent of the U. S. Mint in San Francisco

THINGS AND PEOPLE

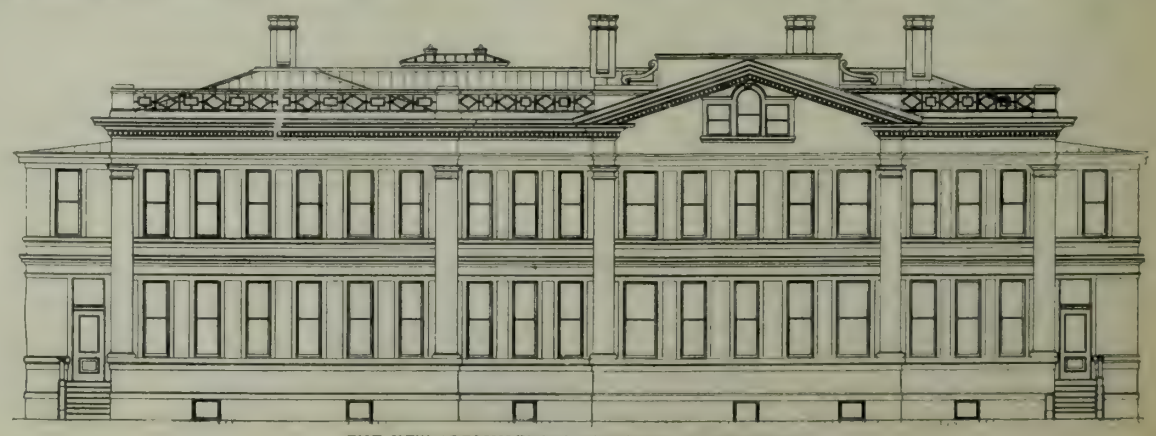
San Francisco is never satisfied without a murder mystery. The crime passion of the community has rich material in the Hoffman-Figel affair, with which the newspapers are so mightily taken up. Besides this novel sensation the Durrant case has become a secondary journalistic factor. I expect to notice the condemned murderer and his mother relegated to back pages. Already, indeed, Attorney Ach has the front sheet, and no one seems to care if the Governor does give Durrant a thirty-day reprieve. The Hoffman murder is a very strange affair, but the solution, in the face of the circumstantial evidence thus far adduced, would be easy but for the demeanor of Theodore Figel. Can a man be a murderer and yet assume such an impassive exterior, an exterior so indifferent, so innocent, so confident? It seems impossible. Though circumstances cloud more darkly round him as the books are examined, his sangfroid abates not a whit. The supreme instance of it was given in the office of Chief of Police Lees, for whom he had recently to wait a couple of hours. Instead of fidgeting around nervously as a veritable murderer ought, Figel went off to sleep, and was slumbering as comfortably as a child might when the head of the force was ready to receive him. Yet it is just such self-command that would enable Figel to shoot Hoffman and then go over to San Rafael as though nothing had happened.

***

This Theodore Figel is a son of the Figel who used, some years ago, to keep a clothing store on Montgomery street. This was a capital though conscientious business man, who accumulated a good deal of money in the course of years of trading. Arriving at a certain prosperity, he turned over the establishment to his son, and started off to Europe on a tour. Nine months later he was summoned home by an alarming statement of Theodore's mismanagement. He found affairs in a wretched condition. His son had spent money so extravagantly that it took a large sum to square up the losses. He persisted in retiring, however, but with a considerably diminished fortune. A taste for race horses and gambling doesn't tend to the development of firm principles of conduct in a man, and from all accounts Figel was up to the neck in various forms of dissipation.

***

It is understood that the Bohemian Club have created quite a little stir in the circle of local artists of late by a circular letter which has gone the round of the studios. There has always been more or less complaint by the artists of San Francisco because of the inadequacy of the halls in which they were obliged to expose their paintings, while on the other hand the picture dealers have rarely given satisfaction in this line. The Bo-



THE NEW AGRICULTURAL BUILDING AT BERKELEY

This is Classic architecture according to Clinton Day

hemian Club proposes to invite certain of the city artists to send their best pictures from time to time to the Club, where they will be exposed in a suitable light in the "Green Room." This is a really admirable and generous idea, and will doubtless be warmly appreciated by the artists concerned. Pictures exposed at the Bohemian Club are invariably sure of an intelligent and appreciative audience and one largely composed of the people who buy. It has been also rumored that a movement is on foot to arrange for the decoration of the interior of the new ferry depot by California artists. An excellent movement it is, too, and one which should meet with every encouragement. The artists themselves are so enthusiastic over the idea that, if permission is granted, they have agreed to work for mere painter's wages.

***

A certain shrewd but self-educated politician, better posted about the conduct of a primary than about science, accompanied Inspector Dockery recently into the laboratory of Dr. Shearer, who officiates as analytical chemist for the Board of Health. The physician had been experimenting with a test tube of water from an infected environment, and he enthusiastically informed Dockery that out of a quarter cubic centimeter of this water he had bred four thousand "colonies" of bacilli. "What, four thousand colonies!" interrupted the politician admiringly. "That's better than Mahoney did at the Baldwin. Say, Doctor, what would you charge to take hold of a district in the Mission for me next election?"

***

Though a paean of joy has gone up from Randsburg over certain discoveries made on lower levels, yet no one has penetrated far enough down to prove the real character of the deposit. There is a huge difference between surface indications and permanent fissure veins, and until it is determined that the Randsburg rock extends into the depths there will be grave questioning as to the advisability of expensive developments. Under present conditions, mining at Randsburg is fraught with extreme difficulties. In the first place there is neither water nor fuel for power; besides the claims were all laid out without benefit of surveyor's knowledge, and the consequences are a hideous jumble of conflicting lines. To make the confusion more confounded, certain sections which were supposed by prospectors to be vacant are covered by school land claims. Of course, this all means litigation and probably a judicial clearing up of titles before work on a big scale is commenced. This is the condition which prevails on Rand Hill, where the great gold deposit of the camp is supposed to lie. The law firm of Reddy, Campbell and Metson obtained a controlling interest in this property through a client, and have invested in its development nearly $90,000. The extent of the prospects has attracted other claimants, and they are in the midst of a law fight which threatens to last a long time. They believe they have under the hill one of the mines of the world, however, and are willing to wait and hope.

***

The man who brings water to Randsburg will make more money than the miners. It will be a costly undertaking, but if further developments prove the value of the camp, Randsburg will be another Leadville. It is certainly the richest surface gold land yet discovered in California. Under present circumstances no one thinks of touching rock under $25 to the ton. So much ore that elsewhere would make men millionaires is being rejected. Apropos of mining, one is reminded of the difference between the laws of the United States and those of the Transvaal relating to ore extraction. In South Africa a miner's claim is so many square feet, and he is bound to confine operations within its surface boundaries. He owns into the interior of the earth as far as he may dig, but the trend of vein cuts no figure with his privileges. In California the vein belongs to the man on whose claim it begins. A miner is permitted to follow its lead, even if it does dip into his neighbor's property. He must not impinge on the end lines of the claim, but the side lines are no hinderance. This is one basis for the plentiful litigation which mining has given rise to in California. Constantly there come up legitimate questions, which only careful judicial investigation can determine.

***

The Fair case drags its weary length along, with the proper exchange of pleasantries, the inevitable badgering of experts, and the broad guying of the press. There is always some basis for poking fun at the "smasher" or teasing the other great men. Quite recently two eminent practitioners, who know somewhat of the under side of the law, met in the corridor of the City Hall. Said one to his friend who is prominently identified on the Fair side: "Are you taking an interest in the case?" 'No," replied the eminent gentleman, "not any active interest in court." 'Ah," then returned the other, "you are occupying the most dangerous position possible in the case."

***

It is good news for men with mines to learn that conditions are again favorable in the London market. The Kaffir stocks have quite recovered from the depression which befell them after the Jameson raid; the concert of the powers seems to promise peace for Europe. So capital is free and is entitled to look for new opportunities. Already the promoters have begun their promoting, and there have been enquiries of various kinds as to certain California properties, which have been offered at good rates.

***

The opposition of the Sons of St. George has, after all, cut but a trivial figure in the Jubilee celebration in San Francisco. The event is to be brilliantly celebrated with an open air entertainment at the Chutes on Saturday, together with oratory and fireworks and music, more music and services on Sunday, and on Monday night a big banquet at the Palace. Our most prominent orators and distinguished citizens have agreed to participate, and the affair will have no narrow significance whatever. It is really a festival of nineteenth century growth and attainment that our British compatriots are celebrating, much more than the sixty years' reign of the devout and very respectable person whom Rudyard Kipling's soldiers irreverently allude to as "The Widow."

***

It would surprise none of Judge Slack's intimate friends if, at the termination of the Fair case, he carried out the threat of resigning that he has so often made. No man has worked harder than he, and no judge has been asked to decide more important or more difficult questions. Though problems both intricate and technical have been offered for his solution, his opinions, often radical, have seldom been disputed by the Supreme Court, and to-day he enjoys the respect of the public and the admiration of his colleagues of the bench and bar. In fact, he has made a very fine record. The professorship at the Hastings Law College would not impose on Judge Slack a tithe of the labor his duties now involve, and would yet give him a position in which his talents and character would have the best influence and expression. A man of eminence is as much before the public as head of the law college as he is on the Superior Bench, and it would be a proper place of transition to the Supreme Bench, if his ambitions again take a judicial turn.

***

No one realizes the amount of desultory work which the charge of a probate department inflicts on a judge. Widows and orphans regard him as a species of protector; he is continually being asked for assistance and sympathy; and these are not expressed without consuming valuable moments. Besides there must be executed a vast amount of technical work—formal orders to be signed and considered, distribution to be made, accounts to be examined. Indeed, there is little time left in which to try big cases. Judge Slack makes it a rule to transact this minor business in his chambers, but Judge Coffey, who is in constant terror of being caught out by some designing litigant, will never talk to a lawyer or a client out of his court-room. Orders and papers which require his signature must be submitted to him on the bench, and it often happens when he opens court in the morning that thirty or forty lawyers and clients are waiting to interview him before he can commence the proceedings. This, of course, materially retards the progress of a trial. As to his dwelling place, Judge Coffey preserves a discreet silence, claiming that it is no business of any one where he lives. He succeeds in keeping it out of the directory, and it would be more than the life of any lawyer is worth to call on him there.

***

This peculiarity of Judge Coffey recalls an amusing incident of the Martin will case. While the trial was in progress, Mrs. John Martin announced that she had a message which she could only communicate to the Judge in his chambers. She called there a dozen times, but could not get in. She attempted to waylay his Honor in the corridors, but the Judge had a scout and escaped all her attempts to accost him. After eluding this persistent caller for days, he conveyed to her a message saying though he allowed no one to speak to him in his chambers, she might say anything she pleased to him in court. It was just what Mrs. Martin wanted. She marched up to the bench, bent over towards the Judge confidentially. The entire court-room held its breath. A first-rate sensation was expected. In a loud whisper Mrs. Martin said: "Judge, I want you to make that fat policeman move away from my table. I don't like the perfume he uses."

***

There is a very wise judge in the County of Kings. Something of the wisdom of Solomon is his, and certain of his decisions have that flavor of rough justice because of which the fame of the Hebrew monarch has waxed green through the ages. There arose in the county recently a dispute over an irrigation right of way. A rich woman of the environment brought suit to condemn certain of her neighbors' lands, and some bitterness having been born of the preliminary proceedings, both sides prepared for a stubborn contest. The court opened with an elaborate array of lawyers drawn up for battle, and there seemed every prospect of a protracted suit. Judge Jacobs waited until the complaint had been read. Then he addressed the crowd: "I see, gentlemen, a long and serious dispute here, a big bill of costs for your clients, together with much wrangling and more unpleasantness. All this might be avoided by the exercise of a little common sense. I recommend, therefore, that all of you go outside and sit under that tree in the courtyard. It is shady there, and you can discuss your case like rational beings.' "But, your Honor," interrupted one of the lawyers. "Indeed, I insist that you do so," added the Judge, "as I intend to adjourn this court until to-morrow morning." This radical way of disposing of litigation took both lawyers and clients aback, but there was no choice, and they went out to discuss the question under the tree. Next morning a representative of the plaintiff announced that a compromise had been arrived at. Judge Jacobs smiled.

***

The conspicuous figures in the Democracy are Mayor Phelan and Congressman Maguire, and the succession to the governorship is between them. They are really more available than any of the men yet mentioned on the Republican side, and the prophets tell me '98 will probably be a Democratic year. However, a good harvest is as potent a factor in disturbing the balance of power as a poor crop is, and who shall say what the coming months hold for us? Maybe Maguire would prefer to have Senator White's place, and that would leave the field to Phelan, but to the south is due one senatorship, and if the brilliant Steve is not to succeed himself an aspirant must be selected from the country south of Tehachapi. An interesting fight is outlined, however, and there will surely be politics in plenty made in the months to come. By the way, won't it be rather an embarrassment for the "Examiner" to decide between the Mayor and the Congressman?

BOSWELL JR.

Frederick Mac Monnies' bronze statue, "The Bacchante," which has been rejected by the trustees of the Boston Public Library, has been accepted by the Metropolitan Art Museum in New York.

A STRANGE RELIEF-SHIP

The Queer-Built "Everett" Sailing for India This Week.

It is a far cry from San Francisco to Calcutta, but not so far apparently as to be beyond the sound of an appeal for help. Somewhere away in the heart of India there is a starving coolie, famine-stricken and shriveled, the ribs of him showing through his skin like the bars of a bird-cage through a wet cloth, who within forty days from the time of this writing will be feeding upon corn that has been brought to him from Western Kansas. And his neighbors will feed, and his neighbors' neighbors, thousands of them, wretched wisps of humanity, then beyond all belief will be gorged and glutted with whole harvest of corn and rye and beans. Twenty-six hundred tons of grain will be flooded into the famine districts.

The ship that will carry this harvest is now on the dry dock, and surely no more oddly appearing relief craft was ever looked for. A huge hollow steel cigar, propelled by steam, with neither keel nor bow, nor deck nor stern—a mere shell furnished with propelling gear. She is not a ship, this "whaleback," this City of Everett, and there is little of the picturesque about her, no suggestiveness, no romance—simply a freight-carrying contrivance.

The Everett's destined voyage is the result of the efforts of the Committee of the Indian Famine Relief Fund of this city, who have been unwearied in their labors to feed the starving Indians. For the matter of that, everybody has helped. The farmers of Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska have given the grain, the railroads have transported a thousand tons of it free, the United States Government has chartered craft, and, more important than all, the Postal Telegraph and the Western Union Company have sent the countless but necessary dispatches of the committee free of charge. It is almost safe to say that without this generosity on the part of the telegraph companies the expedition would have failed. Nearly three thousand dollars' worth of telegraphing has gone over the wires of the two companies. The City of Everett was built by McDougal & Co., at Port Townsend, and is the only seagoing whaleback in the world, though other crafts of the same type ply upon the great lakes as grain ships. The value of the peculiar construction lies in the fact that when fully loaded the entire hull of the vessel sinks below the surface of the waves, and being thus relieved of their friction can make very good speed in rough weather. Surprising as it may seem, there is very little lateral roll in the whaleback type. The waves get very little purchase upon the rounded sides, while the superstructure offers but a minimum of surface to the force of the wind.

PEN-WORK AT PARTINGTON'S

Very interesting is the exhibit of the work of the Partington School this week. The school, as is now generally known, is organized and conducted for the instruction of newspaper and magazine illustration. The usual idea entertained by the public of this kind of work is that it must necessarily be of an order inferior to brush work, such as landscapes, studies, still life and the like. In point of fact, however, the illustrator—the successful illustrator—must be a far better master of the craft than the average landscape painter or artist in colors, where brush work is involved. There are two reasons for this, first the nature of the material in which the illustrator must work and second the nature of the subject from which he must draw. A brush artist may retouch and retouch and retouch, may paint out and begin over again as many times as he chooses, may work up a tone or value by gradual degrees, until he obtains precisely the effect he has aimed at. An illustrator cannot do this. He works largely in pen and ink work, and once a stroke is made, there is no going back. In treating flat surface, such as a background, a girl's skirt, or any broad texture, he must obtain his result by some scores of long, sweeping strokes, delivered with the utmost rapidity and precision, all the strokes made with exactly the same pressure upon the pen and all exactly the same distance apart. Practically, he must succeed at the very first attempt or not at all. As for the subject treated, it is not difficult to paint even a very good landscape; correct drawing goes for almost nothing, while any peculiar variation from preconceived forms of tree, or hill, or rock may always be accounted for by the belief that the artist drew them merely as he saw them. But the newspaper and magazine artist must draw from the figure, and there is nothing in the range of the artist's eye more difficult to portray upon paper than the human form. Bearing these points in mind, one comes away from the Partington exhibit with an impression that work of a really creditable order is being done in the school, work fully as good as that which comes from the Hopkins Institute. Crossley and Blanche Letcher show some very good work. Miss Letcher's three portrait heads have a firmness and assurance in manipulation that are professional to a degree. Crossley exhibits a half dozen life studies that are very true, though in one bicycle group (done, we shrewdly suspect, from Chic) the calf of the girl's leg is fully as large as her head itself. Apropos of Chic, leads one naturally to speak of Stella Witram's little exhibit. The drawing in this collection is woefully bad, and here and there the colors are altogether out of tone, but there is a dash, a movement, a piquancy about Miss Witram's work that is not evident in any other specimens upon the wall. Her work is very French, very gay and exuberant. Some day I look to see Miss Witram achieve something really worth while, and I prophesy it will be in the way of posters—of the Cheret type.

Prince Bismarck, instead of his usual grand dinner in honor of the Kaiser's birthday, this year contented himself with a modest luncheon, at which the briliant guests who formerly gathered round the "founder" of the German empire were replaced by the stationmaster, the postmaster and the head forester at Friedrichsruhe.

Wnen the bəll "hits": A box at night

After the battle

Hitching up

"Rolling out" to thelfire

After the "tap-out"

Full speed

Hitting it with the pipe

A DAY WITH THE FIRE-FIGHTERS

Photos by Weidner

TRAINING OF FIREMEN

The Un-sung Soldiers of a Great City—How They Live and Die.

Sailors have had their poets and to spare, and the soldier has been sung from the time of Homer to that of Stephen Crane, but the fireman is still waiting for his epic. A gunner working his piece with grim stoicism under fire, and a mast-hand reefing down the jib in a winter squall, clinging with fingers and toes to the icy foot-ropes, are fine sights. But how about the man who holds a thrashing, bucking, snorting nozzle to the throat of a roaring furnace, in instant danger of falling walls and collapsing roofs? A soldier in action has but to fear the bullet, and the sailor's life is sought for only by the sea, but a fireman can be killed in more ways than you have any idea of.

Primarily, there is, of course, the fire to burn him brown. But besides this, there are a score of nasty, unexpected dangers that lurk in every corner of a blazing building and that catch him unawares and worry the life out of him with a swiftness that is searching to the nerves of the onlooker. There's the smoke, for instance, that blinds him first and suffocates him afterward at leisure. There's the brick wall that does him to death with a huge flat slam, just as you have slapped the life out of an offending fly with the palm of your hand. There's the melted lead from soldered cornices, and yards upon yards of plumbing pipes that sometimes creams up over the ledge of a roof like lava from an erupted volcano and splashes down upon him by bucket fulls, and then again there is the shower of broken glass. Trivial, this last, say you; but if you are hugging the top rung of a series of sliding ladders, a hundred feet high, with your arms full of throbbing, hysterical hose, and a blade of plate glass comes spinning down, cleaver-like, and slices you a tendon in arm or leg, you are very like to fall.

Then, not the least danger is the "pipe" itself. What the cannon is to the gunner, the pipe is to the fireman. It is his defense, his friend, his terrible, resistless engine, the raison d'etre for his occupation. With his pipe charged and his engine pumping away steadily at the other end, your fireman will go almost anywhere—will fight the fire just as a battery fights the enemy. But if his pipe fails him—if it is burnt in two behind him, or bursts, or if the weight of fallen debris chokes it, he knows that the time has come to run, just as the gunner must retreat when his cannon is destroyed. But holding a nozzle to a dangerous fire is something like holding a wolf by the ears. For instance now. Your little squad of men is on a menaced roof directing the stream of water (a ton to a minute it is) into a neighboring building. Suddenly the roof on which they stand trembles and heaves under them like the deck of a sinking ship. At any moment it may fall in. Run? Yes, but what to do with that tremendous roaring python that the six of you, with the exertion of all your strength have been holding there—the enormous live brute, spurting its tons and tons of water? Like the man holding the wolf, it may be bad to hold on, but it's worse to let go. There's no time to pass the word along the line to shut off. You must drop the python and run. Then look out, not only for the sinking roof and the poisonous smoke and the hungry flames and the showers of burning cinders and the molten lead—the pipe, freed from all restraint, suddenly leaps into a furious, mad life all its own, thrashes back, squirms, jumps, recoils from side to side, twists upon itself like any leviathan in its death throes, lashes out in every direction, swinging like a flail the huge brass nozzle that can batter the life out of you at a single blow.

It is about the line—that is to say, "the pipe," or hose, that the fireman's active life is centered. With it he is effective, courageous, well disciplined; without it, useless, panic-stricken, deprived of all morale. It may be of service to him in indirect ways as well. He may slide to safety down its length when stairways fall in and ladders fail; or, better still, suppose he is lost in a smoke-choked building, bewildered and confused in the half-darkness of the place. Let him but find the line and he is practically safe. By following it he is sure to find an exit, and by lying at full length, his face close to its surface, he knows he may count upon pure air.

There are three sorts and conditions of firemen—the extra-men, the relief men, and the permanent men. Let us suppose for the sake of illustration that you and I should one morning make up our minds to enter the fire department. We would begin by procuring one of the application forms at the City Hall, filling out the blanks, and securing the signatures of twelve property-holders. You make application to be appointed either an extra-man or a relief man. About the same time you are subjected to a physical examination, and if you pass this and if your papers are satisfactory, you are elected by the vote of the Board of Commissioners, and sign the necessary papers. You are read a little lecture about this time on the whole duty of man as applied to the extinguishment of fires, upon the conclusion of which you are told to report for duty to the foreman of some one of the stations in town. This only if you are an extra-man.

The relief man goes through a little different mill. He makes his application to become either a driver or a tillerman (this is the fellow you see sitting far out at the extremity of the ladders on the hook-and-ladder truck), or an engineer, and you must previously convince the Board that you are capable of discharging the duties of that position. Your name goes down on the relief list and you substitute in turn with the other relief men as driver or engineer or tillerman, whatever permanent position happens to be vacant. But if you are a relief man you are paid, not by the city, but by the man for whom you substitute.

The equipment of a truck company is made up of twelve extramen, one foreman, a permanent driver, and a tillerman. That of an engine consists of nine extramen and three permanent men—engineer, driver and foreman.

If this city rejoiced in a fully-paid department, all these men would be on duty at every hour of the day; as it is, however, San Francisco has a fully-paid, fully-equipped fire department only between the hours of eleven in the evening and six in the morning. Only the permanent men are continually on duty. During the daytime the extramen are allowed to go about their business in the district of their company, reporting for duty at the station not later than eleven p.m.

Suppose now the "bell hits" for a station. At once the "Hall bell" is rung from the roof of the quarters. This is the bell that the whole city hears, in combination with the mournful groaning of that whistle down by the Front. But these "Hall bells" are not, as I had fondly supposed, rung for the benefit of the general public, but for the extramen who are absent from the quarters. Each of these men have a list of the boxes of the city, with the boxes of their own particular district underscored. As soon as the Hall bells begin to sound the extraman consults his card, counting the strokes. If an outside station is rung—that is to say, a station outside of the particular district of his company, he reports at once to the quarters, and should be there inside of five minutes. The apparatus does not "roll" to a first alarm if it is an outside box, but hitches up and waits five minutes for a second alarm, so the extramen have time to get to the quarters. But if an inside box comes in—that is to say, a box within the limits of a company's district, the apparatus "rolls" at once without waiting for the extramen. These, by consulting their card, know at once that an inside box has come in, and rush off, let us hope, on a dead run, to the fire, not to the quarters. Perhaps they may even meet their engine or truck by the way and jump on.

Other cities have drilling schools for men and horses alike, and the extraman is taught how to use an axe and the different tools of the apparatus, how to manage and handle a hose, and more especially how to put in an extra length of hose while the fire is in progress. This operation corresponds precisely to that of a battery changing position under fire. It is a hazardous move, and must be done with lightning rapidity, as, of course, the water is shut off at the time, and the fire has a chance to get tremendous headway. But most of his trade he can learn only by actual experience under a captain or a foreman. The knack, for instance of "opening up" burning buildings, the ways of combatting the dreaded "back draught," when a mass of flames that you have been gradually forcing back and back, suddenly turns and charges you like a herd of stampeded elephants, and the manner of dodging a falling wall, and what kinds of collapsing walls are dangerous and what are not.

One would like to say more about the horses—the huge, big-boned, short-muscled, broad-headed fellows, that don't know what it is to be afraid. They learn their trade in a week's time, the horses, without the assistance of any training school. At first, of course, they must be led to their places, but after the bell has hit a score of times they jump to their positions as quick as do the men. But it is very sad to be told that as a rule they don't last long. Six years at it will tell on the best. Think of it for a moment. Often, just after their heavy meal of oats and hay and their deep draught of water, the bell hits and off they go over the cobbles and up the hills tugging away at the huge apparatus, without the least warning or preparation. It's trying to the stoutest horse, and sooner or later comes the time when he goes stale and must be sold.

But I wonder what he thinks when, later on, foundered and broken, while he is straining at a loaded truck under the lash of a cruel teamster—I wonder what he thinks, I say, when he hears the clanging of the bell and sees his old engine go past, thundering and smoking, just as in the old days, with his old driver strapped on the box and his old friends clinging to the footboard. I wonder if he remembers the excitement and gaiety of the old life. The long fine hours spent under his blanket while the fire shouted and roared, and his own engine was pumping and coughing away like r his very withers, and the return home, triumphant, the out-fought enemy, a mere whiff of smoke behind him, and the prospect of a warm stable and grateful grooming at home! I fancy his old, thin blood must stir a bit at the sight, and his drooping ears prick again, and I think he must pick up his feet a trifle more proudly, a little like as he used to do, and I hope that for that day at least he will forget his cruel teamster and his heavy truck and his bad oats, and remember that at any rate he had it all once.

FRANK NORRIS.

EXCELSIOR!

A Royal Mountain and a Royal Climber Who Hopes to Master It.

The whims and fancies of the royally born do not generally involve hardship, nor the risk of life and limb. Most of the continental nobles one hears of are perfectly content to stay at home and go about from one seat to another, borrowing their friends' money, or their friends' wives, and making themselves disagreeable or useless or positively downright malevolent, as our own dear Duke Gunther, for example. But now appears one, Luigi, Prince of Savoy, nephew of the King of Italy, and son of that Duke of Aosta, who for three years was, and (had he chosen to violate his oath), might now have been, King of Spain.

Luigi is only 24 years of age, but he has set himself to do that what the veteran Schwatka failed to accomplish, the task that proved too much for the English traveler, Topham, and for the explorer, I. S. Russel, though this latter made two attempts. The manner in which Prince Luigi proposes to ascend the mountain causes the affair to assume all the proportions of an expedition. His party consists of his aide-de-camp, W. Cogni, of the Italian navy; Francisco Gonella, President of the Turin Alpine Club; V. Horio Sello, a famous mountaineer; Fillippo Fillippi, the doctor, and five Alpine guides. The baggage of the party amounts to some sixty pieces, and includes all manner of devices and appliances for mountain climbing, alpen-stocks, gearings of rope, sleds for glacier work, and the like.

Mount St. Elias is at the head of the range of the same name, about 250 miles east of Sitka, and lies on the border line between British and American territory. Prince Luigi's route will be as follows: Starting from this city he will proceed by boat to Tacoma, where the expedition will start. From Tacoma he goes on to Yakutat Bay in Alaska. At Yakutat he will strike inland some twenty miles. Here the Chaix foothills begin, and soon r each an elevation of 7,200 feet. Pushing on from this point across a wilderness of morraines, and glaciers and snow-covered passes, the explorer will finally come out upon the northwest base of the mountain itself. The first obstacles here to be encountered are the grim barriers which were the cause of the final undoing of the Russel expedition, the Newton and Agassiz glaciers. In describing his experiences while crossing these glaciers, Russel says:

"At several localities steps had to be cut in steep snow slopes, which made progress very slow and tiresome. At one place progress seemed to be impossible, owing to a maze of huge crevasses, which crossed the glacier from side to side. We determined to cut steps down into one of the broadest crevasses and then up the precipice opposite, over two hundred feet high. This was accomplished by McCarty, Stamy and myself. It was an exceedingly difficult job, owing to an overhanging cornice-like ridge, about six feet thick, near the top, but a rope helped us over."

Prince Luigi, however, is no green hand at his work. His family are Piedmontese, and ever since he was old enough to walk he has been climbing the Italian Alps. He has successfully ascended all of the most difficult of his own and the neighboring countries, and now turns his attention to the conquering of new mountains. The peak of St. Elias, however, is generally considered by experts as inaccessible. It is over 18,000 feet in height, and as yet no expedition has covered much more than two-thirds of the distance. Schwatka, in 1886, reached a height of 12,200 feet; Topham, in 1888, touched the 11,000 foot mark, while Russel, in his two later attempts, could not better 8,000. It is interesting to note that simultaneous with the venture of the Italian Prince, Henry G. Bryant, of Philadelphia, aided by S. J. Entrikin (Peary's second in command), is to make an attack upon the mountain from the other side.

It will be a heroic contest of pluck, energy and endurance. May the best man win, but let us hope that the first flag to flutter on that desolate peak will be the Stars and Bars.

THE ST. ELIAS ALPS ACROSS YAKUTAT ISLAND, SEVENTY-FIVE MILES DISTANT

Taber, photo

"MISS FRISCO" AT THE TIVOLI

FLASHLIGHT PORTRAITS OF EMPEROR NORTON AND OTHER LOCAL CELEBRITIES AS EXHIBITED IN MR. CASSELL'S PLAY

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

My dearest Diary: As far as gaiety or anything in the domain of pleasure is concerned, we might just as well be enduring the rigors of the Lenten season. I have never known San Francisco society so lacking in incident. We have not even a soupcon of gossip to discuss over our cups of afternoon tea. The only diversion of this week was the card party given by Mrs. Lyman in honor of her cousin, Miss Kane, who is out here from the East. It was an interesting affair, and Leila said the girls all had a jolly time. Oh, Leila is the most inconsistent of women. You know she considers card playing in the afternoon a shocking waste of time, and yet I have never known her to decline an invitation to a party. Is not that absurd? Every one seems to be perfectly rushed in their preparations for their summer peregrinations. Every day I hear of new people going away.

Santa Cruz seems to awaken to a sense of its responsibilities as a summer resort. Several of the fashionables have announced an intention of betaking themselves thither. The Newhalls and the George Popes are among the number. Mrs. Louis Parrott is to leave for Alaska about the seventeenth. I believe she is to take dear Louis Bruguiere with her. What all the girls are to do without that child I can't imagine. He seems to not only be ubiquitous, but omnipresent, so when he is not at any of the resorts much of their fascination for the more youthful among us will disappear.

How strange California street looks without that most familiar landmark, the McNutt house, does it not? You know it is to be placed on that old Castle lot on the corner of Sutter and Van Ness. The lower part is to be used for stores, the upper for offices. I hear that the McNutts have gone to Santa Barbara to live. Is not that a pity? I wonder if they won't find it ratner stupid after San Francisco.

Mamma, Leila and I all went to the reception given by Bishop and Mrs. Nichols at San Mateo on Wednesday afternoon. It was a smart affair, and very churchy, by which I mean all the clerical crowd was there, and one might as well have been at Trinity or Grace Church. It was a sort of farewell, as the Nichols leave for England to-morrow. They expect to remain away four months. Bishop Nichols is to attend some convention there. Mrs. Dodge has taken their house for the summer, and Mrs. Cavalier Jouett the Dodge house. She expects to have her sister, Rose Hooper, with her during the month of July. Laura Bates is also to spend July in San Mateo with the Jarboes and Tobins. You know I told you how sweet Mrs. Jimmie Robinson has been to the younger set. Well, she is about to endear herself still further to those lucky youngsters. She had invited a dozen or so to go on a trip to the Yosemite with her. Among them Miss Anita Harvey and Miss Emily Wilson. The girls are gradually returning from the East. Mamie Polhemus comes home on Wednesday and Flora Dean is to be here next week. She is at present at their ranch in Nevada.

The Collier-Atherton wedding was a very jolly affair—not at all solemn or ceremonious, more like a house party than a marriage festival. Poor Willis Polk hurt his foot there—or rather on his way. Just as he got off the stage on a down grade the horses backed and he was caught between a rock and the wheels. It tore his shirt and crushed his foot. Maraquita and Mr. Atherton are at the California on their honeymoon. I hear that Sara Collier is to be queen of the Lakeport fiesta—won't that be fun. Did you hear about the fraud perpetrated by Ethel Cohen and Lieutenant Bent? You know they were so mysterious about their honeymoon. We all thought they were going to some distant and secluded spot. Well, my dear, they simply drove out to the Presidio and stayed there. What do you think of that? All the out-of-town places are still quiet. People appear to be resting after their winter's entertainments. Mr. and Mrs. Dean and Miss Helen Dean leave for San Jose on Saturday. Mrs. Dean has had another attack of bronchitis, but is now much better. They will remain in San Jose for about a month. I think that I have now more than exhausted the obvious, so shall bid you farewell for another week. With best love, your devoted but dull

MISS CRICKET.

* *

A jolly entertainment was given by General Barrett on Sunday, June 6th. They first went for a sail on the bay, and later went to the Hotel Rafael, where a capital lunch was provided for them. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Keegan, Mrs. W. Beekman, Col. Fuller, Mr. John Fuller and General Wayfield. There are any number of people here from the Hawaiian Islands just at present, who are staying at the California Hotel. Among them Mr. E. C. Macfarlane and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wideman, Mr. and Mrs. Falk, Mr. and Mrs. Wilder, etc.

Sunday was really the opening of the season at Burlingame. The brilliant day and the prospect of seeing Prince Luigi were incentives, and it was veritably a holiday crowd of club members that gathered on the club-house porch for lunch. It seems, however, that there was some misunderstanding over the date of the polo game, which had taken place on Saturday instead of Sunday afternoon. It was a delightful day for driving, and there were innumerable teams and coaches in service. On Saturday afternoon Henry Crocker drove down to Burlingame in his coach, accompanied by a number of men, whom he entertained at dinner Saturday night. It was a very jolly affair, and broke up quite early Sunday morning. San Mateo is decidedly gay, though like other regions, the fun is only beginning there. It takes sometime for people gathered for the summer to come together and get acquainted. Something of the new born prosperity of the club at Burlingame may be gathered from the fact that there are now 65 horses and ponies in the club stables.

The National Association of Letter Carriers is to have a convention here in September next. Some five hundred delegates are expected, and they are to discuss the rights and wrongs of letter-carrying. In order to obtain funds for the entertainment of the visitors, the local Association of Letter Carriers is aranging for a grand picnic on July Fourth at Schuetzen Park, San Rafael. The mail men, beside being welcome visitors, are certainly a deserving body of men, and such assistance as can be given them will undoubtedly go forth in a good cause.

Each week the guest list of the Hotel Rafael grows longer. Already the dining-room at his popular hostelry is well filled every night, and next week will begin to flow over. One realizes how many people are making their summer home here when the afternoon bus rattles up to the porch. There is always a brilliant array of ladies to meet it and bid the men welcome. In the way of entertainment, little has yet been done. There is music every afternoon and night, and there are plenty of young people to promote the gaity that is expected a little later on, but thus far the sets are merely getting to know one another, which is always the case at the beginning of a summer season. The weather is delightful at San Rafael. The table at the hotel is notably excellent, and there are the opportunities and concomitants for a very jolly summer there. On Sunday last Mr. Will Powning drove a party of young people up to Fairfax Villa for lunch, and then through San Rafael and its environments in the afternoon. The Misses Smith, together with the Misses Kipp, organized a riding party on Thursday night, There will be a bicycle excursion Saturday night, and next week during the moonlight there will be no lack of social incidents. Next week, also, Mrs. Elizabeth Hager and her family are coming over to occupy one of the cottages.

* *

In Oakland society is stagnating. A few farewell lunches, a card party and a wedding or so serve to chronicle the happenings of the past week. Miss Jessie Coleman's wedding is being eagerly anticipated. There are to be some hundred guests. Owing to the tremendous length of her calling list, Miss Coleman is merely inviting one out of each of her friends' families. There are to be no bridesmaids. Miss Donaldson of Philadelphia is to be maid of honor. Miss Coleman's trousseau is a thing of beauty, and her bridal regalia will be a sight worth a trip across the bay to see. The Goodalls have gone to Ross Valley for the summer months, and seven Oakland girls are bachelorizing at Mill Valley in the Campbell cottage. They anticipate unalloyed pleasure and much fun out of their experiment. They are a lively set of maidens, so their hopes are likely to be realized. Among them are Miss Whitney, Miss Carrie Ritter, Miss Edwards and others. Mill Valley has hitherto been the camping ground of all the young married people, and for honeymooning is quite as popular as Belvedere. How it will be for bachelor maids remains to be seen. Of luncheons, a particularly smart affair was given by Mrs. William Goodfellow as a farewell to Mrs. F. M. Smith, who is to leave for Shelter Island shortly. It was a married ladies' affair, and the gowning was elaborate to a degree. The decorations were in pink sweet peas with ribbons skillfully intermingled. Among those invited were Mrs. Sather, Mrs. Hubbard, Mrs. Tom and Will Magee, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Valentine and others. It argues vigorously for Mrs. Smith's popularity when one realizes that she is being entertained so extensively in Oakland, where a bride is considered lucky if she receive three dinner invitations, and to speak of engagement parties is to enter a terra incognita. Last week, besides Mrs. Goodfellow's luncheon, she was the recipient of two other farewell feasts by Mrs. Belden on Thursday and Mrs. F. E. Pope. Mrs. Belden's was a very pretty affair, the tables being decked in red poppies and grasses. Mrs. Pope's was a larger party, about twenty ladies having been invited. During the afternoon a musical programme was given.

What Mount Tamalpais is to the merry-makers of San Francisco, Haywards Club House is to the pleasure seekers of Oakland who consider a luncheon drive or bicycle party to this resort the desideratum of all earthly bliss. If a matron wishes to attain popularity across the bay she has merely to suggest a few expeditions to Haywards and she is immediately courted by the maidens with an assiduity worthy of the Knights of old. Mrs. Creelin last week took a lively party of young people to luncheon there, and they had a capital time. They chartered a special car—which is a necessary adjunct, I am told—and with their lightest and brightest of gowns went out there. Miss Lillian Story, Miss Mabel Gray, Miss Crellin and others were of the party.

Mrs. Chas. Perkins celebrated her wooden wedding by a reception on Monday evening. The gifts were many, and ranged from rolling pins to book cases, pieces of marqueterie, etc. The house was decorated in smilax and white roses, and the supper was capital and exceedingly jolly. Mrs. Fred Hall gave a dinner to the Grove Street Whist Club. Between each course some ridiculous gift was presented to the hostess, which added to the merriment of the affair.

It is often forgotten that Emma Nevada, who is now Madame Nevada-Palmer, was a graduate of the Class of '76 of Mills' College. Madame Nevada has a very accomplished daughter, Mignone, who seems to have inherited her mother's vocal talent. Quite recently Madame Nevada had a fete at her home in Paris, and Mignone sang a number of songs in very brilliant style. It is not impossible that Madame Nevada may visit the coast before very long.

The reverence which every Britisher born feels for England's venerable sovereign will find a full expression on the occasion of her jubilee performance, which commences Saturday next. For three days the subjects of Victoria will hold high carnival. The programme is as follows: Saturday, the 19th, at the Chutes: Highland and other games, commencing at 10 A. M.; exercises in the Chutes Pavilion at 2 P. M., consisting of an address by Wm. Greer Harrison, the singing by a choir of 250 voices of a hymn composed by George A. Adam and set to music by H. J. Stewart; an oration by General W. H. L. Barnes, and a benediction by Rabbi Nieto. Fireworks and a grand ball in the evening. On Sunday there will be a grand musical service at the Metropolitan Temple, and on Monday a banquet at the Palace Hotel, which will be attended by Consul-General Warburton, Governor Budd, Mayor Phelan and a score of other dignitaries.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

The Nalson Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

Royal makes the food pure, wholesome and delicious.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

DRAMATIC NOTES

The Lilliputians in their "Merry Tramps" have the boards at the Baldwin, during all of next week, the final performance taking place on Sunday night, June 20th.

"Miss Frisco" has taken very well at he Tivoli, and will be continued for another week. On Monday, June 21st, Mr. Edwin Stevens will open his season of comic opera in "Wang," in which he starred for nearly two years throughout the East.

